"It may be far safer t han remaining here."s uggested t he lady.

"Maybe,my maybe"responded the American "but why take chan c es of bein g taken for enemies .If we'd encounter those chris tian child scouts our danger would still be worse if they must take us forven emies if they mistake us for enemies!Contentment with ones lot is t ru t rue wisdom."Perhaps thos e chris tians are not so fierce as they look look k, nor t he boyscout so dangerous as t hey are said to be nor the girls eit her, but as we have always heard so much about t hem---we do not long for any meeting with t hem, when des pite our being Catholics we don't know what the C ounter Sign or Pass word is, and we're s o queerly dress ed it would bring their suspicion upon us .The enemy are cap t o so much mischief that t he patrols take no c hance es with any s trangers no matter who they may hap en to be."

The lady whose name was Maud Lyon s might have agreed t o t his argument had she not been so anxious t o find some plac e of shelter before n ight came on , but n ow she exclaimed impitaint ly---

"You are cowards all of you.If none of you are willin g to go forth an d t ry to find your way to t hos e c hristian armies and ask for their h lp,I will surely go alone, for why s hould I be afraid of them when I have no guilty conscience."

"That is a wis e resolve."declared t he men, much relieved."It is your own plan and if you are willing to risk your life and liberty to go fort h, no one c an deny you t he privilege."

While they were t hus conversin g, t he Americ an joined t hem, and wit h his powerful field glas ses looked down at t he dis tant besiegin g c hris tian posit ions, and the patrols which he detect ed here and t here, also of child scouts , and s eemed unusually t houghtful.In fact the Americ an was t hinking t hat at any risk even of capt ure by mistake he would like to see t he c hristian armies and especially the child scouts.Here in others parts of Wes tern Ca'verinia he had become in t'heir eyes a most importan t man, and his import ant was getting to be a lit t,e little tame.It would be ni ce to have even a chance to become a soldier in the C hristin e hris tian army an d s ee some of the great war if possible an d to have man y soldiers defer to him an d ask his adive e andct here seemed no reason , so far as he could see , why his fame should not s pread throughout all of C alverinia.He knew nothing of course of the besiegin g e hristian lines but it was reasonable to believe that t he christian besiegers there were good to all good people even if foriegn ers , n and if he went amon g them he could surprise t hem with his dis play of how Americ an s fight in battle, and make himself import ant as t he hero of t heir eyes.In ot her words the American was ambit ious to become a good fighter against t he Glandelinians not only for such a reason as stat ed above, but bec ause a' also he had an immeasureable grudge agains t the Glandelin ians, and he wanted dire revenge, which was impossible if he always remained a mere c itizen and didn't fight like the res t did.He want ed his own folks at home t oo to hear of his being a soldier in the christian army, and here was an e xcuse for gett ing int o the christian army if possible possible.So he said to the woman."

"I will go with you my good woman"which greatly pleased Maud(Hee Haw and her name was Maud) because he she felt the Americ an e could be of great assistance t o her in her endeavors to reach shelter.

But now sinc e the American had decided to un dertake t he journey, one of t he others who was young an d daring at m once made up his mind to go along, so t hey bot h started to s lide down t he side of the high hill which was too st eep to walk down.They made rat her slow progress, and night overt ook t hem before they were half way down the mountain side, so they found a small cave in which they sought shelter untill morning morning.On t he secon d day t he other fellow began to wish he had not embarked on t his adventure.He grumbled a good deal at the noise of bat t le heard far away.

"If it is true t hat somebody c ame to our home to st eal your jew elry"said the man to Maud "It must have been a bird, for n o person, in the form of a man, woman or child could have cl9 climbed t his hill without being seen by c hristin chris tian patrols."an d allowin g he could have done so"he continued"t he jewelelery would not have paid him for his t roubles and tribulations ..I would rather go back to An elin in Agat hia and buy you are a anot her necklace t han be seen and fired on by any of t hose c hristian pat rols .Even n ow if my mother saw me she would have her heart in her mout h."

Maud paid no heed to these mutterings, nor did t he American.Although t heir journey was slow it was eas y and they had not hin to c omplain of and nothing or n o desire to turn back. Quit e near t he bottom of t he great hill they c ame in sight of an ernormous s quadron of Burrough girl and boyscouts eac h in seper ate column.The two column s though on pat rol were so many they both extended a long distan c e, and they were all on c hors e and were armed t o the teet h, and though man y of these were handsome and pret ty t o look at t hey appeared more fierce t han it was said about t hem.

"Here our journ ey en ds"said t he other fellow."We must go back again.If they see us our hash is cooked."

The lady began to weep.

"I s hall never find my jewelad n ecklac e again, and my heard heart will be broken"she sobbed.

The American went to the edge of a high rock and wit h his eye carefully measured t he number in t he nearest child scout patrol which was rapidly approaching their way at full gallopp.

"Being the Burroughs as they're called they'll pass us by in a few min utes ."said he.If you sir are so ared you might as well go back the way you c ame."

"I will do t hat wit h pleasure."c ried the man, and at onc e he turned and began to c limb up t he steep mountain, feeling sure he had had enough of t his t hrilling adventure. Maud did not go wit h t hem how v however.She sat on a rock hidden and wept quietly and was very mis erable.

"Well"said t he American to her"If you are willing to ris k the danger we will make t he at tempt to pass t hem, by goin g n ort h.They have halted for t he foremost have seen the man go up the hill.They'llcaptured the coward if possible! Through a small glen they glided on an de han ds an d knees , and soon were out of sight of the child sc outs.T hen both stood erec t and carefully brushed the dus t from their clot hing, while he himself rearranged his six colored n ecklac e.

"I had no ideathere were so many of them in a patrol."he said wonderin gly."

"Wit hout meaning to do anythin g wrong, yet felling a s warm of chirs tian child scouts is one more ac c ouplishment I c an now add t o the lon g list of deeds I am able to perform.."

"You are c ertain y a fine Americ an-"said t he girl admirin gly"But as you s a y say you are wonderful in man y ways .If we meet with any people down here I am s ure they will c on sider you t he grandes t and greates t of l of all Foriegn ers."

"Yes "he replied."I shall probably astonis h s trangers ,b c because they have never before have had the ly pleasure of seein g me.Also t hey will marvel at my great learning, and when I s how t hem how Americ ans fight in a war."

"That is surely t rue"she agreed,"and it is fortunate t hough if you can get int o the army."

"There's no harm in tryin g"said t he American."I have a grudge against the en emy I would like to settle even if it c osts me my life in batt le.But come let us go on, for it is getting late, and we mus t find some s ort of s helter before night overtakes us. "

The stronger portions of the main c hristian pos itions occupied by the various sect ions of boy and girlscout regiments, were also full of boy and girlscouts called the "Milit ary Camp Guards ,"camp Fire girls and boys, who were commanded by a boyscout superior called Georgo Nicholas, who did plen ty of work for Violet,and her sisters,,,.But not all of the christian armies were set tled by encampments of c hild scout regiment s .At the east , which part of the posit ions lies n eares t the famous battlegrounds of S unbeam C reek, there were great breastwork and redoubt and redan like fortifications, fortified towns and fortified roads, but as you travel northwest you first come to the immense North Bend of the Sunbeam Creek, and Bloody Delight's Jun c tion t erritory beyon d whic h is a rough country, where now the christians have impassable positions , and some of these are quite unknown by some of the Glandelinian generals.After passing through this unusual sec tion of fortified territ ory, where raged once the first battles of Sunbeam C reek, you would come to a t ill sout her bend of the Sunbeam C reek, after c rossing which you would find anot her well fortified christian posit ion, extending g west ward quite within ens y s ight of the Thumbelinia Fortifications, that on the nort h side surrounds all the territory confront ing Mic-Whirther Janet section of Vivian Wickay and is the bigges t of the land fortifications and the s trongest on the foe side.The c hristian besiegers on this sect ion have many pos it ions that ros emble hills which are s tron gly guarded by terrible batteries of big t hundering guns all of which are highly es teemed in the besiegin g christian lines, because thes e guns are such terrible wreckers, and keep the foe from rushin g out in attack in t his location.

"Goodn ess me"cried Jane Hellary, one of t he Burrough girlscout guards , when she saw the s trange couple of the man and young lady approaching her beat as if he was unconscious of any christian camp being near by on the eas tern rear."Ihave seen many queer sights in the c hris tian lines or wit hout , but n one more queer t han this foriegner coming along with a woman of our own land.Come here Whillis"she called to one of the boys jus t passing"And take a look at this ac t onishing sight .I'll bet t hey're man an d wife who are lost from their home or who are refugees ."SSW

The boyscout c ame quickly forward.He was standing wit h his rifle crossed, when the American approached and said with a haughty look;

"C an you speak En glih an glish boyscout."!

The boy only shook his head but point ing to the girl, said somethin g t o her in his own tongue.Then she stepped forwar d but wit h rifle cross ed; and said;

"I c an speak English very good though I'm an Abbiecannian.what is it you wish!"

"Tell me my good girl, have you seen any one go away wit h t his womans jewlery.!"

"No I haven't, nor have I s een an Englishmann with an Abbiecannian woman." replied Jane in a haughty tone.

The Americ an s tared at her and said;

"Don't be insolent my girl."

"N o"added Maud, hastily"You must be very polit e to the Foriegner, for he is an American and they're the bes t people inall the world."

"Who says that?"in quired the girlscout turn ing to her.

"He says so himself."replied t he lady and the man nodded and st rutted up an d down, twirling his walkin g c ane very gracefully.

"Do you think we Abbiecannians would admit that this Foriegner is the bes t kind of a man wit hout doubt when e he has not shown it f"asked the girlscout .

"Why he will prove it."

"Well he'll have to before he can be admit ted to pass int o c amp here. Does Schofield Penrod admit t hat Foriegn ers are the best creatures in t he world!"

"I do not know who Schofield Penrod is."answered the woman.

"Well he's in main charge of all the boy and girlscouts of this army, and he's supposed to have all his orders obeyed and does.He gave us all the orders too not to let any one into t his camp who does n ot know the count or sign."

"Well I am an American, and came from the good old U.S. A"said the man pompously

"So I think I must be bet ter t han anybody.Us Americ ans I'll bet c an fight your on own better than you can do so yourselves .I know so much about fighting thes e Glandelinians that is is a pity a lot of Americans are not fighting in your army for your cause."
"It must be dreadful them for the Glandelinians to have you go fighting against t hem"remarked the girlscout reflec tively, and eyein g the American with a doubt ful look."It is our good fortune not to l t lot many foriegners in our army unless t hey c an fully proove all they boast off.You looi look more like an Englishman than an Americ an."
"I hope however you n know where my jewels are!" said the woman anxiously.
"I do not even know that."Returned the girlscout."I'm s orry t hough you have lost it, but you must understand we children soldiers have trouble enough keeping the enemy where he belongs and making him stay t here, without kn owing anything about lost articles before t he lookers c ome to us with a complaint ."
"But can't we come into the camp!"asked the man.
"If you give the Counter S ign yes."
"I'm a C atholic and Iris h by birth.Is n't that enough"he said producing a prayer book and a Rosary Beads and some Mirculous Medals."
"I'll say they ain't.Glandelinians produce that too, but hate our cause so t hey won't give the counter sign even if they know it.You c annot c ome in unless you give the count or sign.So if you don't know it you'd bet ter beat it before we're tempt ed to make you prisoners. " Findin g they could not get any satisfac tion here, the Americ an proposed that they walk on in anot her direction, and seek help elsewhere.The boy and girlscout did not seem greatly impress by the American, which seemed to them, as strange as he was disappointin g, but others he hoped woun get the christian scouts might prove more respon tful.
"I'd like to meet that Sc holfield Penrod"remarked the lady, as they walked along a path. "If he could or is suc h a high leader of these more c hildren sol iers in uniform of so man many colors he might be able to have my lotlost n ecklac e found. "
"Pooh.Pooh.Pooh."grunt ed the Americ an scornfully."I am greater t han any of these more soldier striplings .Second mon me.If your necklace is anywhere in the world I am sure to find it. Us Americans c an do mos t more than you Abbiscannians c an."
"If you can't my heart will be broken."dec lared Maud in a sorrw s orrowful voice.
For a while the Americ an walked on in silenc e.He didn't really mean what he said, but he felt hurt and mean the way the girlscout s entry had apparently treated him.But he should have known o he was ino olent first and therefore she had been suspicious.Had he been c ivil he would have found her answering him as swad tly as they do answer a person gen erally..Rea lly she did not believe a word he said andnoc rotly was having him shadowed by two boyscouts .
Finally the American asked her;;;;2;2;2;2;2;2;2;2
"Why do you attach such importance to a necklace."
"It is one of the greatest treasures I possess."replied the woman."It belonged t o my mot her, and to my grandmot her sinc e t he beggining of my generat ion.It also has a sort of round disc with the phot ographs of my parents on it .
"In that c ase"said the Americ an with h sigh(pun c h me in the eye)"I supposs we must man age to find it .But I must find out the C ounter sign or I cannot enter these camps anywhere."

"Really"Said Angoline Richoe,,,, looking solemn,"This is very surprising and alarming ."We can't find even a shadow of Violet, or her sisters answhere within the christian camps, and general Mansion at my inquis inquiry said by telegraph t hey were no where found wit hin the christian lines, and wherever they have gone, they have taken everythin g with t hem....."
She was standing in the front yard of the headquarters of general Vivianstine with Jen nie Turner, Angoline Jennings, while her sis t er Dolores , st ood in the center of the road, her hair flying in the wind.
"Perhaps"said polores coming up"Some one within the c amp may have kidnapped t he Princ esses."
"Oh they'd never do t hat wit hin the christian lines."exclaimed Annie Roonie who just em came out of the house.
"And sol stolen everything in their headquarters, so no one can ident ify who made off with them."added the girlscout officier.
"That's nonsens e"said An e Angoline Richoe"Why ev e everyone wit hin the christian lines loves violet and her sisters more thanthey love themselves .There isn't a person in any part of Calverinia, or any section of the loyal Abbiean nin Abbiscannian States, who would even steal a single thing they own."
"Huh"replied Dolores wit h a slight anger."You don't know every pers on in our Bl e Blessed Land.Sinc e t his war has broken out we have sec ret enemies even within out own government. So you don't know everyone in our lan d."
"And why don't I."

"It's a big country, and also this is a big army the biggest I know of."said Dolores."There are cracks and corners in this very army and positions that even violet, and her sisters don't know of ."
"From the hardships of girlscout life, Dolores gone sin t duffy."declared her sister Angeline.
"No, she is right about that."replied Angeline Richoe, thoughtfully."There are lots or may have been lots of queerly dressed Glandelinian spies in this army who never came near our generals or the interior positions.I and my followers have capt ured some of em ourselves, girls but we haven't seen or captured them all, of course, and there might be some wic ked Glandelinian spies s till within the c hristian lines yet, though I think many of them either have left or are prisoners and waiting for the time to face the firing squad!"
Just then Penrod dashed into the courtyard beside his hors e from whic h he had just dismount ed .
"Have you found viol t, and her sisters"c ried Penrod when c he stopped right beside them."!
"Not yet!""replied Angeline Richoe."doesn't Angelinia Aronburg kn ow where t hey are."!
"No.And what's surprising yet, she too has been robbed.All her important books, letter,s s big plan and maps and even other private conc erns of hers are all gone.Some one must have stolen t hem."
"Goodness me"s ried Angeline in extreme alarm."This is the worse st eeling ac t I ever heard of and within out own encompments.Who do you think did it Penrod!"
w"I've no ideashe answered."but I have come to get my n own plans and map and c arry them to Angelinia Aronburg.She is so much more powerful t han I that she may be able to disc over somet hing by means of my maps, quick q uicker and better than I could do myself."
"Hurry then pleaso, pleaso, pleaso,"said Angeline impatien t ly"For we are all getting terribly worried ."
Penrod rushed into his yellow t ent, but presently came bac k with a lon g sad face.
"It's gone too."he said dismally .
"What's gone!"asked Angeline Roonie.
"Everything I had for military purposes and my tent ins ide looks as if a c yc lone had raged in there and there's cigar butts on my table.Some spies must have robbed me too."
They looked at one anot her in amazement.
"This situation is getting desperate"continued the boyscout leader"All the military articles that belongs to Violet,and her sisters, or to Angelinia Aronburg, or to me had been stolen ."
"Do you su pose that Violet and her sisters had an urgen t work to do and had to go off and without t elling any one and took those things t hemselves for some purpose f"asked Angeline Roonie.
"No indeed"declared Penrod,"I suppose t e some Glandelinian soldiers have stolen or kidnapped violet,and her sisters , and for fear we would follow and rec apt ure her, has taken all t hings away from us that would be an clues to her or their whereabout s ."
"How dreadful"s ried Angeline Richoe."The idea of any of t hese Glandelinians always wanting to in u in jure our Princ esses .Can't we do anything t o find them Penrod.We surely must .You know how you felt at Delight's Junct ion when t hey were reported myst eriously missing them."
"I'll ask An geline Aronburg.I must go st raight back to her on my fast horse, and tell her that everything I had of importance have also disappeared.The good girlscout leader will be shocked, I know."
Wit h this he ran to his horse, jumped on, and again the st ood, dashed away at full speed.The chief girlscout leaders assembled before Violet and her sisters blighted headquarters, were very much disturbed in mind.Even Jen nie Turner was more quiet than usual, and feared that a great c alamit y had overt aken them all.Violet an d her sisters were girls cout leaders of considerable power, and all the c hristian armies even, as well as all the boy an e girls cout s in any army looked upon them as their protec tor and fried friend.The idea of their beautiful Princ ess es being over powered by s ome strange and sec ret enemies and kidnapped from their t ent c e captives, was too astonishing and frightening, for them to c omprehend at firs t .Yet what other explan ation of the mystery c ould there be.!
"Violet,and her sisters would not go away willin gly, wit hout let ting us know about it ."asserted Angeline Richoe,,,,"And she wouldn't take Angelinia Aronburgs maps and t hin gs or Pen rods property, bec ause they c ould get t hem as anytime just by asking for them.I'm sure some c rafty Glandelinian s pies have done this, and also I wouldn't put it past those c onfoun ed In tern ational Spies either."
"If n ot them, some one within our very own possit ions!"as ked Annie Roonie.

"Of course.N o one could get ac ross or in.to our lines but those Professional Int ern ational Spies you know, for they know the Counter signs even if they are changed every hour, and no one but thos e In ternat ional Professional Spies could know about t he military maps and things, or where they were kept by t he Princ esses, Gertrude,and Penrod, and so be able to st eal the whole out fit while we know nothing about it.It must be those Professional s pies, and no one els e."

"But how could we locate where those spies are now!"As ked Jennie Turner."That 's t he question!Howland they're extremely dangerous to meddle wit h yet so.I found that out myself."

"If we knew what to do."replied Angelin e Richee,,, s overely,,"We wouldn 't be st anding here doing not i nothing."

"Just t hen two boyscout officers entered the c ourt yard followed by a platoon of boy and girlscout privates, and approached the group of girlscout generals. One o boyscout leader was dressed in the fantastic Burrough boyscout fashion, a dark lavendar jac ket, yellow kn ickerbockers, yellow leat her shoes, an d a purple hat with a high peak and almost shaped like a low Mexican Sombero, and t iny so silver bells dangling from its rim(Uncle Bim), an d t his was Jac k Saunders, Jean Saunders bes t friend.The other boyscout offic er was Joe Green usually Angelinia Aronburgs best Aidedecamp.He was not quite as big as Jack, but he wore the same kind of uniform, only they were of purple coat, and red kinckerbockers instead of yellow.As the t wo came ridin g up t o t he girls, they dismounted, and Joe Green remarked with a sound of alarm in his voice;;

"Hullo Miss Ric hee, dear.Everybody in our child s c amps and throughout t he army is terribly excited and worried.They say Violet,and her sisters are lost."

"Who says Violet, and her sist ers are lost...!!!"

"Everybody is talking about it , throughout all our own c amps,and in the army aswell."he replied.

"I wonder how everyone found it out !"Angelina Richee asked.

"I know"said Jack"Mildred Maxwell told them.she has been asking many, has any one seen the Princ esses."QQAZ VTE

"That's too bad,"ttttddd obs erved Jennie Turner frownin G.

"Why!"asked Joe Green .

"There wasn't any use of get ting the whole army excited and alarmed, an d making all our boy and girlscout regiment s un e un un happy t ill we are dead c ertain that Violet,and her sisters cannot be found."

"Pshaw"said Joe Green."It's n ot hing to get lost .I've been lost lots of times and found my way back without help."

"That's true"admitted Annie Roonie"but its different wit h Violet, and her sisters.They're the best little rulers of all of our armies and us, and we're afraid the reason they are lost , is because some Glandelinian spies have stolen them away."

"Un lywicked people would s t eal"said Jack Saunders ."And only Glandelinians or Foriegners in our c ountry are wicked.Do you know of any wic ked peoplevin our country D Angelina besides Glandelinians ."

"No."she replied.

"They're here though, or were wit hin our camp"c ried Angelina Jennings , c oming up to them."Violet and her sisters are stolen or kidnapped, some on e who are Glandelinians if not foriegners stole or kidnapped them, only wicked people steal children and our property, so if not foriegners t hen Glandelin ians did it, and you know how wic ked Glandelinians are, and how how Vio let an d her sisters are hated by them."

There was no denying the t ruth of this st atement .The fac e of all of them were now sorrowful and solemn.

"One thing is positively sure"said Joe Green e, after a time"If Violet an d her sisters have been kidnapped, as many of us who can ought to go and fiddtdd find her and punish the Glandelinians or who ever the kidnappers are.You know none of us have failed in any undert aking yet ."

There may be a lot of Glandelinian s pies"sugges ted Annie Roon is gravely" nd in t hisgreat army they don't seem to have any good spies exc ept t he Gemini and they're all a re hing for h them now."

"There is one spy general"claimed Angeline Ric hee."

"Who is he.! ""

"General Joe knowsis Ambros e Evans .He's a great guardian of t he Vivian Girls and will doesnyt hing for t hem."

"Well Evans is sure the man."said Angeline Ric hee."Wher Where is he at! "

"He's wit h General C on e on tinian Aronburgs army about three hundred miles from here, and has had no intent ions without orders of ever comin here of ever comin g here."

"T"en I c an't see that he will of muc h use to us or t hem in t his trouble" sighed Annie Roonie."But perha s Violet , and her sist ers , who are so c lever an d who have so often done so, c an get away from the kidnappers or the Glandelinians wit hout any help from anybody.At leas at at least I believe so though we should endevor to help them any how."

"They might be able to esc ape"Admitted Angeline Ric hee, reflec tively "Cut but if they had the power or opportunit y to do that , is it likely she and her sisters would let t hemselves be kidn apped!No indeed.So the kidnappers and t hieves must have been very c lever spies, and I'm sure it was t hose "Mutt and Jeff"fellows.No one no mat ter who they were have outwitted or frustrated them yet ."

There was no denying t his are argument , and although they ti t alked the mat ter over for a full hour, they were unable to decide how violet an d her sist ers had been kidnapped or stolen against their will, or if it were not t he Professional spies, who had then commit ted t he dreadful deed!.

About one hour and one half Penrod came back(put in the clock) ridin g slowly on his horse, bec ause he felt , discouraged, sad, apprehensive and perplexed. Angelinia Aronburg came, later, on e her white charger, and she was also worried an d unhappy and looked it badly too.Some of the friends of Violet, and her sisters joined them, and before dinner time, though hardly no one c ould eat when the t ime came, they all had a long t alk together.

"I believe"said Angeline Ric hee"we ought to start out disguised for t he enemys lines right away in s arch of our dear Vivian Girl Frien ds .It seems c ruel for us to remain comfortably in t heir camps , while she and her sisters are prisoners in the power of the enemy probably, and we the terror of the enemy don't do anything els e but talk, and talk about it. "

"Yes"agreede Angelinia Aron burg, the girlscout c hieftian"Some one ought t o search for them.I'm heartily sorry but I c ann ot go mys elf as much as I des ire t o, because I must work hard in order to c reate some n ew plan by whic h means I may rescue Violet, and her sisters and punish those who did the deed and stole our things.But if you can fin d them in the meantime, and let me known who has kidnapped them,and for what purpose, it will enable me to rese us them more quickly.And if Glandelinians stole them for some wicked purpose, and they're found murdered I'll burn every Glandelinian prison er I ceptured hereafter at t he st ake."

"Then we'll start immediately."decided Angeline Richee."Annie Roonie, Jen nie Turner and ot hers who will ac company me won't was te an ot her minute."

"I'm sure you girls will need some good boyscouts"remarked Pen rod"So I'll go with you and leave th t he full command of all boys c outs in the hands of Timothy Groveton .All my guide books alas has been s tolen, s o I am n ow no more of a guide than any one else, but I will bring along a stren ous ort of sec ret shadowers, who will protec t you from the foe whom you may meet wit h."

"Whatharm could happen to us with the weapons we carry!"inquired Annie Rönttä RRoon ie.

"What harm happened to Violet, and her sisters!"ret urn ed the boyscout gen eral.

"If there are those arch en emies of mine, those Mut t an d Jeff "Spies abroad again near our lines, who are able not only to kidnap Violet, and her sist ers, an d all they possess, but Angelinia Aronburgs plans and books, and all what she possessed, and all my own property, t hen thosesame Intern ational Spies may yet cause us a lot of injury.I had an experienc e wit h them twice myself and if you don't believe what they did to me ask Angelinia Aronburg here, for she was my resc uer.Violet, and her sisters are great spies t hemselves , and so is Angelinia Aronburg, an d no glandelin ians have yet succ eeded in killing t he Princ esses no matter how hard they t ried, but every one of us are not possessed of the ways of violet, and her sisters, so an dan gerous as we are and have been to the enemy we must n ev n overtheless watch out for our selves.The enemy is afraid of us, that's dead sure, but I'll be hanged if thos e t wo International Spies are."

"The Glandelinians have usually been afraid to even t ry t o kill me." said Joe Greene.

"That is true"replied Angelin ia Aronburg,"And I think it may be will to divide the s e searchers int o several s trong parties, that they may c over all the territory in this n eighborhood more quickly.So I will send Joe Greene with a st rong c olumn of disguised scouts int o the eastern dominion here whic h t hey are well ac quainted with, and I will send Dolores Mic-Hollos ter and her well armed troop into the middle wes t near the foe at Ric hees forts for they are fearless and brave and never tire, and to the northwest t where many dangers lurk I will send the C amp Fire Scouts, with a strong body of Winkie Abyssinkilian cavarly.Angeline Richee may make up her own party as she t hinks bes t , and travel for the en c ampments in front of t he Lucillia Ric hees fortific at ion s.All

All of you must searc h everywhere for Violet, and her sis ters, and not only t ry to disc over where they are hidden and rescue them, if possible, but also capture their kidnappers if possible, and give them all the "Fire Stake"which is the penalty for kidnapping children in war time."

They believed this was a very wise plan , and adopted it wit hout ques t ion. In the absense of violet, and her sistord, Angelinia Aron burg was the most important girlscout leader of all on record, and all were glad to serve under her direc tion, for she assumes command of all in the abs en ce of violet and her sisters .....

Immediately after the council broke up,Angelinia Aronburg rode back t o her head quarters, stopping on the way to instruct a number of her officers to make t he searc h in different ways for the missing Princ esses.On e hearing of the disappearanc e of Violet, and her sisters t hey started at once in disguise for the enemys lines in search for them.

As soon as Angelinia Aronburg had left the territory of Violet, and her sist ers t ent, Joe Greene, and others who had been present at the c on ference,,, began t heir journey toward the Rickson Fortificat ions, and an hour later Jack Saunders Jean, and a score of others disguised as ragamuffins, traveled toward the Thumbelinia wort ifications . When all thesesare hors were gone, Angelinia Richee,,, and Penrod complet ed t heir own preparations.Penrod secured for them horses that would suit their fanc t and he wanted Angeline Richee, t he Roonie girl, KJennie Turner and others to ride t heir own ohorses whic h were bet ter and to take the others along.Jennie Turner came up to them mounted on her own fiery steed.Other child scouts now appeared, volun teering to go along. These were none ot hers than the famous Lagorian boyscouts, one of the most interesting kind of child scouts to look upon.They were a local organization of t he Vivianites, having great numbers in their command, and t here were an equ equal number of girls as there were boys running into the many thousands . They were tough and hardy boy and girls,,,, and while their ac tions were somewhat more stric ter than that of others they were just as much a terrorto the en emy as any of the other kinds.The leader of the Lagorians and Jane Lee of the Vivianites were great friends,,, and so Angeline Richee agreed to let the Lagorians go with them. No kind of girl or boy scouts however no matter what regiment they belonged to could compare in numbers, size of regiments or in shrewdwhrewdness intteil intelligenc e wit h these boy and girlscouts , and who talked worked and ac ted and did all things with more shrewdness and wisdom t han even persons called the "Fox"did.It is true in this s tory that many of t he Glandelinian generals trembled, when they heard that the christian army confronting them had a division of child scouts with it, , and were generally afraid to fight the army unless they had with them an intelligent general.All t he boy and girlscout regiments no matter what they may be named were as fierce as Rat tlesnakes to the enemy, and were a great favorite to the army t hey belonged to, and always guarded the advanc e of t he armies on all oc c asions and were such a menance to all Glandelinian generals that even now the very Glandelinian Govern ent was terribly worried.They seemed to be the main protec tor of the army and fought as the soldiers did, but with disaster to the en emy.Radcliffe was the leader of the Lagorians, and was also an old companion and dear friend of Schofield Penrod, so Penrod was delighted to have him join the party.

"I'm so nervous over our dear Princesses."said Radcliffe"That it would make me very un appy to remain behind while you are trying to find them.But do not get us or yourselves into any danger that is unec essary, for we don't wan t to fail in our quest ."

"W" will not get into any danger if we possibly can help it."pronished Angeline Ric hee"But we shall do anything to find Violet, and her sist ers, danger or no danger ."

The addition of these boy and girlscouts to the party gave Dolores Mic-Hollis Hollester an idea, and she ran and got her grenade sack.All the res t came to see them off, and suggested that they put a supply of ammunition into t heir pockets, and plenty of food supplies, in as much as t hey were uncertainn how long they would be gone.George Zimmermann and Tinot hy Groveton, a new friend and comrade of the boy and girlscout s, were sorry t hey could not go wit h them on this expedition, but Angelinia Ao Aronburg had h asked them to remain in the Vivinite camps and take charge of the commands, while Angeline Richee was away, and t he boy scout leadership agreed to do so.They put alon side their saddles everything they thought they might n eed, and then they formed a pro-c ession and rode down the Company Street, t hrough the encampments to the gates of the great walled like enclent , that stretched ac ross the Company Street in t his location.Crowds of all the boys and girlscouts and even soldiers lined the Company Street to see them pas and to cheer them and to wish t hem suce success for they were alll grieved over the loss of Violet, and her sist ers, and anxious t hat they would be found again.

It was about this time that one of the smaller boyscouts, who had been lying asleep in Violet,'s room,in her h e headqy headquarters, woke up and discovered he was very lonesome.Everything seemed very still throughout the great ten t, and also outside in the camp, and Henry Totoe, that was the lit tle boys name--missed the customary chatter of the Vivian Girls and their br beaut iful and brave ways.He always paid plenty of attention to what was going on around him, and he seldom said anything unless he was spoken to first, so the little boy did not know about the loss, or disappearance of violet, and her sist ers, or that everyone selected espec ially by Angeline Ric hee had gone in searc h of her or Violet, and her sisters. But he liked to be with the girls and boyscout s as much as a loving little dog loves to be with his mis t ress or master, and especially wi with either Violet,and her sisters , or Angelinia Richee, and having yawned and stretched himself,,, and finding no one in the td tent , he went oc out into the Company Street where he met St ella Reole.

"Where's Miss-Angeline Richee ?""""""asked Totoe.

"she has gone for the enemys lines to do some scout ing."answered the girlscout private.

"When?"

"O little while ago."replied Stella .

The boyscout (pent) turned and c mounting his horse rode down the long and broad// Company Street , untill he came to the crossing of one of the roads running through the camp. Here h he paused to listen, and hearing the sound of cheering, he urged the horse swiftly along, untilll he came in s ight of the squadron, wit h Angeline Ric h ree, and all the others .Being a wise little boyscout , he decided not to show himself to Angeline Richee just then, lest he be sent back tt back home but he never lost sight of the t ravelers,, all of whom were so eager to get ahead, that they never thought of looking behind them.

When they came to the gates of the immense wall like salient,,, the Guardian of the Gat es came out to throw out wide the portals, and let t hem pass through.

"Did any strange boy and girlscouts ,or any strange persons come in our out of the camp last night, when Violet, and her sist ers were stolen or kidnapped?" Asked Angeline Richee .

"No indeed Your Excellency."answ red one of the Gate Guards .

"Of course not."said Penrod."Any one clever and shrewd enough to st eal all the things we have lost would not mind the barriers of an enormous works like these, in the least . I think the thief must have flown in the sie by means of some aroplane or baloon at night, or otherwise he or they could not have stolen from the headquarters of violet, and her sisters, and Angelinia Aronburgs own headquarters and my placé all at the same night.Moreover as it is said there are no airships in the Glandelinian army, and no way for Aroplanes to get into our lines undetected bec ause of t heir dor dronning roar,I believe the thieves may have been some one else bes ides Glandelinians who would not shrink from showing the Counter sign if they knew it like the Glandelinians do and may have got in too by which means which neither I, nor Antitititatata ur Angelinia Aronburg understand.

On they went , and before the gat es closed beside or behind them Henry managed to also pass them.The country surroundvthe child scout camp was thickly settled by immense christian encampments, and for a while our friends rode through fortified roads but well and nicely paved, which wound through a strongly fortified count ry ast rewn with immense christian seige fortified works and forts, all built in the same fashion as those at Vivian Wickey were.In the course of a few hours however, they had left their own territory of the christian lines and entered the fortified country of the besieging Winkie Abyssinkilian armies, which occupied about a quarter of all the christian seige territory within the main Christian seige lines, but which was not so well known to the child scouts as many ot her parts of the seige positions they had been more accustomed to.Long before dinner time t he travelers had crossed the Christian territory of the Norma Run River near near to the old time position of Kindernines army near Delights Junc tion(which was now in possession of general Bli Blain N ight Lingers Domdobian C r C hristian besiegers, and had entered a landscape"Called a Rolling Prairs bef because of the formation of the seige positions t here, where the Angelinians under general Great Heart was situationed.Most of the artillery in this posit ion were desult orily active night and day for mot he wit hout stop ping, an d were some what more vigorous to day.

They asked every officer they met for news of violet, and her sisters but none in t his district had ever know that they had disappeared, and the news causeda serious apprehension in the whole territory and many officers volunteered to give Angeline Ric hee a strong cavarly escort, but she declined saying so many men with her disguised child scouts would look mighty suspicious to the enemy. By dinner time (n o one stopped for dinner however) they p had passed all t hese positions to the left, and so fierce was the shell fire from the enemys lines beyond that they couldn't go any further in that direc t ion without c ertain destruction to all, and had to halt t o see a way to go where they could avoid t hat dreadful she,ll storm and get away from the dreadful thunders of so many cannons and explosions .

The christian officers treated the travelers with much courte courtesy. Annie Rooner sai saw the smaller boyscout and said;

"Where did you come from Henry!"

"From where Violet, and her sisters have ther their headquarters."said the boyscout.

W"Does Angeline Ric hee know you are here!"asked the girlscout officer.

"I beli ve believe not"admitt d Henry,and he added a little anxiously!"You dl do you thin k friend girlscout , we are now far away by the Vivinite camps for me to risk showing myself.Or will Ang-line ric hee, or even Jen nie Turner send me back because I was not invited invited!"

"On y Angeline Richi see can answer that question."said the girl."for my part Henry I consider this affair none of my business, so you must ac t and do as you t hink best ."

At that moment Angeline Ric hee who had dismounted from her horse came walking up leading the horse by the bridle.She discovered Henry talkin g to Annie Ronnie, and the little girlscout general-exel imed;

"Goodness me h Henry Totos.Where in the world did you c ome fr n from!"

"From the Vivinite camp, where you and your followers cruelly left me." replied the boy in a reproachful tone.

"I surely forgot all about you"admitted Angeline and even if I did not forget I probably would have left you with one of the Jennings girls, seeing this is not anything like a pleasure trip but stf stric tly military business in which we may be involved in conflict.But now t hat you are here Henrt Hen ry,I suppose you'll have t to stay with us.Dinner will soon be ready for any of us who wishes to eat, and you shall have your share."she added and she was really glad to have Violets Mascot boyscout with hershe and Henry had traveled before, and she knew that he was a good and most faithful comrade .....

When the food was cooked and served, the girlsc outs invited some of the boy and girlscouts of this section of the army t to join them in t heir dinner.They willingly consented, and while they ate one of the boyscouts said to them;

"When you leave the Christian lines in your expedit ion you will be then passing through a dangerous count ry, unless you turn to the north, or to the east to escape its perils ."

"What's the matter with the country ahead of us if I may ask!!!""Demanded Angeline Richee .

"Beyond t his position called the "Rolling Count ry""explained the boy scout,, are the advanced Glandalinian positions, and defended by many bob wired entan glements so that none can get past them.Bwt o Beyond these o positions are the dangerous Thumbelinia fortifications ."

"What are they like!"inquired Angeline Richee.

"No one knows, fo no one has ever passed the advanc ed positions of the enemy in any assault no matter how severe."was the reply,,"But it is said that the gunners of the fortific ations sometimes sweep the territory wit h a heavy shell fire to keep even prowlers from approachingythem."

"Who says all that!"asked Mildred Maxwell.

"It is a common report."replied the Burrough boyscout."Every one believes it. You know in the times past christian assaults upon Thumbelinia had met with fatal disaster and frightful salughter ."

"I don't see how they know."remarked Angeline Roonie"If no one has been there."

"Nor I."Added Joan Guard."

"Perhaps some spy gets through and brought t ha n ews."Suggested Jennie Turner.

"If you got through and see aped these dangeron."continued t he boy scout,,"you might enc counter ot hers,, still more serious, before you come to the Great North Bend of the Norma Run River.It is true that on this side of the river lies the positions of the Abbiennians and if you got there you would have no trouble It is between here and the Great North Branch of the River t hat all danger from the enemies batteries lies, and also that is an unknown territory, that ishald by t he strongest columns of the Glandalinian infantry, unapproachable camps, and whose batterins covers all approac hes to these posit ions ."

"It may be and it may not be ."said Penrod."We shall know when we get there."

"Well "persisted the boyscout"In a war torn besieged territory like this every undiscovered sec tion is likely to harbor dangerous pitful and frightful ambushes also.The enemy is dangerous and is as obstinate as any one c an be."

"How so."

"Bec ause my scouting patrols saw that.If the Glandalinians were not dangerous they would not be maki making such positions."

"That argument"stated P n Penrod"convinces me that it is our dut y to go st raight into these unknown enemy positions , how ever dangerous the t rip may be, for it is surely some glandelinians who has stolen or kidnapped Violet, and her sisters , and we therefore know that it would be folly and a dangerous handicapp to the army and nation in general to let that c ontinue, and also folley to scare h among our own c hristian positions for the culprits.Violet, and her sisters may not be hidden in the secret plac es of the enemys position near Thumbelinia fortifications it is true(you are a jew) but it is our duty to travel to every s pot however extremely fa dangerous that may be, wherever our beautiful Princ esses are likely to be help held by the enemy in confinement ."

"You are right about that."said Joe Greene approvingly.""Dangers don't hurt us, only things that happen u hurypt any one, and a danger is a thing that might happen or reported to going to happen, and yet might n ot happen, and sometimes don't ammount to anything.I vote we go ahead and take our chanc es.We're not cos cowards you know and if we die we go to heaven you know."

They were all of the same opinion, so they reunddled their horses mounted, and said good bye to the Burrough boy an d girlscouts, and proc eeded on t heir way.::"

"The position called the "Rolling Praire, was not difficult t o travel through , although it seemed all up hill and down i hill of positions well armed, and treacherous places to attac k by the enemy, sac for w while they made good progress, being greeted by many of the soldiers who were in the positions.The hills were not Natural formed buth piled up by the soldiers.Soon they had gone beyond the christian lines and the farther they advanced the more dreary the landscape became and the more it was certain they had to look out for Glandelinians cavarly patrols.All their horses were swift and apparently tireless.It was about an hour after they had eaten their dinner, when they first c ame insight of a low c luster of what appeared at the distance like long low redoubt s.some parts rose up as to be cone shaped.From a distance the positions whatever they were appeared to be very indistinct bec ause of the haze of battle smoke hovering over the s scene, and the positions seemed rather small------more like breast works than redoubts but had the color of snow forts---but as the travelers drew nearer, they noticed a most unusual circumstance---the works on the outer sec tion were fronted first by a long maze of barbed wired fenc es and beyond by a long high log made p palisade, and that the works rose up like steep redans. They were teeming with tremendously sized cannons, and from the c en ter rose a high flag pole with the Nat ional Flag of Glandalinia flut terin in the flut r fluttering in the breeze.

They suspecting what they were kept hidden so that watching of the foe would not spot them and open fire.

"I guess these are the Thumbelinia or Maya Fortifications, all right."said An aline Angeline Ric hee.

"They must be"said Penrod."And no wonder attacks on them had such fatal results in the past.They appear so formidable as to be impossible to g arry."

"Why do they called it "Fort Thumbelinia!"asked one of the boyscouts ."I thought something very small like lit tle Maya or Thumbelinia in a Fairy Tale should rec ieve such a name and yet these fortifications are immeasureably ernormous and high."

"It's just the name the Glandalinians gave to it.""said Angeline Ric hee.

"They are sure strong enough t o o top a world of armies. "added Annie Roonie"But they don't seem to be made of earth or sand, though most of it is construc ted also out of sand bags. "

There were se e several rows of the barbed wired fenc es, extending both the the right and to the left, for miles and miles.How many rows there might be before coming to the palasades, none could tell, but between the first rows of barbed f wired fences, could be seen other fences of anot her order, all str stretching one way or another.They had dismounted from t heir horses,, and leaving the animals in a safer place, they c rawled on their hands and knees so that they would not be seen, and as they did so t hey watched t he enemys positions most attentively, untilll at last coming close up(pop) t hey discovered t hat there was a wide but deep ditc h, along the very front of the fields where stood the bob wired fences, and that the wires and posts of the fenc es were set so closely together(but neatly arranged) that the wiring was continuous like an impassable n w now network, and barred further advance in that direct on. direc tion. At the edge of the ditch or moat , t hey alll dismounted, and peered over into its depths.They then that is Angeline and Jennie secured a long piece of wood nd put it into the water to see how deep it was.The water was as they measured about ten feet but full of mud and silt.There was no telling w whether it was made boggy or not indeed if it had been turned into a log by the enemy or no t t o prevent attackers from wading ac ross. From there they knelt it seemed as if the barbed wired fenc es had been set as close to the edge of the dit ch as possible.From this side of view it seemed impossible to get through anywhere even if any one did find a way to crosses the ditch, or succeeding in that to gain a foot hold near any of the positions wit hout being seen by the foe and ruthlessly s hot down.

"This ditch is far too wide for any one to jump ac rossn."remarked Jac k Saunders, a"and it may be a bog and dangerous to wade."

"Perhaps Joe Green being slim and limber c ould do it."sugges ted Angeline Ric hee .

"What jump from here and into that maze of tangled sharp pointed wires."c ried t he boy scout indignantly."I should say not .Even if I landed there, and there was some way to go through the wires may have a heavy voltage of electricity, and we'd get shocked to death.There's another wave of barbed wired fences beyond this and perhaps still anot her beyond that before we could reach th palisades . I don't believe any living c reature c ould get through that sea of wires, unless like t he Glandelinians you n know the way to t he gateof these fenc es,andknow the in and outs of these fenc es.".

"I propose we turn b c back."said one of the boyscout lieutenants, as he s tared at the barbed wired fen c es.

"I agree with you"said joe Greene."

"We should have gone some other direct ion and taken that Lagorian boyscouts advice."added Jack Saun ders.

The others of the party however they might be puzzled by t he s erious problem that c onfront ed t hem, would not allow t hemselves to des despair.

"If we once get t hrough t his maze of barbed wired fen c es "said Joan Guard looking closely at them wit h her field glasses,"We probably could get along all right, that if is if the enemy don't spot us and let go a couple of machine guns."

"True enough"agreed Angeline Richee."We must find some way of c ourse t'o get through these fenc es .but how!!!!!!!!!"

"I wish we had a friendly Belngdglemean Creature with us ."sighed Angeline Ron Roonie."We could ride on i his bac k as he flew ac ross wit h us ."

"But t here isn't any here."said Pen rod,"and t herefore we mus t depend upon ourselves to conquer this great difficulty.Unfortunately all my plans of thes e sec tions have been stolen,,,, ot herwis e, I am sure we could eas ily find a way to get into the enemys lines wit hout being discovered."

"Unfort unately"observed Joan guard"None of us has been c reat ed with wings . And we're in a Christian country without any Christians."

"What is that around your waist, Miss Richee!" asked Penrod.

"That ! Oh that's just my knife sheath ben belt .I once c apt ured from "His "Beaut iful Excellenc y genera' Mancey " she replied.

"A sharp sheat h knife.Wha wWhy t hat s fine.I'm sure wh with t hat you could cut your way through these wires ."

"It might if I knew how to work it without getting an elatric shock."said the little girl."Secret ly I have been t esting t he wire of t he fen ce wit h a little brass thing I c arried, and which part I held I covered with a piece of rubber and t here's a ura elat ric in these wires and heavy voltage too. Violet ,and her sisters knows a lot how to get t hrough thes e s ort of things but I've never found out about it.All I kn ow is that while I am carrying t hisknife and as I'm as swift as lightning with it, no Glandelin ian c an u hurt me even t rough thro come against my one.

Try opening a gate wit h it , and s ee if you can get through."suggested t he boyscout leader.

"But what good will that do!"asked Angeline Ric hee."If I got through the gate it wouldn't help the rest of you, as the g te is so n arrow only one can get in at a time and I c ouldn't go among t hose fort ificat ions of the enemy alone while you s tayed here."

"True enough"agreed the boy scout leader, sadly, and t hen aft er lookin g aroun d the group, je he inquired;

"What is that in your belt , Annie Roonie."

"A small liquid fire pistol.Violet, and her sisters gave it me t o."she explain ed"And if I'm in trouble or get int o a place from which I cannot es cape I can use it.but it would help us here one bit.It would cause det ec t ion from t he enemy t o t ry to melt the wires apart wit h that as it'll make so much black smoke."

"True eho enough."repeated Penrod more sadly/.

"There was a big broad spreadin g(Para loy appearin g) pine tree n ear t o t he edge of the deep ditch or moat , and as the weat her looked rainy t hey all gat hered under t he tree to s tudy the problem of what to do next .

"If we had a lon g Rope"said Bet ty Boonie,"we could fast en it to t his tree, and let the ot her end of it down into t his moan moat , and all slide down it."

"Well what then!"asked Penrod.

"Then if one of us could manage to wade or swimac ross, and t hrow t he rope up t he ot her side."ex l explained the girlscout "We could all c limb it and be on the other side of the ditch.The rope could prevent us from goin g down in c ase the ditch has a man made bog of dangerous proportions ."

QQAZ

"There are too many "if"in t hat s ugges tion "remarked the boyscout."T hat might be accomplished but the dit h ditch enct ion may be watched by enemy sharps hooters, and you must remember that the other side is nothing but a maze of elat ricfied barbed wired fen c es , so that even could we possibly fas t en a rope to one of the fen c e stakes we couldn't get through any ow wit hout bein g killed by t he high voltage."

"That rope ideaxian't half bad though."said Joan Goe Guard, who had been st anding dangerously n ar the dangerous and t rencherous ditch.

"What do you mean!"asked Angeline R e Richee.

Joan guard suddenly anat her eyes tward where she and all her followers had left t heir hors es.

"Ha I have it "she exclaimed."Un e Let us unharness the hors es and I'll explain next."

"Shall we!"asked Jac k Saunders doubtfully, turning t o t he others .

"Well if we don't succeed in s mething p once in a while, we girls and boys scouts are not to the enemy what we're said to be." said "Mildred Maxwell.Joan Guard has a lot of brains , even if she is somewhat youn er younger than t he res t of us."

"You are right."asserted Penrod."If her brains can help us out of this difficulty, we ought to use them.."

They went to where they had left their hors es and began to un e unh arness them.When they had removed the harness Joan Guard told them to take them all apart, and buckle the straps together, and to end, And after they had done this,t hey found they had one very long strap, that was stronger than any rope.

"It would reach across the ditch easy/, "said Jac k Saunders ,, who wit h vthe ot her boyscouts had watched t his proc eeding .."But I don't see how they can be fastened to any of the fenc e s takes, for if the wires are charged I'm sure t he wood is also."

Joan Guard however had no such notion as that in c her head.She told t hem t o fast en one end of the st rap to a s tout limb of t he trees, pointing to one which extended quite t to the edge of the ditch.Jack Saunders did that / climb ing the trees and then c rawling out upon the limb untilll he was nearly over t he moat.Then he managed to fas ten the strap, which reached to t he ground below and yet c oiled up so long it was ,and then he slid down it , and was caught by Penrod, who feared that he might fall into t he ditch, and go t hrough the quagmire in it .Joan Guard was delighted..She then said;

"This is a desperate undert aking but see that Joan Glandelin ian sentry over t here wit hin easy swinging reac h!Well I'm going to swing at him by means of t his rope knoc k him down and make him open the gate for us .An d if he dont --" she patted her revolver nic e and properly.She then seized t he lower end of the long strap, and tell t hem all to get out of her way, she went back as far as the strap would reach, and h then made a sudden run for t he ditch. Over t he edge she swung like lightning clinging to the strap untill it had gone as far as its length would permit , when she let go and smiled gracefully t hrough the air and lon landed feet first plump on the s houlders of the Glandelinian sent ry, sending him s prawling to the ground.She ris ing to her feet flashed her pist ol to his temple and made him s how t he gate.

"She's got him."said Jac k.wonderful work."

"My how she kn knocked the rascal down."exclaimed one of the girlsc outs.

"That was bec ause she swung so fast ."Penrod exclaimed."I'm afraid though the Gland lin ian if he s ees a chanc e mak may do s omething des perate and then she'll kill him."

"No he won't for I'm n ext."c ried Jack."So here I go.

He seized thedangling st rap frimly in his han ds , and in t he same way that Joan Guard had done swung himself over the ditch.He let go t he st rap at t he right moment , and fell at t heir very feet .Then he ros e to his feet and t he Glandelinian was surprised and shocked to s ee he had snot her little dangerous child scout en gny to con tend wit h.

"It s eems to work all right so far."remarked Jack Saunders.

"It s ure did."said Joan."Call the ot hers to follow as quickly as they can for here's the gate."

Penrod we and the res t were c alled t o.

"I believe it is working good."remarked Joe Greene."I guess I'll try it."

"Wait a minute"urged Penrod."Before any more of us make this desperate leap into that trench betond we must decide whether all will go, or whether some of us will remain behind."

"Do you suppose the enemy might see us if every one continue to swing ac ross!" asked Annie Roonie.

"I don't suppose so we're too far."said Angeline Ric hee"And one e wit hin they c an't hurt us any o anyhow.So as I'm anxious to find Violet , and her sisters I mean to swing myself ac ross too."

"I'll t ake my chances"dec ided Joe Greene . Q"

"I'm sure it will be terrible if we're caught by those Glandolinians, and I'm almost afraid to do it "said Annie Ron Roon ie"But I s hall do it if Angeline Ric hese does."

"Well that will leave Mildred Maxwell and Joan Saunders, and t he others."said Penrod"For of course I shall go, t hat I may look after Angeline Richoe.Do t he res t of you think you can find your way back to the christian positions again?"he as ked addressing mildred Maxwell,and Joan Saunders ."

"I'm not afraid, not muc h that is" said Joan Saunders. I "I looks risky I know,but I'm sure not afraid to go where ot hers are n ot ."

"If it wasn't for leaving my brother."began another girlse out in a hesitating voic e , but the boy interrupted her by saying;

"Go ahead if you want to, and I'll c ome after you.We are as brave any any any day and don't let any objects made by the enemy keep us back.But of course for the rest of them;"

"Oh we'll dare anything"asserted one of the retainers c almly."T ere's never been any ques tion about our go n going.We can't take the hors es t hough."

"No we must leave the hors es in the c are one one who must bring t hem bac k." said Penrod"And also we must leave our food and blan ets blankets I fear.But if we can defy these barbed wired fences to stop us, we won't mind t he sac rifice of some of our comforts ."

"No one knows where we'll go after we get through the gate."remarked Joan Saunders in a voice that s ounded as if she were going to c ry."

"We may not go anywhere at all."replied Joe Greene"But the bes t way to find out what will happen to us later is to swing ac ross, like the ot hers have done."

"I think I shall go last "said Penrod"so who want s to go firs t ."

"I'll go"decided Angeline pic hoe.

"No it 's my turn first"said Joe Greene."Watch me."

Even as he spoke the boys cout seized the strap and aft er makin g a swift run i himself ac ross the ditch.He got ac ross alright and he called to t he ot hers t o hurry.The sound gave t hem c ourage however, and Angelin e Richoe seized the strap, and bravely followed after Joe Greene.As s he landed on the other side she almost however landed head first , and fell s wa spwa sprawled upon a green sw dow between the wired fence es, and was so dazed by her almost Head firs t fall, that she laid quite still for a while to collec t her thoughts .Then Angeline Ri realized t hat someone was hel ping helping her to her feet,and here was Jac k Saunders an d Joe Greene on each s ide of her.

"Good for you Angeline"said Jack."But my word Angeline, you s ure flew over some.If you c ould have seen yours elf you would have been abs olutely astonished."

"They say time flies" laughed Joan Guard, who had tied her prisoner and hid him behind a roc k"But time n ever made a quicker y journ ey than that ."

Just then as Angeline turned to look she was in t ime to see ot hers come flying across, and t hem in quick s uccession s ome all the res t , Joan Saunders herself almost falling on t op of the ot hers , but they ret rested in time t o avoid her.Only Penrod was now left behin d, and they wait ed for him so long that every one began to be worried.But s uddenly he came swinging across, and tumbled heels over head beside them.

There they sat upon the ground,,,,, t heir heads st ill swimming from their dizzy heights,,, or flights , and looked at one anot her in silent bewilderment. But presently when assured that no one was jurred u or injured, or t hat they were discovered by any ot hers of the glandolinian guards , they grew more c alm and collec ted, and the boyscout Johns said with a sigh of relief;

"Who would have thou ght that we could have so easily got ten wit hin the gates of these Barbed wired fenc es."

"Are they really as ext en sive as they appear?"asked Annie Roon ie.

"They must be "replied t he boyscout,"for otherwise they would not have been so difficult to get through."

"Maybe that is all guesswork,"declared declared Penrod"For none of us have even tim e to stay long enough behindto investigate the len gth of these wires.But where are we?"

"That's guesswork too"said Violet Norma."That boyscout said the Thumbelinia Fortifications is situat ed at this side of the barbed wired fenc es a little beyond the fortified Palisades, and where the Angelin ians attacked t he enemy so fiercely last year.'"

"Oh no"said Angelinia Ric hoe"It's was the Calvinians and Abbieanians who did t hat , and they got pretty far before they were repulsed with such frightful losses as reported at that t ime."

"How could they do that with all thes e wired fen ces ?"asked Joe Greene."These barricades outside of yhe gat es are absolutely impassable, and could c heck t he advance of the biggest attac king armies."QQ"#$%_&'((

"And if the Christian troops managed to pass through these mas max mq masses of wires"said Angeline Roonie"They must have been c overed by suc h a powerful artillery fire as to tear these wired fen c es to pieces .But perhaps perhaps t he Glandolinians didn't arrest any of these at that time."

"Perhaps you're right"assented Penrod, in a thoughtful tone of voice."And perhaps t hat boyscout did not know what he was talking about. but as travel caut iously on toward the west, but avoiding the wires elsewhere, and discover for ourselves what thes e fortifications are like .....!!.!"

It seemed a difficult enough country, but so far here it seemed quite still and quiet .But there were no trees down here or there as usual nor no bushes, while over the groun d were scat tered fragments of what had been boxes an d other rubbish.About a mile away was a low fortified works to the nort h, t hat hidethem that from t hat hid from that them all the fortified country beyond it, s o t hey realized they could not tell much about the region of the great Thumbelinia Fortifications until they had crossed the hill, providing the hill was not in possession of Glandolinian armies,an d they could c ross it without being seen by the enemy.Their hors es having been eft her left behind br sent back to the chris tian lines they had to foot it now, and t hus the aventurers started for the hill,, which was reached after a brief journ ey.It was occupied by a strong force of Hobbenite Glandolinians, but as t hey were clevorly disguised, and had passes and had discovered the counter sign they were easily admit t ed int o the territory and allowed to pass on without even any of the glandolinian soldiers having the slightest suspicion or paying any attent ion to them.The reason was because they believed it was impos ible for any c hristian spies or scouts t o get through t heir barrins es and thatany one no mat t er how they appeared who were already within t heir lines were of t heir own side. As they mounted t he crest,, an d g azed beyond the crest , they discovered not far away t he great wall of pas palisades but they saw now they were not maki made of wood wood but of iron n and st eel with all s orts ofinterlock make shift and so forth, and beyond the pal sades but at a great distan c e rose t he strange breastork fortifications of t he powerful Fortifications of Thumbelinin.

There were beautifully c olored barracks with towers and spires of which gay colored glandolinian banners, and t he National Flags were flying.They did not believe the fort ifications could have been so big or extensive, and its slanting walls were very high t hick, and very broad on t op and it appeared that these fortific ations with its lon g t ermin g lines of gr at cannons and cannon manned fortific ed barracks could have s topped a whole arm'. Angeline Richoe had seen a number of other Vivian Wickay Land fort ific ations but not on a with so at ron g a barrier as this.The sight however was very awe inspirin g and bewit ufl, and the yellow colored walls of sand bags made an unusal almost dazzling s ight.

There was no path leading from the barbed wired fen c es to the fortific ations ,and t his proved that the Glandolin inns had something unusual in min d, but n overtheless the ground was somewhat soft and easy to travel over and with the fortifications before them they could not well lose t heir way.When they drew nearer to the palisade walls, the wes t ern breeze c arried to t heir ears the sound of mus ic ---------- at first , but growing louder as they adven ced.

Though passes and by the en emy it doesn 't seem like a very terrible plac e" remarked Angeline Richoe.

"Well it looks all right even though its a position of the enemy."replied Angeline Roon ie"but looks s an't always be trusted when t he enemy is there you know."

"Those fortific ations look forboding en ough"said Mildred Maxwell."They look dangerous to at tac k for one t hing, and t hey are mightier t han the Lucillia Rickson Fortifications,,, and no one but a blind owl c ould ever doubt that these fortifications have ad opped the fiercest of t he assaults of our armies ...."

"Are owls ever blind!"asked Annie Roon ie."

"Always in the dayt ime"said Jack Saunders.."But t hey say c at s c an see both day and night.Isn't it queer."

"I don't believe that"declared Mildred Rooniе."But good gracious what's become of the fortificat ions.!"

"I was go n going to ask t hey mys elf."said Angeline Richoe."It 's gone hidden in a ome sudden thick haze."

Everybody c ame to a sudden halt, for t he fortifications had really disappeared behind a t hick haze, a which began t o c over the whole country and envelope t hem.

"D ar me" exc laimed Penrod."This is rather disagreeable.It is s ure annoying to travel almost to a place, and t hen fin d it is hidden out of s ight by a haze."

"In h what direction c an it be t hen !!!"""""Asked Angeline Richoe."We were c ertainly going in t he right direct ion a minute ago."

"I can hear the men in yet ."doc lared Jack Saunders,, and indeed them they all listened the at rain of music could be plainly heard.

"I can see a part of the fortifica tions over there to the left"called Jennie Turner"The haze is spending itself in that direc tion."and turning their eyes they saw the high slant ing redoubt s and t owers and fluttering banners to the left of t hem.

"If this strange fog continued we would have lost our way."declared Angeline Richee.

"We did lose our way"said mildred Maxwell.

"Nonsens e"said Joe Greene."We all have been t rooping at raight t ward the big fort ifications,, ever since we first saw it .The for only hid it from our view."

"Then o how does it happen-----"

"Never mind"int errupt ed P enurod"We are n o further from it than we were before.It is in the same direct ion nevertheless , so let us hurry and get as close as we can before anot her haze envelopes it out of our sight."I he haze is smoke, though where it comes from I do not know,probably from a great big fire, caused by shell fire which I hear t hunderin t hundering somewhere."

So on they went dirge tly t ward the fortifications lines,, which seemed only four miles distant now(get a new) but when they had t raveled less t han a mile it suddenly disappeared again, and not only t hat but even t hey were en veloped in a haze so thick that you c ouldn't see twenty y feet away.

Once more they paused,,,, somewhat discouraged, but in a minute more the haze grandually moved away slightly however, and Jen nie again discovered the fort if ications .

"Goodness gracious"cried Angelin e Rin hee."There is surely s omet hing wrong in t his territory.Do you suppose the Glandelinians let loose s moke clouds t o hide some of the fortific ations from the chris tian lines , Penrod."

"It may not be that at all."he replied lookin g sout hward wit h a speculat ive gaze.

"What c ould it be then?."

"Just from a big fire.There's one ranging sout hward t ward from here and I believe all that haze comes from there."

"What must be burning then!"asked Annie Roonie.

"I cannot see from here and the haze obstructs the view for my field glasses."

"I can't believe tht t that ."said Jac k Saun ders ."If there is a fire t hen a big one may be made on purpos e by the enemy to dest roy the view by s moke. smoke.But if it is a fire then why is it so far away."

"I see an enormous cloud of smoke ris in g over there to the wes t ward s out h of the fortifications."doc lared Jon] Joan Guard."

"Where!" asked Jennie Turner.

"Somewhere to the south of the fortifications."s d he pointed.

"Do you think it is safe to proc eed or sho l we go bac k and try an easier way."asked one of the girlscouts .

This was however disagreed to and t hey went inued on again .They were constant ly gr gett ing nearer to it however having worked their way pas t a long row of shrubb ed shrubs.Presently as the haze had again increas ed as to obs cure t hair view the buccaneer Joe Greene, who at this moment was leadin g t he procession, halted abrupt ly and cried out :

"OH! H."

"What in the world in the matter wit h you yelling like that f"as ked An gelin e Richee sharply."Don't you remember we're vin the for bidden!!!!"

"Ouch, ouch "repeated t he boyscout, and leaped backward so suddenly, that he rammed her in front and almost bowled her over.At the s ame t ime one of the girlscouts also yelled"ouch"(t he river one he) almost as loudly as Joe Greene had done, and he also jumped backwards a few paces .

"The fog of smoke at t hiscurrent greatly thin ned outd.

"Why that t hey're t histles ."said t he girlscout Bet nyn Ann."T hey prick their legs .But what are such t hings doing here."!

Hearing t his all looked down, and sure enough the ground was t hick wit h high thist les which covered the plain from the point where they s t ood, way up half way to the w outer walls of the series sorial palasades .No pat hways could be seen through them at all, here t he soft ground ended, and a s t raight cultivated growth of high t histles began.

Hearing this , all looked down, and sure enough again t hey examined every nee t ion, and at some places they grew as highas ros e bushes and what was more an toni shing t here were bob wired fenc es and sh shatis amongst t hem.

"The Glandelinians made t his to form a barrier against us t o t he stockades at that "said Jennie Turner.

"They're t he pric kies t t hist les I have ever felt "grumbled Joe Greene."My legs smart yet from t heir s t t in ge, t hough I jumped out of t hem as quick as I could."

"Here is a n ew an d great difficult y."remarked Pen rod in a grieved t on e. "The haze is going away it is true, but how are we to get to t he fortif ications , over t his mass of pri prio kers.It must e an e t op a great c olumn column of s hort s barging troops.I n ever saw the like."

"They c an't hurt us if we had our high boots on ."s aid one of t he other girlsc outs.I ha"I have n"no on.."and she advanc ed fearlessly and t rampled amon gst t he t histles .

"Yes but see howshigh they are further on ."said anot her.

"None of us c an stand t he pric kiers unless we had s uits on all over us." asserted An e Angeline Rin hee, "and we can not s t ay behind."

"Must we all go bac k"asked Jen nie Turner.

"Of c ours e n ot"replied Jac k Saunders sorrofully."Always when t here is trouble,there is a way out of it , if you c an find it ."

"I wish the guardian of Violet and her sisters was here."said Jen nie Turner, standing on s t ump."His splendid brains would s oon show us how to conquer this field of t his t les .Of cours e we could c ut t hem down what if we did so t he en emy seein us would be suspicious and let go at us wit h one or a dozen of t heir machine guns ."

"What is t he matter wit h your brains?"asked Joe Green e.

"Nothing"she said."But I' m not as brainy as he is.But maybe I believe I could tell you in a half a minute how to get t hrough t he t histles if I wanted to."

"Tell us Jen nie please."begged Angeline Rin hee.

"I will have to discover a way first if there is an y."replied t he girl eny. "There must surely be a path through these somewhere.Come let us look."

They soare hed for a great length of time.Then Jen nie said;

"Don't look at me you s t upid folks, look at this n arrow pat hway."

Penrods fac e brightened at once.

"Of course."he exc laimed."Why didn't we t hin k of lookin g for a s oc ret pat hway he fore."?

"Because you were too excit ed over the discovery of the t hist les ."laughed Jennie Turner."If we want t o s u ccee d in an ything we must not let ourselves get over exc ited.It's a orry almos t s orry for theyGlandelinians t hat t hey do thin k t hey c an fool us U hrist ians so eas ily as t his."

Penrod ordered everyone t o removed t he blankets which t hey carried around t hem.Then t hey wore a hown how t o wrap t hemselves wit h t hem.

"These blankets"said he "will prevent t he t hist les from inu in surin in juring us or stinking us t hrough."

They there wen t onward t hrough the n arrow pathway but they didn't make very good progres s.

"This is slow work."said Pen rod"but it will get us to the palas ades aft er a while.when the foolish Glandelinians s ee we s ame through the t hic ket and that we know t heir sec ret pat hway t hey never be suspicious of us ."

He was right .

"The palasade is a good half a mile away yet ."an nounced Jac k Saunders .

"And this is awful hard work us all to keep from bein g s t ung s o rats had in t he fac e."added Annie Roon ie.Goodn ess here we are at the Barbed wired fenc e.Look out we don't get shocked."

"Yes but there's a gate t o it in the pathway."s aid Joan Guard and A"and it ain't loc ked eit her."

"Why couldn't we get t hrough by sin gle file!"asked Angeline Richee." It 's a very narrow gate, and its very strong on its hinges .Look there's a guard st anding t here.Maybe he'll let us pass."erhaps he wouldn't s t op us as we look like Glandelinian boy and girlscouts,and we know t he coun ter sign."

"You may try talking t o him if you like."Said Joan Guard to her."He may take us prisoners however in a jiffy and t hen we'll never find Violet and her sisters."

"It would be no use t o try it peacefully t hen "s aid Joe Green e."I'd knock him down and kill him if he hollored."

"You try it then."pleaded Angeline Richee.

"What shall I do if he is suspicious."

"Do as you said.We mus t get through."

"And suppose the sentry gets the bes t of me!"asked Joe Greene reproachfully."

But when anot her came forth to acc ompany him the boy headed for t he lone gu r gur guard, followed at a cons distan c e behind by the rest of the party.He stopped before the gu guard , and the ot hers stood c los e by, and wat ched t he stran e sight anxious ly.Of course they couldn't hear what the boys sout was saying to the sentry, but finally he was seen returning.

"He says we c an all pass since I know the c ounter sign ."he told them, when he had reac hed t he adventurers once more(don't snore)."Now we can all go ahead."

"Well you must l ead the way"proposed the girlscout leader. and he did and they entire party soon came to the end of the t histle field.Here t hey t hat, they had reached the high palasade walls, whose approac hes were fortified in so stran g e t range a manner .

"The gate must be around t he ot her side"said t he boyscout leader Penrod. "Let us follow along the whole wall t o the nout hward first , untilll we readh the gate.

"Which way do you mean?"asked Angeline Richee."I heard t he enemy put no gates in t heir palasades .They have one ret entrance on of which no one knows of or ever can find ."

"Well we must guess at that."he replied."I belie ve that is a false report . Suppose we go to t he nout hward.One direction is as good as another."

They formed in marching order, and& went a gr at distanc e down to t he sout h ward.It was after all a very exten sive palasade, and after quit e a walk, which t hey bec ame aware of they found no gate, and neit her any sentries.When they had gone as far as they could wit hout tiring themselves t hemselves and finding no gate they retraced t heir steps and went a long distanc e to the north ward and continued on untill they began to wonder wheth r whether the palasade extended to China or not. They walked on for another half an hour, and then seat ed themselves on the grassy mound .

"It's mighty queer isn't it!"asked Jack Saunders.

"There must surely be some way for the Glandelinian soldiers to get in and out ." declared Angeline Richee.""Do o you suppose they have flying machines, Penrod, like they do in y the country you and general Greathoart vis ited before t he war."

"No"he replied "not that I know of"For in t hat c ase they would be flying all over the land of Calvorinia bombing us from t he sky, and we know they have not done that.The Glandelinian armies elsewhere have some flying ma chines but use that only for rescue purposes . Flying mac hines are unknown unknown here. I t hink surely it is more likely t hat the Glandelin ians use ladders to get over the palasades."

"It would be an awful hot s low c limb over that high iron palasade."said the girlscout Ben Betsy.

"Yes but it makes it t hat much harder for an assaulting army to attac k it and scale it."dec lared Penrod.

"S o you believe there's no way in !"!"!!!!!"cried Jennie Turner.

"Course there is no way in."answered Annie Roon ie mournfully."Can't you see.!"

"Yes"said Jennie Turner, going closer,"I c an see the wall, but there's an entrance which I have found."

And then she did a very queerthing . She apparently walked right under t he palasade and disappeared.

"For goodnessss sake."c ried An eline Angeline Ric hee, amazed, as indeed t hey alll were...!!!.

And n ow the famous girlscout s py came out from the un dorground and t ran ce again.Evidon tly it was hidden by a growt h of woods.

"Come on "she called."There is a fine underground entran c e un der this wall an d it ain't a difficult tunnel at all....."

"What no difficult y at all!"exc laimed Penrod looking at t he growt h of woods in evidon t surprise.

"N ot hing like it."said Jennie Turner."It 's quite awide pas sageway underneat h t t he p la palasade.You cannot s ee it from here but it isn't in view because of the talle woods .Come on int o the fortification groun ds .We have been want in g t ime."

"But how are we going to ask for the Vivian Girls wit hout c ausing sus pic ion."

"Eas ily en ough"said Jac k Saunders .I'"I'll explain when t he time comes t lean t I'll showcely doing it what I mean ."

Wit h this Jen n ie Turner went into the passage way again and once more disappeared.Jack Saun ders who was rat her ver t uresome, das had away after her, and also became in visible to them.The ot hers followed more c aut iously, st reto hing out t heir hands t o feel alongside t he wall of the dark t unnel , and finding t o their ac t on is hment after traveling for half a min ut e they were outside again, an d behind t hem they again s aw t he grim forbidding palasade walll.They found themselves in the C ompany Street of an ern ormous barracks like camp and yet the fortificat ions were quite a ways off yet .They were surprised to s ee a crowd of q uaintly gray uniformed soldiers of the Scoodlier type, who st ared at t hem in amazement , as if won dering who they were an d where they had c ome from.Our friends forgot t heir "good manners "for a time, an d ret urned t he e tares wit h interest , for no remarkable s ect of Glandelin ian s oldiers,, had n ever before been discovered in all the remarkable lines of the besieged en emies . Their black hats were shaped like diamonds , and had plumes on t op t hat appeared like a mass of Turkey Feathers if t hey didn't belon g once to an Ostrich.They had lon g bobbed hair, an d t heir eyes were very large and fierc e and s avage looking, an d their n ose es and mout hs made t hem have a sort of Saton ic appearance.T heir gray uniform coat s were tight fitting, and in st ead of having the blac k borders an d design s on their coats, they had designs of brilliant colors, bein g han dsomely embroidered in quaint designs wit h gold or silver t hreads , t heir trous ers were black ins t ead of yellow, like the Glandelin ian cavarly but on t heir feet t hey wore sandals of a yellow color, with n o stockings what ever.T he rifles they had s lung over their s houlders were lon g an d big an d heavy lookin g, their sheat kn ives were long, and also t heir bayonet , and they had two pistols each and t hree cart ridge belts.Though Glandelinians and despite t he fierceness of t heir faces they s eemed to look pleasant enough, alt hough they n ow showed s urpris e at t he app aran c e appearanc e of the child scout stran gers, so unlike Glan delin ian girls couts and boyscouts, but nevertheless appearing to be the same, and our friends t hought t hey seemed quit e not as mean as they looked or what had been said of t he Omarian s called Scooldiers.But they were good t o their n ame however for t hey recieved the name as they were as t reacherous and as deadly as s nakes . "I beg your pardon"said Penrod, saluting and s peaking for his party as an offic er rode up"For int ruding upon your part of the camp uninvited, but we are t raveling t o general Purgato ians camp on very import ant bucin ess , and some how or ot her bec ame lost in this part of your camps(which was true) Will you kindly t ell us scouts by what n ame your fortifications here are called.If they are t he Thumbelin ia which we suspec t could you direct us t o gen eral Man sion providin g he's here."?

The Gland lin ian privates looked at each ot her somewhat un certainly, each expec ting a commandfrom t he offic er t o s ome one of t hem to ans wer. Finally t he offic er himself said;

"We have no occasion to tell the name of our Fortificat ion s on any t ime un ess you c an ident ify o yourselves by your pass es .If you kn ow t he secret way t hrough thes e palasades wit hout difficult y t hen perhaps I'll tell you.How did you get in ."

"By the pass ageway.It is hidden from t he Nat ionals by a set of weeds which was grown there on purpose.If we didn't know our way in ow how do you expec t we got in .It be some job s ir for us kids t o c limb that palas ade a without a ladder, difficult as it would be wit h one."

"Well s aid"my lad"said the offic er.

"But what n ame to t his fortit fort ification s do the N at ionals call it?"asked Penrod.

"We know of no ot her n ame but Maya."said the man."and then he inquired; "Were you persued by the C hrist ian s , or did you get away from them with t hos e queer ragged uniforms on.?"

"Thes e uniforms was the bes t that we could obtain s eeing how rigid t he seige of our armies are."declared Penrod"And we got t o be satisfied wit h t hem whether we like it or not.If we're not satisfied t hen we'll have t o go without ."

The groups of Glandelinian soldiers was con s tan tly being ol en larged y ot hers who join ed it .All were evidon tly s urprised if n ot st artled and un eas y at the arival of strange boy and girls couts .But non e of t hem appeared to have C hristian manners or feat ures , and s poke more like Glandelin ians and act ed like girl and boys of t heir army.

"Have you a chief gen eral in command(lend a han d)"?Asked An geline Riches, who knew to full fill her plan it was bet ter to s peak with s ome on e in high aurthority.But the officer shook his dis head.

"All our gen erals are at the con ferenc e with gen eral Purgat orian and won't be back for some t ime."

"Isn 't there any one who commands over you in his s tead!"inquired Penrod.

"No"was the reply."Each of us have to go by t he orders of our Lieutenants Captians sergeants and so forth.It is not an eas y job for all those un der officers as o you probably know."

Penrod reflect ed.

"Who is the Capt ian of your Regimen t ?"asked he, aft er a lit tle thought .

"Captian C arson is."t hey an swered in a chorus.

"An d where is he?"

"He's in i his t ent about nine blocks down t he Company St reet t o t he north."said the offic er himse himself.

"Then he is t he prin c ipal person e here!"c ont inued the boyscout leader.

"Well I c annot s ay t hat "ret urned the officer in a puzzled way."The Captian is however a Brigadier commander just n ow as he's t o rec ieve a higher rank s oon for bravery in the battle of San ta Fe Works .However he can do most an yt hing if you ask him just n ow."

"I think"said Pen·rod,"we ought to s ee your capt ian, and talk wit h him. Our mission here requires us to cons ult one high in some aurthority, and if he isn't high en ough to be able to dosomet hing for us , he at leas t can get t he permission from the highes t generals .It 's very importan t that vwe wis h to see him."

The soldiers seemed to cons ider t he proposition reasonable, for they n odded t heirtiinconetske for t hey n odded t heir heads in approval. So t he offic er who had been their s pokes man said ;

"Follow me"and t urning led t he way down t he Company St reet .

The ent ire p arty followed him, a score of t he Glandelin ians fallin g in behin d.The big iron c overed barracks they had passed and were passing were quite n icely builded, were three stories high, and seemed c omfortable and very con venien t .After leading them a few blocks t heir conduct or stopp d st opped beforec not a barrac ks but a tall roun ded yellow purple and red stripped ten t .When their guide spoke t ot he sentry at t he ten t enta entrance he went out , and.then t he officer in charge poked his head out and inquired;

"What has happened n ow?"

But in the same momen t his eyes fell upon t he strangers , and he ordered the sent inel t o admit them.Our friends en tered the ten t which had a large open space for t he room, and where the c apt ian as e as ked t hem t o be seated.

"I hope your mission here is a good one and a on e not t o fill any one wit h suspicion."he said lookin g a little worried."For t he coun try is beingcombed wit h Christian c hild scout and other patrols , and we fear many of them C hristian dogs may enter our c amps and learn the t rut h of our big fort ifications beyond."

"You are the soldiers c alled "Scoodliers "I pres ume."declared Angeline Richee.

"Yes I thought you knew that .An d we call our fortific ations Thumbelinia t hough the C hristian dogs referr it t o Maya or s omet hing like t hat."

"Oh."

"We are really the Omarians , you know"cont inued t he Captian .

"Do you ever really fear the N at ionals will ever capture t he s trongholds here?" inquired Jack Saun ders won deringly.

"Why not?"replied t he Capt ian."As stron g as we are it might happen some day for t hose Christian dogs are more obstin at e than we are.And also t hey c annot c arried the main works at Thumbelinia as you saw yourself because for main abatis we use thistles and barbed wire fenc es."

"Everything of t hat order."?

"To be sure.Even the main works of the fortifications are lined wit h great can nons as you have also seen .As a matter of fac t we do not fear anyt hing unusual just yet but some day it may happen.Anyway I wouldn't hardly care if t hey did capture t hes e fortifications, for s taing here s o long inac tive as we are is an occupation we detes t .N o one it seems will at tack us here an y more."

"But t ell me please"said Pend d, how does it happen your fortifications gets obscured wit h smoke so."?

"T he smoke c omes from a big fire the c hrist ian shell fire made."declared t he s apt ian ."But onc e you get t his close to our fortific ation s you are out of reac h of the s moke."

"Ah I begin to unders tand"said Penrod noddin his head."But I have anot her question to ask; "How does it happen that thes e fortification s have no general t o overs eer everything."

"In realit y t he chief general is at Purgatorians headquarters .General Purgatorian is greatly worried about the situation, and in reality think the christian s wills con force us to give up our defenses , but t he soldiers don't know it.They t hin k the c hristian s are safe far to the beyond, but the fac t is general Purgat orian fears the c hristian dogs will soon have every t hingtheir own way.N o one else kn ows about the sec ret plans of the chris tian dog gen erals, and t o t hey have to make plans to s uit themselves .I have t o be in his s tead i untill he ret urn s ."

"It seems a very clever arrag arrangement "said Penrod."And n ow as you are t he pr n pricinpal person in t he army so far I beg you t o t ell us if t he Yo Royal Christian princesses ,t he Vivian Girls are captives in your camp."

"Why do you as k?"as ked the Capt ian.

Jack Saunders produc ed a c ertain document of paper and handed it t o t he offic er.He glan c ed it over an d t hen handed it back an swering; "No we have no Christian dog children who are capt ives.N o s trangers but yourselves are here, and we have n ever before heard of thos e Royal Vivian Girl Princesses.If Manley wishes you to get t hem, he'll have t o send you and your followers els ewhere.I did not know he had any c lain to them as bein g C hrist ian spies ."

"They say they rule all t he DChrist ian armies no mat ter where t hey are"said Angeline Richee"And t herefore it is believes s he rules this big seige t oo claiming Vivian Wickey and all it s defenses are its pr t heir property.That is why we t oo have a claim t o t hem."

"It may be"return ed the c apt ian "But we have not had t he chance to st udy much geography like t he generals of the c hristian dogs do, and therefore have never known which part of Vivian Wic key's defenses we are in.We do not kn ow for sure even what her these are the Thumbelin ia Fortific ations or not , we only guess it.And if you say you t oo have a c lain t o them an d wis h to bring t hem to general Manleys army as pris oners , you are welcome to t he job.But what has happen ed to the Vivian Girls that general Man leys sends you all t his distanc e to here to get t hem."

"It is suspec t ed that they're held prisoners in one of thes e fortificat ions and Manley wants them as that letter states"declared Jac k.

"Do you have any tar lent ed spies among your soldiers ---who q are especially c lever you know.We may need t he assistance of one."(he wis hed t o capture him inst ead and make him tell if he kn ew what became of violet an d her sisters)

"No.None especially clever.We do have some spies ofc ourse, but t hey are of t he ordinary kind.I do not thin k any of us has any one called the Vivian Girl Princesses, but if in vestigat ions proves they're here you're welcome to them."

"Then if they're not here we have come a long, long way for nothing."exclaimed Jen nie Turner regretfully .

"But we are goin g further than t his."assert ed An nie Roonie.

"In c ase you find them and leave here Inadvise you not to go t oo close t o where so many christian pat rols are."said t he captian .They're terrible christian s and especially t heir boy and girlscouts and thes e at leasot are not very nie nice soldierchildren t o meet wit hnI assure you an d if t hey c apture you wit n wit h those Princesses in your possession it 'll go very hard wit h you."

"Are t he child scouts of the Nat ionals really s o dan gerous?"as ked Bet synie.

"They are worset than that"was t he rep y reply."They have terrible leaders over them who are merc iless t o all us Glan delin ians, and t hough c hildren many of t hem despit e t heir younger ages are so much st ronger than a man from their exercize and hards hips an d so fort h t hat t hose s urpris ed by t h m t hem don't dare resis t them for fear of being torn to pieces ."

"How do you know!"asked Annie Roon ie.

"Every one says so"answered the captian.

"Have you seen an y of t hose boy and girlscouts yourself!"in quired Angeline Ric hee, wit h a sly wink t o Penrod.

"N o but what ever any one says must bet rue, ot herwise what would be t he use of any one putt ing in reports and warnings ag about t hem."T hey s ay t heir leaders Angelinia Aron burg, and An gelina Richee,and many ot hers are a terror to Glandelinian patrols ."

"We were told by one of t he sentries before we got here t hat you soldiers would es cort us t o an ot her part of t your camp in our ques t ."said the little girlscout.

"So we would."dec lared t hecaptian."An d that reminds me I ought to do it now."

He sent for his orderly.

"I have sent an order for hors es to be brought for every one of you an d t raveling will be easior."said t he offic er."

"Does an y of your hors es bite?"asked Joe Greene pretending he was slightly afraid of horses .

"Mercy no.Do you t hin I'd ris k the s afty of you kids by us in g victous vict ious horses for you to ride?I'm proud to s ay t hat thes e hors es are as gen t le as kitten s.Here they come now, you may examine t hem yours elves ."

They heard the trotting sound from hors es hoofs , and going out to the fron t of the barracks, t hey saw comin g aroun d t he corner a squadron of hors es led by the orderly.The hors es were finely decortated an d the saddles were richly made.The orderly was a han dsomely uniformed man.

"These hors es"said the captian pompously"Are the bes t we can s ecure.We are all very proud of our horses, many of which are in use by our c avarly and dragoon s .The child s couts were helped to moun t t he hors es and they started off but at a s low trot led by the capt ian .All the boy and girlscouts thought t his ride was t he most uninteresting and dreary they had ever experienced, but the captian seemed to t hin k it gran d.He poin ted out the different sections of the fortifications in much the same way that the conductor of an "American sight-seeing wagon "does, and being apparent guess they were obliged to submit to the ordeal, and too especially when without looking for it they were obtaining some very important information .But at first they became a little worried when their hostess told them he had ordered a small banquet prepared for them at the other end of the camp.

"What are we going to have for meals!"asked Joe Greene suspiciously.

"We have nothing but pork and beans just now."was the reply,"Fine fresh pork and beans."

Jennie Turner laughed, for she never heard of that before in a Glandelinian camp, but Angeline Richee said in a protesting voice;

""We are too young to eat pork and beans you know."

"How sad in deed"exclaimed the captian, and then he added after an minute;

"But we can have them boiled without the pork you that is if you rather have them that way."

"I'm afraid they wouldn't taste good even then."said Annie Noonie."Have you not got something else to eat."

The captian shook his head.

"Nothing better that I know off"said he."But how can we have something else when the christian armies are besieging us so rigidly.However if you feel you cannot eat what we eat, don't eat anything untill you can find something better.We shall not be offended, and the banquet will be just as merry and as delightful."

Knowing his companions were all hungry but that they didn't wish to eat anywhere in this camp for fear of meeting with some enemies who may recognize them, Penrod finally said;;;

"I trust you will excuse us from the banquet sir, which surely will be merry enough without us, although it is given in our honor.For as those Princesses are not in your camps, and as Manley is quite impatient for us to secure them as the note says we must leave here at once, and seek them elsewhere."

"Sure we must"agreed Angeline Richee, and she whispered to Jennie Turner and Joan Goard."I'd rather starve somewhere else than eat among the Glandelinians who may recognize us---n and who knows--! we may run across somebody who can supply us without our getting into some place where we'll be suspected, and can eat there."

So finally when they got beyond the camp, in spite of the protests of the captian, they insisted on continuing their journey.

"The Christians will soon attack where you'regoing so I heard."he objected.

"We don't mind a battle"replied Penrod.

"Some christian child scout patrols may get you."

"Do you think they would hurt us!"asked Angeline Richee."I thought they only hurt soldiers."

"I cannot say, not having the honor of their acquaintance.But they are said to be so strong and so fierce, that no soldier can contend with them."

"All of them toget her!"asked Joe Greene.

"Any one of them could like a man my sire."said the captian."

"Have you heard of any great spies among them!"asked the boyscout Penrod, knowing that the Glandelinians were really hoodwinked about them and wanted to see how much they knew of the child scouts.

"I am told that they have a number of dangerous girl and boy spies."declared the captian "and most spying is performed by their leaders .But I have never heard that they have ever met with any failures and so therefore I advise you to look out for them.They're so good with their weapons you couldn't fight them or escape,and they're terribly good horse back riders."

They thanked him for his courtesy, and mount mounting the animals giving them again rode to the further side of the encampment, and came soon to the left wing section of the camps nearest Fort Thumbelinia.

"I'm glad we got away so easily."said Mildred."I didn't like those Glandelinians even though they were so stupid as not to ask us questions and give us information instead.That captian looked like an all give away bonehead."

"I didn't like them eit her" agreed Angeline Richee."Of course they seemed dumb but if they knew what we really were they would have been exceedingly dangerous.It seems dreadful that any one would be prisoners at their hands, unusually nicely though they're uniformed."

"We can be thankful they didn't know us, and let us into and out of their camps so easily."said Dorothy Gale.

For the a while there was so much smoke that the travelers were constantly losing their direction .But by keeping on the path straight ahead of them they finally passed the smoke fog, and came upon other encampments, where the Glandelinians didn't pay any attention to them at all.

There were plenty of bushes beside each tent however, and two of the girlscouts in advance discovered some beautiful strawberries growing upon some of the bushes one taste of which sent them all to picking as many as they could find and eat.The berries relieved their pangs of hunger for a time, and as they were tired of riding and as it became dark from the smoke of many big seige fires, and too dark to see anything though it was only two oclock in the afternoon, they camped where they were.Having had no sleep the night before the girls and boys lay down upon the blankets all in a row--and then Penrod covered them with the other blankets and tucked them in.Joe Greene crawled under the shelter of some high bushes and was asleep in al half a minute.Penrod sat down with his back to a broad tree, and looked at the ever darkening sky, and thought gravely upon the dangerous adventure they had undertaken, wondering if they ever would again find their beloved friends, Violet,and her sisters again. The boy scouts lay in a group as by themselves themselves, a little distanced from the others.

"I've lost my pocket book with my Rosary Beads in it."said Jack Saunders, who had been very silent and sober all days since noon "What do you suppose has become of it."?

"If you had asked me to keep track of the Beads ,I might be able to tell you."remarked George Mulligan sleepily."But frankly Jack I thought you were taking care of them yourself.If any of the glandelinians would pick them up there would be a hue and cry within the whole camp, and we'd be hunted down."

"It is an awful dangerous thing to lose a pair of Rosary beads within this camp"said Jack, doscons olately."What if we had also lost our weapons, George.? would we not feel terrible!"

"Our weapons"replied the boy"Is the best thing to have now. These Glandelinians are the fiercest persons around us.Therefore we depend upon the weapons so badly that we cannot afford to lose one."

."Once"said a boyscout by the name of Frank Klee"I lost my brace of pistols, so that I couldn't hardly defend a girlscout companion with me when she was wounded and we were persued by a savage horde of Glandelinians .That was before the seige of Vivian Wickay began to know, and I found it certainly was very embrassing and uncomfortable not to be able to fight them off.But the enemy were driven off by reinforcements."

"You surely have a good brace of pistols now"declared Jack Saunders."But none of you has answered my question"Where is my Rosary Beads ."?

"You may search me"said another of the boys ."Though I love to have them I didn't care to carry anything on my person that might be found on me and causesuspicion.I don't see why you brought them with you on this expedition.It wasn't necessary.You could say the Rosary without them."

"You sure did show me a prayer book."assented Jack Saunders."

"It may be"said Klee."but it wasn't mine.I picked it up in this very camp. .I would wish you'd wake me up some time, when you know we're in any danger, and let me see what I can do.Then I can judge whether these soldiers around us are as dangerous as you say they are, or not."

"They ain't pleasant I assure you"said George Zimmermon yawning."They even high hat and snub us and act as if we don't exist.Even though they don't suspust suspect or mind molest us."

"To me it seemsexwholly unnecessary for them to recognize us ."declared Hanky Frankie."It is better they don't pay any attention to us .When they do it is high time for us to be on the lookout."

"We ought to break ourselves of the habit of paying any attention to them, as they are not worth it ."said George Zimmermann."You never hear me even hardly speak of them, because I never consider them at all.I don't even look at them, as many Jackasses do.I do wish however that those who stole Jacks Rosary, had taken all these Glandelinian plans their generals have, and everything else at the same time."

"Do you think then that my Rosary Beads was stolen."?

"You have never lost it before have you!"inquired George Zimmermann.

"Not the same kind, but I did also lose an other pair, but that didn't happen within the enemys lines."

"But why worry about a lost pair of Rosary Beads .Even any of your girlscout scouts friends can lovingly give you any pair you wish for for the asking."

"You don't get the point ."said Jack."I'm worried because they're lost here.If the Glandelinians pick them up they'll suspect one of us lost them and we'll be under suspicion."

"Are you sure of that now!"asked Joan Saunders .

"Not positive."replied the boy."But you never can.I only hope they were lost where no Glandelinians finds them."

"I can't understand"said Hanky"Why Glandelinians would suspect us for being Christians just because some Religious article would be found among us when they sometimes carry them too with the purpose to get into our lines to do their spying work.To believe we'd be under suspicion is like a is like a dog barkin g at the moon .They can't scare t he moon, and t he moon doesn't pay an y attent ion t o t he bark, so why s hould the enemy suspect us bec ause one of us lost a pair of Rosary Beads.We could on ly say if quest ioned, "t hey'll easily get int o the christian lines or get us int o t he c hristian lines which is not t elling g a lie, and they'll let it go at that.So why worry over its loss ."

"Did you ever lose a prayer book or a Rosary Beads within a Glandelinian encampment? asked Jack .

"N o indeed" replied George."I am t han ful to s ay I never carried one when I went int o the foe lines, for I believe we ought to us e more caution for no telling what the Glandelin ians are.I you, Jean, or Angeline Richee, could be even far, yes far more beautiful children t han even t he Vivian Girl Princess es could ever make themselves be, and if we're even t hen suspect ed that would'n d save us from thes e Treacherious Scoodliers or Hobbonit es as t hey're called. "

Jean Jean sat up to examine George wit h care.

"Beaut y"said he sho to"T o the Glandelinians must be a mat ter of t aste, and not character.I don't say your judgement of t hem is bad frien d George, or t hat it may be that Glan delinians are con c ern ed about beauty or n ot? But if you have seen like I did t hat t he Glandelin ian s have des t royed and how they have destroyed t he most beaut iful and choic es t of little children in the most horrible massacres ever imagin ed if you t hink that is t heir idea of a"beauty Treatment ", George---then eit her you or I must be mistaken. lGlandelin ians care n o more for beauty amon g c hristians t han we c are for the features of the Evil Spirits.But they have spared some children who were beaut iful foriegn ers jus tbto make s laves out of t hem."

"You are full of edges"an swered George."If I were a beaut iful lit tle girl, and a Glandelinian soldier had me in is his possession he'd open me and have me exposed for a bunch of t hei his followers to study Physiology of t he whole cirpse.On y I su suppose then would t hey think I was lovely."

"Out wardly"dear George, t hey would,"replied Jean."But t o be really lovely one must be beautiful without, and within within . "

George couldn't deny this st atemen t, so he gave a disgusted grunt , an d rolled over so that his back was tward Jean .But Joe Green regarding t he two c almly said to Jack Saun ders;;

"My frien ds or my dear frien d Jack, our friends have taught us a s ort of lesson in humility.If all Glan delinians will butcher christian children and mainly just bec ause t hey're beaut iful, then to t hem we must be decidedly ugly."

"Not to ourselves"protes ted Jack, who was a shrewd little boys cout."You and I Joe are fine spedmen ts of our own races an d so are the res t of us.We all are fine good Abbieannian boys, an d the girlscouts are the same regardless what the Glandelinians might t hink.However only in poin t of comparison one with an ot her, can we be properly judged among ours elves, s o I will leave it t o Joan Guard t o decide, what the Glandelinians would do t o the most beautiful of us all were we t heir prisoners .Joan Guard is a smart girlscout, so she won't be prejudiced, and will speak t he truth."

"I surely will"responded the girlscout ."Are you all agreed to acc ept my judgement?"

"We are"t hey declared, each one hopeful.

Then"said Joan Guard"I mus t point out to you to t he fact, t hat t he Glandelinian s look upon us children of the C hristian nations as if we were all meat creatures, who tire unless they sleep, and who they believe s hould be gotten rid of.They be believe all C hristians of Abbieannia are very much imperfect, an d have no right to live.As beat ufil beautiful as many of us are t hey would not c onsider that.Now one Glandelinian who attac ked me once,and almost had made me a prison er said I was just as good as being made of wood, an d ought to be a wodden doll my s ize."

"He surely mus t have had a wooden o head himself."said Anbeline Richee.

"Yes.But I was on a horse, which seemed to be as swift as the win d and tireless.I've heard Violet or her sisters say, that'hands one is as handsome" does, and we all do and should perform our duties in a handsome manner.

Thef Therefore if you wish my honest judgement,I will c on fess that amon gst all human c reatures we Abbieannian children are the most beaut iful whet her t he Glandelinian s like it or not."

Every one nodded at t his .

"Were we all like the Glandelin ians "Jon Joan Guard continued."we would soon all be lost souls, which will probably soon be too man y of the kin d for t he wicked Infernal Region s to contain , were we all like the Glandelinian gen erals who c on duct t he dirty work of t his wor war of murdering c hildren an d c reat e wholesale disas ters and fores t fires an d tha like, we would soon be a hea herd of Satans, if like t he others , we would be a pack of fiends , should we all become lost souls bec ause we fight for a wicked c ause, we in t he eyes of t he world would no longer be remarkable in appearanc e prett y though we be.

Finally we were all like children of foriegn nations , t he Abbieannians would consider us so common, that they would not care to assoc iate with us .You kn ow our opion of so many Foriegners are so s trange that t hough t hey come here show good qualities an d the like and become citizens have to on y to on y only get into our army t hrough Red Tapeand t he like.To be individual Abbieannian s my friends and c omrades , t o be different from our en emies and t hos e we do not know of t he foriegn nations is t he only way to become dist inguished from the common s cum of the world.Let us be glad t herefore, that we differ from the enemy and other sup osed to be ,and would be christian nat ions.Variety too is the spice of life, and we are various enough to enc en joy anot hers or one anothers company, and society; so let us be conten t."

"There is some truth in that speech."remarked Jack Saun ders reflect ively."But how about my los t Rosary Beads."

"The lost Rosary Beads is of importance to only you."res pon ded Joan Guard--"So t here is not any need to worry over the loss as long as we are s ure none of the Glandelinians finds them.If you love us please don't inflect unec essary worries on us , for I do n ot t hin k any Glandelinian soldiers ever picked t hem up."

"If the same person stole my Rosas Rosary beads just to cause us being suspec t ed who s tole violet an d er her sisters"said Jack,"I hope we shall find him very soon and punish him or them as they des erve.Those Glandelinians must be the most c ruel pers ons in the world, for to even s t eal a persons prayer beads with the purpose to try anddouble cross us, is just as wicked in my i opinion , as stealing all the plans in the whole Christian National Government ."""

Jennie Turner, who never hardly slep very long at night , and who t hrough s ome st range mirculeous conditions about her c ould see nearly as good as an owl in the dark, had wandered amon ge t t he different posit ions all night long, without being seen by any of t he Glandelin in guards , wit h the result that s he was able to tell some very good news that following evening .

"Over the crest of the highes t positions beyond us."she said"Are barrac ks of many kinds , where we c an get all sort of fruit t o eat.If you will go there you will find a n ice breakfas t awaiting you."

This indeed made them eager to s tart , so as soon as t he blankets were folded, and strapped to t heir own backs, t hey all srt out for t he barracks which Jennie Turner told them about. As s oon as t hey got over the "brow"of t he highes t pos it ion, t hey discovered close by an immense b well defen ded barracks building, ext ending for t he length of t wo blocks to the right and left of t hem.As their way led through even strangely fortified t rees, they hurried forward as fast as possible.The first barracks they came for had on y on ly mess halls for Glandelinian soldiers where even Glandelinian child scouts were not admitted, and then s upply barrac ks and afterwards Mess Halls for the offic ers and yet the biggest barracks were some distan ce offfttt off.But t hey soon reac hed the immense barracks they had seen firs t , but inside were a great number of Glandelinian boy and girlscouts .Knowing that if they ac ted s hy or tried t o avoid t heir company t hey would be under suspicion they went in, and were shown t heir places at t he table.Here they had a very good meal.It cons isted of oatmeal without milk, coffee t hat smelled like s omet hing that had burned, and bread an d pork and bean s.But at each place was a couple of apples and oranges.However as tasteless as t he meal was they were so hungry that they ate more t han the others did, and aft er most of the Glandelinian child scouts were gone Penrod asked permission t o tie a lot of left over apples in one end of a blanket an d the per mission was granted.

"We do n ot know what will happen to us after we leave t his "dalightful" Mess Hall"he said to Angeline Richee"So I think it is wise for us to carry a supply of apples with us .We can 't go hungry or starve as lon g as we have apples you know."

Jennie Turner had not eat en wit h t hem however.She loved to climb t he trees, and swing herself by the branches, from one t ree to another and had often been nicked nicknamed t he "Tree climber by her comrades .Some of t he choicies t nuts were found on this t ree, and which was gathered by t he girl s cout from t he very highes t limbs,, an d tossed down t he t o t he ot hers .

Suddenly Annie Roon ie asked"Where is Jack Saunders ?"and when t he others looked for him, t hey found t he boy s cout had dis appeared.

"Dear me"cried Angeline Ric hee"I gues s he got lost , and that will mean our waiting here within the foe lin es unt illl we c an find him.Maybe he went t o look for some information."

"It's a good place to wait as long as we're not suspec t ed and t reated like we were of the Glande in ians."suggested Bets ynne, who had found a nut tree, and was eating some of the nuts.

"How c an wewait here and find Jack Saunders at t he same time?"In quired Jen nie Turner, literally hanging by her toes on a limb just over t he heads of he three the t hree hi ghest girlscout leaders.

"Perhaps he'll come back here."answered Angeline Richee.

"If he tries that he'll probably los e his way."said Mildred Maxwell."But I have never known i him to do t his before, an d he surely was not surprised and captured by the Glandelinians for t o those tryin g to capture him he's a dan gerous as a Rattlesnake.He must have inten ded to secure some information and got lost."

"Very t rue"said Penrod"So all the res t of you must s tay here, while I go and look for the boy."

"Won't you get lose lost too?"as ked Dolores.

"I hopevnot my dear."

"Let me go"said Jennie Turner, dropping lightly t o the groun d"I can't get lost for I know every inc h of t his territory, and I'm more likely to find Jac k t han any of you."

Without waiting for any answer s he darted away t hrough the fortified trees and s oon disappeared from their s ight.

"An elina Angeline"said Mildred Maxwell, sitting b wide her"Jack lost his Rosary beads .Maybe he's searc hing for t hem."

"How did that happen!"s he a sked.

"I don't know"replied Mildred."But he was complaining about his loss all afternoon yes terday."

"Did he really carry t hem with him when enterin g these c amps with us!" inquired Angeline.

"Oh yes in deed."

"Then why should he worry about t hem being gone.I oCould give him a pair" said s he.

"That ain't the point"said Mildred."He wondering what will we do if the Glandelin ians discovered them and believed they belonged to on e of us."

"I don't believe t hey would mind, thinking they were carried with us to decieve the c hristians."s aid An gelin e."I'm s orry for him of cours s Mildred, for it 's just those things we can't have that we want most of all, but before we got back to the lines, if he hasn't found t hem I'll give him a pir pair."

" He almos t suspects t hat his rosary Beads were s tolen."

"Perhaps ."

"You you or do you t hink that the pers on who aided t ho se who kidnapped Violet , and her sisters stole his Beads!"

"Angeline smiled.

"Perhaps .ildred."

"Then he's a scoundrel to c ause him and us all t his suspense."c ried t he little girls cout .

"Qn "Anyone who would s teal Violet , and her s isters from our very midst is as bad as the worst Glandelinians c ould be."agreed Angaline Ric hee."and when we remember that our dearest friends , Violet, and her sisters , the Lovely Princ esses of Abbiennia,are lost , he ought not t o worry over t he loss of a pair of ros ary beads, for t hey won 't get us in bad.Glandelin ians don't always suspec t an y one u just before or bec ause they may have these in their possession .."

Now Jack(in the bean stalk) had no idea that he was lost wit hin the foe linesat first.He had merely wandered from one barracks to another, seeking for signs of violet,and her sisters and not searching for t he Ros ary as others supposed, and not untill he had traveled for quite a distance did he discover that he was alone with within the pos itions and t hat man y Glandelinian soldiers were all around, though they did not pay the slighres t attention t o him.But t hat did not worry him just then, and a seing some t ent s fart her on , he went t o them, t hen he discovered some more barrac ks further on.

"I've passed every sort of barracks an d tents, but did not see a single trav trace of them."he said to himself,"So I guess there are no s igns of them here, and t hose to whom I show the letter and as k ques t ion s don't even seem to know the Vivian Girls, or even what Manley wn wants them for."

He searc hed here and there, p ying n o attention t o his way, untill he foun d that many of the company streets were filled with soldiers goin g to the fron t. He put some walnuts into his pockets , and kept on searc hing, and at las t -- right amongst the barrac ks, he came upon an opening where were kept lots of christian soldiers an d others as prisoners .It was a large prison camp, and he even got permission to go in e here followed by two guards , and he yet found no one here.Jack had some trouble however going through t hat camp for thinking him a Glandelinian boyscut on some inspec t ion the prisoners appeared considerably host ile, during of hwhich he was in danger of being insulted or handled roughly which would have been ja had not the soldiers accom nained him, but he finally managed to make the rounds of the camp without findin g those he was s e searching for.Then he got back to the Compan y street s, and decided thatit he search had not been well worth the trouble.

"I reallay ought to decide that Viol t and her sist ers are not within the confines of Fortress Thumbelinia"he said to himself"But perhaps they may be as there is such immense territory of these fortifications that I have not got gone over even one third of it.But there is plenty of time for us to con tinue the search."

In i his heart he doubted this statement,, for t here were man y hiding plac es within these fortificat ion s, while only the less important prisoners were left within s ight in internment camps .He n ow realized he was far separated from his companions, and kn owing t his would worry t hem and delay their journ ey, he began to s hout as loud as he could, but he got n o answer except from some of the Glandelin ians who said "Don't make so much noise boy,t he Christian dogs will hear you and pop you with a cannon.He then said down on t he ground and said to himself;;

"Well I'm lost, for t he first t ime.It's too bad, but I don't see how it can be helped .

As he leaned his bac k again st a t ree, he looked up an d saw a st ran ge girlscout c ome up to him followed by a boy.They looked at him s t eadily for nearly t wo minutes, and then the girl said;

"Oho, so you're a small c hristian boyscout in disguise, are you?"

Q"How do you n know?"demanded Jack."

"Well enough."

"Were you in formed!"asked the boy.

"Of cours e and why not ."replied t he Glandelin ian boyscout . It was you we rec ognized.But it is non e of us boy or girlscuts of our side t o give any one away.But some one told us you had followers t oo."

"who did that ?"

"One of t he soldiers did that ."

"But why?And how did he get the idormat ion if t may as k?and how was he in formed?And what will happen t o us if we're expos ed?"qu s Ques t ion ed Jac k."

"Ask the soldiers if t hey c apt ure you, they know only."said t he Glande linian girlscout."

"And who is the Glandelinian who kn ows what I am?"

"The one who picked up a pair of Ros ary beads, and kept it wit h him.We child scouts of the enemy don't dare expose you, we are too wise for t hat .But you are t he famous boyscout leader of the C hristians, c alled Jack Saun ders from An gelin ia Aronburgs girlscout an d boyscout vivianite Rangers camps--and you---you"--YOU are among st us for s ome unknown reas on or ot her.If you are capt ured you will have t o explain to general Furgatorian why you are here.But Upon my honor I won't expose you, but please in ret urn for the favor leave us l one."

And then before Jack could ask any more quest ions, th e t wo Glandelinian child scouts went away and left him alone. Jack was not much worried to find that a Glandelinian soldier,an d two en emy c hild s couts know he was a c hris t ian child scout.So again he reflected upon the best way to have t he c hance t o rejoin i his friends .

"Whichever direction Infollow is likely to be yh t he wrong one"he said to gi himself"So it is bet ter I stay where I am and let them find me--if they can."

Anot her child s cout came up an d this on e was a girlscout officer on o hors e bac k, and paused a little to look at him.Despite being a Glandelin ian girlscout s he was strikingly pretty.

"Don't be afraid"said Jack Evans,"I've had had no quarrel wit h you, and therefore I won't hurt you."

"Oh I'm not afraid for myself!"r et urned the girlscout ."It's you I'm worried about ."

"Yes I'm in deed lost."said the boy.

"I fear you are indeed unless you go away on t ime."answered t he girl."Why on earth did you and your followers c ome into these c amps .I'm in really a child slave director but I'm in s ympat hy for you just t he same, and you should not have been so foolish as t o en ter t hes e lines."

The boy looked t at t he exc ited girlscout almost in bewilderment .

"There were t wo reason s "he explained."For my own c aus es sake however It is not for me to tell."

"I know the c ause"s aid the girl.You're looking for the Abbiennian Prin c es s es but that won't save you from general Purge Furgatorian or his rage." and s he rode away before the boy c ould ask any more ques tions ."

"It's a tran ge that t hese Glandelin ian child s couts seem t o c oncern for our danger."he thought."But I'd t ell general Furgatorian s omet hing t o his very face I would.I'm n ot afraid of general Furgatotian or any of his Confederates no matter who they be.If Violet, an d her sisters were in the bottom of the earth of t his camp I'd a sure h for t hem in spite of a dozen In fernal Region s , or a hun dred Glandelin ian generals like general Purgat orium."

Jus t t hen Jennie Turner c ame walking up, and saw him sittin g at the foot of the t ree.

"Oh here you are I see"she said."What are you doing here.Everyb dy everybody is waiting for you.Come alon , and I'll lead you back t o Angelin e Ric hee and the others.Everybody is worried."

Jack rose quickly to accompany her

"That wasn 't must of a loss"he said c heerfully."I've ot been gone half an hour, so there's no harm done.But I've found out s omething.I had a right t o regret the loss of my Ros ary Beads .We're un der suspicion s omewhere.Two Glandelinian or three of the enemy c hild scouts warn ed me."

Angeline Ric hee however, when the boy rejoined the party an d brought t he informat ion said;

""When we're doing suc h an import an t thin g as searchin g for Violet and her sisters , we won't let no danger hid hinder us an d let t he Glandelinians try t o capt ure us if t hey c a n .Suppose they are prisoners---probably in a undergroun d c ell of thos e fortification s--do you t hink they believe we owould let t hem keep our dear Princ esses t here any longer t han we c an help! No indeed."

"If they are in a dun geon c ell un der the fortificat ions how are you going t o get them out f"in quired the boy."My let ter won't h lp in t he forts I'm afraid."

"Never you min d, we'll leave that to Our Blessed Lord to give us aid, and wit h the help of God Penrod will sure find a way.Maybe t hat fake letter you stole from Manley will fool the en emy there t oo."

Pen rod said not hing, for he too realized that without the help of God he c ould do no more than an y other person .But there was n o us e remin ding his companions of that fact , it might discourage t hem.

Th "The import ant thing just now."he remarked"is to find Violet and her sisters or learn where they are held, and as our party is again hap pily reunited,I propose we move on ."

As t hey came to the edge of the great en c ampments of barracks, the sun if t here was an y shining s hould have been sett ing by now, and t hey kn ew it would soon be really night .So it was decided to camp un der the trees as they would approach n earest the Thumbelinia Fortific ations on t he morrow. Pen rod spread the blankets on a bed of soft leaves , and pres ently all of t hem except the one to be on guard were fas t asleep.

Jennie Turner awakened justvas the day light began to appear, and sli pping out of the thin blankets went to the edge of one of the great earthworks and looked ac ross the fields of other posit ions tward the neares t approach t o Xhhbbe in ia Thumbelinia. Somethin g glittered in the far distanc e to the left of the fortificat ions .

"That looks like a permissable entran c e into t he Fortific ation s."she said half aloud."I wonder how far these fortific ations ext en ds anyway."!"!!!"

"And an entrance to the fortifications it is."declared Mildred Maxwell, who had crept up to Jen nie's side un e un heard, for her soft felt military shoes made n o sound(by the pound)"I and one of the boys with us made a secret journey in t he dark, while the res t of you except t he guard were asleepp, and we found over there an enormous gate, guarded by twenty son tries.In t he distanc e t here's a gen eralencampment of red yellow and blue stripped Glandelin ian t ents, and plenty of pathways to the fortification s."

"Did you go in f"asked Jennie Turner.

"N o for I didn't want to go in alone.So we c ame back here again.It isn't too far to the gate and we'll get there if we hasten fast enough.We can reach it in at least two hours, after we all have had our breakfast ."

Jen nie Turner went bac k, and finding the ot her girl and boy s couts now awake, told them what Mildred had said///. So t hey hurriedly ate some breakfast which t hey cooked themselves, and then t ey s et out upon t he journey to the fortificat ions themselves . Exc ept over their great worry over the loss of Violet and her sisters, they were all in good spirits, and feared nothing even though they were in the enemys lines, and they proceeded swiftly over the open groun d tward t he general c amps first .Jac k still worried over his lost Rosary, but like a wise little boyscout he kept his worry t o himse l hims lf himself.In outward an d int erior appearanc e these positions of the fortification s appeared more imposing than they had thought it would be.Everything about the fortifications looked as solid and as substantial and as strongly constructed as to resist t he severes t shell fire, t here was this morning no battere flyin g as was seen yesterday.Paths led from their point of vi w in s ome numbers, and a big road r road way led direc tion to one of the gates, showing that the Glandelinians c ommunicated with the fort by roads to the c amp.

Our friends followed this pat h to the gate, which was some great distance n and passed many soldiers who however did not pay any attention as so many Glande/inian child scouts int his locality do come and go so often.In t he vas t encampment as they en tered there was an immens e row of Glandelinian soldiers at the early morning preparatory dill drill.The s ize of t hes e columns of troops at the drill was ast onishing, and our friends at once realized they were portions of the immen se garris ons of the fortifications , who were now to go through some of their military drills.Many of the soldiers or all of them rather had thick bushy hair, and some whiskers, on some the h ir bein g white and on others black or other various hair colors, and red or yel ow, while the hair of many too were just turn ing gray, s howing that t he Glandelinian soldiers w re were of all ages .They also didn't look s o dan gerous an d so wic ked as they really were.Outside of t heir uniforms and strange square t opped "College St udent" hats, they appeared like any ordinary men you would s ee anywhere you go. But t hese Glandelinians were turmerannians as t heir uniforms showed.They were blue gray instead of light blac k gray. However strange t he heads or o so forth may seem the eyes were savage in expression, t heir fac es were as grim as giant in fairy stories , even though their fac es also did express patience, rather than ferocity.

An offic er from one of the c olumn s rode up to t he boy and girlscouts .

"What is wan ted!"he asked in a low grumbling voice.

"We are s tran gers and am looking for some Vivian Girl Princ esses who are believed to be held in these lines"dec lared Jack predicing t he letter which he had sec ured from general Manley s ome weeks previous.

"Did you c ome from the C hristian lines this morn ing!"he asked.

"N o indeed."ret orted Penrod"and he added impatiently."Do we look like we c ame from the c hristian lines t his morning when we slept in t hes e lines all i night."

"No I guess I might be mistaken"said the offic er"You look like innocen t Glandelinian rafagmuufon children, but one c an never tell by appearances.Wait here untill we report to one of our highes t commissioned offic ers .However no c hild scouts are allowed within the fortific ations I'm afraid.But I'll s ee what he has to say.But I don't see why Man ley would send you all t he way here t o bring to him prisoners we have though I don't know where they are.I have heard of them though and believe you'll have some dangerous little wild cats in your possession.Better look out when you have them."

"What are wild c ats ?"inquired Angeline Ric hee.But the officer only grin ned at her apparen t ignoranc e, and rode away down the Company S t reet for some distanc e and disappeared in a big side t en t . They waited a long time b fore before he return ed, and brought them to the tent. The guard said to t hem.;

"On y t he leaders of you r small troop c an en ter."

They therefore lost n o i time in takin g advantage of t he invitat ion....

As they had gone on tward the ten t of the c hief Glandelini n officer on either side of the broad Company St reet, at eod four lines of Glandelin ian soldiers,, and all standing so close together untill their clothing or uniforms touched. They were the uniform of the Glandelinian Zimmermannians, t heir coats being g of light blue gray with yellowcor gilt buttons and sleeve bands and shoulder straps, and yellow trouser, and black heart shaped he hats with gray underm at with the under rim surrounded by bell shaped gray t assels, and were armed with rifles wit h long bayonets attatched.Eac h Glandelinian soldier had around his yellow coat c ollar a broad band of gold, t o show t hat he was the fiercest and bravest of the en emy and t he most dreadful to fight again st.As our friends en tered, a number of the soldiers at the command of the offic f offic er t urned and walked in t wo files on either s ide of them, to escort t hem on t heir way.It looked to Angeline Ric hee, as if all her partybware already discovered as christian spies, and had been made prisoners.T he girls and t he boyscouts were anxicust anxious to know what sort of an encampment they had entered, and what the Glandelinian s were like, and what her those Zimmermannians waofe were as fierce an d ferocious in their fighting qualities as it was said they were.There were long rows of big yellow blue red and gray t opped t en ts on eac h side of the company street as high as t hree or four story houses , and t hronges of Glandelinian s standing here or there, or lined up for drill, but these Glandelinians were Omarians instead of zimmermannians ,and the only remarkable t hing about them was the fact that des pit e the supposed rigors of the seige they looked to be dreadfully powerful and stout . They all appeared to be almost shaped like at rong men and prize fighters, but their fac es be in front of their long bobbed or girl like hair did not look to be as ferocious as they really were.More and more Angeline Ric hee wondered how and why the glandelinian ar ies here c ould so long and so far so succ essfully t stand up in the fac e of so violent and v broody a seige, and fight successfully such world rec ordvbreakin g battles , but therewas no chance to ques t ion any one wit hout arousing any suspicion.They soon arivel at a big round stripped ten t in apparent the heart of the en campment .Of the Glandelinian s when a big ten t is round and at ripped red yellow and blue l on the sides, and wit h blue and yellow strips on t he roof that belon ga to a high gen eral what her it has a flag on t op or not .Here the Glandelinian s formed lines at the entran c e wit h t heir rifles crossed bridge form over head, and s t ood s t ill while our friends walked in to the courtyard of the t ent.Then t he gates c losed behind them and before t hem in the tent was a tall man of handsome appearanc e regalled in a blue unifor m with a high stove pipe like hat wit h a plume on t op who saluted, and said in a sort of stern voice;

"If you will be so obliging as to follow me,it will give me t he pleasure to leadyou int o the presen ce of general C izarover, the chief of st affof the Thumbelinin War De a Department."

"I do don't believe it"said Angelina Richee, pretending to be indignat .

"What in the world don't you believe!"asked the high offic er.

"I don't believe your general can hold a lighted match in the face of our head commander Purgatorian."

"He wouldn't hold a match or anything under anycircumstan ces or to an y living person."replied the offic er very seriously,"For he has orderlies and aidecamps and t he like and also the c hild slaves to do such things, and the mighty general is too proud and dignified and coven conciated to do anything that others can do for him.He even obliges a child slave to give him his hat he , and to eat oh a cold from him so he c an get over it.However if you dare to fac e the powerful general Purgatorian you'll have to go to the fortifications of Lucillia Rickson .His abode in there.But if you want to s ee our Distric t general of the Thumberlin ia War Departmen t, follow me."

"We dare an ything"said Penrod"so go ahead."

They e were led into the great circular room of the huge tent which had stripes inside also and the same as outside on the high domed canvass c eiling, , where on the floor in the c n center the Glandelinian general sat at a table. The general was writing somet hing from a very large piec e of paper when our friends entered his headquarters, and st ood at salute before him.For a time he continued to write, after having motioned them to sit down on the benc hes in the tent.Then he examined the strangers with avident curiousity.Then he read the note Jack Saunders presented to him and in schanding it bac k said;;;

"Dear me what a surprise indeed.You Have reallly s hocked me.For no boy or girlscout outsider from gen eral Manleys army has ever c ome before to our besieged armies, from that ernormous distance, and espec ially when such an ernormous chris tian army blocks the way, and I cannot imagine why you have ventured to do so and risked all these dangers ."

"Well"said Jack"as you see by, that note"We are looking for those so called Princ esses, the supreme little girl rulers of Abbieannia who are believed t o be prisoners here."r0t1454d3E5n55055

"Do you see them anywhere around here?"asked t he general.

"N ot yet Your "Excellenc y, but perhaps you may be able to tell me where they are confined."

"No I don't think I could,I have my hands full trying t o d defend one section of the christian army here, and one sect ion there.I find t hem hard to stop in their attacks because t hose christian besiegers are so tremendously strong. I wish for my part that this confounded war was in----"" he did not finish the senten c e.Angelina Ric hee now thought here's where she gets some informat ion as to t he knowledge of t he enemy concerning the besiegers and she z said;

"The National b esi besiegers don't look very strong.It seems as if a good charge of Glandelinian troops would chase t hem away out of the territory of Vivian Wic key---if it wasn't for the numbers of t heir w works."

"Just so,just so indeed"admit ted the general."You like to argue about it I see.Well I like arguments and I know more about those christian dogs than you do.You never had spied over there, and many of my men and I myself have.They really don't look so strong at that, but that is deciewing."erhaps you noticed that all persons between the c hristian and our lines are protected by our big Glandelinian horse scout n and fighting patrols. I'll admit the christian armies are not so bad at that .But its t hose christian girl and boyscouts who are now with this besiegin g army.I'm surprised that not one of their pat rols got n ear you. Perhaps one of our scout patrols prevented t hose child scouts from any meeting wit h you."

"Are the christian child scouts so dangerous then!"asked Penrod.

"To us Glandelinians yes, but only because they're so hard to get at, and they can get at us.For in they ever capture you, they are likely to bring you before t heir general.And if you left those lines with those Princ esses in your possession and they captured you it surely would be bad for you. "

"Why!"asked Joe Greene.

"Bec ause any one charged with making prisoners of t he Prin c ess es no mtter matter why will fac e a firing squad."

"Pshaw"3 ec exc laimed the boy wit h preten se of scorn."That's bragging. "You probably don't know how us boy and girlscouts are"said Jack Saunders blust eringly.

"How do you make that out.?"

"Why, once y know a boy scout in Manleys army called Gerald Starring, who could outwit even the famous christian girlscout leader Angelin ia Aronburgbin a fight with her.That 's like bending iron bars wit h just your han ds."Thisxwas true in a way for he remembered t he fight Gertrude An elina and s ome of her comrades had with Gerlad Starring in a barn when she attempted to c apture him.He just t his argument just to get the information they were lookin f looky lookin g for which would be a clueeas how to find ,,iolat, and her s isters.

"But more y me"said t he general"It is no trick t o ben d iron bars ."Tell me could that boy scout lick t hirty or fourty christian child scouts."?

"No body could do that."declared the boy.

"If I had the proof I'd show you."said t he general looking around the room."Ah here is my desk.I'll get a note out and show it t o you."

He rose to his feet went t to the desk, and drew out n envelope.

"This is a proof that oje one of your boyscouts called Hans who showed it t o me declared t hat achristian boyscout called Schofield Penrod licked thirty n ine Glandelin ian boyscouts in a few minutes."

"Penrod was so astonis hed at this trut hful news, t hat he looked at his comrades and t hen took the note looking it over c arefully."

"N ow t ell me"said the general turning to Penrod as he replaced the note; "Could any of our glandelin ian boy or girlscouts do a t hing like t hat ."

"I guess not."said Penrod much impressed that the Glandelinians know of this t rue facts.

"What makes the christian armies so s trong!"inquired Angeline wishin g t o get at the bottom ottthhtinfbbaiiss information.

"It is those boy and girlscout divis ions"which is an invention or an organisation of those Princ esses general Manley sent you for.I and all my people fear them for though mere children t hey aven the little girls have tremendous s t rength. If they are here I'd be glad to give them up to you for believing they're here those chris tian scouts may c ome here and get them and kill us for inteferegng for they are t oo dangerous to be captured.would you care to hear the desc ription of those boy and girlscouts !"

"No thank you "replied t he girl."We don't want to know now.We don't went to meet them either if it is possible to avoid them."

"Well one can't get pas t the christian lin es without encountering any of this child scout patrols."said the general."I n ever heard of an y on e have so much energy as these christian child scouts have, and they're the most dangerous kind of soldier children in existance.I n ever allow an y of my own child scouts to come in contact with them for fear of disaste r to them, and if we Glandelinian generals don't do something to frustrate them they'll soon become our masters, since they are more active and smater and more shrewd than the christian armies, so I keep all my child scouts within our own camps, n and indeed Glandelinian child scouts are terribly few in numbers at that."No one wants to join, and child slaves won't even to gain t heir freedom which is the reard if they do so. General Purgatorian is one of our most ablest chief commanders but he fears them too and so does the general Manley who sent you for the Princ esses .

"Who is general Purgatorian!"asked Jack Saunders curiously and pretending ignorance of the man.

"Why general Purgatorian is a great soldier, who used to have his headquarters here.But he's gone away now"replied general Cizarover.

"Where has he gone!"asked Penrod quickly.

"I am told his headquarters are at the sout hern ext remity of the great and mighty Lucillia Rickson fortifications.You see t he c hristian besiegers bec ame so powerful, that he had to go there to superintend o erations of the whole citys garrisons against them, and to make everything sec ure for g fear t he c hristian generals would send p spies who would disc over and capture some of his most sec-et plans.So he went to the fortifications of Lucillia Rickson , which fort resses is so s trong, that even general Mansion of the Nat ionals with all his cannon c could not batter it down, and from there he commands the whole situation."

"This is good news"declared Penrod."For I think this is just the gen eral who can help us ge t those Princesses.But why is he called general Purgatorian? Is that his right name?"

"Yes he it is"replied t he general."He is descended from one of the greates t of our old time generals that ever lived in this or any other country.He is a wizard at forming plans.He is a danger to the besiegers ."

"Do you think!"asked Angeline Richee anxiously?"That general Purgatorian has in i his possession the Vivian Girl Princesses . "

"Well"replied the general"That I c annot say, but it might be possible for he is very ambitious to become the most greatest general in the world by winning this seige, and so I suppose he would not be too proud to have his spies steal anything or capture any person of importance.One of his spies discovered in general Mansions headquarters all the plans and other papers."

"But how about the Princesses?Why would he wish to capture them, when general Manley claims them as his prisoners too?"questioned gene Angeline Richess.

"Don't ask me.General Purgatoi Purgatorian does n't tell me why he does things I assure you."

"If he has them, and gives them to us we must then go back toward Manleys lines I suppose by a direct southwest route."

"I wouldn't do that if I were you."advised the general, lookin g first at the three girlscout chief officers, and the others of the party. For you may meet wt with those christian child scouts and will probably take them away from you and make you prisoners in spite of allyour resistance.And with all their crafty ways and their abilities they would be dangerous to attack.Therefore if you are wise, you will first communicate with general Manley if you find them and let him tell what shall be done with them here.But perhaps those Vivian Girl Spies are not in these positions at all."

"The only way to settle that question"replied Penrod"Is to go to general Purgatorian and see if he knows where the Vivian Girls are.If he knows where they are, we will report the matter to the great general Federal who is nearest and I'm pretty sure he willfind a way to have them brought out of here."

"Well do as you please"said the general."But don't go out the lines and face those terrible christian child scouts .Their patrols are as thick as bees these days."

They stayed the rest of the morning,and were fed at the generals table.The Glandelinian general was a sort of humane man however and treated them very nicely and told them that he was morevin the war against his will.He had wanted to resign as he didn't favor the cause, and had said that the sooner the besiegers won the better he would like it.But even at the last the general warned them not to encounter any of the christian childscouts, and then bidding the general a cordial goodbye for they respected him for being a humane man they left the encampments and headed for the powerful Lucillie Rickson Fortifications that lay to the southwest ..:::::::

Indeed it seems a long time since we have heard anything of the American and the Abbiesnnian girl friend, who despite the perils of the war was in search of a string of jewel Necklace, which had been mysteriously stolen stolen from her, the same morning that violet and her sisters had disappeared from Angelinia Aronturgs camp.But you must remember that while the American and the Abbiesnnian sweetheart of his were preparing to look for the lost article andseven while on their way to the farmhouse of the Abbiesnnian Farmer, Angeline Richess, and her friends , were encountering the adventures we have just related. So it was therefore on the very morning when the small travelers from Angelinia Aronturgs camps bade farefull to the encampments of general Cizarover, the Abbiesnnian girl and her companion awoke in a grove in which they had passed the night trying to sleep on the grass but could not because of the loud reverbrating earth shakin g splitting upro ar of cannons and exploding shells far to the northward that rounded as if the eq earth was going to swallow itself up and all the skies and planets too.There were plenty of farmhouses in the neighborhood, but they were all deserted for fear of the Glan delinians and so there was no one to welcome thepuffy haughty American or the little Amer Abbiesnnian woman, and so they had tried to sleep but in vain underneath the trees of the grove.The Americ an aroused by the increasing sound of nearer explosions and the sound of some distant but violent on slaught some where of count less infantry men and the steadier noise of count less rifles , and machine guns added, got up and after going to the tree where Maud slept he found her still wrapt in slumber, and decided to take a little walk and seek some breakfas t . Coming to the edge of the grove he observed half a mile away a pretty yellow house that was surrounded by a high yellow picket fence, so he walked toward,, this house, and on entering the yard found a Calverin ian woman pic king up lots of woods from a half tumbled down wood pilecwith which to builth build a fire to cook her morning meal.

"For goodness sake"she exclaimed in her own language, on seeing the Foriegner""What are you a Foriegner doing so far away from a Refugee camp.?" He of course having learned it could speak asgood in Abbiesnnian as she.

"I am traveling in search of a jewsled necklace whom a lady friend of mine lost my good woman."he replied with an air of great dignity.

"I'm afraid my dear sir that you would not be able to find it around here then"said she."We Abbiesnnians all try our best to outrival each other in holiness, and therefore there is no record of any one of us ever doing such a thing as stealing the slightest article. .And us Farmer women do not care for jewelry.It is best for you to go within the enemy camps.They are the greatest stealers in the world."

She spoke rather crossly about the Glandelin ians, and with a lack of respect that greatly surprised the foriegner.

"Allow me to tell you Madam."he said"That although I am a foriegner, I could be the greatest and most dignified man in the world, and also the wisest,.I may add that I could possess much more wisdom, righteousness than any Glandelin ian, or Abbiesnnian, man or woman in this land too.Wherever I go all you people could fall on mythighes their knees and render homage to me the Great est man in the world.No one else could know or do as much as me, and no one else could be so grand----so magnificient .Yet My dear Lady that wouldn't make me so much as dare go near the enemys lines for they wouodn't respect me no more than if I was a common useless no account toad."

"If you hate the enemy so much."she asked"Why don't you join our Christian armies, instead of chasing around the country after some one else as jewelry?"

"Pr esent ly"he answered."I intend to go where one of them is, but just now I am traveling and have had no clues as to which way is the nearest of the armies.I desire to show those Dirty Glandelin ians how we"Americans" fight. Therefore I honor you by asking you if you can to direct me to the nearest christian army."

"Oh, you must go to join our armies on.Then find their camp and put in your application to one of the girl or boy scout chieftians of the Vivianites who are over near or within the seige lines of Vivian Wic kay."

"Me a foriegner, an American, go the to those boy and girlscouts when I haven't no pass and know nothing of their own ter signal"he exclaimed in 556Borhorror."Why I've heard that most amongst christian armies and especially among st child scouts of the Christian s or what you call them, they won't receive me with any welcome whatever.Because so many foriegners were driven out because they can't behave themselves or turn cowards .So that makes a bad break for me and I haven't no show."

"But that's the only place to go for your enlistment ."declared the woman. "No general willaccept you without a registeration from one of the Vivian Girl Princesses and ther they're only often found among st child scouts.If you prove your true character I don't see why you would fear those good, delightful and brave children for.Heaven knows I'd rat her have their company than even the most expensive jewls jewelry.You must be afraid of them."

"Infear you do not realize the danger of it if they believe I'm not of their side."urged the American." My slight wisdom if I have any renders me the warning that I'd but ter keep away untill I have means to prove my character."

"It 's a great wonder to me"remarked the woman"That your wisdom doesn't inform you that you'll get no further than past here if you cannot prove anything to the child scouts .They have many patrols out , and you may encounter one.You are foolish to fear these good brave children just because they're they're in uniform.My own children are in the army as scouts and both are high leaders .There's Jane Molfort and her brot her Frank.If you could go to see them you'd be welcomed.You are afraid for not bing."Pray to God to give you courage to meet them.They'll even help you to find the jewelery if possible.Want anything to eat."

"No madam.I have a full knap sack with me."

"Well then don't be foolish man.Go and seek audience with thbse dei delightful Vivianites and surely they'll welcome you more than you expect.If you show you're afraid of them, that will make them suspicious ." And after a parting greeting she went in and slowly closed the door behind her.

The American felt he had been adi advised to do an impossible thing, but he turned away. After going for a short distance he came upon a long wide path which lead across a wide and beautiful meadow in the direction of a wide glen of high pretty trees, and thinking that this may give him a chance to see where an army could be he decided to climb to the top of one of the trees.He walked up to the trees trees, which at this spot were srt close together, and pushing aside some bushes he found a very large pond of water, and in it were a number of children boys and girls swimming and having all kinds of fun in the water.He expected that they would be startled or frightened at his sudden appearance, but good hildren like they are in Abbiesnnian have no occassion to fear no one or anything and instead of being frightened they all shouted at him;;;;;;!..!""

"Come in too with us Mr and have some fun.The water is not cold."
No the American,as he gazed at t his pond, with the farm children in it found his love for s wimming return ing to him wit h irrestible force.He had wit h him somethin g like a bathing suit and a few minutes later he had removed his clot hing and was having as good a time as any of them.The water was delightfully cool and grateful to his hot sk0n for the morning was very s ultry, and he s wam around the pond several times .The children were of all ages t here being about twent y of them, the pon d wasn't very deep, and the water bubbled up from awhidden s pring.On the banks the green grass grew t o the very edge of t h e water line.And now as t hey were having t he best of t he fun, anot her man appeared and said;
"Got from here every one of as quick as t ime will let you.A squadron of scouting Glandelinian soldiers are approaching."
The children grabbing their clot hes obeyed, and hid.This n ews startled the American yet his bitter hatred of t hem came anew.Oh if he only had a gun a good trusty rifle.He had accoun te to settle with the Glandelin ians.Because of t hem he was alone in the world.Two months before he had a beautiful wife and three children, an d too his parents had been living.Now he was alone.All had been mured and his little home which he had erected out of his hard earned life savings was burned to t he ground.The news of them too however worried him, so t hat he leaped upon the bank, and hurru hurriedly began to dress hims elf.
"A great misfortune had befallen me"he said t o the man who gave the earn ing.
"I cannot hardly bare to tell am any one of my loss, but the t ruth is my family is dead and my parents too, and my hou e house burned to the ground.
In trut h a raidin g party of Glandelinians did it, thos e ac cursed Omarians.
I wish to join the army but I'm afraid to go near the christ ian child scout camp, for I hear theyre awfully dangerous."
"You're a mut t hen"said the man as he led t he american t o a place of shelter."There's no reason for any one to dread them.They can tell by your very looks what her you're trusted or not, and to me you look as if I could trust you with my safe full of money in your room and I miles away.Come I'll hide you before the Glandelin ians come.I know you'd like to fight them but you sin gle handed could not fight a squ r squadron."
More humbled than he had been for many years t he man aft er the enemy had pass ed went back to the grove, where he had left th4 youn g Abbiesnnian woman and found the girl now awake, and washin g her face and hands in a stream.
"Where have you been ?"she asked.
"To a farmhouse to ask information as to where t he neares t c hristian army is."said he."But the woman advised me to go to t he Vivianites .How can I I'm sure I'm afraid of them, children though they are."
"How dreadful you poor fool to be afraid of such nice brave children."she exc laimed.
"But never mind, there are surely other ways, and we can go to some ot her parts of the c hristian campswhere the people wecwill be glad to help the bes t foriegner I ev r ever know."
"Are you sure about that?"he asked."
"I don't say you're the best of all of them."she answered."I mean you're the best one I ever knew."
The Americ an felt a trong impelled t o tell t he adventure he har had and of t he apparent peril they were in , but struggle d hard against it .his reas on told him there was no use in letting Maud know they were not in danger from Roving Glandelinian patrols, for t hen she would fear to proc eed any further, but eac h time he opened his mout h to speak he realized he was about to tell the truth, and shut it again as quickly as possible.He tried to talk about somet hing else but the words would force themselves to his lips in s pite spite of all his troubles or str struggles.Finally knowing that he must eit her remain dumb or let the truth prevail he gave a low low groan of despair an d said;
"Maud we'll have to look out for roving bands of those ac c urs ed Glande linian enemies of yours.I almost met wit h a party t o day."
"Oh you must be fooling"sh e she protes ted."You told me yes terday evening t hat n o Glandelinians were in s ight an ywhere."
"Then last evening I either made a mistake or failed to t ell you the truth"he admitted."I am sorry I made that mistake but it c ertainly didn't look possible for any of them to be around t his n eighborhood.If you must know the t rut h, t he whole truth and nothing but the t ruth, I ence en counteredce s quadron of the fierce Turmeranmian c avarly early this morning."
The young woman was great ly s hocked to hear this, for it shattered one of her most pleasing illusions .She looked at t he gorgeiously dress ed American in embarrassment.
"What has caus ed you to change your mind so suddenlyabout Glandelinians being in this neighborhood?"shecin quired .

452"I was bathing in a pond of watefr not far fromwhere with s ome Abbiesnnian farm c hildren"he said"when a man c ame to it an d warned us t o beat it for Glan delinians were coming. I coun ted about one hundred of them in the squadron and they s eemed to be t heme kind called the "Whoolers ".I had wis hed I had a rifle for I would have dared to shoot their leader down."
"You would have been foolish if you did that"said the woman."You couldn't have any show against the other ninty nine.I'm glad I didn't see an y of thos e dreadful Glandelin ian s."
The A n American lookedvat his c ompanion thoughtfully.
"Maud"said he."I want you to take some of my money when we get t o some town and buy me a pis tol or two wit h cartridges .For if we are to travel together and enc oun ter unknown dangers, it would not be fair that one of us would not be armed."
"Yes "she answered."We bot h ought to have a pistol or two."

Leaving the small grove where they had slept, the american, n and the Abbiesnnian woman turned to the sout hwestsout hwest to seek some plac e else for information and after a short walk came to one where the people also recieved them kindly.The children stared rather hard at the big pompous Americ an, but the woman of the house when Maud asked for information and something hot to eat, brought them food, and said they were welcome to it.
"No people in need of help pass this way."she remarks d"For despite t his war and disasters that tear up our State of Calverinia, and enemy raids we Calverinians are all hardy énttppppppppprepros perous, and love to see chan c es to help any one in trouble.My hus band is in the army and is a general.But perhaps you sir are not a C alverinian."she added.
"No"said he I'm an American, but I have lived some time in Calverinia before the war broke out, and my home was on a small fertile mountain at some distanc e southeast from here."
"And the lady with you sir-- is she also an American."?
"No she is an Abbiesnnian."replied he.
"Nay I ask you why you left your home, and where you are going?"said the Calverinian woman.
Then the girl told her of her jewls jewelry, and how it had been mysteriously stolen from her own o home.So as it was aykes pe keepsake of her mothers s he had resolved to search if possible untill she found her jeweled n ec klace again.The American who wanted to see some of the sc tions of the war, and t o join the christian army if possible had accompanied her to assist in t he search.
When the woman a had listened to t his story she finally asked;;
"Then you have no idea as yet-- who has stolen your necklace ?"
"I only know it mus t have been some Glandelinian spy because none other could have known I possessed the necklace.And who else could have c arried away my beautiful jewelad n ecklac e witwithout being seen?"
The woman thought about this during the time t hat the woman and her frien d ate thair breakfast.When they had fin ished she asked;;
"Where are you going next?"
"We have not yet decided."ans awered the Abbiesnnian woman.
"Our plan"explained the American , in his important way"Is to travel to the Glandelinian camps untill we c an learn where the t hief is located, and t hen force him to return the necklac e to its proper own er and put him into a long confinement."
"The plan is all right"agreed the woman"But it may take you a long time before you succeed, your method being a ort of haphazard and indefinite.However I advise you to t ravel tward the northwest."
"Why?"asked the American.
"Bec ause if you went west or sout hwest you would soon encounter many scout ing patrols of the enemy, and also because there are so many patrols of boy and girlscouts of the c hristians that you c annot pass and they arrest all strangers for in vestig ation .And woe to them who ca cannot give an ac count of themselves.But tward the n rthwest northwest , beyond the Sunbeam Creek, is also the entrenchments of the Glandelinians.Moreover if you journ ey far enough to the north you will come to t he powerfully guarded encampments of the Christian boy and girlscouts called the Vivianite purroughs, where there is much work going on against the enemy.These encampments just now are under the supervision of s v seven dear brave little girls called the Vivians, who is t he Prine cesse of Abbiesnnia.So as The Vivian Girls are Prine cesses, they may eit her be able to t ell you just who has taken your precious k n ecklac e and also to help you find it .Provided of c ourse you do not find it before you reach them."
"This seems to be excellent advice."said the American,"But as I have no pass an d have not learned the Counter sign,I'm a afraid to go near t heir camp.They s hoot prowlers down wit hout challenging them."
"The most sen sible thin g for you to do then if you're afraid of them."continued the woman "would be to return to your home then, an d let the woman go there herself to learn about her necklace.But of c ourse if the lady needs you as an es cort you can accompany her as far as the first guard for she is likely to learn about it there t hannay other place in this country.I know the Count or sign however as my little girl who is a girlscout told me, but t hat alone won't get you in I'm afraid.But the Coun ter sign is "The sign of the Cross."

"Yes! What do you mean!"

"Are you sir not a Cat holic!"she asked Almost sharply.

"I certainly am."

"Then you should know the Countor sign.You Catholics make it in Chrudh always and so do we."

"Oh Unnderstan d now "he s aid.

They t hanked the good woman, and on leaving her house fac ed the nort hwest and continued in that direction all the way.In about fift een minutes travel t hey came to a small stream but it was deep nevertheless, and there on the river bank found a man with a boat just coming ashore.This man appeared to be a Calverinian.As he jumped ashore the American said "Good even ing.

Th e boatman or what ever he was only looked at him, grinned but made no reply.

"We would like some provisions, and the grave of sleeping in your house untill evening."continued the merican."Then if you would be so kind sir at daybreak we would like some breakfast, and then if you can we would like you to give us a row acrosss the s tream.I'll pay you wellll."

ThatFerryman The Ferryman looked at him closely, shook his head but did not speak.

"I'm afraid he must be d eaf or dumb."Maud whispered to her companion.Then she stood direc tly in front of the man who nodded to her, and said in her own language not thinig thinking"Good evening."

"Good evening."he answered pleasantly.

"Did youbreally hear what I said?" she asked looking at him in duttttttttttt. ast oniahment.

"Of c ourse I can very will."replied the man smiling more at her look of astonis hment."What's the matter lady.You look s urprised."

"Then why didn't you answer this man."

"Because"said thevFerry man."I don't understand the Foriegn Language."

"He speaks also the same language that we do, but I guesshe forgot to."declared the wi woman. "

"Well why didn't he."?

"What is he mumbling about!" asked t he A e American .

"He is talking to me but as he didn't do it loud enough you didn't understand him."she replied." I believe when you spoke to him you forgot he doesnt under stand English."

He gave them quite a good breakfast, and he allowed them both to s leep in a room of his c abin.Then just as the sun was ri i rising the next day the boatman rowed the two travlers across t he river;;and t hen t he American t hanked him in Abbieannian, said him and bade him good bye, and the boatman rowed home again. On t his side of the river there were no pat hs at all, so it was evident they had reached a part of the count ry little frequented by travelers.There was a disappearing Glandelinian patrol of soldiers to the south of them, great fires to the north and apparently a forest fire o t he east.So the wes t was reallyb the least difficult way to go and that direc t ion therefore was the on e they determined to go.They soon reac hed a sort of wood where the t all trees were st set far apart but were so full of leaves that they shaded all t'he spaces between them with their branches/

"There are no bushes here."said Maud much pleas ed"so we can now travel faster, and with more comfort.

It wasn mist most pleasant place to wander in and seemed yet quite far from any section of the besieging c hristian lines.The two t ravelers were proceeding at a brisk brisk pace and not looking in any particular direction when suddon ly a childish voice shouted;

"Halt there, or we shhot shoot."

They looked raround in evident surprise, seeing at first no on e at all. Then from behind a t ree there stepped a boyscout, who was tall enough that his hand came up to Mauds shoulder---and Maud was not a small woman.The boy was chubby as well as strong and tough looking.He wore a lavander uniform coat, yellow t rouserand redhat and shoes, t he st ockings being purple.He had bobbed hair, whil while his dark brown y eyes were bright and yet a little savage looking. He held a long cavarly rifle pointed at them.Bot h the American and Maud gazed hard at t his c urious child, standing silent for some time.But finally the Americ an recovered from his surprise and remarked;

"It seems to me that you're some foolish and strong fancied child playing soldier and trying to frighten people who come upon you.You ought to be home with your mot her andfather before the Glandelinians gets you."

"That is all you know about it ."answered the little boy in a most determined voice.I am uniformed because I have a right to be.As for my being a child playing soldier, that is my own affair, if that is what you thin k I'm doing, and therefore c annot concern you at all---except that it gives me the pleasure to say you are my prisoners ."

"Prisoners .Why do you speak such n on sense!"asked the American angrily, and swearin g in i his own language."Do you think we are afraid of a child playing soldier with a long toy gun."

"You ought to be if that is what you think."was the c on fident reply,, for I am merely the lone sc out coming out to see what the Glandelin iens are up t o, but at some slight distanc e is a squadron of my c omrades , led by a powerful leader Hattie Ka uffmann.She wears the best purple uniform c oat , so you'll know her easily.So unless you come with me peacefully, as my prisoners I shall fire my gun and bring a hundred boy and girls scouts of t he Burrough Vivisnit es one of which I am to capture you."

"Why do you wish to capt ure us ?"inquind inquired the American, who had listened to t his speech wit h some ast onishment and apprehen sion.

"I don't wish to as a matter of fact"replied the boy"But it is my duty to, because you two are st rangers, and are in the t erritory of the c hristi inn lines.We are t o arrest all strangers t hat comes near the camp, and if they can give a satisfactory explanation of themselves well and good, but if not Heaven help you.Also I will admit that things are rather unquiet within our camps just now because of so many spies trying vainly to get in, and the excitement of your capture, should afford us much intertainment if you turn out what we suspec t you to be."

"We defy you."said t he American.

"Oh no,no don't do t hat "pleased Maud, speakin t o her c ompanion. He says his leader is Hattie Kauffmann, so perhaps it is she or ones of her followers who ventured to take possession of our jelwelry.Let us take t he c hance as and go to the camp of the Vivisnitos, and discover if my jeweled nec klac e is there."

"I will now be compelled to make one more serious charge against es ecially ex aspec ially you madam."remar ed the boyscout, with evident satisfavt ion.

"You an Abbieannian if you appear to be ought to have n known bet ter than t o accuse us of stealing, and that is suc h a dreadful t hing to say t hat I am quite sure that our noble girlscout leader will make you t ake back what you said."

"But how could you execute us on ma ing that remark!"inquired the woman.

"I didn't say anything about executing stupid.But t ell me are you goin g t o make a breakto get away or will you go peac fully to meet our leader."

It all seemed so ridiculous that Maud laughed aloud, and even t he Foriegners mouth curled in a smile.Neither was at first afraid to go with him, as they didn't believe these children were really c hild scouts (They had never seen one yet , wait till they do, and they'll have more res pec t for them), and too it seemed t o both of them that there was a possibilit y that they might discover the missing jelweled nec klace.So the American said;

"Lead the way boy, and we will follow wit hout a fuss ."

"That is sensible of you, very sensible of you indeed"decided the boy."Go forward mare h"and with the command he plac ed himself in back of the two and the three began to walk along a pat h that led bet ween the trees and out t ward a wide open road .

Maud, andthe American, as they went on ahead of their capt or, could scarce forbear laughing at what they thought of the ridic ulous fact of being "Pretended "prisoners of a little boy "playing soldier".but after a time they reached a large dirt road.There was not a soul in s ight but on either side of the road were a great number of big trees, and t he ground was c overed by soft green grass, which seemed pleasant to thr ad upon t hr e t hread upon. There was nothing unusual agout t he place infact indeed nothing in t he opin ion of the prisoners to indicate that there had been anybody about but t he led himself. But the littleboyscout said in a proud and impressive voice;

"This is where you are to wait ."

"You surely are now really playing soldier and want to have a joke out on us." e xc laimed The American.

"And there is no one in sight here for miles."exc laimed Maud.

"Oh indeed"retorted t heir c aptor, and raising his gun he pulled the trigger. The rifle was discharged with a loud "crac k", and he,f a minute after there came e forward around a c urve of the road a column of mounted girl and boyscouts, one of the foremost leading a ridorless horse.The hors es were of many colors but of equal sizes, and t he children who were riding t hem were dressed in the same color as the boy who had met and captured t hem, though the girls wore different shaped coats, and yellow dresses with purple dre dots around the purple fringes and had decorated heart sheped hats.

At first a chorus of growls and snarls arose, and then a sharp voice cried from the leader;

"What has happened Sergeant Tony.?"

"Captives Miss Hauffmann."answered the boy."I believe they're intruders upon our territories and they have no pass or do not know the counter sign, and also probable slanderers of our good name."

"Ah that's unusual"answered the girl.Then she muttered something to her foremost followers, and about half a dozen of them still on horseback surrounded the two prisoners .They were all armed as the two could see, with long gleaming sabres, rifle, and brace of pistol, and two big knives in their belts, and carried suspicious looking sacks on their backs, and on the back saddle of their horses, and just then were carrying long bannered lances in their hands .By their appearance it was now ed evident they were not "playing soldier."In the main column there were hundreds of them, but thirty had quickly formed a circle around the American and the Abbiennian woman, but nevertheless kept at a distance, and in left a large large space for the prisoners to stand in.Presently this circle parted, and into the center of it rode a girlscout uniformed throughout dress and all in a lovely lavender color the rounded hat also but circled in the middle middle with gilt belts.She gazed at sadily at the two with bright gray eyes.She was indeed quite a pretty girl to look at but her face was serious and firm, and the grim expression of her mouth showed she was dangerous to monkey with.

"One Abbiennian,and one foriegner."said the girlscout leader, when she had carefully examined the strangers.Why have you dare to intrude upon our territory."

"We didn't know we were within the christian territory."said the woman.

"Maybe you didn't, and you had a right to come anyhow as we know you're all right by your looks"said Hattie."But how about this foriegner.?We generally don't allow foriegners in our country itself."

"I have become an Abbiennian citizen long ago."said the American ."I was brought over here when I was a boy.My parents were murdered by the Glandelinians, and so were my wife and children."

"She looked hard at the American and could tell by his face he was telling the truth.

"Well you look all right to me at that"she said finally."Where were you going when picked up by the sergeant.?"

"We were on our way to the christian lines to find the Vivienite troop and ask help from them."said the American.

"What requires you to seek help from us ?"

"From what?"

"From us .We're Vivianites .We come from one of the camps.What errand requires you to travel such a long distance from your place to our camp, and to face the danger of meeting Glandelinian scout patrols who respect no one whether or you're foriegners or not?"

"Some one has stolen my diamond necklace"explained Maud"And as I cannot be happy without it as it was a keepsake of my own mother,I have decided to take the chance on to search the enemy camps untill I find it again.This Foriegner who is very learned and wonderfully wise has come with me to give me his assistance.Isn't it kind of him !"

The girlscout leader looked closely at the American, wondering how it was possible he knew the Abbiennian language so well."

"Are you positively so wise as she says you are?"she finally asked with a frown.

"I don't believe I am."was the candid reply//."Many who knows me believe because I am a good foriegner and have traveled a lot , that I must be very wise.I believe I have learned a lot more, than many men usually know it is true, but I am far from being as clever or as wise as I hope to become at some future time.But I certainly do like to have a chance to settle accounts with these Glandelinians . They murdered my wife and children."

Hettie J Kauffmann nodded.

"I see you are honest and truthful, and I believe I like you even though you are a foriegner, at least I have nothing against foriegners who are Americans, which is more than can be said of many other kind of foriegners, especially English.Are you an American from the United States or from what they calleCandada called Canada. ?"

"I am from Chicago, in the United States.So were my parents .We were Irish by birth."

"Well"Said Hettie Kauffmann to the woman"Rac ontly in one of our raids in which wescouts rescued a lot of child slaves we did capture a lot of jewelry and I have much if the best in my possession right now.I will show them to you and if any of which you claim is your is among stamongst them you can have it."

She took from a small box she carried different strings of jewelry, one with a chain string made of gorgeous silver.In Abbiennia and Glandelin in Silver is far more valuable than gold even though it is far more plentiful.

On the string was a set reich of diamonds , and they sparkled magnificently. The woman stared so hard that her eyes seemed about to pop out of her head.

"O-o-o-o-h"she exclaimed, drawing a deep breath breath of delight.

"Is that your necklace?"inquired inquired the girlscout leader.

"No, not a single thing is mine."she answered with a moan of despair, as she raised her head to look at the girlscout general, who was watching her motions curiously.

"Poor woman."murmured the girlscout spityingly.It is too bad it is not amongst these.I hope you will some day find it .Too bad I couldn't give you any ofthese either but they may belong to some one else from which they were were stolen."

Maud was graviously disappointed.She began to cry wiping her eyes on her apron.Hettie turned to the throng of girl and boyscouts surrounding her and asked;

"Has any of you ever seen any jewl jewelry necklaces necklace as the which she described."

"No,"they answered in a chorus . Hettie seemed to reflect .Presently she inquired;

"Where is out friend Jack Saunders and his helper Joan ."

"They're in camp your Excellency"was the reply.

"Back to camp we'll go and find out from them."said she.

It took them about an hour to return and when they reached the camp and were settled, the first thing that Hettie Kauffmann noticed of one of the girlscout was;

"Is Jack Saunders in.?"

"No but his friend Joan is ."was the answer.

"Ask her to come here."commanded Hettie.

The girl did as she was bid, and in a few minutes Joan was before her grettings granting Hettie as her longest lived friend.

Hettie asked if she had been scouting within the foe lines successfully lately and then told of the womans loss and asked;

"Tell me my dear friend, do you know what has become of this lady's jeweled necklace."and she had the woman woman describe it to her.

"General Purgatorian has it."said Joan."Jack was going to seize it but didn't have time.He suspected the general at once it and wanted to get it away from him."

"Who and what is general Purgatorian"Demanded Hettie.

"He is the chief general of all the Glandelinian armies in or about Vivienwick key, ward who resides in this headquarters."was Joan answered reply.

"Where is his headquarters?"was the next question.

"Ninety seven miles and four furlongs from Lucillia Rickson Fortifications to the southwest, in the city of Norma Catherine section of Vivien Wickay."

"and you were there."?

Indeed I was and Jack Was with me.I got some important plans from him and gave it to general Mannion only yesterday.The enemy is going to launch a general attack upon our whole position next sunday."

"And is the necklace still at the headquarters of general Purgatorian?"asked the girlscout leader.

"I believe it is ."

Hettie turned to Maud.

"You may rely on this information"said she."Joan or Jack, and other of our troop can usually tell us anything we wish to know, and their words are always the words of truth.They never fail in any quest they set out to do."

"Is she a great little girl spy!"asked the American .

"I believe there are better but she is great nevertheless.We discovered her talent long ago and when ever we wish to know anything--and which is very often we ask her to obtain the information, and yet she often gets more than ordinary information.She brought in thirty child slaves yesterday and is going tomorrow to help other here look for Violet-and her sisters who are missing..There is no doubt whatever madam that general Purgatorian has your necklace and if you dare to go to him within the foe lines you may be able to recover it.But of that I am not certain.It 's almost impossible for persons not so quainted with such work to enter the foe lines .The enemy lines are even immunable for even attacking troops."

"Can't the little girl Joan tell?"asked Maud anxiously.

"No for she had not made any trip to the enemys lines since that time.She can tell anything she has learned and found out, but not hing that is going to happen to far off in the future;she won't do any spying work to day as she's determined to locate violet ,and her sisters ."

"Well"said Maud, after a little thought ,"I mean to go to the general anyhow and tell him I want my jeweled necklace and that as I'm a non-combatant he had no right to take it from me.I wish I know what general Purgatorian looked like."

"I have a picture of him and so I'll show him to you."promis hed the girlscout ." She sen t a boy for the e picture and in a few minutes he returned with it under his arm.He appeared as a tall thin man, very old and skinny, and he was seat ed in a big arm chair before a large table and a number of generals were around it .On the t able lay a great book with gold e lamps, the book being open while the general as the picture repres nted was reading.He wore great spectac les. His hair was very thic k and white, and his skinwas brown and scored with furrows and he had a big fat nose and lit tle bleary eyes not c lose t ogether.He was uniformed as if he was King of Vivian Wic key and all its territory, and indeed on no acc ount was general Purgatorian a pleasant person to gaze at even though he was not homel homely or ugly looking.But nevertheless his face was a vicious looking as a bulldogs and no mans as that of a Sat an.As many looked at his picture all were silent and intent.

"So that is t he thief is it!"said Maud, in an angry voice."I should t hink he would be ashamed of himself for stealing a poor womans diamond nec klac e.But I mean to face him in i his headquarters, and force him t o return my property. I'll go as a din hwas ter woman."

"To me"said Hattie Knuf Knuffmann, reflectively"He looked like a dangerous person, and he is said to be the most dangerous of all Glandelin inn generals known in all the wou w world.I hope he won't be so unkind as to argue the matter wit h you.".

The Americ an so brave as he was was much disturned by the picture of general Purgatorian, and Maude determin ation to go to the general filled her foriegn companion with misgivings.But he would not break his pledged word to assist t he poor woman, and after breathing a deep s igh of resign ation he ak asked t he girlscout leader;

"Will you Miss Knuffmann let t he little girlscout spy Miss Jean accompany us so s he c ould help us get through the enemys lines ?She would be very useful t o us, and we will promis to bring her safely back t o you."

"So you'll bring her safely back to us eh"she laughed."you mean she'll need t o bring you two safely bac k."Then she seemed to be thinking .

"Pleas e let us have the c ompany of the girlscout ."begged Maud."I'm s ure she would be a great help to us."

"Jean Saunders"said Hattie"Is the best sort of girlscout s py and officer t hat Miss Angelinia Aronburg possesses, and of girl s, I [illegible] if not spies there isn't another like her.in all the world.An elinia Aronburg does not care to let her out of sight for all the world as she s eaks her v ry much nor do I like to disappoint you, so I believe I will send a pet [illegible] petit ion to her an d see if s he will allow her to come wit h you.I believe t oo if she permits I and some of my scouts will make the journ ey in your company but in disguise.Whenever you are ready to s tart let me know."

"But---your excellenc y."exclaimed one of the boyscout offic ers inprotest."I hope you do not intend to en t er the enemys lines."

"Of what danger do you c laim t here is in my going with them in disguise!" inquis inquired the girlscout leader.

"When even the enemys lines is dangerous to approac h for one thing."said anot her boyscout."

"Well I have been there often before."said Hattie."They c ould c ondemn sus to death merely as a matter of form for they'll n ever take me alive. Are you two ready to start for Vivian Wickay and to the headquarters of general Purgatorian."

"Quite rea ready Miss Knuffmann."

"Butwho will c ommand in your place while youare gone."was t he reply.

"Timothy Groveton whi will command while I'm gone."was t he reply."This lady and t he foriegner could never get into the foes lines wit hout s ome of us who know how to do it help them through and out again."

She immediately wrot e a note to Timot hy Grovet on, and Gertrude Angeline and had both sent at once by the swiftest horsemen she c ould find.It was somet ime before any answer came back, but in one way Grovet on regretted that he could not assume command, but that he would sent Angeline Jennings to t ake charge.Gertrude allowed Jean to acc ace company t hem and so t hat evening with the arival of Angelin e Jennings the party set out wit h a parting salute offered t hem ...."

Because of the mer methods of Jean Saunder, and her clever and cautious ways it did not take her, and her followers long to get into the very Glandelinian positi ns positions and even without the slightest det ect ion too.Then while the American and his party were advancing from the east, Angeline Richee, and her party of girls girl and boyscouts were advancing from the north, and so it happened that on the following night't ight) t hey all camped at a lit tle fortified hill that was only a fe few miles from the very outskirt s of the city of Norma C at herine where general Purgatorian was said to reside.But the two parties did not see each ot her that night for one camped on one side of the hill, while the other camp ed on the opposite side.But the next morning t he American thf thought he would climb the hill and see what was on top of it, and at the same t ime Jennie Turner the famous girlspy, also decided to c limb the hill t o find if the fortified city was visible from it s fortified t op.They passed man y Glandelinian soldiers on drill but no one not even the sent ryies or the offic ers paid an y attention to them.So she stuck her head over the edge just as the American appeared over anot her edge, and bot h being surprised kept s t ill, while they t ook a good look at each ot her, Jennie Turner sudden ly having drawn her pistol so surprised and amazed she was.Jennie.how ver rec overed from her astonishment firs t, seeing he was not a Glandelinian but a foriegnor, and as he made the sign of the Cross, and showed a pair of Rosary Beads, she bounded upward and s tood before him.

"Well met stranger"she said in Abbieannian."You are quite t he firs t foriegnor stranger I have seen within the enemys lines in all my travels .And yet you are not of the enemy."

"Do you s up pose I can be any stranger thanyou!"asked the Americ an gazing at her in wonder.

"I'm not a st ran ger to myself or my own kind, you know"returned the girl. "Some times t hough I wish I were.and I suppose youare so used to your own Nat ionality, t hat you are not satisfied as it is ."

"No I'm not so satisfied"said the man gravely."I us ed to be proud of my Nationality but now I wish I had been born an Abbieannina, though I should be proud I know t heir language as well as mine.But I sometimes think it is not right I should be different from Abbieanninas, seeing the kind of good people t hey are."

"Right or wron g "said the girl spy"To be different is to be distinguished.Now in my c ase,I'm just like all other good l ittle Abbieannian girls , but because I'm one of the many millions there are.But tell me where did you come from and how c ome it your in these pos itions !"

"You mean what nation I came from!"

"No, not that, I c an see by your fac e you are Irish.I mean what part of t his Calvarinia C ountry did you c ome from."

"I lieved n ear the city of Jennie Vivian."

"Is that near the main seige lines !"

"Of course replied t he American .

"And do you know that our beautiful Princ esses , Violet , and her sis ters have been s tolen."

"I was not aware of it , so I couldn't know t hat they had been s tolen.But I have heard lots of them and oft en wished they had been my children ."

"Well they have been s tolen .All of us Abbieannians"explained Jennie Turner are well liked, and we like them t oo, and they have been s tolen, kidnapped.Are you not angry?Are you not indignant.Our fair Princ esses, whom you say you know well by descript ion has post ively been s tolen ."

"That is queer."remarked the American thoughtfully.""I t hought no body could be able to st eal them, not even the Glandelinians because the Princ esses were so dangerous to them.Stealing is a thing practically unknown in Abbieannia, yet your Princ esses have been taken, and d especial d of mine has als o had her keepsake necklace stolen.Wit h her I have c t raveled all the way from Jennie Vivian t erritory in order to recover it.I have no use for anybody no matter who t hey are who kidnap children for any purpose. If you could capture t hose who st ole t hem it would not be justified to give those Glandelinians any quarter."

"I don't see any connection bet ween the recovery of Violet , and her s isters , and not giving the Glandelinians any quarter."dec lared Jen nie Turner."We couldn't massacre such a big glandelinian rmy no matter how justified it would be.It 's too big."

"But as you say t hey stole your Princesses didn't they."

"True.But why not have the leaders punished in stead of massacring a whole army of suc h a size.It c ouldn't be done anyway c ould it !"asked Jennie.

"Why can 't your whole army devit !I suppose your people are so good that t hey would prefer t o suffer all these out rages that those Glandelin ians skunks have committed and not t ake it out on them.The Glandelinians s tole my woman friends diamond necklac e because it had belonged to her mot her, and c an be sold to sum enough money to in or ase the Glandelinian supplies."

"So t hat's it eh!"exc laimed Jennie Turner."There is a link that connects the two s t ogals anyhow, for it seems that all the expen sive and most importan t t hings within out lines and outs ide of our camps were st olen at the same t ime, what her it was in Misnie Aronburge c amps , or els ewhere or in your own t erritory.Seems mighty st range and very mys terious does n 't it!"

It us ed to seem that way to us."admitted the American"But now we have discovered whose Glandelin ians took t he womans necklac e.It was the Glandelin ians under general Purgatorian, and they brought it to him."

"General Purgatorian!Good grac ious .We t hink his Glandelin ians stole violet , and her sisters .We are now on our way to t he headquarters of this Glande linian general."

"So are we""said the American.

"Then follow me quick, and let me introduce you to our girlscout gen eral Miss Angelinia Ric hee, and the other girls , and to Schoofield Penr d, Penrod and all t he res t of us."

She sprang up and seized him by the cent sleeve, draggin him off the hillt op and down the ot her side from that whenc e he had c ome.And at the foot of the hill the Americ an was ast onished t o find what appeared to be a good n umber of elegant prat ty looking "Glandelinian"boy and girlscouts ,

"I've discovered anot her party that has been robbed." his pered Jen nie as she joined them."This I presume is t heir leader, and t hey're all going to general Purgatorians headquarters t o fight the wicked general in this own room."

They regarded the A Americ an , wit h much c uriousit y and in t eres t, and finding all eyes fixed upon him, the n ew comer arran ged his n ec kt ie, and smoothed his n ec kt ie or beautiful vest an d swung his golden headed cane like a regular don dy.The big spectacles over hi:ed eyes quit e alt ered his Foriegn like appearance, and gave him a learn ed and impres sive look. Us ed as she was toys ocing at ran gers in the Land of Abbiennaia, and few they were, An geline Richee was amazed on d at firs t a little s uspicious at discovering t he American.So were all her companions .Angeline Richee literally quizzed him wit h a lot of ques t ions, and he ans wered every one c orrectly, and t hen t old them the whole s tory of the murder of his relatives and wife and children, and t hen of the loss of Maude highly valued jeweled necklac e, and their advenure in searc h of it.When he came to t all of Het t ie Kauffmann an d of Jean they were surpris ed to learn they t oo were s pying again wit him t he foe lines , an d bec ame most eager to see them.

"It will be bes t"said Jen rod "t obun it e our two parties, and share our fortunes or misfortunes together, for we all are all bound on the s ame errand and as one hand we may easily out wit and defy this Glandelin ian gen eral than if seperate.Let us unit e."

"I will t ell my frien ds that you are here."replied t he American, and climbed over the hill to find Maud, and the t wo girlscouts .Jen nie Turner acc ompanied him, and when they c ame upon Maud, and the t wo girls c outs it was hard t o t ell which of the lot was the most surprised .

"Mercy me"cried Hettie, addressing Jennie."However did you c ome t o be within t he Glandelin ian position .!"

Jennie s t ared at the t wo girls .

"Mercy me"she echoed"You are here and I expec ted you were miles wit hin t he c hristian lines.That makes me feel apprensi apprehen sive for this may make some of the Glandelinian s disc over us ."

"Perhaps that may be."answered Hettie Kauffmann"But we c an be on the lookout. Jean knows all and she is ve very c areful."

"You have relieved my mind of a great an xiet y"declared Jennie turner,now s peaking more cheerfully.

Then the American told of his interview with the party from Anbe Angelinia Aron urge c amp, and added that Mae t er Penrod had in vit ed t he four and himself to t ravel in c ompany with them to the headquarters of t he Glandelin ian gen eral.Hett ie and the ot her s were pleas ed but Het tie looked solemn. He t urned to Jean and sa kad;

"Do you think it is safe to try an d raid general Purgat orian s headquarters ?"

"It is"she answered"If we be c areful and not let us be disc overed."

"That will need not t o worry us then."said Het t ie."So let us join t he ot hers and offer them our guida hip and protec tion."

"Even Het tie was astonis hed however, when on c limbing over the hill she found on t he ot her side the group of "Glandelin ian"girl and boyscouts .Hettie and her friends were recieved very c ordially, alt hough Joe Green was s urprised when they learned one of the party was a woman.

"You see"exc laimed Hettie"Jean our frien d is a very valuable s py, bec ause all her knowledge of th ways makes her a corrac t guide on all occ assions and especially if one is in difficult ies .It was she who told us t hat general Purgatorian has in i his possession the diamond Necklac e."

"And Het tie is just wonderful"added Maud"Because she has in her possession t he pict ure of general Purgatorain."

"What did he look like?"in quired Angeline Ric hee.

"He was dreadful."

"He was sitting at a t able, and examining an immense geography book, which had t hree big loc lock g clasps "remarked Hettie.

"Why that must have been Angelinia Aron urge great Geography."exclaimed Angeline Ric hee."If it is it proves that gen eral Purgatorians men stole Violet, and her sisters, and wit h them all the property t hat our bea t girl and boyscout leaders one o possessed."

"Anf my nec klac e."said Maud.And Penrod added;

"It also proves that if he broke e hanse to follow our advent ures , and would kn ow we are s eeking him and that we are det ermined t o fin d him and violet an d her sisters at all hazards he would arouse t he whole camp to have us approach apprehen ded.It's a good thing we are disguised as we are.We mus t rescue Violet and her sisters at n o matter what the cost."

"If we c an "added one of the smaller boyscouts, but everybody looked reproac h fully at him. Pen rode statemen t was so t rue that the very faces around him were very s erious. Then one of the girlscouts said;

"Wouldn't it be a rich joke if he made pris oners of us too."

"N o one but a c razy girls cout like you would c on s ider that a joke" grumbled Penrod.And then Het tie Kauffmann added or acked;

"Would you like to see the picture of t his Glandelin ian general!"

"We would but wouldn't a ome of the Glandelinians s ee it in our possession t oo if it is shown out here!" Angeline Ric hee inquired.

"No I think k not ."

They looked cout iously around, and seeing no one was payin g any atten tion t o them Hettie produced the picture.He was a terrible looking man in deed.The pict ure was very large and plain, and on the wall of the room hun g t he big looking glas s below gin g t o Violet and her sisters.The man was looking straight at them from the pict ure, and had a scowling face as if he knew they were coming to him.

"It is some awful man"said Het tie.Then for fear of bein g disc overed s he put t he picture away c arefully in side her wait by s alit .

"Now then friend s comrades,"said Penrod,,, "let us hold a council or con ference over this important man matter, and decidewhat to do when we get t o general Purgatorians headquarters.There is not the slightest doubt s whatever, that every st reet in Vivian Wicksy is under the strictest Glandelinian martial law, and that the general is a powerful leader, and his powers may have been inc reased in his opposition against the besieging armies a hundredfold, since he sec ured the great Military books of violet,and her sist ers, all of An geline Aronburgs milit ary plans, and my own property.The man who could get his spies t o rob us of all those important t hings , and the man wit h all t he knowledge that they would give him about us and the c hristian armies is one who will be quit e difficult to even meet wit hout dis dinge ter, and almost impossible for general Mansion and his besieging armies to con quer, therefore we ourselves s hould plan out actions, well before we venture too near hisheadquarters . And t he most difficult problem would be for us to find it as we do not know what the building looks, like and also what her it is a building or a tent ."

"I did not see Violet,and her sisters anywhere in these fortified camps,, and positions, and noone seems to know anything about them."said Annie Reen ie."What do you suppose Purgatorians Glandelinians have done wit h her and her sisters ?"

"Couldn't Jean tell us what he did with Violet,and her sist ers?"asked Joe Greene."Sh She spied on general Purgatorian severa times recently and with sucess."

"To be sure"replied Hettie Kauffmann"I'll as her."she went over to where Jean was sitting t alkin t o one of the others, and in quired;

"Have you been n ear gen r gen eral Purgatorian s headquarters yest erday."?

"Yes I have.I discovered many important things ."she answered.

"did general Purgatorian steal violet,and her sisters?"

"N o, but his men did.He sent spies for them yest erday."

"Then what did he to with the Princ esses ?"asked Hettie.

"I heard he had them confined into some big tent in the c ity very well guarded." answered the little girl Scout girlscout.

"Oh that must be in the c enter of the c ity whereit s hard to get to. "cried Angeline Ric hee, horrified ."How dreadful ."

"Well we must by the help of God and His Blessed Mot her get herout of the c ity" said Penror Penrod."That is what we took all the risk to c ome here for, and of course we must rescue violet,and her sisters .....But how!!!!! I!'"

Each one looked at some ot her one(get t he hun) for an swer,and all shook their heads in a grave and dismal manner.All but Jennie Turner.

"I believe you are slightly afraid because of the difficulty."said t he great girlsc out spy."Why don't you give it up and go back t o the christian lines.now can you fight a great Glandelinian general, when you have nothing to fight with!" An geline Richee looked at her reflectively .

"Jen"said she(music of the bee)"You know t hat the way you c an do t hin ge general Purgatorian couldn't hurt or surprise you a b t , whatever he did, nor could he hurt or capture me, bec ause I know his ways and he don't know mine. "Le let us two go on together, and leave the ot hers to wait for us ."

"No,no"said Penrod positively."That won't do at all.I won't have it t hat way. Violet, and her sist ers and even Angelinia Aronburg and her frien d Radcliffe, and also Timothy Grovet on are more powerful yha than either of you, yet so far they could not defeat the wicked Glandelinian general or his spies , and who has shut Violet , and her sisters in some tent.We must go before general Purgatorian in one mighty band, for only in ui union there is at rength.And to get them we must use clever means to t rick him."

"That is excellent advice"said Hattie Kauffman n approvin ly approvin gly.

"But what in the world c an we do when we do find our w ay to general Purgatorian headquarters?"inquired Maud anxiously.

"I hope you do not expect a prompt answer to that important quest ion."replied Penrod for we must first plan for ourselves our own line of c onduct .I would not have the slightest doubts that general Purgatorian may suspect that many boy and girlscouts are comin g to him, and therefore if he once recognizes us we not only could expect to take him by surprise but he might t ake us by surprise.We have t o be ext remely careful in all that we do."

"Do you suppose we could bring general Purgatorian to reason by all of us covering him with our pistols!"asked Joan Guard."Do you thin k by that means we could compell him to let poor Violet,and her sist ers go."

"and make him give me back my jeweled necklace."added t he women eagerly.

"Yes yes, and won't he say he's sorry, and get on thai king knees and beg our pardon when p we point pistols at him!"cried Jennie Turner in or scorn of the suggestion."When general Purgatorian does that, please knoc k at t he front door and let me know.""

Penrod sighed and rubbed his head with a puzzled air.

"I'm quite sure no emount of pistols pointed at him on dount so dangerous a general"said he,"And too we cannot conquer t his cruel monst er by force either.The best we c an do is to fool him somehow like we had fooled the guards and soldiers by Jacks fake pass.But non e of you yet has sugges t ed a way to do that.Could not little Joan Saunders t ell us how!"he asked t urning t o Hattie Kauffmann.

"N o for that is all t he information she has been able to obtain"replied the highly c ompetent girlscout."She can only tell us what s he has dis covered already."

Again they were grave and t houghtful.But after s time Joan Guard said in a hes itating voice;

"Joe Green is great as his sword and other weapons,and is a t errible fighter, perhaps perhaps he c an overcome h the wicked general."

Joe Green looked reproachfully, at his h old friend the young girlsc out.

"Who c an fight s uch a dangerous Glandelinian general s ingle handed!"he asked.

"Walter Starring c ould."said Angeline Ric hee.

"I suppose so"said Jack Saunders "but he is not here wit h us ."

"Gen eral Purgatorian couldn't hurt Annie Roonie."suggest ed b Joan Guard.

"And I c ouldn't hurt the general."declared that girlscout.

"wor my part"said Joan"I'm helpless having still pains in my left shoulder."

Then"said Maud, "we must depend upon our frien d the M Americ an .His marvelous wisdom will surely in form him how to c onquer the wicked gen eral or t o tr t rick him and rest ore t o you the lost Princ esses.""QA

All eyes were now turned questiongly upon the American.Finding himself t he center of observation, and t hanking God that he c ould now speak t he Abbiesinian language well, he swung his gold headed cane, adjusted his big s pec tacles, and after swelling out his chest said in a modest tone of voice;

"Respec t for truth obliges me to confess that Miss Maud is mistaken in regard t o my what she calls superior wi wisdom.I am not v ry wis e.Neit her have I had any sort of experience o pratcicale or otherwise in conquering or fooling t hese so called Glandelinian generals.But first let us consider thin c as e.what is general Purgatorian, and what is the commission of a Glan delinian general of his rank!General Purgatorian is a renegrade Calverinian, and a Glandelinian general is to me an ordinary man who having learned how to do many military t ricks, c on siders himself better than any of your c hristian generals .In this c ase the Glandelinian general if not brave enough to do it himself has been wic ked en ough to sent his bes t agents to steal a lot of military things and so forth th t that did not belong to him, and it is yet more wic ked to s teal even in war time than it is to be a Glandelinian general.Yet with all the milit ary arts at his command, general Purgatotian is still a man, and surely there are ways in which any man no mat ter who he is can be tricked if not be overcome.How do you say, how.Allow me to state that I do not know exc ept one thing is if that be possible.But t here is one way we c an do it if I'm allowed t o do my part in helping.Even though in my judgement we cannot decide how bes t to ac t untill we find general Purgatorians headquarters.S o let us go t o it' and take a look at it, and see whether we can pass it or not.After t hat we may disc over an idea t hat will guide us to victory.From what I heard how you got in it ought to be done.I've often heard that you boy and girlscouts of your holy C hristian nation are a terror to the enemy.You c an prove it by some means.Your friend Jack here a has that duplicate from General Mauley.Maybe that will fool general Purgatorian in letting Violet,and her sisters go with us and maybe it won't .Best to find out when we get there.General Purgatorian they say is not so easily t ricked."

"That may not be a wise speed j ustifie h but it soundsgood"said Penrod approv ingly"General Purgatorian is not on y a common man but he is said to be one of t he most wic ked Glandelinian generals in all the world and one of the mos t cruel on rec ord, and deserves to even be assassinated t hough it is not for us t o make the attempt even though we would be justified. So how ver if we do get the upper hand musn't have no mercy on i him untill Violet,an d her sisters are set free.So let us go to his headquarters , as the Brave worlegner says, an d see what the place looks like.."

No one offered any objec tion to this plan, an d s o it was adopt ed.They broke camp and were about to st art on the journey wne when they again disc overed t hat Jack Saunders was not with them.They suspec ted he was out scout' in g, so knowing he c ould easily find them they formed a procession Profe procession and proceed ed in the direc t ion of Vivian Wickey.

"Jac k Saunders always like to go out scout ing by himself."said Angeline Ric hee."And if he wasn't always successful I'd probably worry.He may have gone ahead of us, an d he may have gone back, butwhereever he is we'll find him somewhere and sometime,I'm almost sure, and when we do he'll probably bring somecin formation t hat we would like to know."

A curious thing about general Purgatorian, was t hat hecdidnt suspect in the least, that the besieging armies were as st rong in numbers and as powerful as they we are.He wanted his own besieged armies to be powerfuland great, an d if he did succeed in c holdin g off t he besiegers and drive them back and prevent Vivian Wic key from being c aptured for good, and also ly such a vic tory to gain the esteem of the Glandelinian Govern ent so the curthorities would make him Master General of all the Glandelinian armies in the war, by which leadership he might be able to c ompell every christian army to leave Calverinia.His wicked ambitions blinded him even to the rights of his own gen erals , and he imagined anyone else would ac t the same way he did if they were as c lever in military tatics as he was.

When the christian armies first began to lay seige to Vivian Wic key in 1913 he had been discont ented and discouraged over the be haviior of his armies, and though he knew the Manleys had been in their earlier days before t he war famous generals, t hey when they helped him were not of much good and had been driven away by t he Vivian Leaders more so by the Vivian Girls t hemselves.Even his father also a general worked hard again s t the advan c ing christian armies, but his f ther t oo had been driven away an d never could c ome back again, and had been so discouraged that he had resign ed his command.So when the besieging c hristi n armies grew up against him, he was forced to make use of the underground sec ret tunnels connecting Vivian Wic key wit h Calverhine city two hundred fifty miles northeast , knowing nothin g yet of the t ext ics of the besiegin g christian gen erals.His effort s had repuls ed many an at tack it is true but nevertheless that did him no good.But one day in a care hing captured c hristian spies he discovered plans which proved t hat the Vivian Girls and the leaders of a vast horde of boy and girlscouts might as well a ny superi enedet superent ended the notiojnint national armies.Bec ause t oo anot her thing was discovered, general Mansion had become the greatest of all christian generals in the western drama of the dreadful war war, and for days and weeks he had t hought of a plan to do somet hin g t o render all the other c hristian generals andleaders , as well as those of the Vivian Girl Princesses and t heir vast horde of boy and girlscout s helpless to oppos e him.He didn't know however that was an absolute impossibilit y .

From the papers he had capt ured from the christian spies he learn ed the following fac ts;

"That the Vivian Girl Princesses was the daughters of the great Ruler of Abbiesinnian who by his uniform was called "General Vivian", and that Violet and her sisters it seemed could not be destroyed or frus trat ed by any most desperat e efforts ever devised.That they had been s ucc essful in the face of the most terrific t rials any one would ever dare to go through.Also by means of their big boy and girl scout divis ions, espec ially the feirce Lagorians and vivianites, Violet ,and her sisters would be able to discover any one who approac hed the chris tian lines wit h the idea of makin g a des perate assault or a raid.And that the boy and girls couts and the Princesses t hemselves fought more savagely than the soldiers an d were as dan gerous as angry angels th themselves.S fiore e they were that it was said they were "Possessed with Holy Angels and were as uncon querable as they were.Often in combats reports came out that t he boy and girlscout regimen ts suffered dreadful losses and fac ts came out later that the reports were greatly exaggerated.The o real only loss of life oc c assionally amon ge t the child scouts on ly happen ed when ran ran dom shells fell in their c amp or hit any of their shelters .

" That Angelinia Aronburg was the highest and mos t powerful of all the many known regiment of boy an d girls c outs, and amon her other milit ary possessions she had one big Geography of War maps made hers elf, which by wihchxshe could trace and follow all the movemen ts of the enemy anywhere in the whole War Zon e.This Book of maps was very dan gerous not on ly to Purgatorians plans gu but to all the Glandelinian generals anywhere, and Angelin ia Aronburg also the greatest of alle hild scout spies was in the service of Violet,an d her sisters, and would use her orts of maps and all her troop to prot ec t Violet and her sis ters even by fierce treachery if nec essar y.

That the boyscout Schoefield Penrod, who was chief c ommander of c hild scouts n early equal in ran to rank to An e Angelin ia Aron urg had been taught much c hil scout leadership by Angelinia Aronburg, An eline Ric hee, Rade liffe,and Violet and hersisters,can d all sorts of knowledge about t he ways of Glandelinian generals and had become the most dan gerous of all thes e persons.

That in his ways of militar/ship Timothy Grovet on was as dan gerous as Penrod, and that there existed amon gs t some non c ombatants a jeweled necklac e fixed to a gold chain, which value would be great for the support of the Glandelinian cause.No one living , except general Purgatorian knew of the powers of all thexse christian leaders, especially of the dangerous child scouts, so after long s tudy, the general decided that if he could s ec ure some the possessions he could by mean s of t he help of his main sec ret s er vice detective spies rob, Violet and her sisters, An gelin ia Aron burg, and Penrod of their best plans and books , t hus bein g able to frus t rate t hem and gain much esteem an t o be made the po ,ort powerful Glandelin ian general in all the Military service.Th To frust rate those dangerous children would be the highes t act in all history.His firs t ac t was to send s one s pies but t hese spies quailed before the task and surrendered themselves to esc ape the wrath of the child scouts who had the whole country secured for them.During the whole seige general Purgatorian had studied an d diligently pract iced all the milit ary arts learned from his Father. At t he en d of that time he could fo a great many wonderru wou wonderful things.T Then when all his preparat ions were made, he sent some of the clever det ectives for the out side c ount ry near Vivian Wic key and Jennie Vivians but behind the c hristian lines , and thes e by clever clues found the place entered the house of Maud, stole her n ecklac e and got away before any one could s top them.Simultaneously ot her c lever spies had entered the great drawin g room of An elinin Aronbug Angelinia Aronluge Angelinia Aronburge headqu rters .Firs t he t ook the great book of maps and put it in a small wagon drawn by a horse.Then he went t o her writ in g room and took all her writing materials an d inns and t he typewrit t er and got away.Again s imultaneously ot her clever spies had worked t heir way sec retly into the headquarters of Violet,and her sisters, which als o Penrod and Groveton occ upied.ghot her went into the apartment of violet an d her sisters .Here they firs t took t heir own writing mat erials an d was about to leave the building, when they looked up andsaw Violet an d her s is t ers standing beside them wit h pistols drawn.Their childis h military in stic instinct had warned them that dan g er was threatenin g them, so t he most beautiful of little girls and the braves t had risen from t heir c ots an d leaving t heir bedchambers at once confronted t he thieves.The Glandelinians had to act quickly for they realized if they permitted Violet an d her sist ers to shoot them or rouse the inmates of their headquarters and t he plans of present successes of general Purgatorian were likely to c ome to naught and they would be responsible for it .To attack the Princ esses and make them prisoners too was an eas y then as it was to attack seven lions wit h your best or bare fist s and so they did n "none dive out of the windows"before Violet and her sisters c ould even guess what they were going to do.It was t hen t oo late for them to stop them or shoot .The Glandelinians all of them escaped, and several hours later general Purgatorian rubbed his han ds together in t riumphant joy, as he realized that he now possessed all the import an t plans of the besiegers , and c ould soon find plans t o force all the besiegin g generals to get from the city as possible as it was t o get .So quickly had t he jou rney of his s pies been acc omplished, t hat gen ral Purgatorian had unpacked and arranged all the s tolen goods.The next hour he had plac ed the record book of map plans on i his table, and put away all the ot her s t olen t hin s thin gs.The success of his s pies made him very happy.

The on ly thing that bot hered him was Violet an d her sis t ers .General Purgatorian was greatly afraid of the Vivian Girls in spite of the fact t hat he believed he had robbed her of all her military plans , and if she would with er sis ters disguise her following and come wit hin the lines to recover t he goods, he would be in dire peril, for it was impossible to t ell which is whic h amongs t the child scouts.He knew that his wic kedness would not go 464 unchallenged.In fact as the boy and girlscouts thought ,Violet an d her sisters had been stolen themselves when in fact they had not been.They had without anyin g anything to preven t delay had at once organized a persuit and were wit hin the foe lines too wit h the Lagerian scouts searchin for the stolen goods and were c loser to the find than suppose.Then also t wo expeditions had art out to find the general and forc e him by tric kery t o give up t he stolen property.One was the party headed by Angeline Ric hee and the ot hers while the other scou is ted of the American and Maud.Ot hers were searching but not in the right plan ces.Thes et wo groups however were headed for the generals headquarters and the general did not know it .He, Believing himself yet secure from discover he began to plan how best t o meet and defeat the christian generals in their efforts to maintain the seige.

All t hat first day after the union of the two parties our frien ds meare had steadily twr t ward t he Norma Cat herine section of Vivian Wickey. Whose night camp Glandelinians who did not suspec t them or their carrend in the less t gave them t en ts to sleep in,and they passed a placeun t evening together, although some of them were worried hec ause Jack Saun ders had not yet showed up.

"Perhaps"said Joe Green, as the boys c outs lay grouped ot ogether for the night"The spies of t his glandelin ian general who s tole my prayer books and Jacks als o, and who "stole violet,and her sisters " has also detec t ed who Jack was and made him prisoner."

"How do you know that t he spies of the en emy general s tole your prayer book t oo?"demanded George Woosie.

"They have s tolen about everything also of value in the c hristian c amps haven't they!"replied the boy.

"He and his s pies have s tolen everything they wan t perhaps "agr eed Fran k Wokfs"But what could any of the Glandelinians want with our prayer books.They're far from being C hristian !"

"Well "said Joe Green"My recollec tion is that prayer books may give us away t o the Glandelinian officials , and therefore t hey may have taken t hem and they may be clues against us."

"And if theyhave s tolen our pry prayer books they'll s oon wish they didn 't " remarked George Turn er."Also if they have arres t ed Jac k Saunders t hey'll be sorry."

"Do you like Jack Saunders so well then!"asked one of the others.

"It is not only a question of likin g him "replied the ot her"it s ot her t hings also.He and Jean for us are the best of child s pies known."

"See here "pleaded Penrod""This chat ter is keeping us awake, and to morrow is likely to be a busi day.Let's go to sleep and forget all t his con versat ion."

They quiet ed down after that(got your hat() and soon the entire c amp, out side of t he sent ries was wrapped in s lumber. Next morning they made an early start but had but hard,y proceeded on their way an o hour, when on going down a slight elevation, they beheld in the distan c e t he ornormous Norma C atherine S ect ion of Vivian Wic key.And seemingly endless a line or row of good sized magnificen t buildings were within their view and wide st reets, and t he buildings were very pret ty because the roofs and roo domes seemed t o be made of "Wic ker"closely woven as it is in fine baskets.

"I wonder if those buildings too are fortified and very s t ron g!"said Angeline Richee musin gly, as she eyed the beautiful buildin gs .

"I suppose they are sinc e the people of Vivian Wickey years ago builded t hem." answered Penrod."With lots of rifle men t o defend them and out of reac h of our cannon, and of those of the besieged fortifications too, they could hold out h very lon g.This general Purgatorian must be a man of great ideas because he does t hings in a differen t way from other Glandelinian generals."

"Yes very few Glandelinian generals would reallly st eal our Prin c esses."sighed Annis Roonie.

"I wonder if Violet and her sisters are there."said Jennie Turner in dicating the cit y with a n d nod of her head.

"Where else c ould they be!"asked Joan Guard.

"But how c ould it be possible in a way!"demanded Penrod."I heard that t hough sometimes they are captured, Violet and her sisters c ouldn't be stolen away by an y Glandelinians against t heir willl."

"Suppose we ask Jean Saunders ."suggested Angeline Ric hee."That seemed a good idea so they halt ed the procession, and going to Jean Angeline asked "Where did you say Violet, and her sisters were ?"

"Some where in general Purgatorians headquarters . But general Purgatorian is not here.He's been awak away in this tent in the Lucillie Ric ksen Fortifications for weeks."

"Good gracious"cried Angeline Ric hee."Then he is not in this headquarters at all."

"It's luc ky we asked her that question."said Penrod"For if we c an find Violet and her sisters and rescue them, there will be no need to go and fight that wicked and dangerous foul....:::..!!.."

"Indeed"said Maud."Indeed.Then what about my diamond nec klac e!"
Penrod looked puzzled at her tone of remonstranc e, s o she added;
"Didn't you boy and girls c out s from General Angelin ia Aron urge army of scout scouts promis e that we all would s tic k toget her, and that you would help me to get my diamond necklace if I and the Foriegner would help you rec over our Princ esses!And didn't I get you some valuable information, and tell o you of the little girls cout who knows where Violet,and hor s isters are pris oners ?"
"She's right"said Angeline Ric hee to Penrod. "We must do as we agreed."
"Well first of all we mus t go and res cue Violet an d her sis ters."propos ed t he boyscout general."Then our beloved Princesses may be av able to advise us how to secure the necklac e and dest roy t hose t hings he took if we cannot rec over them.."
So t hat they turned t o the right and marc hed for half a mile and they saw Jack Saunders comin g t ward them on the run.For he had recognized his friends.
W"Where is Violet and herc sisters?"inquired An oline Ric hee anxious ly.
"I don't know"answered Jack."I scout ed around everywhere as far as I could alone yes terday, as you may remember and in t he night while I was wanderin g around in the moonlight, trying to find my way back to you.I overheard much informat ion that the enemy are apprehensive of a fierce an d general C hristian attack all alon g the line."
"And wasn't Violet an d her sisters held prisoners an ywhere also t hen!"
"I inquired about that showing t he fake let ter from Manley but no one even seems to kn ow what I am talking about.They say t hey never heard of Violet an d her sisters before, and another said "If Manley o wants t hem l et him come himself and get them for he's not going to want o time looking around for some people he knows nothing about.Thank you for c oming."
"How strange"s aid An oline greatly disappoin t ed."It 's evident t hey are in general Purgatorians headquarters.Are you sure about it Jean?"
"Y e Yes, pos itively but whether they were pris oners or not that I do not know."
"That settles it "said Penrod positively."Violet and her sisters are in Purgatorians headquarters and we must get there."
"Don't be silly "returned Jac k impatiently."Ev en with your eyes can s ee there is no one at all allowed to go into the cit y from the camp wit hout special permit written with the signat ure of gen eral Purgatorian.I found t hat out last night."
"Perhaps Violet and her sisters were captured and sent away."suggest ed Joan Guard apprehensively .
"Perhaps t hey have not been sent away.Violet an d her sist ers are men st rong despite bein little girls , and couldn't be t aken far without t heir getting away.I know them well."
"Then the whole situation must be out ofvorder."said Penrod.Before they cont inued on Angeline Richee went t to Jean and said;
"I'm s orry but we mus t get in to the c it y somehow permit or no permit.Will you let me ask you one more question.?"
"Yes."
"Is Violet and her sis ters really in Norma Catherine?"
"N o"said Jean."And this is Julio Callio Section we are reallly facing."
This surpris ed everybody.Even Penrod was now puzzled for it did look like the Norma Catherine sect ion."
"What part of Julio Callio are they in?"asked Angeline.
"In t he Cromer Andreen Sec t ion."
"Well"said An oline Ric hee"This beat s me en t irely.I guess the Glandelin ians have gone c raz y if they think they c an keep us out of Andreen."
"Perhaps "c alled Jen nie Turner"Violet an d her sisters are confined in some t ent s outside of the city but n earer t to it."
"Of c ours e"c ried Annie Roonie."That would accoun t for it ."
"Maybe they have been ds disguised by the Glandelin ians so no one coming t o rec o ue them could recignoize t hem."declared Joan Guard.
"Come to thin k of it"remarked Penrod"violet and her sisters maybe couldn't be prisoners , for they are bright girls as flight hy as fairies , and they're so dangerously an d secret ly armed even when they don't seem t o be c arrying a weapons t hat they c ouldn't be c aptured or made r prison ers against t heir will.Of course they c ould be surprised and taken if not armed, but if they're armedy even t hen when surprised they couldn't be taken prisoner by any number of glandelinians at hand.I know them by ex experien c e."
"I'm wondering if one of them is n't really Jack Saunders disguis ed at t hat disguised as that boyscout!"said An oline Ric hee nervously."His voic e sounds a lit tle like Jennie's"Then she looked steadily at the boy and asked;;

"Are you Jennie Francis Vivian!Tell me t ruely !"
Jack saunders laughed.
"You're getting rattled by your worry of over them, Angeline dear"he replied.
"They must go g some if one of them c an disguis e to make hers elf look like me.If I were Jennie Vivian do you think I c ould fool you long."
"Any o anyhow"said Penrod,"violet, or her sisters would never try t o dec ieve hervfriends and subjects or preven t them from recognizing them in what ever form of disguise they happened to wear though seldom they do wear dis guise as t hey c an be r! recognized by the enemy anyhow.The puzzle is s till a puzzle,I began to doubt they're even prisoners here, but blot us go on to the general Headquarters, and find out for ourselves.since it was his men whom we suspect has stolen all the property of violet an d her sisters , An oline Angelinia Aronburgs and mine, general Purgatorian is t he one who must be fooled.
If we cannot take them bac k with us we must at leas t dest roy t hem so he and his generals cannot make use of them."

Penrods advice was good(hood) so again they started in t he direct ion of t he long row of tall houses.,ll t his time they did not kn ow what was t he cause of so much general firing far off to the east but as they were more on t he purpose o of recovering ,,iolvt and er sisters t hey did not pay any attention.They had been gradually going up another ris e of ground and t his r elevat ion was more like a round knoll t han a hill t op and its s ummit also was fort ified wit h batteries and a troop of artillery men were encamped there.,however the sides of th the knoll wd were sloping and c overed with green grass, so there was ahigh stiff c limb before t hem yet . Unmount ed t hey plodded on an d had almost reac hed the knoll when t hey t urned to look in t he direct ion of t he firing an d by the aid of t heir field glasses suddenly observed t hat the distant posit ions of the enemy on the outskirts of the fortifications of Lucillie nickson was attacked by an enormous wave of purple coated s oldiers . Qt first only a few shapes moving here an d there appeared t hrough the curt ain of battle smoke, but presently they grew more numerous untill they could see count less numbers going against the enemy.When they approac hed the works the firing grew so int n intense along the enemys lines that it drove t hem back again.
"This willnever do for them to attack t hese posit ion s ."exclaimed Jen nie Turner."The enemy guns could dest roy every attack very easily."
"It won't do for the en emy to fight along that s trate h of works t oo lon on g eit her."grumbled one of the boyscouts.
"I suppose the foolish Glandelinians f defendin those works believes their resistance can stop the christian attack."remarked Penrod wit h a smile of scorn for t he foe army."But I will have to inform you that though the en emy had repulsed the attack, their generals may know how to destroy an attacking column at that as well as how to resist and her to succes s . Hear t he can nons will you.Their roar is as at eady as a stormy s ea.Where's my field glas ses.I believe I forgot t o bring them alon g.Will one of you lend me yours ."?
Every one of t hem ot outside of Penrod carried field glasses and Jane han ded hers to him.He saw a wave of Glandelinians run ning forward in double column and push itself int o an d through the recoiling christian column .Instantly t he attack began to die awny t he christian column recoilin g in con fusion an d z soon vanished into the clouds of smoke do completely.
"That's awful.I didn't believe they c ould be so easily defeated."said Jac k Saunders .
"Yes"agreed Penrod"It seems odd that a Glandelinian column could destroy suc h a powerful c hristian attac in attacking column, but I've learned that the enemy generals are clever and some of them must have learn ed a t rick of violent sudden counter charging, and believed no one would ever think of a mean s bein g a remendy for a bloody resist anc e.I suppose even the christian generals who led t he attac k does not know how the Glandelinian generals managed t o dest oy t heir attack, for only t he foe generals seem to know the sec ret ."
The boy and girlscouts now formed in marching gander marchin g order, and proc eeded to advance up t he slope of the hill, but had not gone far when an unusual roar of battle in the distanc e st opped them, and before their view moved a anot her wave of purple coats seemingly as solid as a wall of st eel, brist ling wit h a "orse t hedge"of bayonet s.The c hrist ians c ame on in a rush c uttin g the formerly victorious Glandelinian columns to pieces and drivin all before it and t heir forces t of bayonets prevented any of them from rallying.Even a reinforc ing Glandelinian surge was ripped to pieces for a daring to attempt t o drive them back.
"Ah"exc laimed Penrod cheerfully"The christian generals are now using one of my own rec en t plans against the enemy.But s oon the enemys resistance will be more serious than before, yet the only way to des t roy t his attack is for the enemy to open with a line of machine guns. They're out of luck if they haven't 467 for big guns won't reach them here."

"How can that be done with machine guns?" asked Angeline Angelino Richee.
Penrod looked thoughtfully at the battle scene and his face grew troubled.
"It's a pretty desperate attack they're making but they're losing again" he sadly remarked. "I'm pretty sure general Currans best christian troops couldn't carry that position."
"I'm sure of that too" said Joe Green with a shudder of fear. "If he foolishly tried such an attempt here and did carry them once works he would be caught in a fearful trap."
"I think the Glandelinian generals can do it sir" said Jack. "The Glandelinians who were driven back are being reinforced, and machine gun batteries is being opened upon the Natives. The enemy general who commands the troops at those works had been considered something of a fighter by many of the others and I believe if they try another good counter charge the attack will even carry a Glandelinian columns to even the other side of the christian works."
"I'm sure it would" said Maud. "They're preparing for it now."
"Counter attacking you know is a dangerous accomplishment" continued Joe Greene seriously, but please tell me what the foe troops willdo if they're counter attacked if they reach the other side of the christian works."
"No one knows it hasn't happened yet. Look though. The christian troops are carry ing a portion of the position. That was the most wonderful charge I ever saw, and it may save our countrys cause from a defeat by the enemy. Let us now hurry on to the city before the Glandelinians see were we are too interested in the battle and become suspicious of us."
"The attacking columns must have surprised the enemy so far." declared Angeline Richee.
"Yes indeed. The foe generals know a lot of military movements --all of the christian tricks and some of his own" replied Penrod. "So if they are half as clever as they ought to be, the christian attacking column will have lots of trouble to retain those works."
Fifteen minutes or more had passed and when they stopped to look again when out from a new line of Glandelinian works flowed a long surge of Zimmermann Zimmermannian Glandelinian soldiers clad in gay uniforms and all bearing long rifles and sharp bayonets too. These soldiers were hair like little girls do, and the uniforms were short trousers of yellow and black silk, yellow shoes, bands of gold or gilt across their heads foreheads. Their jackets were ash gray braided with black cords and black buttons. There were counte countless numbers of these soldiers, and they were more terrible in fighting qualities being strong and fierce in appearance. They formed in serried waves as they rushed forward to retake the position and the second counter attack was on. Of course our little friends halted at once to viewing this scene for they had not expected this dreadful array of soldiery to appear against the christian attackers. Penrod seemed puzzled, and his companions exchanged discouraged looks.
"I had no idea such Glandelinians were here." said Angeline Richee. "But the works are able to hold them all."
"And more" said Penrod. "Look at them go to it will you. Some battle."
"But the christian troops are not yet giving way."
"They don't seem to but I don't believe they'll hold. If the Glandelinian generals can put such a number of Zimmermannian soldiers against them I'm sure they'll soon lose the position they had captured."
"They look only like little girls." laughed Jennie Turner.
"Girls are the fiercest soldiers of all" declared Joe Green.
"You bet they are" said the American. "You girlscouts prove it yourselves from what I have heard. Girls are braver than men or boys, and they have better and more steadier nerves. That is probably why the enemy fears child scouts more than the christian soldiery."
"No one argued this statement for all were watering hard at the wave of counter attacking soldiers, which now finding they couldn't retake the position were firing hard and fast as at the christian troops.
"Here's a new military trick to me" admitted Penrod after a time. "I do not believe the Zimmermannian army can retake theposition after all but they are able to keep up a sharp fire upon the christian troops nevertheless so the defenders and their generals must be cautious. I guess the generals are taking time to consider how to meet this difficulty."
While they were thinking over it the christian line was seen to charge itself.
They boldly advanced in the face of the scathing Zimmermannian fire and though they fell in fearful numbers the survivors nevertheless tore their way right through the threatening enemy line. The little girls scouts watched this scene rather nervously wondering how the christians could dare to attempt to brave that bristling sea of glandelinian bayonets but other christian lines things my men have stolen for me. But I am not so foolish. But bear this in mind I mean to restore Vivian Wick key to our own country some day. But if you do find those Princesses I advise you to be careful how you try to arrest them. They're as dangerous as rattlesnakes. But I swear they're not prisoners with him my lines. They were not even taken."

"We have heard a lot of Violet and her sisters, what ever you may think about them." declared Penrod. "And bear this in mind your Excellency" We intend to find them and bring them to camp."
"Well go ahead and find them." said the general, while his staff officers grinned or looked jokingly at one another. "I'd really like to see how you can capture them if you do. They're as slippery as eels. Manley couldn't keep them when he had them prisoners and I think he's mutes to send you out here all the distance you came to take them prisoners."
Now although the boyscout leader had spoken so boldly he knew the general spoke the truth, for were he and his followers enemies instead they wouldn't think of trying to seize Violet and her sisters at any cost whatever. They would not even have an no idea how they could even get at them in their disguises. He had this morning given the American a few descriptions how violet and her sisters usually disguise themselves, and the American had promised to keep his eyes peeled everywhere, but Penrod knew that watchful ness alone could not avail in detecting the Princesses. Hattie Kaufmann seemed to have gone some pretty good with however, and Penrod depended to an extent on that. But something ought to be done right away, and since the tone of the general proved he was not lying and that the Vivian Girls were were not prisoners to his knowledge Penrod didn't know what could be done.
While he considered this perplexing question and the others stood looking looking at him as their leader, a queer thing happened. There was a terrific earsplitting thundering roar and a fearful concussion that drove every one to panic, and the floor of the great circular hall on which they were standing shook so that they were hurled against the wall. Some of the generals were thrown violently off their feet. The shock lasted only a second however.
When the excitement was over the general discovering the child scouts said;
"The way to come our those Vivian Girls is to act, and he whoever is prompt ly is sure to win. This would make a good prison for them indeed were they here which from which I am sure they could not escape. But they are not here. If you wish to remain while we go out please make yourselves in any way you like, but I must beg you to excuse me, as I and my generals have business in another part of my headquarters. Sorry I could not help you out. You'd better use my long distance telephone and tell Manley they're not here."
Saying this, he indicated the phone on the table, and following his generals disappeared from view.
"Well I declare" said Jennie Turner. "They really are not here. You surely got your necklace back Maud, for the general took a fancy to you for your good looks and handed them to you. But let us keep as quiet as possible untill we can think what is best to be done."
"I wish I had all those books does troyed." sighed Penrod.
"Don't you suppose we could get to them?" asked Annie Roonie anxiously.
"We'd have to go some at the works and suppose we're discovered." laughed Jennie Turner.
But Penrod took the situation seriously, and so did the American. There was no one watching them and therefore they talked it over, and soon planned an attempt to reach the shelves. But the glass doors were locked and they could not do anything. They then set food on the table but there came another cushion before they could reach the big book and down they came tumbling in a heap on the floor, and although no one was hurt it was a bad mixup and Penrod who was at the bottom almost lost his temper against the shell fire being so close before he could get on his feet again. Some of the others otherwise positively refused to try it again, and as Penrod was now convinced that they could not reach the books in any manner the attempt was abandoned.
"But something must be done" said the boyscout, and he turned to Jean Saunders and asked;
"Can't you suggest some means to get these things out of here?"
"My thinking powers are limited" was the reply. "You however are a wizard at thinking out plans, and you should be able to do something."
"You forget that my brains are the same as yours." said Penrod sadly.
"Don't give up" pleaded Jack Saunders "Because if we can't destroy those books before the general makes use of them the besieging armies will be cut to pieces."
"Not if it can be helped. Our generals can alter those plans and probably have"

began to follow an d an a new wave t o issue from the capt ured works.T hey literally seemed to pass through the solid line of the enemy amid a terrific sound of fighting and the enemy acm army after wavering a cemed t o magically disappear ffom from view through a curtain of battle smoke.All this t ime our frien ds had been getting farther up the hill an d t hen they descen ded and an ou hour later were within the outskirts of the city.They were quas t ioned but when they t old the counter s ign and showed the pass, and Jac k showed Man eys pa ers they easily got t hrough.Now cont inuin g t heir advan c e they asked about general Purgatorians headquarters as Jack s howed the papers .The Guard laughed as he said;

"I c an show you kids t he buildin g but it 'll do you no good to go there. He c ertainly hasn't got them Vivian Girls I'm sure.Wonder why Manley wants them for an ywhere.If t hey're such spies couldn't we punish t hem as well as he. But they're c ertainly not in t his c amp."

Presen tly t hey arived at the building pointed out to them on Center S t reet and after showin g their passes to the guards at the gate were permit ted to enter.

No s oon er were Penrod and his followers well wit hin general Purgatorian s headquarters ent rance when the sen tries swung the big gates t o wit h a clang and plac ed heavy bars acrosss them.They looked at one another uneas ily, for fear of what would happens if t hey were discov red, but n o one c ared t o speak of the inciden t .If they were ever dis c overed an d made pris on ers in the generals headquarters, it was evident they would look for the opport unity and way to esc ape later on but t heir first dut y was t o at ten d t o the errand on which they had c ome and seek Violet an d her s isters , whom t hey believed to be prison ers of the gen eral or his officials , an d rescue t hem.They found they had entered a square court yard from which an entran c e led int o t he main buildin g of the headquarters . The pat hway was lined wit h soldiers at atten t ion on both s ides.No person had appeared to greet them so far, whic h t hey reallly hoped there would not be.As t hey en t ered the doors of the build ing, which one of the sen tries open ed, another sen try also c losed t hem and shot huge bolts int o place.It was evident the general was well guarc e guarded.They were forced to follow a zigzag passage turning t his way an d that untill finally they ent ered a great c en t ral hall, c ircular in form and wit h a high dcom(what dcme) from which suspended a huge electric chandelier.Penrod went firs t , and the rest followed him.It was Penrod who caught the firs t glimpse of the big domed hall, but the ot hers quickly followed and gat hered in a wondering group just within t he entrance while one of the escort s an nounced t heir presenc e to the general.Upon a big plat form at one side was an enormous table around which sat a number of blue clad generals , t he c enter of attract ion on the t able being Gertrude An olines Great Geography of maps.On a row of s helves at the opposit e side of the hall stood all t he smaller books an dessen c es of military plans t hat had been s tolen from Violet an d her sisters , and Penrod wit h a t range glass doors coverin t he shelves s o that no christian spies c ould get at them.At t he head of the huge table sat general Purgatorian directing the meetin g or council t hen going on .On t he t able lyin g in a lit t e box res reponed t he lon g nought diamon d necklac e of Maud.Violet , an d her sisters were no where to be seen .

"Well well,"said general Purgatorian, when t he boy and girls c out ex had st opped close t o the table, and s tood in resped tive silen c e for a moment starin g straight ahead"This visit is an expec ted pleasure I assure you.I kn ew you were comin g, and I know why you are here.You are welc ome for your pains but as we are very busy just now I hope you will make this morning c all as brief as possible.It won't take lon g t o transac k your business with me.You will ask for violet and her sisters, whom gen eral Manley sen t for you t o get an d my reply will be backed by these gen erals here t hat t hey are not wit hin our lines at all.General Manley has sent you out on a wild goos e c hase.And if we did have t hem we wouldn't give them up an yhow becaus e you could never get anywhere wit h them no matter how hard you t ried.They'b be resc ued by those National Child scouts or ot her patrols, an d if you were c aptured with t hem it would go hard wit h you all. "

"S ir"qn answered Penrod."I believed they were here."

"Nit at all.Woy We c an prove that .I and my generals capt ured a lot of property from them but we didn't dare tackle those while cats .But even t hough My men have stolen a diamond necklace, and the plans of the chief of girlscouts I have discovered that it did not make me an y more powerful, and we gen erals have to be on our gua r guard.But it will do you n o goodto deman d from me the girl Princ e esss, who are said to be the daughters of the ruler of Abbiesnnia, because I t ell you t hey're not within my lines to my kn owledge and if they are I c annot tell you where--and as no one knows either or has seen them we can't guess t heir whereabouts in a t housand years.But I do believe they're in the lines n evertheless but free and lookin g for the laughed Jennie Turner.

"Don't talk of such dreadful t hin gs."said Annie Roon ie s hudderin g."N ever mind t hose old books then anyway.We c ame to find Violet,and her sisters did we not."

"Yes, an d we find t hey are not here."

"And here we are where we don't belon g groupin g in the dark."said Joe Green e.

"Hush"called George Zimmermann."Give Penrod plenty of time to thin k."

"He has plenty of time"said Jennie Turner."What ha n ccds is a hun dred brain s and so do we all."

After all it was An oline Ric hee who c ame to t heir res cue, and her ability to turn out things was almost as much a surprise to t he girl as it was to her frien ds.Angeline Rih Richee had been acc ret ly test in g t he code book she had in her own poc ket and expermining with it in various ways ever sin ce she s tarted on t his eventful journey.There were lots of thin s she learned to do and therefore she could det ec t any one no matter how dis guised they were.She learned s ome things too about Violet an d her sis ters, and t heir appearance and disguises which even her girl and boyfriends did not sus pec t she knew.she had early t hat morn ing pas sed seven pretty lookin boys early and had not thought of speakin to n y of them though they had looked mighty suspicious to her.For on e t hing too she had remembered that t he Vivian girls in disguising themselves could even make out of themselves regular tran s formation s , and by thinking hard she had finally recalled the way inwhich such trans formation s had been acc omplished.Bet ter than t his however was t he discovery that Violet and her sisters us usally disguised as boys .So wit hout tellin g any one what s he intended to do, she ordered every on e t o leave t he buildin g for the present and to follow her.They did s o an d were soon out into the c ompany s t reets .They did not worry about t he los t books for sin ce their loss was known t he christian generals t hrough Gertrude An e Angelines effort s could alter and did alter all t he plans. That was the cause of the attac they had wit nessed.They firs t looked in the direction of the bat tle but not hing was going on.It was silen t now in that direction showing the st struggle had on ly been a spasm.

The delay however caused by Jennie Turners proposition had prevent ed any one from again running to the shelves t o secure the books and des t roy them.They had gone u outside again, and by the noise again resumin g they notic ed that t he battle was on again but in a differen t quarter.

"I wonder which of the G Abbiesnnias or Angelinian generals would have dared to defy and attack that position over there?"as ked Hat tie Kauffmann.

"From that location of Auraudecallic I believe it was general Turner."answered Angeline Richee calmly.

"Then the christian general took a big risk I'm afraid for the Glandelin ian artillery fire will destroy him and all his attackers, for that portion of the en emy posit ion is Thumbelin ia's outer works, and no more earthemba embankment."she said.

T t The rest realized now that general Mansion would soon find out that Purgatorian was no ordinary military general but a most dangerous enemy, and must be t reated as such, and as they watched wit h their glasses on the same j hill again they saw a bigger column of christian troops than ever advanc e tward the enemy pos ition.

"I'm not afraid of the result"said Angeline Richee after all"and I'll t hink that the Glandelinians defending that position will be sorry after all for making the resitance.The Glandelinians cannot destroy that big column even if t he c hristians cannot dest roy the defenders , but they'll punish the enemy badly for the resistance ."

The advanc ing columns were half way ac rosss he open fields , when suddenly a wall of smoke rose from the enemys positions , and a terrific barrage of shell fire st opped the progress of the chris tian advance.Although the fierc e shell fire obliged the christian waves to halt it did not drive them bac k.But by the ac t ions of the enemy Angeline Richee instantly realized t hat t he enemy general was hard press ed elsewhere, for the bat tle was assumin g such vi lenc e and the concussion of the cannon fire so severe she an d her friends c ould feel its vibrat ion. The christians came on again c overed now by a t errific fire of their own, and the Glandelinian forces struggled desperat ely against the progressive efforts of the assailants, opening up more artillery bringing more troops to the defen se, and makin a fierce counter charge.And in one way the Glandelin ian generals succ eeded in checkin the purpose of the christian commanders, for while they soon had t o abandon that outer pos it ion to the attac kers, the Glandelinian column s were half an hour lat er reinforc ed by troops of enormous numbers, bigger than the first Glandelinian c olumn had been , and this feat had been accomplished before the chris tian s had gain ed possession of all the pos itions.The Glan delinian generals too were terribly enraged at the christian success.His s pies had t old him not hing of the nat ure of these christian generals , but he and his staff knew however, that all his position was likely to be captured and he driven back badly defeated unless s he made a fierce fight , so the order ded his t wo wings left and c enter, an d half an hour later swept every column on to a terrific c ounter charge covered by a most dreadful artillery fire of guns of all sizes.

The wall of smoke from the first spasm of the t itanic conflict had disappeared during the lull.The christian generals had meant to hurl forward a great number of t heir reserves, and well as place reserve artillery int o position, but in t heir excitemen t they had forgot ten to do s o, and now a monsterous column of Zimmermannians were movin moving forward to s torm the capt ured position . The size of the columns, and t he fury of their on rush and t he ong long bayon ets they carried made these Glandelinians quite dangerous, but the c hristian generals were not afraid when the enemy came attacking a warmin g t ward the positions positions.They knew t heir own machine guns and t hese captured would even protec t the christian infantry from too heavy a shock of any close quarters conflict that might ensue . But general Henry Stanck of the Winkie Abyssinkilland Abyssinkilians did not know that fact, and became alarmed at t he seeming danfer of general Bangor.So he ran his artillery int o position opening a destruct ive cross fire upon t he Glandelin ian chorics movin movin t hem down in columns by the score, and his troops at the confus ion caused by the dreadful massacre rushed forward, and drove fully through the demorilized enemy waves. Then began a most desperate struggle.It was bayonet against bayonet , or wit h dan dagger, and clubbed mus ket, but the Glandelinian t roops were as numerous as general Henry's troops were, and was more ext ended t han the counter c hari chargin chris tian c olumn.But the christian t roops were gradually reinforced by the main line now moving forward, and at the first onset t hey bore the Glandelinian surge backwards for a mile wit h dreadful losses to both sides, but the Glandelinian columns got free at last from their closin g enemy and t ried t o rally.General Gale however feared for t he advancing c hristian troops, and moved forward hims elf callin g upon others t o follow.The Glandelinian generals had not lost their knowledge of milit ary tac tics however, and now realizing it was hopeless s to oppose t he power of these Angelinian armies, and knowin that his only es capo from instant disas ter was for instan t ac tion.His artillery was ordered t o mass in general to cover his ret reat and the ret reat of his offic ers , and soon under cover of this barrage the en emy columns were able to ret reat as f ar from the pur pursuin g c hristian columns as he could get untill he was well in the posit ions that even he himself knew the christians couldn't yet carry. An el Angelin o Ric hee and her follow ers however did not know of cours e what the Glandelinian general was rea,ly going to do.They saw t he Glandelin ian columns at about three oclock waver, and then disappear was t ward t hrough t he smoke haze of the bat tle(in the rattle) the christians disappearing wit h t he enemy in hot pursuit, and alt hough they waited expectantly for some half an hour for the return of each column, neit her did not come back again t hough the firing c ontinued just as heavily.Though the enemy was in a posit ion now which he couldn't be driven from, so was the christian t roops in the same situation.They couldn't be driven from those they capt ured either no matt er what the enemy tried to do.

"S eems to me"said Penrod in a cheerful voice"That the christian attackers have conquered the Glandelin ians more quickly than we expect ed them to do."

"Don't say the christian generals did it all, our c omrades t he child scouts did it."cried Jen nie Turner t urning t hree somersaults in s ucc ess ion and walking around on her hands."Hurrah for the Vivianite Rangers ."

"I thought they couldn't do anything without the us e of Gertrude Angelines Rec ord Map Book."said Penrod to Angeline Richee.

"A plan ca could be rea owed at any time and t he lost ones altered."she replied "But I remembered aft er we firs t started out t hat Gertrude An eline remembered how the great Gemini Leader Dargar once used a big rec ord book t o make plans and alter plans discovered, and all sorts of other things, s o s he tried some of that kind of work in sec ret, and after awhile she mi was more successful than he was at such work."

"When did s he perform t hat work ?"asked Penrod much surpris ed.

"At night time for s everal hours when the res t ofvus would all be asleep."

"Well"remarked Penrod"her discovery has saved the c hristian army a lot of trouble, andowe must all thank t he christian generals for makin such a good fight.Those Glandelinians generals and t heir men strove as desperat ly as if they had the evil spirits wit hin t hemselves, an d that made the enemy very dangerous ..Maud however had squated on the floor and was sobbing bitterly and when asked by her frien d the American what the mat ter was s he said"

"I know that sect ion of the christian line from its direction .My husband was there and I'm afraid he's gone"she wailed."gone fallen in the battle I'm I'm afraid."

"Never mind"said Annie Roonie trying to c omfort her"Maybe he didn't fall we'll be able to find out later on .We'll know when the roll call comes in that sect ion for the names of those fallen and missing will be rec orded even to us."

"UYes in deed"added Joan Guard"Now t hat we have a c lear view we can all soon find out details."

They went up to the highes t part of the ris e, but everythin g was hidden in a haze but the sound of conflict was st ill heard.

"WBut where is that sect ion of the Christian and enemy lines --jo how far or how near!"asked Maud anxiously.

"That is sout h of Jennie Vivian Town."said Penrod."Am I right Miss Richee!"

"That 's right"said Angeline Richee."Don't worry Maud for we'll find out sooner or lat er by the roll call.Was he a private or an officer."?

"He's a general!"

"Well then t hat'll be the sooner reported so don't worry.But I doubt if he fell in battle.I can feel t hat he didn't ."

"Good grac ious"exclaimed Jack Saunders"We've been so excited about the fight we been watching that we plumb forgot all about Violet, and her s isters.Let's look about camp and see if we can find t hem amongs t child scouts of the enemy. Some of them c an recognized them no matter how t hey appear."

First they went back to general Pyrgotorinus headquarters, and as they did s o t hey met seven at range dirty looking girlscouts comin g out of the building.

"I don't see how they can be Violet an d her sisters ."said An geline Richee much puzzled."But I'm suspicious."

"It seems somethings wrong, for every one here don't know a t hing about t hem"said Jack."To no matter whom I show Montoya fake message t hey are as ignorant as a blunderbuss and look on us as fool for trying t o fin d them.On e soldier said to me t hat I and you better go back home to our mamas if we want t o do such a dangerous at unt as capture the Vivian Girls. But of cours e t hat is not our purpose and we know if we were enemies we ourselv es would let well enough a'one!But good heaven s our disguise.what would happen s hould they mistake usas Glandelinian girl and boyscouts.They'd have the drop on us in a minute and they are far more dangerous than any of these glandelinians even think they are...!..!!"

For several minutes they stood staring at t he seven girlscouts now going down the steps, wondering what they can mean.

"If some one amongst us knew the Glandelinian signal t hey use."

"Perhaps we can or bet ter ask Joan Guard about it ."suggested Annie Roon ie."

"Pshaw"said Jack Saunders,"she don't know t he sign al.she t old me so."

"None of us dare make a mistake"declared Hattie Kauffmann.

"We did once surely"said Betsy."but perhaps we won't d o it again."

"We won't have the c hance a"grumbled another boy.

"Why not c all t hem by t heir names."!

"They would only think they're detected and have us good"said Jane.

"We might hear what Mildred Maxwell has to say."said Angeline Richee, as she and her followers were now closely but c autiously following t he seven."It won't do any harm t o ask Jean if she can recognize t hem.She has not not ic ed them yet ."

"I don't like to have her questioned at this precarious moment ."d c lared Jack Saunders."Even though she seldom makes a mistake."

Penrod hardly unders t ood the sit uation but he knew that Jean in most an y thing c an be depended on, and that Jean was able to answer quest ions by some remarkable God Given power to her little brain, and so he t ook the n erve to go up t o her and say;

"Look at those seven "Glandelinian Girlscouts"over there.See where they are going.You can recognize them I hope.Are they Violet an d her sisters in disguise.?"

Jean look with almost a surprised and s tartled look in the direc t ion he in dicated.

"I cannot tell from that distan ce"she answered. "But Let 's follow caut iously and see.I c an 't get a glimpse of t heir faces, t hough t heir walk looks suspicious to me."

"Where are t hey going!"asked Jean Saunders looking more c arefully and speakin again.

"They are turning into the Company Street to the Wes t ."answered Joe Greene. They all looked in that direction but now they did not see t hem. They hurried t o the corner and saw them disappear into a large stripped stent t ent .

"I wh In what part of this Company Street shallwe hide."was Penrods next question."We don't want to be seen by them yet.They may open on us."
"In bet we n t here tents."said Joan."If Glandelinians s ee us we can pretend we're playing hide and seek."
"but which of us knows the sec ret signal s all they use?"asked Penrod.
"I can"said Joan.
This reply amazed them all, you may be sure, and alt hough t he others yelled "Horray "in derision, the boyscout leader seemed to con sider t he matter wit h grave thoughtfulness.
"wi which sort of signals can you use?"he present ly inquired.
"Three or four of them."said the little girls c out .
"I'm afraid Joan has gone crazy"exc laimed Jack, staring g hard at t he little girlscout ."Violet,and her sisters never would communicate an y of t heir own signals to any of us I'm sure."In less she found it out secret ly and practic ed it ."
"I'm not so sure of that"declared Penrod."If Violet and her sisters are really those girls in disguise, then Joan may win them to us by her signals."I won der when they'll come out."We're close enough to see their faces if they do."
"any one ought to know their way of mot ion even if t her faces are dis guised" said Joe Greene.
"That is true an d Joan said her knowledge of it is good and t hat made her seem suspicious."
All heads were gazin g in the direct ion of the t ent,suddenly it opened an d seven girlscouts came out".They looked in three direc tions as if expecting some one and then unconsciously c ame toward where the others were hiding.
At t his moment a gray cloud like haze enveloped them, and this prevent ed the seven strange girlsc outs from s eeing them."Then as t he haze faded away t hey saw the seven stn standing within a few feet of their hiding places ."Indeed t here stood before them the lovely Vivian Girl Princesses, for more than Joan rec ognized them at once despit their disguise.Joan at onc e gave t he cust omary signal as well as coming out of the hiding place followed by the others . Violet and her sis ters were so start led that t hey had an quic k as lightning drawn dangerous looking daggers but they too ot once recognized Joan , Penrod and t he ot hers , and wit h a c ry of delight Violet an d her sisters rushed forward and embraced their friends.Jennie Turner turned gleeful flip flops.Jack Saunders gave a low whistle of ast on ishment .The Americ an took off his hat and bowed low before the beautiful little girls , who had come to them in so as tonishing a manner. Angeline Riches explained the reason why she and her followers were here, and Violet replied;
"N o one stole us from the camp.We permitted our enemies who s tole our property but t hey adluded us.We knew they would take them to general Purgatorian Headqua headquarters and so we came here.We have fru t rated t he plan of the enemy and we'll t ell you how later on.We musn't be seen here too lon g or we'll be under suspicion an d my work won't be fi ished.We'll return to the National lines in a week from now.I'm going to do a lot of work here wit h my sisters."
After this for a time no sound was heard bey beyond the low mur muring of delight that came from theamazed group them some one said;
"Well then everything is all right.We had an aventure within the enemys lines anyway and learned lots of information too not by overhearing things but my sight."
"It's funny "said Jack, standin before his friend Joan"But I've found my Rosary Beads at last.I'm posit ive now that no Glandelinian had stolen it .
It ha had slipped through the lining of my trou sers pocket and stayed there."
"That 's fine"said Joan."How did you come to find it, Jack Dear."?
"I was searching for something in my poc ket s"said Jack when I found it by feeling somet hing funny inside the lining of my trousers a lit tle lower down t han t he pocket."
The ot hers were all busy con gratulating Violet,nd her sisters.
"And only to t hink" c ried Angeline Riches"That we had sup os ed you kidn apped by the Glandelinians all this time."
"It c ould happen when we carry these secret weapons"said Violet, showing t he long st eel lith dagger again"But never mind my dears "she finished graciously"All is well that ends well, and you couldn't be expected t o know whet her we were captured or not .We went after the thieves so swiftly and so much without delay that we didn't take time to tell any one we were going.Indeed
I feared a dreadful disaster would occ ur if the enemy got away with t hos e books map and ot her thin s things and so we came here.We had however a lot of Lagorian boy and girlscouts wit h us.They're here yet .But how did you man age t o get into the enemys lines so easily?"

Angeline Riches started to tell t he story, and Annie Roonie helped her, and Jack Saunders wanted to relate it in thiso own way, and Penrod tried t o make it clear to Violet,and her sisters, and Joan Guard had to remind them of important things they left out , and altogether there was such a ch aot ter, t hat it was a wonder that the Vivian Girls understood any of it .But they listened patiently with a smile on their lovely fac es at their eagerness, and presently had gleaned all the details of their adventures . Violet ,and her sisters thanked the Americ an very earnes tly for his assistance, and Violet ,advis ed Maud to dry her weeping eyes, for she promised to take her to t he christian lines, and find out how her husband was getting alone. Then t he beaut iful lit tle Qu Queen took a chain of emeralds from around her own neck neck, and placed it around the Neck of Hettie Kauffmann.
"Your assistance a to them enable them to get through to here without mis adventure, t herefore I and my sisters are deeply grateful to you and your noble followers ."
"I t hank you, Prin cesses"she said.
"For my part"declared the Americ an,"I realize that even were you and your sisters in danger that you are well worth saving Princess Violet, and I am therefore much pleased that I could also be of much servic e to you.If you could do it I have a reques t to make of you.I have a grudge against the enemy for the des t ruction of my home and family and wish to join the ranks of the C hristian soldiers .I have been an Abbicannian cit izen for years and therefore believe my foriegn Nat ionality will not I hope be a hinderance.And I must confess that all your boy and girls couts here are worth being in company with, and they are more att ract ive than an y Foriegn children or in my own country that I have seen, and for more good than I ever expected to see."
"I and my sisters would like fire t to entertain you in our headquarters" returned Jennie Vivian here.If in the sweetest man ner"And you are welcome t o return in even our own company, and make us a lon g visit. And as my Guardian General Jack Penn needs a high official retainer I believe you can fill the vacancy.The other took sick some time ago and had to go back."
"As for that an"answered the American"I will glady accept your kind iv invitation as I will be glad to b e entertained and see all the boy and girlscouts in your own camp."
"And you'll bring your friend Maud!"asked Angeline Riches eagerly.
"Of course my dear, she is my sweet heart and I would not willingly part wit h her.We are both daily Communicants."
Violet explained then about t he books and things that general Purgatorian or his spies had stolen.
That very night they had entered the place when no one was around and sec retly altered everything so that when the general t ries to make use of them he'll find them worth nothing whatever."
"For"said Violet"I wouldn't let no one get away with t hat .Before we left the christian lines we signalled to our generals of the loss so that they and Gertrude An eline would alter all plans nec essary.Therefore general Purgatorian will never be able to accomplish anything out of these things he stole.It's impossible to recover them here so we ruined them instead."
"Well"remarked An eline Riches cheerfully,"General Purgatorian c an't do much with them books anyhow, but what would we give if we could see the c hance to capture him and bring him a prisoner to the christian lines."
"That would be too dangerous an attempt"said Penrod."
When night time came, they set out for the river section of the foe territory, takin a more direct route than that by which Maud and the American had come.In this way they avoided the most populated sections of the enemys position and territory , and after a pleasant journey in the dark reached the Norma Run River, and as all were good swimmers they all swam across.They then got ashore on t he christian side, and discarding their disguises the entire proc session marched toward then nearest section of the christian lines.
Jack sent one of the Lagorian boyscouts ahead to report the news that Violetand her sisters were returning.This soon spread throughout the whole section of the christian lines toward which they were approaching, and as they came within sight of the camps both sides of the road became lined with soldiers and refugees.Therefore violet,and her sisters heard lit tle but cheers, and their eyes beheld little else than waving of pretty colored flags , handkerchiefs and banners during all the triumphal march from the river to the very edge of the christian encampment.And there Violet and her sisyers met a still grw greater concourse, for all the Vivisnites of the child scout camps and Heavan knows how many soldiers turned out to welcome their return and several bands played gay music, and all the t es tents and tre s w re even decorated with flags and bunting, and never before were the military people so joyious and happy as at this moment when they welcomed the return of Violet and her sisters and those who had gone out for the them. For they had gone away and had returned again,, and surely that was cause for rejoicin g.

Angelinia Aronburg was at the headquarters tent of Violet,and her sisters to meet the returning party, and the good girlscout general was indeed glad to have her great book of Record maps and plans returned to her which alone violet and her sisters had secured. For a whole day there was feasting and merriment, and all sorts of joyious festivities at the whole camp ,in honor of the return of Violet,and her sistern.The American and Hattie Kauffmann received much attention, and were honored by all, much to the Americans surprise and satisfaction, not to say with a little embarassment.The american had speedily become a favorite in the camp of the Vivianite girl and boyscouts, and very very friendly and ploit s to the brave and good fire foriguer and made him feel quite at homelgot the dog a bone). Even the young lady "aud, because she was a stranger and the guest of violet and her sistern, was shown as much deference as if she had been a queen."

But unknown to violet, and her sistern and the boy and girlscouts who had been within the christian lines the tide had turned in the great war, and in the tremendous seige of Vivian Wickey a as forced by general Mansion.Violet and her sisters though successful had not destroyed the plans quick enough Theat urning point was near Aurandebondin, which condeqled machine gun batteries and immensely long lines of Glandelinian infantry, enabled general Tandora Turner and Turnermannian divisions, hopelessly inferior in strength, to restroy the mighty christian com bination of the divisions of troops com s one entrat ed against t hem, and in one headlon g desperate charge to carry a strong battery of cannon .This victorious inc ident was based on the information secured by some of the se best Glandelinian spies.The great victoryloccured on the first two days when Angeline Ric hon and her followers had been still neare bing for Violet and her sistern, t hough it must be remembered that the principal thr theatre of the war around Vivian Wickey was on the northwest so far, where the seige and defensive lines run from Miv-Whirther Janat diagonally southeastward and then nout hward to the at ronger fortified works of the Thumbolinia section.Of all the events of tremen dous world importance durin g those two bloody days nothing so changed the course of the seige as the battles of Aurnandebondin raging every day and night at one point or another in a desultory manner though savagely and brutally contested..The ormormous expeditionary Glandelinian forces of the Glandelinian"Napoleon"General Purgatorian in the Thumbolinia Fortifications, fourteen million men, twenty million men occupying fort Unyn, and another monsterous army of thirty six million hold ing the Lucillia Rickson front, and occupyin the rest of the Thumbolinia Fortifications as far sout h near the destroyed Jennie Vivian Sector, these far flung forces depended for their existance upon million of tons of supplies through the secret tunnels from Calverhine city also in possession of a monsterous enemy force.The destruction of a vast christian army released the victorious Turmorannian division from its long confinement in the Aurandebondin fortifica tions .Their remaining divisions was able to move forward now heavily support ed without any opposition whatever.Control of an ormormous stretch of christian works passed into their hands, and with it a portion of general Hindenburgs vital lines of communications with his Abyssinkilian and Trip Abdeamian bases went out of existance. G Christian or Glandelinian river forces after persueing and sinking or c apturing the battered remnants of the c hristians mighty river armada, bloc kaded all the river, and the c hristian flag was now swept off the whole river.The positions called Fort Bermuda and Trinidad wit hout sufficient garrisons to defen d them was forc ed to be abandoned, though one surrendered, and bec ame Glandelinian River Naval bases. At the same time Glandelinian naval and military demon strations were staged off in most magnificent fighting though savage and bloody in the extreme, and this show of strength followed by great victorious was sufficient to st art the internal crumbling of the ormormous war machine which t he c hristian besiegers had built up so hurriedly t o control his vast conquered territories. During the most terrific fighting of the t wo days, general Purgatorians demands o for movements against the christian besiegers had been ormormous .The diver sions of such a tremendous amount of shipping through the sec ret t unnels was required for the supply of his besieged forces had gravely affect ed the sut istion for the christian besiegers .For the besiegers t oo serious shortage had developed in materials and supplies not asst essent ial to war, but demanded by the millions upon millions of non combatants, and because of the enemy patrols nothing could be brought in.General Mansion however was not discourage by such a disaster.He urged his officers and generals and all the men to a greater effort and intimating that their very lives and the lives of the refugees and all child slaves depended upon victory.

"Comrades"we are all on foriegn enemy soil, far from our own homes and families" one of the proclamanations read."Our River and sea and land communications have been destroyed by the Glandelinians.We face the for ce of wic kedness and prejudice and wic ked greed and it will be their aim to dest roy us .Our back are t o our land,"and though it had one o been Vivian Wic key is no longer ours .On ly one escape presents itself from disas t er to our Country in this war an d the loss of the war itself,vand that is to break through the line, reach t he strong heart of Glandelinia, conquer and ounce the fall of Vivian Wic key, occupy it and save the nation.One more great effort, and the last obst acle is removed.On t o vic tory."

Ruth Glandelinian morel had been mount ing.The t remendous forces of the besieged had begun to exert themselves to reach new records.General Hoovers Glandelinians had now geared up the Glandelinians army fighting machine t o a fury of attack and o defense exceeding all the greatest anticipations.By the distrubit ing of super power armies, the Glandelinian divisions had been so "don dog eat rabbit from t he old o ongented dist ricts of fighting lines, t hat movements of the dn enemy columns continued night and day to evident success beyond record regardless of terrific christian shell fire and fierc e at tacks.M'one of the defensive Glandelinian armies were raw, untrained unprepared recruits .Over ayear and a half of most bitter fighting with losses t otalling over ten million so far was the school of great experience from which c ame t hrough the secret tunnels the veteran Glandelinian armies.At Vivian Wic key now a hundred million Glandelinian soldiers were in occupying forces, and fifty million of them were located on the southwestern front from Lucillia Rickson Fortifications t o Cedarnine Landside, and down the lan of the Norse Run River to the Thumbelinia section and extending to Delight's Junction.Deep t Despite the rigors of the seiges they had no scarcity of supplies because of the long secret tunnels--no lack of equipmen t or ammunition.It was the greatest fighting machine ever mobolized under the Glandelinian flag, and in fact for over two years the war was to have it s bloody c ent er right here.And now for the first time it was to have amsistans s from the east ern for borders of the sea fortifications .The Glandelinian river naval fleet which had turned the trick also so nicely in t he long bloody contest at Audendebondin, had gone down the river destroying everyt hing after the crushing def def e defeat of the Gl Christian forces at the works.New c rews and ships replaced t he losses suffered in the river and land fight, and more fighting troops were reorganized.Conyrol of the full length of the river was for the besieged, and yet now was to come the dec ision on t he mas t ery of the whole christian force concent rat ed at the main works . During all that time the oppos ing forc s of the besieged city was in the most titanic st ion that could ever be described.The main Glandelinian offensive was launched on the day t hat violet and her sistern were soon t o be found.The object ive was a desperate attack upon Aurandebondin, which in addition being general Mansions military headquarters , and one of his principal bases was also his principal military army c ent er.Generc Hondro direc ted the operations personally from a high rise of ground.The first divis ion to move forward was a powerful Corps of Guardians .The ot her divisions were complsed of four hundred regiments , of eighty t housand men eac h.It was t he largest single fighting format ion t hat ever took t he posit ion of battle at vivian Wic key so far.Ot her divisions also were with them, and the fron tal line of advanc e by this ormormous glandelinian attacking force, ext ended over the t errit ories moving against the fortified works under generals Quimbic, Hendry Darger, Now t urmer, Grantheqrt Hon noo n and ot her posit ions .The advanc e s tarted at six oclo k oclock in the morning in the vicinit y of Jennie vivian.It moved out at raight across the open fields and t hrough war shattered woods simultaneously, the left wing taking a a northeas t course. A few minut es later the Glandelinian"battle cloud"of infant ry swept in front The Turmors plains, and appeared rushing toard the front of the c entral christian works .One o more the death of hells fury broke loose.Christ ian artillery kept up a s t eady barrage, but no enemy could could be halt ed.The Glandelinian scouts also recon oitred to the nort h and sout h, and saw chanc es t o overlap the whole christian defensive line at t his s pot.Yet the resist ance of the christian line was tenacious, and t his o curious inc ident was explained at half past eight oclock when general Turner of the enemy received the following t elegram-

"Tremendous christian forces moving over the territory to the left to support those works attacked.To your right Glandelinian artillery out of ac t ion."

The Glandelinian general telegraphed immediate orders to his staff commanders and more divisions were hurled into the fray.Almost at the same t ime the new ariving chris tian tro p troops having completed the des t ruction of the enemy batteries swung westward to make a counter attack.It was a desperate fight even against time.The christian fire swept glandelinian regiments away thick and fas t , every inflamable sect ion was in flames.The christian generals rec ieved orders to fight on to the last shot and to the las t gun.The combat c overed a most tremendous area, and the noise and confusion was as if all that landscape had broken out into a violent eruption of volcanic energy.Shortly after seven or eight o'clock, a new Glandelinian division came to the assistance of the battling Omarian forces, and the battle line swung onward over the first works of the christian lines.Now the battle was on both sides of the extensive christian works, and the advantage was distinctly with the Glandelinian generals. Every Glandelinian general through unusual efforts held a strict line of formation as to the north also and to the east of the christian enemy. Conflagrations increased as the fight swept eastward and southward across the Delights Junction territory.Now both contestants began to go forward.There were hundreds of crashes of enormous musket volleys.Many christian soldiers trying to defend their works to the last were captured yet so the whole so far the conflict was still indecisive.Then the move against the positions elsewhere was covered by a tremendous bombardment along the entire battlefront from the territory of Fort Thumbelinia to the Norma Run River. It was estimated that two thirds of the christian batteries of artillery had been either blown up or disabled and captured.Also the artillery preparations of the enemy put an acute situation upon the christian line as the Glandelinian infantry advanced across the fields of barbed wire on the southwest bank of the Norma Run opposite Aurandebondin.In the first three hours of savage and bitter fighting, much of it cruel and brutal hand to hand bayonet and other close quarters combat, the Christian troops were driven out of Greyston Junction, and from a long line of works near the old time battlefield of Delight's Junction.Opposite Delights Junction the advance took the direction of Nassuta and was supported by the massed Glandelinian artillery which plowed up a portion of the christian works on the east banks of the Norma Run.For all that day and the following night the christian positions not yet taken was subjected to a terrific rain of shells and high explosives from the Glandelinian artillery.The fierce Zimmermannian columns proved themselves vastly superior to the christian troops in qualities of fighting.The very Glandelinian cavalry in waves of horsemen charged across fields of barbed wire, ripping up the entanglements and crashing through the christian lines.The speed of these charging columns provided the most effective weapon of the attack.Trench line after trenchline was taken and occupied by the advancing foot infantry.Flank protecting columns cooperated with the attack.Big smoking fires were made to smoke the christian out of their works, and gas shells and liquid flames were used.The Glandelinian losses in the first half of the days advance were unusually severe, but not out of keeping with the progress made and the obstacles overcome.In seven hours the Glandelinian waves had pushed about a mile and a half eastward, and crossed the river on the Big Bend.The center of the line held on Marcocallio on the same river, and twenty miles directly south the enemy occupied Evan Grouin snow, and were still pushing in in spite of the most tenacious resistance they had ever met with in any battle before.North Aurand and other sections fell into the hands of the enemy, and northward the Glandelinian forces after most intensive fighting occupied the left of the christian works near Townsend fort. General Dargers efforts to apply pressure on the left flank of the Glandelinian attacking columns were countered by a terrific artillery storm of his infantry concentrations.General Binny covered the battle from an high observation post and was killed by shrapnell while doing so.General Moon Mullen's battle lines had also pushed through captured general Groomfields division, and forcing the christian general Nort himself on to surrender and that section of the attack was the most dreadful scene of all.General Darger and Whillamscholder made a bitter and most desperate stand and with great obstinacy on the line of the Sunbeam Creek North Bend, and a score thousand of Gettysburg battles seemed to rage here in one in that days time.General Soberton who had been in command of the main army group, was shot dead while trying trying to cross the christian works in leading his men in a hellstorm of christian artillery and musketry fire.General Darger personally directed operations from advance observation positions and fell severely wounded.The Glandelinian army however continued in motion.By weight of numbers, courage, fierce determination, and reckless dare devilness, and the very moment um it had gained it broke the christian line opposite Jennie Vivian, and subjected the christian line along the left to such a storm of shell fire and musketry ravages ravages and hurled forward in such violent onslaughts that the christian troops were forced to withdraw from here also.All day the Glandelinian troops also carried portions of the fierce fight behind the christian lines.Without observers on their signal stations, the christian gunners could not check the enemys mad onrush.And then the panic started to the east.Purple columns opposite the ruins of Delights Junction began to withdraw.The withdrawal at first was orderly, with well fought severe rear guard actions, as the christians dropped back from a line running from Sunbeam Creek to New Rickson, and later on from Aurandecallio, and White plains to Fort Cheat or Gumpis.

But Glandelinian troops, crossing the Norma Run on newly constructed pontoons the day before maintained incessant contact with the retreating christian columns, and the retreat which had started in an orderly fashion soon became disorganized.More and more stragglers dropped behind to accept capture. The roads through the Sunbeam Creek Sector became clogged with traffic.Hundreds of thousands of troops madly strove by all means of locomotion to reach their own and main positions at the Santa Fe Works before Moon and Moonshine Mullins flank movement took them there.Indeed the backbone of the christian reige line at the Aurandebondin sector had been totally broken.The retreat toward the Santa Fe works became an utter panicky rout.Fifty thousand men composing the Red Coated Abyssinkillian forces on Long St reet, surrendered by negotiation. Through the Sunbeam Territory, regiments and divisions, unable to move in any direction and under destructive shell fire and galled by machine gun bullets and enemy infantry fire suffered terrific losses.Unprotected by the guns of Santa Fe they surrendered.Aurandebon din fell and the debacle had started. In the midst of these tremendous and most bloody events, while the girl and boyscouts were even then still looking for violet and her sisters, as the Glandelinian advance pushed forward on toward Santa Fe, An elinia Aronburg Angelin la Aronburg recieved a code telegraph message from some distant signal station informing her that a new girlscout recruit Margie by name had failed to meet Dolores Mic-Hollester at her headquarters and that all was in confusion in the child scout camps because of the disaster to the christian line at the Aurandebondin fortifications.Dolores wired that her swiftest horse was patrolling within sight of the battle, and that she had gone as near as she dared three days and nights in succession but Margie had not been at the appointed place.She wired her fear that she believed probably because of the battle that she feared something had happened to prevent her from coming to her meeting place.An eli Angelinia Aronburg communicated the information to Mildred Manning, and the two girls made a joint and immediate decision.

"I can go as near as Highburg Landing." Mildred said."I know a nice little field close as the battle is to it that I can side slip into, a quarter of a mile from the houses and back from the road.Spotted it one time when I and Susan Farrol were outscouting.I will take her along as her eyes are like an eagles."

They left that sector of the christian lines an hour before the main fray and rode southwestward.

"If those Glandelinians ever lays so much as one hand on yhat little girl"Mildred said."I'll revenge the day I was so cowardly shot in the back through an open window.I'll tear the heart out of the Glandelinian that harms her."

It was not only the fear of the Glandelinian general Purgatorian that was in Gertrudes mind about Margie, it was the thought also of the rabble of the advancing Glandelinian hordes as it plodded eastward to inc rease the retribution upon the christian line.In victory or defeat, to the Glandelinians women and children were desirable as polls.While Mildred urged her horse on, Angelinia Aronburg busied herself looking over her own weapons, a for she and her two companions knew the hazards of being caught behind the enemys lines, but the object at stake was worth the risk, and she believed there was a fair chance of success in the plan to get Margie out of that endangered territory, and escape with her to the christian lines.The girlscouts could from an elevation see the panic stricken masses pouring through the burning encampments.Somewhere in this territory they knew too that Dolores Mic-Hollester was keeping her vigil, and she shared also the anxiety that Mildred felt for the new friend she loved. At this moment Susan Farrol headed the small column going down the familiar road they had known during the early days of their training here.

"Just a couple of miles from here."Mildred shouted."It ought to be about over there where all that big cloud of smoke is."

They were within easy view of the scene in less than a minute.

"That's the lodge and the driveway but where in world is the house of"Gertrude cried, and then her eyes fell upon a pile of smoking ruins.

The christian general there was forced to beat it."yelled Mildred riding close to the wreckage.Mildred was almost crying.

"The yellow Glandelinian skunks.Good thing the general burned his camp.But heaven where's Margie!"There was fear in the girlscouts voice."I've got to go on in the direction and find out."

"No use"Angelinia Aronburg cautioned her."The plafe is deserted.There is only one hope now.Find general Darger.From the throughness with which he has cleaned up up the abandoned camps he is ahe olutely in flight tward Santa Fe Works.But I heard he is wounded.But where was he taken!"

"Only one place he c an be.""ildred replied."His army is rolling back, he's licked on land, and the enemy too has the jump on ihim on the river.His one chance e is esc ape to the Santa Fe Works."

"Surely notbthe Santa Fe works, Mildred, but the Aurandec allio.What a pair of saps we are.We've forgotten the works called the "Earths Star."

The nearest refuge works.Of course.Margie told me about it ."Susan chimed in eagerly.That's only seven miles from here.There's just a c hance e."

At the As the three headed at full speed down the road, Angelinia Aronburg rec alled in more detail the destruc description Margie had given her of t his enormous new line of chris tian positions tward which now the christ ian forces were retreating.Gertrude had asked her, why it had not been strongly fortified and the girlscout had told her that the christian generals had avoidec a avoided operations so near the cit city of Jennie „vivan for fear of drawin drawin an untimely shell fire upon the position.

"No luck chief!"Mildreds disappointed tones brought GertrudeAngelina bac k from her thoughts."There's the position.You can see its being occupied by the enemy too.she's not here either.

"Let's put back to our own position then--notify the pate patrols to be on t he lookout"Gertrude suggested.

"Too late now"said Mildred sadly."It's most probably the retreating troops are on a course north for Delights Junction.They won't stay on the go always.It's so slow.They'll Retreat to the works further up.We might be able to spot the ones we are after from a high elevation.It's a last chanc e and a slim one, but we must take it."

Gertrude agreed, but reminded the girlscout that they had been out here a long time since leaving the camp, and to be out too long might draw a fire upon them from the enemys batteries.Her reaction to the prospect of comin in such peril was a shoulder shrug.Gertrude read the thoughts behind her tense drawn fac e.What difference e if she lost her girl friend.Riding northward on t he Jennie vivian road, they scanned the fields in all direc tions, as far as t heir field glasses would reach, but not only now was there no trac e of t he retreating hordes, but no person of n any kind was in sight.With the enemy bloc blockadin g fleets patroling the river t hese waters were dangerous to even the smallest boats.

"Looks like some girlscout is riding post haste tward h us ahead of us."said Mil red Mildred.Gertrude looked in that direction, and saw a t iny speck of some one on ohorseback far ahead and by the dust from thevobjec t it was positive the rider was urgin g the horse like mad.Gertrude kept her glasses on the objec t as it drew nearer.

"It's a girlscout on ohorseback"said Mildred."WE'll rid forward meet her and ask for information.Maybe she has seen what we are lookin g for."

As they headed down the road, Gertrudes glasses soon discerned the fact that a girlscout was on the horse, and from the strangeness of her features Gertrude was sure it was Margie.She told mildred so, just as she chec ked the rein of her horse to meet the rider. The girl was urging her horse on more faster now and wavin one arm to gGertrudes party.When they were t hirty feet away Gertrude recognized her.It was Margie all right.She was safe.

"Where's Dolores?""ildred demanded.

"In general Mansions headquarters."The girlscout gasped."He has her with him and she's trying to help him make a plan to recover the lost ground."

"How long ago did she go there."

"Not more than an o hour."

"Where are the t retreating troops goin g!Which way!"Mildred questioned hastily as the party rode christian line ward again.

"I don't know"Santa Fe Works I guess.General Darger who is defeated is beside himself with rage.I never seen ihim in such a tem er t emper.He declares his defeat on the front to betrala betrayal."

She told too how general Darger with a few staff officers had appeared at his headquarters, had ordered everybody out of the house, and blown it up.Then he had rode t o the rear and put himself to the t ask of trying to rally his troops untill he was wounded.

"He fears the renewal of the attack on Santa Fe to morrow.""Margie explained."

Ending their adventures within the Glandelinian encampment s and returning home to the christian lines Violet,and her si her sisters had found on the c hristian side of the Norma Run River alive with war shipping, vessels from all parts of the besieged cit y, being loaded with retreating christian soldiers from the disasterous battlefield of Aurandebondia.The Christian Red colored Nab Naval bases at Turmeranna, Salinia, and other spots were similar hives of great act ivity, and the unusual noise of the battle had been heard elsewhere.

The signal christian victory violet,and h r sisters and her followers had observed, had been a desultory battle elsewhere.To try and find out what had happened „violet and her sisters quickly dismissed their t heir followers and went aboard the ship the Sa ann one of the many christian vessels loaded with retreating christian soldiers.They learned the terrible fact t hat s uth and middle of the Norma Run River,and the entire full length of the Sunbeam Cree or river had been in the possession of the enemy fleets which had resulted in the Abbieannian flag being swept from all territ orios and tht Aurandebondia was in possession of the enemy, who was still pushing on in the terrific attac k.

They learned that in that neighborhood t housands of Abbieannian river war shipping had been captured re racing to reach fortified spots.Many other Christian vessels that had been in the Sunbeam C reek at renna had been captured before they could fight their way out.There was three thousand soldiers panic st ric ken on board the ship which violet and her sist ers went on.There awas a large number of Angelinian and Calverinian officers bound for the nort h.In exc tement t hey chattered about the disaster with violet and her sisters, and showed their dread of the prospects of the def at defeat.They as k spoke of the horrors of the immense battle, and „iolet and her sisters wi were for a time silent over the news.

"The enemys lines are pushing steadily northeastward from Aurandevo Aurandebon din"one officer who was a colonel told violet,and her sisters, as they pac ed the t he deck(speck). "These Glandelinian generals are wild devils."he dent in ued. "General Cruze was the one who delivered the main assault--kn w his military business like you know your AE.and CS used to be an officer in the old Glande linian Imperial army, sort of a regennde noblemen.Something like the old Saten himself.He's a dangerous fellow.This disast er must have been brought about by the spy who totole your books and those of the girlscout leaders."

"Was there no general opposit ion to the landing at Sunbeam Junction!"violet asked.

"Unfortunately for us no."he replied."One purpose of the act ion of the enemy was to draw Abbieannian artillery unitee h c back tward the cent.Half of the Glandelinian batteries covered the enemy attack.They would have taken care of any big christian battery that could have been spared from the main line to the defense of the Aurandebondia positions.But p apparently our generals should have had some brains on the strategy of the christian armies, for why I don't know but no reinforcing divisions were sent to the defense of Aurandebondia, although our generals roared and yowled to high heaven for the help badly needed.The t elegraph was full of it."

"What is general Purgatorians tactical objective."Jennie asked.

"I do not know."

"How many men has the attacking forces.What are they driving for!"asked Angelina.

"His attacking forces numbered about six million men now"t he colonel explained."More are advancing from other points at the rate of 10?000 a hour.They are not all coming from Thumbelinia you know.Some of the divisions come from Lucillia Rickson, Maya and other fortifications.Many of them are veterans of the Norma Catherine whole sale massacres.Don't think this attack is a hit or miss affair.It 's been planned for some time.General Stonemann is advanc ing quce ossfully along the old abandoned Vivian Wickey Calverine railway running from Jennie Vivian town northward a cross the Sunbeam C reek to Delight's Junct ive is to push through to the rear of your own positions.I think he'll do it unless you and your sisters do some hasty thinking.Remember it os is only three miles across Delight's Junc tion to here.I never saw such an extensive and violent attack, and I've been in m n many a bloody battle."

violet,and her sisters went to the cabin where a war map of the christian front covered the bulliten board .

"Glandelinian forces under general Franklin Staonk whocwas killed in the action took the juc junction works of Santa Geronimo ---here" the colp colonel explained pointing."Aurandebondia you see, is the main stretch of t his disaster, which roughly resents the enemy attack.We st ill hold the railroad sout h of Delight 's Junction but Heavens who c an explain the fury of the enemys attack there.The nature of the country too is such t hat all the fighting is along the two railrods now.I do not know the sen strength of the Glandelinian Zimmermannian and Omarian divisions attackin g us, but I do believe they're badly crippled by the fact t hat reinforcements will soon outnumber them.We're going not north to Delight's Junc tion proper to help make a stand there.It 's our only chance to keep the enemy from breaking the seige line.But I tll you it's the bloodi st battle I've ever seen so far.Our losses are something awful."

One of the few non combatant civilians on board the St Ann was a Foriegner by the name of John Stanley, but an old agent of the Imyer Internal or International Foriegn officers at Calverine, who had been previously because of the war an exile in Calverinia.His missions to Abbieannia however was friendly and diplomatic , and the Colonel introduced him to explain what was known of the situat ion during the Aurandebondia "Eruptions"2 " of war.

"You know of course that Miss An olinia Aronburg the greatest girl spy in your hristian army had represented herself as the chief leader of all girl and boyscouts here." Staley said."she is one of the great Girl spy comrades of both your Father t he mperor and your Uncle, you know yourselves far better spy than either of you Princesses even."!

"Yes indeed she certainly is a record breaker.But what about her!"

"Why the Glandelinian sec ret service and all detective agencies have been interested in her work of spying since since she was known.That is why everything by the foe spies was stolen on her and you and your sisters.She is now in Mansions head quarters with some of your chief girlscout leaders and has fully reported on t he events following the tremendous battles at Aurandel'ondia.She is afraid t he great seige of vivian mickey will be broken!"

"What happened!"Violet,and her sisters asked at one time.

"The customary battle crisis."Staley replied."Your girlscout leader An eline Angeline Jennings c onferred by long distanced wireless with mperor vivien at Angelinia Agathia immediately, and there were many long distance d wireless messages with An elinia Agathia.It is believed that she called upon An elinia Agathia for military assistance".

"How long did those conversations continue!"violet asked.

"Every hour durin g the battle must have counted."But Mansion had been on his guard.Hours before the bat tle had reached a final disas terous stage t his morning Abbiesnnian regulars countless in numbers from half a dozen army points of the seige lines were concentrated alon the west shore line of the Sunbeam C reek, and Norma Bridge.Troops from our center mobolized at Aurandecallio, Marcucian and New Delight's Junct ion."

"When did the christian line get into act ion!"Jennie asked.

"According to telegraphic messages none of these new lines of battle are in ac tion yet.But an unknown number of christian troops are advancing sout hward along the railroad tward Delight's Junction, where they will join forces and t ry to rally the defeated christian troops.And thats where the battle is raging at its hottest now."

"Who is holding his own there!"asked Hattie.

"General Meldonia Greatheart is."

"Atá boy"yelled violet .Staley smiled indulgently.

"An elinia Aronburgs work also has been more succ essful in the north"he cont inued "She has c ossed so many batteries to be placed at thg North Bend t hat t heir ravagin g fire has seriously impeded the movement of Glandelin ian troops moving northward from the border of Talismann Brook.The resistanc e of the c hristian t roops there as it was telegraphed is so determined and violent that the enemy advanc e alon g that sector had been held up two days by the Nationals, and t he garrisons of the christian seige works.Only there so far the enemy has not made any progress.But the bat tle is more fruious there and that is our real danger point ."

"Anything else."

"Qa A Glandelinian troop trail train was detderailed south of Delight's Junc t ion and another was blown up by a mine.Glandelinian losses have been de dreadful beyond xomprehending ."

Later Violet was t o learn that the Angelinian general s taff had wisely employed a large part of its military strength in the defense of the west ern Norma Run River shore and artillery in great numbers had been conc entrated along the same poijt points and was in as desperat e an action against the advancing hordes as would take a v volume to describe properly.

"Would you like some cheery wireless news for supper my dear Princ esses friends !" asked the c olonel in a gayer tone for such a disastrous time.

"I know"si said Angeline Vivian with a sour look."Abbiesnn c it y had res urrect ed again, Calverinia is free from all the Glandelinian armies, we are in Heaven , and A big host of Angels led by us have swept all the Glandelin ian count ries t o t he deepest part of the bottomless pit and went ourselves, and Abbiesnnia is laughing at us.Now try and break my heart littl e bluebird."

"Not quite that bad."replied the Colonel"Butt here's a hell of a fight going on in the vic vinicty of Delight's Junction in the sout h.The Glandelinians have succeeded in seizing one of the fortified works.Al They als o hold the Junc t ion reservior, with the water supplie to Delight's Junction.There has been terrible hard fighting alon g a ten mile front, and I am sorry to say t hat the Glandelin ians have won there also.We h ve been int ercept ing telegraphic reports from some other source and these together with the christian and Glandelin ian army code telegraphs which we have deciphered in dic ate that hell had broken out all along the line throughout the whole neighborhood of t he Sunbeam Creek territory.It looks like another War of the worlds ."

"Boloney, and Banana Oil."said Jennie."We don't seem t o realizewe're fighting mad devil possessed Glandelinian soldiery now."

"Why don't we Princ ess"the colonel rejo ined.Our whole lin e had not been in battle yet .You forget Princess, that one of our naval v bases have been also abansoned, at St Johns River Landing, so t hat our christian land forc es have to fight it out or perish.There's no hop hope of reinforc ements reaching them unless you or your sisters do somethin g pret ty quick.The Glandelinians cont rol the whole Norma Run River.Whether the bat tle lines at Jennie Vivian succ eeds or not matters very little now..We got t o think of the situat ion at Delight's Junct ion and Aurande obondia.I doubt what her general Stonemann wouldattempt t o take N orth Band by direct assault.The posit ions t oo are not worth it t o them, and now they are useless to us also because we have to seige navy in t he river.We might make it a little n asty for them as a sunk submarine river bas e but I t hin the Glandelirians will need all their under d river c raft in t he Sea now. "

"There's somet hin g wrong just the same" remarked Catherine."That this ship we are on runs without lights, and we are given or giving the territory of Norma's Bridge a wide bert he I guess you're takin g no chances on Glandelin ian river craft ."

The ship late that afternoon steamed into the river harbor of t he christ ian position nearest Norma Catherine.Two small semiriding aira hips t heir cigar shaped envelopes tinted rose and silver by th e afternoon s un patrolled slowly above the shell awp swept landscapes a little b yond Mine swee ers preceded t he ship, and Calverinian destroyers cut in and about in constant vigilance. Great shells from the enemys positions buzzed overhead and exploded in t on es a hun dred times louder than the loudest thunder c laps ever heard.Traffic lanes to and fro were c rowded with s oldiers goin g t o the endangered battlefront . Riding in the long river swell, they saw t he gr at sloatin g formation s and super structures of the far distant Thumbelinia Fortifications t heir great sides now hidden in smoke and t hundering as if a Krakatoa r erupt ion had broken out there.The colonel pointed t hem out.The left wing of the stretch was Fortres s Number one, and the Central one was t he Imperial wortress.Farther to the nort h were ot he ot her sections.It was all walled in rolling cumulous clouds of smoke and terrific flame bursts all along its whole stretch and the sky above was heavy with smoke of bursting sheils.The din was enough to shake t he In fernal Regions to its foundat ion .

"And there "are the Glandelin ian positions beyond."said t he colonel point ing."you can recognize t hem by the redouht formations.They are man ned by three hundred guns each and are also in action."

A cont inuous proc ession of shells rose from t he gun spurts and flew across the river and beyond the christian works to explode in a salvoes beyond t he positions on brown ibhills.Lookin g at that lon line of c ontinuous explosions makin the hills also look erupt ive it was impos ible to locate the breach which it was said the ar artillery storm had created early in the morning. Great numbers of christian cannon were mounted on c ement breakwaters that formed for the purpose along the eastern shore of the river.The super struc ture of the breakwater on the right appeared severely damaged as t hough many yards of it had been blown off."

"Some Christian cannon must have let loose shells that did that."remarked Hettie to t he colonel, with the pride of a gunner.

"I wish they had"the colonel replied.(died) "I would have saved us the t rouble of blowing up that breakwater ourselves.We did it because t he entrance was only one hundred feet, and some of our river ships have a greater beam than that .Glande linian batteries had tried to bomb us, but our own have been able to keep t hem off."

Inside the inner rivervharbor, troop and supply ships were moored alongside t he quays to the west but all aflame makin g the greatest c onflagration Violet and her sisters had ever seen, and t he elat ric c ranes, lifts and conveyer systems which had for the c hristian side swung out guns, gun carriages and mounts and all manner of military impedimentis were in wreck a or also afire. A whole river quay with all sorts of buildings, friegh t band other cars were also in conflagration.The heat was intense beyond descri tion.Above the noise from Thembelinia, the hiss of the conflagration could be heard the battles roar n ear Delights Junction.Pourin g out of t he side of the christian si ships down the gan g planks flowed long lines of marching reinforcin c hristian infantry.Two soldiers respectfully brought the baggage of violet and her sisters to the safer qyay side.Workers of t he seige bare to t heir sash bound waists mounted the bags of the Princesses on their sun browned shoulders and led by a smartly dressed young Abyssinkilian lieutenant, they proceeded up the main company street twqrd their own destiation of t he Vivianite camps to Tent number Ten now the headquarters of Angelinia Aronburg. Over the situat ion now An elinia Aronburg was hot .As Violet and her sisters were about to ent er they heard these words from her;

"We have recieved instructions from Headquarters to disposit you three behind our own positions and you're to stay there.Unc Unfortunately it will not be in any possibilities to do so in the day time, because not knowing you foriegners and findin g you have served the Glandelinian cause once we do not wish you to observe our own positions which would be visible from any high ground in our territory, but you will be t aken and released into the Glandelinian positions by some prisoners who we will liberate for that purpose."

Violet,and her sisters looked at each other with a question in t heir eyes.

"But your excellency "they heard another person say"There sure need be no restrictions on what these three foolish sight seeing foriegners may observe as they do not know our language to a any good qualities.They are only harmless an d-- and"----"

"I consider only the safty of my child scout forces and the safty of the whole besieging c hristian army in general"Angelinia Aronburg shot back, and violet peekin g into the tent saw her rise to her feet angrily her eyes spitting fire."Our lines of battle are hard pressed to the north, Aurandebondia has fallen.Our present position must be veiled as much as possible.I am in chief command in this terri territory.I will not permit the passage of any know nothing foriegners though who have once servedthe Glandelinians and--"

"Would your Excellency Miss, be so kind as to read these instruct ions?"somebody interrupted, and violet saw him presn presn present a folded white paper which had a half an inch border of purple.

Silently through a slit in the tent they watched t he chief girlscout commander pin point her eyes across t he typewritten page.She returned the ducument to the soldier and sat down.Addressing her adjutant she said;

"You will make arrangements to do as I command.That ducoment doesn't mean anythin ,g as I ta e orders only when blanks like that are signed by the Vivian Girl Princesses.How do I know these foriegners may not be spies.They're Not Catholics eit her.That is all.It is settled.Out ."

Violet and her sisters saw them with a mutal exchange of boys leave the tdnt tent by another entrance.Violet winked at Jennie and said;

"I don't know what scripual text that soldier carried on that paper, but he surely knows his mistresses voice."

"It's a plead for these three foriegners."Viol et responded as she and her sisters prepared for entrance."We must take no chanc es for our own personal safty.We would have done the same as her.No orders are permitted to be signified but by our own hand and Angelinia knows it and takes no chanc es eit her.She's a wise owl."

While the sweating porters removed their bags to the ground, violet and her sisters before entering the tent went to see general Darger who was said to be wounded.It took them ten minutes to reach the base hospital on foot.Partly covered by a shell shoot on a cot in one corner of the ward was a man.The face was and features were darkly sunburned but the lighter hue of his cleanly shaven pate identified him as the general.He was smoking a cigarette and looking at bthe ceiling when violet,and her sist rs entered, but as he lowered his gaze to Violet and her sisters he ejaculated;

"Well I'll be good and ham I thought you had been c aptured by the enemy."

"And we didn't we went into the enemy lines bec ause we had been robbed as a spy"Violet was the first to interrupt as she stepped forward with outst ret ched hand to grapat grasp t he extended one of general Henry Darger one of Mansions chief of staff occi officers, followed suit e by her sisters .Besides hisreputation of being one of the most profound generals of the army, Henry Darger had come up from the ranks, winning his commission in the early days of June I912, when i hird his divisions of the Ninty First C orps drove the Glandelinians back from the sout hern stretch of the Sunbeam C reek.When Violet and her sisters explained briefly t heir presenc e in the hospital, he t old them of the fightin g at Aurandebondia in which he had been wounded and brought to this hospital in the christian lines.

"They landed the Royal Brigades at santa Clause and my own battalion was pushed on one of the wagon trains immediately for the interior followed by many more regiments and also the Abyssinkilian Nint h Corps.We left behind a division At Santa Lucrecia works which is the junction point of t he Delight's Jun ction road that runs north to Jennie Vivian Town, and I took my own two companies and brigades on sout h to t he foot of the sand shore of the river near Chic kadee Run.And It was the hot test cont est I had ever been in yet . We made a thick line of resistan c e right and left on the Vivian Wickey-Calverine Railroad, and tried to even dig in under fire.The Glandelin ians ch charged us wit h the ferocit y of tigers.The fighting went on all night and all morning without the slightest abatement.Our flat c ars full of troops had no sooner pushed into chickadee Territory t han a Glandelinian battery blew up the railroad t racks in back of us and we were out of loc k for supplies .I got mine from a shrapnell shell t his morning, a big chuck of it in my back, and he t he c oncussion must have knocked me out.I woke up in this hospital.The soldiers of the Sixteent h Calvorinian Regiment carted me down here.I'm afraid I'll be crippled for life" he fin ished disconsolately.

Violet,and her sisters shared their pocket money with the wounded general;, and told him t hat they would communicate wit h Mrs Darger, whose address he gave violet. They parted with a tight grip of the hands/////. After a small lunch Angelina Ric hee escort ed violet,and her sisters, together with their baggage, down to the water front , where they boarded a dispatch boat,that took t hem beyon d the river landing t and to t heir own part of the camp.On land again they took off in a special covered wagon.for ten minut es t hey urged the hors es down the winding company street, while an escort of fifty esc escort girl and boy scout cavarly and a squadron of Abbissannian-Abyssinkilian c avarly c soldiers join ed t he wagon in formation . steadily gaining distanc e, t hey went s nort hward, for violet and her sisters decided to see if they could find out somet hing about the battle.Twic e in the far dis t an c e they sighted christian c avarly c olumns .Fifteen minutes later they were within sound of t he bat tle.A perfect hell of gunfiresuddenly greeted them from a lon g range dist ant Glandelinin battery.The Glandellinians were usin g their guns with food vigor spitting shells forward, and thick blac k smoke poured from fourt y five great con flagrations makin the scene as bad as if one of the sout heastern fores t fires was raging here.Christian cannon then went to the attack to prevent the enemy batteries from doing any demage to the child scouts or violet,and her sisters who however had not paid the slighest slightest attention t o t he peril they were in.They soon reac hed their first destination,and violet and her sis ters made t heir first in spection of the territory they were in, and s tood ready to leave t he wagon when it stopped and mount their own ohorses which had t railed on behind.

"Don't forgot what I told you Miss Richee."violet a heated in her ear for she had to the noise of distant battle(even at that great distance of several miles) was earsplitting."Tell An elinia Aronburg I'm comin g later to recieve t hat Gemini Member who said he had great information for us in about an ohour. We got to observe the battle line first and try to rally t he troops if possible." There was a sudden pressure of air on o her ears, as the c onc ussion of a great explosion in the dist ance t hundered like Mt "Hell"blowing int o the sky.

One of the horses was killed by the concussion and the wagon c ame to an abrupt stop almost keelin g over from the same shock.

Violet and her sisters left the wagon a nd were on their horses at once.

"Good by An elin e "Richee"said Jennie."Here is where we part for the time bein g."

"Good bye Princ esses untilll wemeet again."She said and rode off on her own horse.

As they started off there was a blinding flash overh ad overhead fifteen un hundred feet above, but the sight did not unnerve them nor the terrific report either.They didn't believe shrapnell that high up could do any harm un ess it was directly overhead.Seeing t he battle in the distanc e, they saw not hing could stop the disaster and t hey feared it was going to be the last of the seige.

In the meantime the Gemini spy having returned from the enemys lines by a sec ret route had been brought by soldiers to general Mansion.On his plate was a military Telegraph.It read asfollowes ;

"C ongratulations on your safe return.The Vivian Girl Princ esses requests your presence before general Meeting late this afternoon if you cannot come sooner.

Angelinia Aronburg."

He headed for the headquarters of violet and her sisters as fast as his horse could carry him.After a brief delay Jean Saunders, and Jane Melfort led him into t he headquarters tent ov of violetand her sisters.The Vivian Girls greeted him kindly. Other members of the council, was even general Mansion, who had c ome by anot her company street,Angelinia Aronburg, and the generals entire staff of the highest officers, including all the highest boy and girlscout officers of the children soldier command.

"Mr Johnnie Anderson, tell us what you know about general Purgatorian."said Violet."

"He's a dangerous man Princ ess.He knows all your plans and that of the general."

"What's the source of his power!"

"His batteries outnumber our seige guns, and he's recieving reinforc ements and munitions and equipment through those secretly t unnels every month and plenty of provisions and clothing."

"what's the secret of his repeated success of these three days bat tles!"

"His spies stole some great geographies from you and from the child scout leaders."

"Where does his main strength lie!"

"Do you mean Princ ess where does the main strength of his attack lie!"
"Yes indeed."
"Near Delight's Junc tion."
"What is his aim and goal!"
"Aurandebondia."
"What does he want!"
"To capt ure Delight's Junction so he t he enemy c an ext end tward us the power of the Thumbelinia fortifications."
Then there was a silenc e around the big round table as the spy prepared to answer ot her more important questions.He told how the Angelinia Agathia Daily times had stationed him in vivian Wickey in 1911, how during the fall of Vivian Wickey he disguised as a Glandelinian had investigated and written stories about the career of the Glandelinian generals there, and recounted Manleys rec ord through the Norma Reign of terrir terror his rise to prominence under Purgatorian, his seizin g of personal power in Vivian Wickey, his resigning command there to take up command of bigger armies in Calverinia, his military preparations for expansion against the besiegers of vivian Wickey, the first attack of Purgatorian now upon the works of Aurandebondia, his conquest of that section, his ruthless order for the massacre of sixteen million remaining c hristian in vivian Wickey his organization of all enormous forces t o be massed against Delight's Jun ction, the frightfulness of the battle there, and finally his determination t conqu r the Jen nie vivian Territory and break the christian seige of vivian Wickey. It was a graphic recitl recital.Upon its conclusion Angelinia Aronburg ques t ioned him c oncerning t he inter policial organization of the Glandelinian generals, and his opinion as to the xhoesiveness of the structure of the besieged enemy armies . Dolores Mic-Hollaster asked about the monetary situation of the foe in Vivian Wickey.Angeline Jennings questioned him on the organization of the enemy fleet its bases of supply in and outside the river mouths off Vivian Wic key the caliber and moral of its personel personell.Jennie Murmer wanted to know the Glandelinian internal indust rial suti situation in Vivian Wic key.Mildred Maxwell asked for facts concerning the organization and strength of the attacking Glandelinian armies, t he tactics of the Glandelinian armies, offic er material arms, equipment, artillery, situation of batteries and so forth. Penrod asked concern ing the admins tration of natural resource es, for Vivian Wickey, coal, iron, ore nik nickle, copper, tin recieved from Glandelinia through the sec ret passages.The welfare of the peasants outside of vivian Wickey, t he destruction of the farms by the seige, t he lack or inc rease of food supplies these were the subjects of interest to her.General Mansion asked whether the communication st system, tlephone and telegraph lines were standin g up under Glande linian efforts and administration.General Hendro Dargar the head of the Gemini asked about the pay, and the working hours, and housin g conditions of the munition workers for the enemy wit hin Vivian Wickey. The interrogation last ed more than an our hour, milk had been served around t he table and the spys voice was gradually becoming a whisper from t he incessant talkin g.
Although the situation faced by the besieging c hristian armies was indeed very tense the feeling gradually grew on the spy during th e interview that full realization of t he dangers at hand had not been brought home to the generals or t hearmy not even the Vivian Girls who had been unable to see much of the battle as the t erritories were inaccessable because of the battles violence.And the spies impression was that some of the staff offic ers of general Mansion c on sidered his vi ews concerning general Purgatorians powers to be greatly exaggerated, and needless ly alarmin , and also that the Vivian Girls may have had the same views for they proved it by Jennie Vivian as i saying rather sharply;
"Is't it possible sir"and she looked him straight in the eye as she stood up and pointed her finger at him c ritically;"It is it not us just possible t hat your forced ass association,with the Glandelinians and their radical C ommunistic generals has distorted your judgement?Is it possible that you have forgot ten your're an Abbiesannian.Could it be now that you yourself have c ome under the domination of what you and we call the t errible personality and will power of this "Red Terror." !It is my opinion, and my sisters t hat many of the stories that have appeared in the Angelinia Agat hia and ot her c it y news paper presses in the last year have been written with a propaganda purpose for general Purgatorians own benefit.He seems to have t reated you like a comrade , not knowing your true charac ter and almost like a con fident, and you c ome to us direc t from him.We were there ourselves only yest erday and had to destroy what his spies stole from us and Angelinia Agathia and Penrod, to prevent what is happening now, and yet it happened.I believe though that the biggest strength of the "Red Terror"of Vivian Wickey is "Red journ alism."
" Her blunt implications st ung him t o the quick but he had to be prudent .Yet he had ran a great number of unbelievable risks, worked lon g and desperat aly hard, seen as clearly as he was able, and reported as fairly as he could write.He s wal lowed a bitter retorted which would have been dangerous to let out and en ondeavored to answer the Vivian Girls c almly.Ture they believed the danger was great, and was prepared for any ermergen c y for they knew u any unprepardness could would be woe to them and the besieging armies but they didn't believe t hings were as bad at Vivian Wic key as the spy seat ed, as many ot her spies t hey had interviewed had really exaggerated things, and so violet,an d er sisters could not be blamed if they slightly doubted his full statement s.

"Your'exc ellen cy general Mansion, and you boy and girlscout generals here present ,I haven't come t hree quarters of the way aroun d the dangerous enemy infest ed territory of Vivian Wic key just for the purpose of sc aring oyour great and brave Princ esses here.Far from it .I am here bec ause I am an Abbiesannian and know the enemy more than any one else here does , and I c an prove wit hout any doubts whatever that my observations of t he military affairs, intern al p9 politic s and econ economic s of t he Glandelininn army and t he city in t heir possession will be not on ly of vital benefit to the besiegin g armies but t he whole Abbiesannian nation in general.I have seen many hundreds of thousands of dead children in the streets of Vivian Wic oy bec ause they were what the Glan delinians call"Too goody goody" I have seen as many c hildren who were c hild slaves butc hered and their entrails hung on elot ric trolly wires or paraded down streets on bayonets and pikes.I have seen organized child butcher6 in Norma C atherine which the Vivian Girl Prin cesses wouldn't dare look at though they saw plenty of massac res of c hildren themselves.I have wit nessed indes cribable horrors in the wake of this "Red Scourge.They call him general Purgat orian. I suppose "Purgatorian"means "Purgatory."He's not a Purgatory.He is the In fern al one himself.Your Excen Excellency general Manaji Mansion and all present ,I was looking in the face of the Mayor of Julio Callio when he was exec uted, and I saw the members of his hohousehold wife and children mure murdered with their gutted bodies hung to the branc hes of trees with many children also hung on t ree branches h with ent intestines exposed at the s m same time.I want you t o understand that the man who attacks us at Aurande bondia and extends the attack to Delight's Junction and who attacks with all the weight and might of as big an army as he can muster again st us--t his man is a supreme genu genius of evil, a c old, cruel calculating, dominatin g force that knowns no moral code, no scruples, no principals, and who makes of God the same as he would make of a child slave whom he butchers.And t his man, ladies and gentlemen, t his Glandelinian, who hates us as on y a devil c an hat e us good Abbiesannians told me in Vivian Wickey, hardly a month ago, that he intends to crush the besieging armies, or committ sucide if he fails.As for you Princesses, if you do not believe it--, if I cannot make you see it, if you're losing out on such things as you have witnessed in your past days, and think Purgatorian is less bad than t he Mn Manleys ,---God help us and the whole nat ion."
A man in a gray uniform like that of a Glandelinian sat admidst the foliage of a tree branch within the outskirts of the christian lines, and moped, looking dismall and brooding over his misfortunes.After a time two men dressed as C alverinian officers came along and sat beneath the tree, not knowing any one was in the branch above hem.The one who was tallest remarked;
"I feel much b etter dear comrade, since we heard that t he Vivian Girl Princesses have acted wisely and are seeing to it that great reinforc ements are being hurried tward Aurandebondia and Delight's Junction.It's a terrible bat tle but they hope the enemy now can be checked."
"And I feel much better now that the news is good."returned the otherwith a sigh of pleasure."You and I friend comrade, are much more hopeful, t han those c lumsy foriegn people, who are within t h ir lines as refugees, spending most of their time dressing in fine clothes, and who live in splendid dwellings and only content themselves with watching the progress of the seige, and battles at axgreat safe distance but do not lend us a helping hand whatever. You and I do not care much for them.Ins tead of doing anything useful, they not only go t to be early at nights but waste more than half the mornin g in sleep instead of getting up early in the morning like t he whole army does.To us they'recas thoughtlessxand as helpless as logs of wood.We'd deport them if the seas were not so dangerous be cause of the Glandelinian submarines."
"You speak truely responded the taller man."I often feel sorry though for these unfortunate ~~Vivvin~~ firoegn people, for many are good, nevertheless and are my friends but you must know they're so different from us Abbiesannians and they're scared stiff about the very thought of entering the army to fight for us.Even the boy and girlscouts are happi r than they despite the perious expeditions and adventures t hey go through(poo poo), and they th ey require less to make them coht content.And the gr girlscouts are the luckiest children soldiers of all for they make the enemy so afraid of them that even Glandelinian c avarly won't engage them at long range or close quarters, they can rac e swiftly where they will on their swift horses, and encamp any place they care to without fear of the enemy no mat ter how near the enemy lines, t heir food con sists of nanything t h y they gather from raids into the enemys provision c amps and t he like, and their drink is any ammo unt of milk which they buy atvany time from our army cant eons. If I could not be a Cl Calverinian officer in charge of a brigade, my next choice would be to live as a child scout does."

The man who had hid himself in the tree,,, had listened carefullly to t his speech(give me a peach), and seemed to find comfort in it , for he hushed his slight moaning.

"Of course the boy and girlscout s are rather a good and and better help to us than all the sies we have."The taller man said picking up an envelope he found on the ground."I myself know so much about them that I would not care to meet them were I a Glandelinian instead of what I am.Whoever originat od t he Vivianites did add a good deal to the safty of the Nations cause in general, and I do not consider that any of the Glandelinian generals kn w even what they really do.No regiment of child scouts were ever so dangerous to the enemy as the i kind our own Ci Christian armies have."

"I cannot quit e agree with you there."replied the smaller man."The Lagorian child scouts are said to be the most dangerous to the enemy."

"Let us all admit thatvall the child scouts are good where ever they are."said the taller man"But you must agree with me that any regiment of girl and boyscouts that can outdo the Vivianites arecunatural.There's lot s of proof of what they are.What shall we do with this strange letter we just found.It's written in a Foriegn tongue, and I or even you cannot read it."I

"Let us carry it back to the headquarters of the Vivian Girls."suggested the smaller man."The Princesses are able to read it if it is English."

So they went away and took the strange letter they found with them.Violet and her sisters however could not read the letter because it was in German instead of in english and the letter was sent to Gertrude Angeline to have G or George Zimmer man read it.George Zimmermann promptly gave the letter a good examination but he was to surpr to his surprise to say that it was on y a love letter to some one else of and of no military value.It was later tward t hat evening as Angelinia Aronburg was preparing to go out on a little scouting tour to see whether the enemy had been held in check or not, with a group of boy and girl scouts to accompany her, that a man in a gray uniform botwen between two soliers was admitted before her.

"I am a man you may well know though I do not mention any names."said the man"I am partly responsible for what you and the Princesses have suffered through my own careless fault, and therefore I have come to ask you to forgive me for the great wrong I did in allow ing and causin the c Glandelinian s ies t o steal from Violet and her sisters the objec to whose loss has caused the disaster in the awful battle to day."

"You did that!"said Angelinia Aronburg in great surprise."Why--I----I ---"

"yes I did."

"Are you sorry then for sure!"asked An elinia Aron urg, lookin g hard at the man.

"I am very sorry"declared the prisoner."I hv have been thin ing over I have been thinking over my misdeds for a long time, for I had little els e to do but to thin k, and being even a foriegner and a war correspondent I'm suprised that I did such a wicked thing and had such little regard for your cause.I am now convinced that even had I succeeded in making myself fame I should not have been happy for many hours of quiet thought have shown me that only those things t hat one acquires honestly are able to render one content."

"I guess that's so indeed"said Angelinia Roonie."But you made a foolish mistake and no one can I'm afraid save you from the Court Marshall even the Vivian Girls."

"Any ohow"said Jennie Turner"The poor fool seems truly sorry and if he has now become a good and honest man we ought to forgivevhim.As he is no spy anyohow it won't go hard with him.But he'll be deported north from here."

"I fear I could never become a citizen.of Abbiesannia"said the prisoner"For the work I have done against you has brought me a bad reputation.But with the kind for giveness of my former enemies.I hope afterwards to become a very good mn man and be highly respected ."

"Wait here till I run for Schoofield Penrod."said Mildred Maxwell."He'll do what he can to have to stay within our lines untill everything is all right."

"No-no don't do that" l pleaded the man in an ex i excited way."I only want Miss Angelinia Aronburgs forgiveness, I don't want to remain here any longer as I'm only a past to everybody now since I'm known.I was ambitious and cruel.I've learned a lesson and I'd ratherf not stay here."

"Just as you like"said Angelinia Aronburg, as she mounted her horse."Perhaps you are right, for you certainly must have come to reason at last, and if you do go away, and should ever backslide or go wicked again you couldn't do much harm when you are not here here."

"Then you'll forgive me for all the trouble I have caused you and the christian army!"he asked earnestly.

"Of course we must forgive any one who is reallly sorroy for his offenses."

"Than yk you said the man, and he allowed his two escorts to lead him away.

"Please little girlscout"said a man wo who appeared he be a duplic at e of t he Shaggy man of Oz"can you tellme the road to a town called Jennie Vivian. ?"

Susan Farrol looked himover c arefully.To her he was very shaggyball right, but tall and hz handsome.At first she had been suspicious as she saw him come down t h e road from what she believed was t headirec tion of the enemys lines, but his face was honest, he did not have glandelinian features, in fact he looked decidedly foriegn, there was a twinkle in ihis eye that was pleasant and he had spoken part English and broken Abbiesannian."

"Oh yes she replied."I can tell you if I wish.But first who are you and what do you want to go there for.?"

"He was surprised to hear her speak English.

"That's s t range "he said."I thought you were a girlsc out of the Vivianites ."

"I am"she answered.There are some of us who have learned the English."But if you wish to go tc Jennie „ivian Town y u'll have to go through the c hris tian lines first .But you must have a pass and know the counter sign.But t his isn't the road at all.It goes to Delight'shJunction, and that is dangerous just now."

"This is not the road!"

"No indeed. You will have to cross the fourty five ac re lot , follow the lane t o the highway, go north to the Jennie Vivian Territory, and take---let me see"

"To be sure dearvgirlscout, see as far as Jennie Vivian Town if you like."said the strange shaggy man.

"Yes you take the branch road next to the stretch of pines over there, or take the branc h by the great Sunbeam C reek; or else---"

"Won't n any of them do little girlscout."

"Of course not Mr.You must take the right road to Jennie Vivian Town."

"And that is the one by the willow trees, or---"

"Dear me"c ried Susan"I shall have to show you the way you are so stupid.Wait a mil minute untill I run into the tent and get my sunbonnet.You can't c ome through you know the sentires here won't let you ."

Th e man who appeared to be so shaggy waited.He was c hewing on a piec e of straw as if it tasted good but some how or other he didn.'t He looked around and saw the child scout encampment not far away and lots of girl and boy scouts walkin g around, and a number of sentries in the road.There was an army canteen nearest the road.The man thought that something more like food would tast e better than any thing like a by hay straw, so he walked over to buy some. He bought some c rac kers and cheese, and also some apples which he put into his pocket.Pret ty soon Susan Farrol came out of a tent near by with her sun military heart shaped hat and she called out;

"Come on Mr Shaggy man if you want me to show you the road to Jenn ie Vivian."

She clime climbed the fenc e inbthe fourty ac re lot , and he followed her, walk in g slowly and yet stumbling over the little hillocks in t he pasture from cono ussions of distant shell explosions.

"My but you are clums y"said the little girl."Can 't you stand up before con cussions like we can."!

"No miss. I wish the enemy was out of here don't you."

"Of c ourse any one does Shaggy man."replied Susan , giving a severe look in the direction of the enemys lin es."T If the enemy ever wins the battle over there at Audandebondia and Delight's Junction it would spoil the whole seige and then general Mansion would not be able to continue, and that would make an awful big disaster to our cause and---and----------."

"Never mind said the shaggy man."The enemy won't win I guess.Id Is this t he lane!"

"Yes"replied Susan, c limbing another fence,I'll go as far as the ig highway with you but look out for glandelinian patrols."

"Thankee miss you are a very kind little christian girlscout for your size,I'm sure he "he said gratefully.

"It isn't ever every one who knows the r road to Jennie Vivian"Susan remarked as sh she tripped along the lane,"But I've rode past t here many a time with a girl or boyscout patrol, and so I believe I c ould find it blindfolded."

"Don't do that little girlscout"said the stranger, earnes tly"You might make a mistake. "

"I won't"she answered with a laghing with a lag lua laugh."Here's the highway.Now it's the second--no that's not safe, the Glandelin ians patrol are in that neigh borhood--the t hird turns to the left--no that is not safe either.Maybe its the fourt h.Let's see.The first one is by the oak treel and t he second is by the pines but we can't go that way we might meet Glandelinian patrols or be fired on by enemy cannons;; and then;;;"

"Then what!"he inquired putting his han d in his coat poc ket. She shaded her eyes from the sun with her arm, looking anxiously down the road.

"Come on"she commanded.There are no Glandelinians in sight .It 's only a s hort distance further, so I may as well show you."

After a while they c ame to a place where three roads branched in t hree dir ections, and susan pointed to one, and said;

"That's it Mr."

"Then s Thank you very much little girlscout,I'm very much obliged"he said and started down along another road."

"T Not that road"she cried."ou are going wrong.

He stopped.

"I t hought you told me just now that the cen ter road of these three was the one to Jennie Vivian Town."said he running his fungers t hrough his big shaggy whiskers in a puzzled way.

"So it is.You misunderstood me."

"But I don't want to go to Jennie Vivian Town Miss Girlscout ."

"You don!"

"Of course not ..I wanted you to show me the road so I should not be foolish to go there by mistake."

"Oh but where in the world do you want to go then if not the road you as ked for."!

"I'm not particular miss."

This answer astonished the little girlscout, and it made her slightly provoked to, to think she had taken all this trouble for not hin g and gone this distanc e from the camp .

"There are three good roads here."Observed the strange shaggy man turning slowly around"Seems to me a person gc could go mostwanywh re from this lac ed if it was not so dangerous tobtrave l.Susan turned around and gazed in s urprise.She saw far in the distanc e a squadron f of Glandelinian cavarly coming, more horse men than she had ever seen before, but just now evidently they were not headed her way.She tried to count them, knowing there ought to be two hundred, but when she had counted three hundred and sixty and saw more coming ih in ranks and still more, she grew bewildered and st opped, for t he soldiers were as many as if a whole division of cavarly men were approaching, so if she kept on countingvshe was likely to-e ount up to t housands and still not stop.

"Dear me"she exclaimed."Those Glandelinians are on the road by which I want to return by.And now"Why what are those Glandelin ians doing there shaggy man ."

"Can't say Miss"he responded sitting down upon the ground as if tired with standing."but if they come this way we'd better hide.They were not there a minu t e ago."

"I thought so"she answered greatly perplexed ."and I saw those kind called Wheelers too, but they've passed out of sight now.These roads are not strange t o t he Glandelin ians--and what a lot of them there are in that column.Where do you suppose they're all going to."

"Maybe they're out patroling the territory."observed the shaggy man.He put his hand in i his side pocket and drew out an apple. Susan didn't know what t o do.To return by the middle road herself alone was too dangerous for it might be a long time before those Glandelinians would go away.She looked around her anxiously for some familiar landmark that could lead her back by another rout e, but outside the center road everythin was strange.Between the branches of the ot her road were green meadows and a few shrubs of trees but she couldn't see anywhere the encampment from which she had just come or anything she had ever seen before,--except the strange shaggy man,and the stron g numbered Glandelinian cavarly.Besides this she had counted so many of the foe sol xi soldiers, trying to find out how many there was that as they wouldn't stop coming she could not tell by what other road she could take to go back t o camp, and besides the thought of meret ing with Glandelinians even on t he other roads in the same direction began to wrroy her and make her feel anxious .she had her cart idge belt and pistols with her and her rifle slung over her should and her lon g shapr sharp fightin g knife but what good would that be against so many dangerous Glandelinians on chorseback.

S SUSAN FARROL HAS STRANGE ADV N ADVENTURES OUTSIDE THE CHRISTIAN 49LINES..".

CHAPTER SEVEN..."."."."."

"I'm afraid Mr Shaggy man"she said with a sigh."That we'll be lost if those Glandelinians c ome our way for there is no place for us to hide."

"There's nothing to be afraid of"he replied throwing away the c ore of his apple and beginning to eat anot her one."One of these roads must load to sa some safe locality if not into dangerous territory.So what does it matter."!

"I want to return to the christian lines again"she said.

"Well why don't you!"said he(too hee)

"I don't know which road to take which is not free of Glandelinians."

"That is too bad"he said shaking his shaggy head gravely."I wish I could help you but I can' t.I'm a stranger in these parts."

"Seems as if I were too."she said sitting down beside him."It's fun ny.A few minutes ago I was home, and I just came to show you the way to Jennie Vivian Town;;

"So I shouldn't go there by mistake and run into peril."

"On And now I'm lost myself and don't know how to get there."

"Have an apple"suggested the stranger, handing her one with pret ty red cheeks."

"I'm not hungry"said Susan pushing it away.

"But I'm sure you will be by to night, then you'll be sorry you didn't eat the appl e"said he.

"If I am I'll eat the apple then."promished Susan.

"Perhaps I won't have any apples then."he returned beginning to eat the red cheeked one himself. Susan was too thoughtful over the situation to eat just then.When a person is in a worry they're not hungry.The little girl had en countered some queer adventures since she finally became a girlscout whenet her whet her her maid Clara liked it or not, but this was the queerest of them all.To be closed in by Glandelinian cavarly in fifteen minutes so near to t he Vivianite camp, and also within the very territory of the christian lines was an experienc e that fairly bewil dered her.

"Will your comrades the Vivianites worry!"asked the stranger, his eyes twinkling in a pleasant way.

"I believe so."qn answered Susan with a sigh."Mildred Manning who is my capt ian says there is always something strange happening to me, but I've always come home to camp safe at last.So perhaps she'll take comfort and believe I'll come back to campsafe this time."

"I'm positively sure you will and how"said the shaggy looking man smilingly nodding at her."Good little Abbiennian girlscouts never c ome to any harm you know, though to me you look foriegn yourself.For my part I'm good too because I'm an Abbiennian, so nothing ever hurts me.I'm not afraid of the Glandelinians either. Are you!"

"No indeed."

Susan looked at him c uriously if not with surprise and a litg' little disgust, for his clothes were indeed very shaggy, more shaggy than t he shaggy man she had seen pict ured in the Oz books, his boots were shaggy and full of holes t oo, and his hair was also shaggy but he didn't have no whiskers .She really wondered for she had been told that in Abbiennia and her sister s t ates were there were no persons who were Hoboes and t ramps becaus e the right cousness of the ric h prevent ed any one from being poor.Yet tramps and hoboes were lazy as she knew well from her own experienc e in America, and she couldn't understand how this man was one when even his smile was sweet, his eyes kind, and his face had an unusually honest expression.

"Why don't you want to go to the town of Jennie Vivian!"she asked.

"Because the Glandelin ians are looking for me everywhere, and if I went to Jennie Vivian Town or even in that direction, I may come upon a Glandelinian patrol.I don't want to meet them my dear."

"Why not"she inquired.

"These Glandelinians"declared the "Shaggy man" are not my friends , and for good particular reasons I don't want them to even see me.I have som et hing in my possession that I don't want any one no matter who they are who I don't know, or who don't know me to even know of."

"Why what is that!"

"You being a good honest little girl scout, I'll show you if you won't tell any on e."he answered in a low mysterious voice .

"There is not a soul around here to tell."said the girl ..::.

"The "ghaggy man" scarc hed in one pocket,, carefully, and in another poc ket and in a third.Acidentally he pulled out a pocket book full of monsey and she wondered howe he could be a hcboe and have all that money if he was really as hon st as he looked.At last he drew out a small parc el wrapped in old crumpled nawspaper, and tied with a cotton strin g. He unwound the string carefully, opened the parcel and took out a small envelope.He drew from the n envelope a small piece of paper and showed her the writing.It was a sort of well the strangest code writ ing she had ever seen in er her life time before.

"Can you make it out ?"he asked.

"Yes but I would have to study it first for some time"she answered."What is it ?"

"This my dear"said he impressively"Is a wonderful code plan which I robbed general Purgatorian of.?"

"I thought foriegners sir had nothing to do wit h the enemy!"

"You are greatly mistaken little girl.I'm no foriegner and very little En lish can I speak.If I was tospeak in English you wouldn't understand half the words I saw."

"How did you get it from general Purgatorian?"shecasked looking at the strange letters with interest.

"C hild slaves secretly helped me and I helped them get away with me for a reward."

"pidn't he organize a persuit then?"she inquired .

"I couldn't tell."replied"the shaggy man" wrapping and t ying the envelope with great care and putting it away in the same pocket."But I don't feel sorry a bit ." he added.

"Did you know the way to general Purgatorians headquarters.?"

"Yes.The child slaves thtce showed me the way."

"Why did t hey do so.pidn 't they kno xit was danger us dangerous?"

"Yes, but t hey though know we're fighting for their freedom, and it is their nature to help us at whatever thecost ."

"Once"said susan"I knew of a Glandelinian general who longed wit h al his heart to destroy all the child slaves so the Christian soldiery c ouldn't rese us and free them, but they never had a chanc e to do b so because of the Lagorian Child Scouts, who rescued al t he child slaves in spit e of him."

"This Glandelinian general."replied the "Shag shaggy man" with a saugh "I'm afraid can do anythin g he wants if his mind is set on it ."

The "shaky "shaggy man" sat silent for about fift een min ut es apparet apparently considering the c ases of what the result would be at meeting with Glandelinian horse o horsemen , while susan watched him with an air of great interest .At last the stranger t urned and inquired;

"what's your name little girl."

"My name is ,usan"said she jumpin g up again"But what are we going to do now.We c an't stay here forever you know, nd we may be in dan gerous t errit ory and would not know it."

"Let's take the road west of here."he suggested."

"but where will t hat road lead to."

"I don't believe it will lead tward the enemys lines,"and he got up from the ground, where he had been sitting and started down this road with a brisk pa haste as if sure it was the best way for him to go, and susan almost relutant ly followed him. The western road seemed to be a good road, and was very st raight t oo gr going through green fields and meadows c overed with so many daisies and buttercups that it didn't seem as if a great seige was going on here at all. Susan began to fear that they were getting a good ways from t he boy and girlscout camp, since here everything was strange to her, but now it would not do any good at a'l t o go back where the t other roads all met , because many glandelinian patrols would be encountered.

This road apparently appeared to be a very good and wide road, and did not c urve thisway or that ,or wind through the green meadows and fields like ot her roads but went straight ahead.In the di t distanc e there were fortific ations of the most formidable sort to be seen, but so heav y h had shell fire been in this locality some days hence that even the landsc ape and nature was ina sore wrec k, andthe dasies and buttercups and ot her flowers appeared to have been scared by something and were torn up or grounded to earth.Thwre were no o hous es ofany sort to be seen intact, and here and there numerous bodies of gray coats were seen hav half grounded into the ground also as if half buried by the shell fire.It was a dreadful sight but Susan sure had nerve and s he screwed her self tightly up against its horror.But she began to fear they were get ting a good way from the enc ampments of the child scouts, since here it was a sc ene of horrible death and devastation before her, but it would do no good at all t o go back where they might meet with Glandelinians.so she kept on b side the "ghaggy man"who whistled cheerfully toheguile a journey that even might prove quite dangerous should the enemy again open a shell storm, but they soon followed a slight turn in the road, and saw before them a series of big pine trees, one of ws which was over the high way but now were shattered and in a wrec k, themselves with all their branches strewn everywhere and the groun d an d road darkened with t heir needle like leaves . In t he middle of the road sat a very small boy dressed in foriegn colo c lot hes, much unlike anything that the Abbiennnians were ever seen to wear, and these were sailor c lot hes, and he was makin g a big pile of green out of the need needles which he scooped up wit h his hand.He must have been doing this some time, bec ause the pile was already big enough to reqe reach up to his head while he sat half s ubmerged in it .

Susan and the s trange "Shaggy man"came to a halt before the lit tle boy, who kept on piling the needles in a sober and persistent fashion.

"Who are you?"asked Susan forgotten for a moment he was foriegn and speakin g Abbiennian.

"He looked up at her calmly, but he didn 't answer but shrugged his shoulders . His fac e however was round, pretty and c hubby, and his eyes were big, blue, and earn est.

she realized her mistake and believing the las could speak English again asked;

"Who are you lit t le boy.?"

"I'm mammas boy"said he.

"But what is your name!"she inquired.

"Peter Miche Michaels.

"This road is not a safe place for you to sit ."she exclaimed.

"Is n't h it?"he asked still pilin g the needn needles.

"Course not .The glandelinians may come here and kill you. You must kn ow that?."

"Must I?"

"To be sure.Whatdo you thin k the Glan delin ians will not do to you?"

"He paused in ihis diggin and tried to think.

"Papa always said I must play when there are no soldiers of any kind around."

He said.

"What is your papas name?"

"Francis Michaels."

"what is your mamman name."

"Henreiet ta Michels."

"what would you do if Glandelin ian soldiers c ame here when you were pilin g t hose brindles."?

"Don't know."

"Never mind"said her man companions smiling."We'll call the boy Peter as his mamma does.That n ame is as good as any Saints, and better than some."

Susan watched the boy pile t he needles.

"Where do you live?"she asked.

"Don't know"was the reply."My home was destroyed by some soldiers who had gray clothes."

"How did you come here?"

"Don't know.2 he said again.

"Don't you know where you c ame from."t

"From some camp c alled a "Refuge"said he.

"Why he must b c be lost from the Refugee camps"she said to the "shaggy Man". he turned to the boy once more.

"what are you going to do?"she inquired.

"Play in these funny needles."said he.

"but you can't play in these ' funny'needles forever, and what are you going to do then ?"she persisted.

"Try to find my way home."

"what are you going to do if you meet with Glandelinian soldiers?"she again persisted.

"don't know what they are."said the boy.

"But you must know somet hing about glandelinians." declared Susan getting provoked .

"Must I?"he asked lookin g up in surprise."

"Of c ourse you must."

"But I never saw them before."

"Those soldiers who burned your home as you said were Glandelinians."

"what must I know about them?"

"What's going to become of you if they st eal you away for one thing."she answered.

"Do you know what's going to become of me if they catch me?"he asked.

"Yes.They'd kill you."she admitted.

"Do you know what's going to bec ome of you if they catch you little girl?" he continued earnestly.

"I can't say I do, but t hey won't c atch me very easy"she said looking at her two pistols and her long cure ed knife she had in the sheat h beside her long rifle with barrels like revolvers and as many chambers.

The "shaggy man" laughed.
"She's the poor boy is too young to know anyt ihn g about those wicked Glandelinian soldiers , susan "he said.
"but Peter doesn't seem to know anything about Glandelinians at all."she declared.
"Do you peter?"
He shook his head, which had pretty curls all over it of red color, and replied with perfect calmness;
"Yes I do, but have never seen them.They're wicked soldiers and wish to kill all good children and chase God away from us ."
Never before had Susan met with any one who h gave this sort of inforat ion.But nevertheless the boy was evidently lost, and his folks if they were livin g would certainly be sure to worry about him.He seemed one year ol younger than susan and was prettily dressed, as if some one loved him dearly and took much pains to make him look well.How then did he come to be in this lonely and dan erous territory!she wondered.what if while he sat there an attac would start and a shell s torn swept death and destruction in that localit y again.Near Peter on the ground lay a sailor hat with a gilt anchor on the band.But it lay on a clean piece of paper a piec e of which he also sat showing that whatever he was doing or did on the outside he was particularly careful not to get himself dirty.And these leaves c ouldn't dirty any one.his sailor trousers however were short , and the broad collar of his blouse had gold anchors sewed on its corners.The boy had paused in his work andwas looking at Susan and her st rangely colored uniform in open eyed wonder.
"Have you ever seen a Glandelinian soldier!"asked Susan.
"T o see what soldier!"answered Peter.
"I mean have you ever seen soldiers wearing gray c oats and yellow t rousers and square topped black hat s but where they didn't see you!"
"Yes"said Peter."There's a well in our back yard.They killed and t hrew my baby sister in it."
"You don't understand the situation then."cried Susan."What would you have done had you been sitting here and a troop of them came up here on o horseback!"
"I'm not sc ared of them"he said."See t he big pile of st ones I got here.I'd throw them at the soldiers.They killed my sister, and I hate them."
"T hen why did you leave the camp and come out here."
"I want to meet them so I could throw stones at them."he answered again.
"What would you do then if they chased you."
"I c an run good "He answered."Horses can't climb big fenc es.I can and quick too.I can even shoot.See I st ole a pistols from one of those d ad soldiers lying out there."
"Am I a Glandelinian"she asked.
"no you ain't!"
"Am I a christian girl then!"
"Yes you are."
"Why!"
"Bec ause you got on a purple coat and that funny heart shaped hat ."He answered looking up at her with big eyes .
"You are brighter than I thought Peter."she said.
"Am I!"he asked.
"Sure you are."
"why!"he asked again looking at her curiously.
"Because you answer correc tly all my questions."she replied.
"It's no use wast eing time asking Peter any more questions"said the shaggy man" who had been eating another apple."but we must take care of the poor little c hap as we cannot leave him out here all alone.so he had bet ter c ome along with us."
Susan seized him and raised him t o his feet (going down t he st reet () brushing the pine n eedles off from his clothes with her hand .
"Well"said the "shaggy man""Let's start on or we won't get anywhere before the afternoon c omes and we don't wan t t o meet with an y more Glandelinian soldiers ."
"Where do you expec t we should get t o.We're st ill in christian positions you know."
"I don't know untill we find out"said the man with a lu lu laugh.We are sure to find out when we get there."
"Why yes"said Susan,"that seems reasonable "shaggy man"."
Pet er Michael t ook the stran gers hand willingly, for no matter how he looked, with his shaggy clothes he had with him a beautiful lookin g girlscout, and this made t he boy love her at once.They started on, with susan on one side, and the "shaggy man"in the middle, the little party trudging on more cheerfully than any one might have supposed.The girl was getting used to the qu er ani s cmetin s dangerous adventures, which despite their scary horrified nature interested her very muc h. She wasn't scared of death, for she believed now she was an Abbieannian, and t hat all good little girls go to heaven right away..?.?.?. .

Even the little boy himself, ichael did not seem to be a bit afraid or worried b cause e he also was lost in a strange and dangerous country, andapparently the "Shaggy man"either did not have no home, and was as happy in one place as anot her or else he was a christian spy disguised as that.At lease he had t old susan that he had recently robbed general Purgatoians headquarters and that the country side outside the christian line was being soured for him by the Glandelinians. Before them all this time were many ot her christian encamments dor they were not any ways outside the christian lines, even though they were lost, and ahead ofthem they saw a fine big red and yellow and also blue decorated arch spanning the wider Company Street, and when they came nearer they found that the arch was beautifully carved, anddecorated with rich colors. A row of wooden peacocks with spread tails ran alon g the top of it, and all the feathers were gorgeously pea pi painted.In the center was a large girlscout's head, and the head wore a shrewd and knowin g appearance, and had large spectacles over its eyes, and a hat on top of its head that showed it to resemble some one of very high rank...
While the travlers were looking with curiousity and admi at ion at this strange and beautiful arch, there suddenly marched out of it a company of boy and girlscouts in seperate troop.They were reddish purple jackets, blue dresses, and yellow stockings and blue shoes for the girls, the color being the same in t he boys except they were yellow stockings, and the jacket and pantaloons were of the red purple. The hats of the girls were of the color of the jackets but those of the boys were a bright red red color with blue trimmin ng trimmings. Each boy and girlscout was armed with long rifles, and had slung around them double cal cartridge belts.They were not mounted having left their horses inside.The sight of these the way t hey looked and the way they were armed could have made any of the Glandelinians shudder.
A captian marched in front of the company of child scouts his uniform embr idered with gold(don't grow old) braid and which made it appear handsomer than the ot hers.
Almost before our friends realized it the child scouts had surrounded them on all sides, and the captian said;
"You are wanted by the chief of out camp. She has a mission for the two of you to accomplish.I'm glad you came.I see you areen Vivianite little girl, and I believe you're little susan Farrel."
"what is a mission?"asked Peter Michael.
"A mission is to go out to some far off c ountry and do something for another person."replied the boyscout captian with a smile that was half a grin."
"You mean you want the man and the girlscout to be a Mission ary?"asked Pet er Michael.
"No li not like that."said t he captian."A Missionary couldn't do any good amongst the Glandelinians."
That made the shaggy man laugh.
"Good morning capt ian."he said bowing politely t o all t he boy and girld s girlscouts, and vety low to t heir comman der."I t rust you are in good health, and your parents an d other relatives are all well!"
The boyscout captian looked at the "shaggy man"and his sharp features grew more pleasant and smiling .
"We are pretty well thank you sir."said he. "But as we have been away from our folks so long and hav't not recieved any letters for some time bec ause the war communications all are all cut off we don't know how they are.But you must come with me to see Captian General Groveton."
"Who is he?"asked Peter Michaels, with earnes t eyes.
"One of the chief c ommanders of us boy and girlscouts, t he great and wise boyscout leader, who l q leads us all and knows how to keep the enemy out of our community."
"What's Capt in Gener)l and what's c' u' nity?"inquired Peter Michael.
"A general is a man or other who is a captian over a whole arm y, and a Commun ity is a place or territory where we reside or live.But now friends pleas e come with me, for it is my duty t o esc ort you at once to his headquarters ."
The boy and girlscouts marched back through the long arch again, and wit h them marched the little girl and boy,and the strange"shaggy man", and once t hrough the opening they foun d a big city of tri colored t ents spread out before them t he sides of the tents being yellow, the roof purple and t he short drap eries red.Over each entrance of a tent was a pict ure of a child scouts head, a girl or boy, representing t he child scouts who were in t hat tent , t his effect being quite pretty and unusual to the little boy, but not s trange to Sus n or the man for these were always seen in child d scout camps. As out friends marched along, a swarm of girl and boyscouts came out into t he Company Street to get a vi w view of the "strange Shaggy man."These child scouts were all equally as handsomely uniformed, but there were girlscouts who seemed more better dressed and who wore rounded hats with small domed tops with feathers woven toget her effectu effectively and of bright hud hues, which the little boy thought were quite artistic and decidedly attractive.He didn't

He didn't know these girls were of very high rank. One of them unknown to the lad was Aaaaaaaaaaaaaaaaaonburg Angelinia Aronburg.Peter Mischal stared and stared untill his eyes were big and round, and he would have stumbled and fallen more than once had not the "shaggy man"gripped his hand more tightly. They were beautiful children who the lad stared at and he was very interested, but the way some of them looked back at him he got got of timid and looked the other way.Boy .And girlscouts usually don't like to be stared at by strangers and they get sore. In a few minutes they came to a big square or clearing in the camp, and in the center of the square stood a house instead of a tent.It was also colored like the tent. Susan knew it at once, because it had in front of its tall ye yellow flag pole with the National Standard flying.It was the headquarters of the child scout officers of highest rank.There were three or four aidecamps going into the house, and a number of guards guarding the front gate and also the court, and many more guarding the door(don't a more), but they saluted to the captian, and bowed to Susan and the "shaggy man", and admitted them without question.The captian led them through a longcorridor.There wd were guards inside here also and to one of them the captian announced his purpose.They were led into a broad room which was decorated by all sorts of at roomers, standards, and so forth in of red yellow and blue and other colors. In the center of the room was a large oblong table but there was no one in the room, and the boyscout told them to wait untill he fetched the captin general.Timothy Groveton soon appeared, wearing great spectacles over his eyes looking solemn and important important. Susan knew the boyscout captian general at once, because though she did not know him personally she had seen him often pass by and had been told who he was.Having met with still higher boy or girlscout generals in her adventures she knew what to do, and stood at attention while the boyscout captian said;;

"Your Excellency I humbly beg to report, that I brought these friends of our cause to you as you have asked.This us Susan, and this "Shaggy man" is one of our most famous christian spies but I'm not allowed to reveal his name unless he wills it."

"So--so"said the boyscout general looking at them keenly keenly."What brought you here little boy to "To Mihael."You're not a scout too at your age are you."

"No.But I'm not afraid of the Dandeldinians."

"Well I'm glad to hear that.You can come in if you like.Especially we feel highly honored to have little Susan Farrol with us partiularly, and we appreciate her coming at the boy scouts captians bidding.For what ever spot little susan goes to is sure to become famous.I hope you willagain some day down about a hundred Glandelinians with a pistol single handed."

This speech greatly surprised the little girlscout, who asked;;

"How did your Excellency know my name!"

"Why everybody in the christian lines knows you my dear."said Groveton ."Don't you realize that.You are quite an important personage since Violet,and her sisters made you their friend, since you single handed shot down so many Glandelinians in those woods."

"Do you know violet,and her sisters !"she asked wonderingly.

"I certainly do"he answered gladly.""And I have met them often. You know Violet and her sisters are the best.Princesses in the world and the greatest spies the world over heard of."

"Are they"said Susan ."I didn't know that."

"Yes they are, and if our christian armies succeeds in retaking Aurandebon dia and saving our Santa Fe Positions from capture there will be the most brilliant military ceremony ever held within any christian encampment, and I summoned you because they wished for you to do something very important for them.It might be a dangerous mission of course but they wouldn't ask you to go anywhere where they wouldn't go themselves .They might even go with you."

"Susan hesitated a moment .

"I'm sure I would like to do anything for her."she said,"But how can I get to their own part of the encampments when I am lost from my own.It's a good way to the encampment of the Burroughs where they are."

"The burrough encampment !"he exclaimed, surprised.

"Why yes, I am far from the encampment of the Vivianites now am I not!" she returned.

"What a queer notion."cried the boyscout leader beginning to laugh."what ever made youthink we are far from the Vivianite camps."!

"I left the Vivian Nite camps only about two hours ago"that's the reason she said perplexed.

"But tell me my dear did you ever see such an encampment like this that would not be one belonging to the Burroughs!"he questioned.

She looked around and thought the tents seemed familiar.

"No"your Excellency."she exclaimed.

"Then why do you wonder than an hour or two should lose you out of the christian encampments and the camps of the Vivianites when in fact you came back to it then by a rear road!"

"Dear me."exclaimed Susan. "Is this another at range adventure.!"

"It seems to be"said the boyscout general smiling."You thought you wdrwere lost from your camp, and entered in another direction.Your Vivianite camp must be very small if you are lost from it.It would take you two days to lose yourself just now from the encampment."

Susan turned to the "shaggy man"st ranger, and her face was grave and reproachful."

"Are you some tricky man in disguise who tried to play a joke on me!"

"No"he answered.

"Did you mislead me when you asked the way to the town of Jennie Vivian !" she continued.

"Who ever heard of an Abbiennnian man playing tricks on children !"he replied.

"No Susan my dear, I'm not to blame for this strange backward journey in any way I assure you.I didn't try to get you away from your camps at all, and you know I was willing to help you out, but didn't know the way myself."

"Never mind then"said the little girl thought fully."There isn't so much to see outside of the christian lines as on there is here, and I guess as long as I'm not lost after all, my comrades and friends won't be worried if they get word I'm not lost ."

"That 's right" declared the boy scout general, nodding approval."Be content with your lot(hot on the pot) whatever it happens to be if you are wise. Which reminds me that you have a little new companion with you,---he looks very clever and bright ."

"He is"said susan;;and the shaggy man added;

"His name is Michael Peters or probably Peter Michaels, I forgot which."

Indeed it was amusing to note the expression on the face of Timothy Groveton as he looked the little boy over, from his sailor hat to his stubby shoes, and it was equally deverting to watch Peter Michaels stare at the boyscout leader in return.No boyscout leader ever beheld a fresher fairer childs face, and he had that is Peter has never had before seen a boy and girlscout encampment or met with a boyscout leader, who dressed so handsomely and was commander of so vast a force of prettily uniformed children.And it was the first time he had ever seen children carry weapons that were not toys but the real thing, and the rifles or carbines the size the men carry too.I am sorry to say that no one outside had ever told the little boy , much about christian boy and girlscouts of any kind, this being the case, it is easy to understand how much this strange experience startled and astonished him, and made him a little afraid.

"How do you like us!"asked Timothy Groveton.

"Very much."said Peter.

"What do you call us.? "

"I know but cannot say the word."

"Of course you can't you're too young yet and it's a long word"returned the boyscout leader."What do you suppose my name is!"

"I do not know, I never heard it ."

"That's true.How should you!Well I'll tell youMy private name is Timothy Groveton, but when I'm a commander I can't generally be called by my private name, as it don't sound military like so I have to go by one that is official. Therefore my official name is Captian general Groveton.!"

"You look more than a general."said Peter.

"how clever"exclaimed the boyscout leader, turning a pleased face tward his officers."This boy is indeed remarkably bright . "I look more than a general"he says, and of curse that seems to please him.Yes he is very bright indeed."

"That answer is what you may call foxy."said one of the officers, a girlscout in full dress uniform(Jennie Turner) who stood close to him.

"So it is"declared the boyscout leader,turning again to Peter Michaels, he asked;

"Having told you my name, what would you call me;!"

"Captin, Gen'erl, Groveton."

"why!"

"Because you're the boss of all these children here in pretty clothes."

"everybody smiled at this.

"Good, very good indeed.You certainly have a brilliant mind.Do you know why six and six make twelve!"

"Because they add together." said Peter.

"You are very very clever indeed.Of course I ought to have seen that you knew that.My little boy it seems as if your very age don't go well with so much wisdom.Your very youthfulness hides your very cleverlenss loverness. Therefore I will do you a great favor for I believe no one objects to it.I will confer upon you a permit to accompany your new found friends, so that you may learn and understand how girlscouts do their work."

As he spo e spoke he waved to one of his scouts, and had a written permit made out for the boy.

"Do younthink it is safe to do that for a boy so young who is not even a scout."asked Susan.

"I believe everything will be all right.But its too late now my dear its done.But you shall also have a retainer if it is really as dangerous as that."

"We would need a retainer, t hose Glandelinians are dreadful."she exclaimed and hearing this verdict, t he little boy looked a little solemn.

"who doesn't know that those Glandelinians are dreadful!"asked the boyscout leader."Of course he has much too pretty a face to make himself safe before the Glandelinians it is true, and my sister says that the Glandelinians hate children more who have beauty.Don't worry little boy. Susan and others on the mission will guard you well.Laugh and be proud, because you are so highly favored.What would you do when you meet with Glandelinians, Pet er!"

"I don't know, I never understandwho they are."said the child."

Both susan and the "Shaggy man" looked grave and anxious, for they were for a time sorrowful that their little companion would be going out on an adventure of this kind with them. As for the boy and girlscouts they all seemed to think little peter was very becoming, and that their leader had conferred a great honor on this little foriegn stran g stranger.Just then three prett y little girlscouts each rangin g from eight to ni nine years old(hold) came riding up on swift beautiful black horses, and when they halted their s teeds and lookin g down saw Peter Minchel one exclaimed; "How lovely he is",and the next one cried in delight" How sweet he is", and the third on clapped her hands with pl easure and said"how beautiful the little boy is".Peter looked up and asked timidly;

"Am I!""Q

"In all the world I don't believe there is not anot her face so prett y."declared the nine year old girl.

"How about staying with us and being our little Stationary scout!"said the next.

"We sha,ll all love you dearly."the third said.

The praise did so much to comfort the boy, and he looked around and tried to smile.It was a pitiful attempt for he was so shy and embrass ed in such unusual company that he did not know what to do.

"I think we ought to be going now and see the Princesses."said the "Shaggy man" "You don't need to leave us just now. "said Groveton."You won't be able t o s e e see t hem for several days, and it is best for you to remain and wait."

"But they may be expec ting us and would not like to be kept wait ing."said Susan decidedly."If we are going on the mission we'll have t o find t hem as soon as possible."

As he was not at first used to them, in spite of the beauty of the child scout camp, and the gorgeous uniforms of the scouts, little Peter was very shy. Groveton said;

"It's long past your breakfast time anyhow, and you had better stay with us untill you had your breakfast anyhow.Therefore I invite you three to be my gu ests at breakfast.Then if you really insist upon it,I'll givevyou a pass to t he main lines and you may resume your journ ey."

They consented to this, and some of the boyscouts led t hem to a suite of lovely t ooms in the big headquarters . Peter was too shy to be left alone, so Susan took him in o her own room(the boom.) With While a girlscout, dressed t he the little girls hair----which was a bit tangled, and put some bright fresh ribbons on it, another girlscout combed the hair on Peters head, and brushed it carefully too.The girlscout waited to dress little Peter in t he uniform of a boyscout, but couldn't find anything to even fit him well enough, and she was compelled to say;

""A boy ina sailor s uit do not seem to go well together wit h a girlscout for no girl or boyscout was over a sailor that I can remember."

"I'm not a sailor."cried Peter.

"Alas no"agreed the girlscout."But you sure wear the suit as if you were the little son of some famous sailor at sea."

The little boy reminded of his journey, felt a little apprehensive, but Susan etted and comfort him and promished to fi find some way to make it less fearful as supposed.

"If we can manage to get to the Vivian Girl Princesses"she said"The Vivian Girls will see to it that we are well protected, so you just t ake t he situation as comfortably as you can dear, n and don't worry about it at all.

It may not be as dangerous as it seems for really Peter the Glandelinians are dead scared of us scouts and would not dare even show us fight unless they are greatly outnumbering us.It isn't as easy however as any one may t hink but Captian Groveton wants to test your courage, and you can show him you are brave can't you!"

"I'll try"said Peter doubtfully, but he didn't feel so sc ared any more after that.....(

(o? 35

Susan let the girlscout pin un r uniform ribbons to her shoulders, after which they were ready f or the breakfast.When they met the shaggy man in t he splendid drawing room.of the headquarters they found him just the same as before.He had refused to give up his shaggy clothes for newcones, bec ause he wasn 't true with his own mission yet, and if he did that he would be no longer disguised,he said and he would have lots of trouble to think up a new disguise again.He had not even brushed his shaggy hair and whiskers.As for the boy and girlscout officers assembled to dine with the strangers, t hey were most beautifully uniformed and their rich dresses and uniform coats made the little boys sailor suit and ty the mans strange shaggy clothes look commonplace.But nevertheless they treated their guest with great respect, and the breakfast they had was as good as any that could be obtained in a army camp. Even any boy or girlscout of the christian lines as you must know, are fond of Chicken and other Fowl, so t hey served chicken soup and roasted turkey, and stewed duck and fried grouse, and boiled quail and goose pies for breakfast, not that these things were usually for breakfast but to accompade their guests, and as the cooking was excellent, t he three guests of general Groveton enjoyed the meal and at e h artily of the various dishes////. The party then went to a sma,ll a m army th atre house, where they saw a play acted by boy and girlscouts, dressed in all different kinds of customs. The play was about a little saint girl, who was stolen by some wicked devils and carried to their infernal regions, and just as they were about to throw her into the bottomless pit(don't take a fit) a company of soldiers rode up, and cast all t he wicked devils into the pit themselves.

"How do you like it"?Timothy Groveton asked susan.

"Pretty well"she answered."It reminds m of the doings of general Manley."

"Don't mention general Manley to me I beg of you"Exclaimed the boyscout leader."I hate that mans name.He wrote a good deal about us bo y and girlscouts but always made them out cruel and wicked, whereas we are gentle, good and kind, as you may see and only fight for the welfare of our Country and her c ause, and protect other c hildren who can't defend themselves from the enemy."

"But he does admit us boy and girlscouts are wise , and clever, and more shrewe than the soldiers of both sides."said The "Shaggy man" thoughtfully.

"I don't say we are at that, but we try to be.There is no question about our knowning more than the Glandelinians do."replied the boyscout proudly."but what wisdom we have we employ it to do good, instead instead of harm, so t hat c razy horrid general Manley does not know what he is talking about."

They did not like to contradict him, because they felt he ought to know t he nature of boy and girlscouts b tter than any Glandelinian general did, so they sat still and watched the play, n and Peter Michael became so interested, that for a time forgot the mission that he was to undertake with the two others.

Afterwards they went baxk to the child scout headquarters to res t t hem selves. susan wondered why the boy and girlscouts here didn't wear the uniforms like those of Angelinia Aronburgs did, and when she mentioned it to Ti mot hy Groveton he said they clothed themselves a little di fferent because itwas their wont to do so when they belonged to a different organizat ion than ehers did.

"but all the boy and girlscouts of every regiment throughout the n ation are the same kind"she observed"And that don't seem to me why t hey should all change t he appearance or shapes of their uniform coats and hats."

"But the Vivianites were originated by the Vivian Girl Princesses t hemselves"he replied,"and therefore they were uniformed accordingly how Violet ,and her sisters wear uniforms . And to be girl or boy scouts we must uniform as prettily and elaborately as possible, but nevertheless not t o make a show of our uniforms so neighbors and soldiers will envy us, but becausewe have to show what we are.But it is hard work for we have to take very good care of our uniforms be as clean as possible and spend most of our time dressing ourselves to look t he part.That is why so many Foriegners who see us for the first time think we just do t his to look"t he part"and even that we're playin g "solider"and dressin dressin g up for the occassion ."

"I don't"declared the "Shaggy man".

"That is true."said the boyscout leader looking at him c arefully. "But perhaps you are as s y for one of our soldier generals and have to wear t hat as a disguise."

After t he remainder of the breakfast was had by t hem they bade t he boyscout leader good bye.

"You have been very kind to us ."said Susan,"and we have had a nice t ime in your encampments."

"Then"said Timothy"perhaps you'll be good enough to do the mission for the Princesses."

"I'll try"she pronished "if I find them on time."

"They're on Twenty First Company Street"he continued,"And if you'll just do that for them, they'll find a way to give you all the aid youneed. They have always wanted to give you a chance to prove your mettle, so I'msure it was fortunate you arived here just when you did, you being the friend of violet , and her sisters and able to assit t hem in getting something, espec ially when you were able s in gle sin gle handed to s hoot down a hun dred and fifty Glandelinians////////."

"I'll do my bes t to find violet,and her sisters."she replied."

The boyscout leader had a delightful luncheon put up for t hem, which t he t hree carried in knapsacks given to them, and the boyscout cp s captian general es corted them to an arach at the side of a new Company St reettoapatt oppocite the one by which they had entered.Here they found a lot more boy and girlscouts heavily armed and on chorseback here, guarding the road."

"Are you afraid of an attack coming here?" asked susan.

"N o, because we are watchful and able to protec t ourselves ,"answered t he captian."but this road leads a little outside our camp untill it goes to another branch and an enemy attacking column may get in through there.You know a battle is raging at Delight's Junxtion don't you."

"what Glandelinians are attac king there?"asked t he "Shaggy Man".

"Those or a part of the line who broke through the works at Aurandehondia. The "Shaggy man" is so big and strong, and has such an integ intelligent face that I m sure he will manage to find a way to avoid an engabe engagement should Glandelinians be encountered."

This made Susan and the "Shaggy man"rather uneasy, for t hey did not like t o meet a whole Glandelinian army coming on in an attack single handed and in the face of shot,ll fire.But as t heir escort knew nothin g much of where t he attacks were progressing to, only saying the enemy was winning, t hey bade him and his comrades good bye, and proc eeded on their journey. The country around them was a scene as of desolation, there was no pretty fields of wild flowers anywhere in sight, and where there had been groves of leafbtrees all were shattered boughs and broken limbs, and wherever there were houses before there were now positions for cannons and dug outs and other aciging earth and other battlements.There were no birds flying through the air,no cunning white rabbits darting amongst tall grasses and green bushes, there was not even any ants to be seen, and only once in a while high in the air came t he clap of "Thunder" followed followed by a roll of black smoke showing the noise came from burstin ,, shrapnell . They walked briskly onward for an hour or two, for even little Peter Michael was a good walker, and did not t ire easily .At length as t het turned a curve in the road, they behold before them a very curious sight.A strange little girl radiant and beautiful was standing st ill in the middle of t he road.she was clad in flowing shofrt robes of soft material that reminded susan of silken woven cobwebs only it was colored in soft t intings of all the colors thatttits at artists knows mingled together most harmoniously in stripes which meltedone into the other wit h soft blendings .Her low shoes were yellow and her stockings of a lavendar color.Her hair lon g in curls to her shoulders was like spun gold the strand being fas tened by a ribbon or band.rilled with wonder and admiration, our friends approached and stood wat ching the stranger. The girl was somewhat taller than susan, but more slender but yet did not seem as old that little susan.suddenly she swun g around for she observed the presence of strangers for the first time.As she faced them shy as a frightene frightened fawn poised upon one foot as if to fly the next instant, Susan was astonished to see tears trickling down her lovely rose hued cheeks..susan asked in a soft sympathic voice;;;;;

"you seem to be very una un a unhappy little girl."

"I am very un a unhappy."was the reply.

"why?"

"Because I have strayed from the christian camps and am lost .

"Why ,oso were we a few hours ago"said susan smiling"but we didn't c ry about it."

"..idn't you?nd why not?"

"Because I have often been lost, and always got found again."answered Susan simply.

"But I've never been lost before."murmured the dainty little maidian."And I'm worried and afraid because there is so much danger around.An explod ex plosion of something almost killed me a few minutes ago."

"You were standing in the middle of the road as if afraid to even move."remarked Susan in a puzzled voice.

"Oh that was because I was afraid one of those horrid explosions would come again." explained the child quickly,,It was not bec ause I wished to see anything I assureyyou."

Susan looked at her closely.Her gauzy flowing dress did not seem to be very warm, y t the weather was not at all chilly, but rather like an August day.

"who are you dear"she asked gently.

"I am Evangeline St Claire"was t he reply//.

"Evangaline whom?"

"Evangaline St C laire.I'm the little daughter of the christian general Augustine St C laire."

"Oh"said Susan with a gasp"I didn't know the christian general had children.

But I might have known it, should have known it, before you spoke.You couldn't really be anything else."

"why not"? inquired Evangeline, as if surprised.

"Because you are so lovely and sweet. Are you really the little Eva in Uncle Toms Cabin?"

"Little Eva in whom?"

"Uncle Toms Cabin."

"Never heard of him."answered the little girl, not thinking t hat was the name of a book.But she nevertheless smiled through her tears,, came up to susan, and placed her fingers in susans chubby hand.

"You'll be my friend even though you're foriegn ---won't you"?she said pleadingly.

"Of course.Nationality is just as good if its got a good Charac ter, and all Abbiesanians have ...."""

"Ad what is your name?"

"susan Farrol, and this is a christian spy, dressed as the "Shaggy man" of Oz as I believe, and this is a little boy called Peter Michaels."

The generals n daughr daughter nodded cheerfully, no longer afraid of her new companions.

"But how does he come to be dressed that way?"she asked pointing to the "shaggy man" who was standing before her, gazing on her in the most friendly manner, and admiring the pretty child with his bright kindly eyes."Is he a s y for our country's cause or just dressed that way."

"Oh no Eva"I may call you Eva may I not.Your whole name is so hard to say."

"Call me Eva if you wish susan."

"Well Eva "The Shaggy man" is a mystery to me, but he's got more sen se than any of the one y enemy generals to t ell the truth and I've become very fond of him."

"So am I"said Eva bowing gracefully to him..

"but how did the generals daughter ever get on this lonely road,and get lost?"asked the "Shaggy man" who had listtttd listened wonderingly to all t his.

"Why my father went out of the camp with a part of soldiers to do some scouting."was the reply"but he was chased away by a strong number of those wicked soldiers wearin g gray coats and black pants, and though I t ried to go with him the soldiers drove me from the purple clothed men and I got lost, though th y they didn't catch me.Then Iwas left alone and helpless on this road.Then one of those strange things exploded over there, and the ground shook so I fell down ."

"Won't your father miss you, and look for you?"

""Yes I believe he will, but he's so excited now, because there is so much fighting in so many parts of this country and he has to do some scare hing in a lot of different places and thats dangerous.What would you advise me to do Susan!!!!!!!"

"Come with wit h us"was the sen answer . "I'm going to quickly try to find our way to the camps where the Vivian Girl Princesses are.They are very good friends of mine and if we can manage to get there and do some mission for them I'm sure violet,nor her sisters will find a way to send you home to your father again."

"Do you really think so?"asked Evan anxiously .

"I'm pretty sure."

"Then I'll go withyou."said the little girl"For travel will keep me from being afraid of these Dandelinin's and father's soldiers can find me any where if they are looking for me."

"Come alon g then"said the "shaggy man", cheerfully, and they started on onece once more.Eva walked beside susan awhile, holding her new friends hand as if she feared to let it go,but her nature seemed as light and as hour bouyant as her fleecy dress, for suddenly she darted ahead, then she tripped back again withsparkling eyes and smilin gcheeks having regained hervusual happy mood and forgotten all ablut about her worry of being lost in a dangerous territory. They found her a charming c ompanion, and her laughter---for she laughed at times like the tinkling of a silver bell--did much to enliven their journey,,, and keep t hem contented. Hey They had traveled for abluid two hours more and one half, when t he fast traveling made them again so soon feel the pangs of hunger,and so Susan opened her knapsack, and found a nice roasted Turkey wit h cranberry sauce, and s ome tsilvesslices ofttthadof bread and butter.As they sat down t on the grass by the roadside, the "Shaggy man spy"cut up the turkey with his pocket knife, and passed slices of it around .

"Have you not got some Apple turnovers, Mince pie, or Hot C ross Buns?"asked Eva longingly.

"ourse not"replied susan"We haven't anything but this.But there's a bottle of cold milk.Try some won't you."

The generals daughter watched little Peter Michael devour one leg of the Turkey.

"Is the Tue Turkey good"she asked knowing it was out of Season for Turkeys.
He nodded.
"Do you think I could eat it!"
"Not mine"said Peter."It wouldn't be good for two to eat of t he same piece.
But here try this piece.didn't you ever eat Turkey before.!"
"Yes, but not at this time"and she took the large piece of white breast of Turkey which t he boy himself cut for her as well as a bit of bread and butter.When she tasted it she thought the Turkey was good, better than A npelturn overs, but that littl blittle bit satisfied her hunger--and she fin ished with t hree glasses of the milk.
"That is about as much as a fly would eat."said Susan, who was makin g a good meal herself."Eat ter eat a little more.Have this."
"No"I haven't been very hungry"she answered.
"You must be a small eater"Susan said."But I know some who eat more t han all the rest of us."
"Who are they!"inquired the "shaggy spy."
"Oh a number of boy and girlscouts of the Vivianite surroughs."
"Are they dressed like you are!"asked Peter Michael.
"Oh yes"replied susan"I.m one of them myself, and they are very clever and nice too.If we get back to their ca camps I'll introduce some of them to you, especially my friend Jean saunders."
"Do you really expect to get to their camp after making your mission.?"inquired t he "shaggy man spy" to in taking a drin' of cold milk."
"I don't know wat just what to expect. "answered the child seriously,"But I noticed that if t happened to get lost I'm always sure to come back to my amp in the end, somehow or other, so I may get there t his time.But I can't promise you know, all I can do is wait and see..""""""
"Will those kind of boy and girls scouts ac are me!"asked Pet er Michael.
"No, cause you are not an enemy."she returned."Jean has the loveliest smile you ever saw saw."
Having finis hed their lunch they started again upon their journ ey, the "Shaggy man spy,, Susan and t helittle boy walking soberly along side by side, and the new little girl friend going on a little ahead of them.sometimes she darted along the road so swiftly that she was nearly out of sight, then she came back t o great them with her silvery laughs laughter.But once she came back more seintely t o say;
"There's a big camp a little way of."
"I expec ted that"returned susan,"For Timothy Groveton t old us t hat the camp followed such a bend in one direct ion that a part of the road apparently left off from it only to run into the ot her section.It's filled with the Vivianites I'm looking for, but we must not be afraid of them bec ause they won't hurt us."
"All right"returned Peter Michael, but the new found girl friend didn't know whet her it was all right or not.
"It's a big camp"she said,"and the road runs straight through it."
"Never mind"said the "shaggy man spy""as long as we're going int o friends none of us will be harmed."
This comforted the little girl somewhat, and they moved on again.Pretty soon they came to a sign post which read;
"Half a mile to the vivianites."
"Oh"said the Shaggy Man Spy"If they're Vivianites, we have nothing t o fear at all"
"They would be dangerous t o us if we didn't have passes and did not know the counter sign."said susan doubt fully.
Before long the road brought them to the outskirts of the camp.They showed their passes to the sentries andrepeated the Counter sign.suddenly as they were about t o continue on their way, there sudden y arose in the distance a hars h c lamor of sound that swelled and echoed on every side, untill they were nearly deafened by the sound and had to put their fingers to their ears t o keep the awful noise out .It was the firing of many cannon, only fort unately t he cannon balls and shrapnell and high explosives and ot her war missiles did not c ome their way, but in the distance great clouds of smoke rose high in the air.Then from anot her direction came the sound like the rolling of mighty thun der, added by st ill another sound like the roar of countless breakers on a rugged seashore.They hesitated to advance for f ear the camp would be under shell fire, but as the noise began to slightly recede some one reported it was only a warning that the enemy was winning a signal victory at Delight's Junct ion and that Santa Fe was in grave danger, and that the immense christian troops t here were also preparing to abandon the works.As soonas they got within the camp and walked up a high rise of ground they quickly discovered the cause of the t urmoil.They from there could even with the n aked eye see the battle.The c hristian line was giving way in greatest confusion, even though t heirvsupporting artillery had opened upon the advanc ing artillery of the enemy and also shelled t heir attacking lines .But they migt might as well have tried to stop an advanc ing flood. If inside were suspended suspended t housands of sheets of sh eet iron and many rows of donkeys would have been pounding thes ewith vicious kicks of their heels continuously that wouldn't even make t he t errific din of the battle raging at this quarter.The shaggy man spy"ran up to the nearest of t he watchin g boyscouts, and said-

"What good does all that do.The enemy are too strong in numbers."
"Well the artillery men seem to missing their aim anyway"reported the boyscout."Usual Usually they do aim good but the ground here or there isn't right for artillery."
"But the artillery would be good in t his position here."said t he "Shaggy man spy"
"I beg t o differ with you.It's not high enough."We have machine gun nests here however in case the enemy drive their attack this way.We saw them coming and were prepared.We expect a whol whole army of t he en my to marc h and attack our position n ext."
"But surely they couldn't carry their successthis far."explained the "Shaggy man spy"."They may be only winning this victory for a time,.The christian troops will soon be reinforced and then you'll see the result."
"Well sir when that happens I'll believe it not untill then."remarked the boy scout."If that happens we will any how have all our work for nothing.Because you are a spy you are a little overconfident and think our armies can do every thing.We'll have to work hard ourselves and prevent a disast er and then I suppose they'll say "The child scouts won the victory themselves."and with that he walked away.
Lots of ot her boy and girlscouts not paying any attention to the battle were crowding up and examining the t hree strangers with almost c urious eyes .They all seemed to know susanvfor they greeted her.They made a beautiful picture a picture indeed, for they were the same sort ofuniforms exc ept that t heir coats instead of reddish purple were of light lavander color.The boyscouts wore high rounded hats with a yellow strip down going down across it from c orn corner to corner.The girls many of them were gold and silver bangles on t heir right wrists.None of them however appeared to be offic ers.
"This is a nice way to welcome visitors, I must say."rep remarked t he Shaggy man spy"in an almost reproachful tone because their strange c rowding up kind of hurt him.
"Oh we do not mean to be impolite."replied a girlscout who seemed to be a sergeant."But you three strangers are a curiousity,and were not expected, and especially we would like to know who you are in particular and why are you dressed so strangely.We never anywhere don't allow Hobosin our country you know."
"There is some truth in that "admitted the "shaggy man spy"but I'm n o Hobo we are important and distin guised travelers , and I trust you will accord us proper consideration, as the Vivian Girl Princesses send for us to accomplish a special mission.The proof of it is in t his paper written and signed by Timothy Groveton of the Legorians."
The girlscout looked over the written paper twice.Then she said;
"Well and good, excuse me for my suspicions.Then you are all right.You shall be taken before the Princesses right away.They're home and expecting you.They will greet you as becomes your exalted stat ions."
"That's right"answered susan."Th Take us to them as we would wish to intervi w them. "
"Oh we all know something susan or we sou shouldn't be scouts "asserted the sergeant with diginity."But come I will myself lead you before our beautiful Princesses friends."
They found the tents of t he immens e encampment all low and oblong, neatly d w designed and colored like the other camp t hey had entered before.The ten ts were however not set so c lose tcget her but somewhat apart, but formed regular i wide streets.
"Those stupid foolish Glandelinians must have crooked streets and numbered tent s in their encampments, to guide them where to go."observed the girlscout sergeant, as she walked walked before the visitors"but us clever girl or boyscouts know our way about without such absurd marks. Moreover a tent camp of our own kind is much prettier than theirs and though they seem t o look good I hate t hose Red yellow and blue stripped Glandelinian tents, and oh how high t hey are."
"They 're about fifty feet"said the Shaggy man spy" Susan did not agree with this, wishing the child scout tents were also st ripped but she said nothing to contradict it. Presently the little new girl friend saw a sign on a tent that read;

"Child Scout Columni Headquarters."

She asked their conductor;
"What does that mean please!"

"That's the Quater Masters headquarters where we get our uniform supplies munitions and the like." replied the girl.

"Oh I see"said the little girl."You are quite su pplied here."

"These camps"is the Guardian of the christian army."

They came to a ho tent where a number of boy scouts were just finishing in its erect ion.

"That mu t must be fun."said Peter Michael.

"It may be funvtoo, but its lots of work putting up a tent"replied the girl scout sergeant."ut suppose we used tents like the Glandelinians, our work would be a terrific job.I don't see how they do it, and they're so high."

"Don't the Glandelinian boy and girlscouts go so to school!" asked susan.

"School! Why that's why they're scouts, to escape school, t he lazy things." was the reply."Besides our own regular g school we do go to the main school we n ow n eed is the school of experience.. Books are what we hardly use for school ing here because we cannot keep them as we don't know when cleverly disguised spies would enter our camp, and so we are obliged to learn things from other people."

"In other words, the more stupid a Glandelinian soldier is the more he thinks he knows"Observed the Shaggy man spy.The girlscout Sergeant paid no attention to t hisss each t his speech because she had just stopped before a large tent with its sides designed like a flag and with t he same colores to the stripes, and which had painted on the glove of the opening seven small ~~crowns~~ crowns and sceptres above/

"I'll see if the Princesses are in" said t he sentry on guard. He went in, and for s time he did not come out.Then he appeared and said;

"Ent er."and the party marched into a big rooming portion of the tent.There were green mats on the floor and the interior was clean and neat, but it didn't appear as classy as it was expected to be to fit the dignit y of violet and her sist ers .Violet and her sisters had been sitting on one side of a long shining varnished table, with some of their generals, l officers of the soldiers standing on the other side, and in here they were wearing t heir ~~l~~ little crowns but they did not hold any golden st affs as was expec ted and were not wearing any n robes either but just their coat omary full dress lavender un iform coats, yellow silken dress and the ot her decorations that befit such uniforms.Their large heart shaped hats were hanging on a row of hook on a long h ll treeeeeee tree.

"Has Angelinia Aronburg returned ffom from her scouting trip!"Violet asked of one of the generals as she asked the three visitors to be seat ed and wait.

"No she has not returned yet Princ ess."replied one of the officers.

"Well t hen as I and my sisters have important matters with two of these visitors I believe you can return to your commands.If she doesn't return soon, I'll I'll s end a delegat ion to look for her.I'm afraid somet hin g has happened to her."

Just then a horse man raced up and was admitted in.

"An elinia Aronburg is in"he said saluting."She returned wit h a party of Vivianites and they have about thirty child slaves wit h them whom t hey rescued.They made a successful raid."

"Oh"said the Princ esses"un one chorus."When she appears let her come in."

"Now then"said the Vivian Girl Jennie, standing up and who had a large piebe of paper in o her hand"Tell me why you are here, andwhat you expect me and my sisters to do for you."she had failed t o recognize eit her of t he two, and she eyed Peter Mic hoels and the other little girl rather sharpl y, as if a little suspicious of the strangers , though it was the "Shaggy man spy"who undertook to reply.

"Most Noble Princ ess of Abbiesnnia"he said wit h a most respectful salute"We are not strangers, at all, exg exc ept this little girl and boy, and we have entered your ~~ma~~ magnificent encampment bec ause Timothy Groveton said you wished to see me and Susan Farrol to send us on some im or important mission.So we have c ome to obey the summons---and then to continue on our wqh way."

He handed her the paper which Timothy Groveton had made out and signed down with his own hand writing.This therefore pleased Violet,and her sisters very muchie.Therefore after showing the paper to her sisters, she handed it back looked kindly upon the four of them or t hree of them rat her and said;

"On`y a most c lever spy can be able to make u up such an unusal disguise you have on, and you even seem too wise and admirable to even be a mere man.A`so for my friend susan I feel that I love you as well as In and my sisters do our most favorite child scouts, so I will bestow upon you the greatest gift wit hin my power.That is we don't expect you to do the mission yours elves.We are to do it, and we want you to accompany us as our body guard.This mission is going t o be very secret. "

As she spoke she issued an order to one of the side-dec amps who was standing inside the tent at attention. As he went out Violet then herself told the Shaggy Man spy and his friend susan something about the situation at Aurandelandia.

"Dear me.Dear me."Cried the shaggy man spy"what a misfortune.What a great misfortune.Couldn't the christian armies g t bd back those posit ions at all!"

"No,I'm af aid not. did you hear much about it."?

"Yes I did. Can't you send lots of soldiers to retake those posit ions."

"I'm afraid I can do that was the reply."The troops along this sector can only work one way.We had decided to go to Mannion on a mission in order to have large reinforcements brought up with the purpose to get back t hose positions at Aurandelandia."

"but I advise you not to do that, t o travel there now. The situation is too dangerous for any one to travel ."

"That's a matter of taste"said Angeline Vivian."

"where's general Mannions headquarters!"asked the Shaggy man spy" earn estly.

"He has for good reasons changed it somewhere in the land of the Jennie Vivian Territory, but just the exact location I cannot tell"was Jennie's own answer."but we mean to find it if possible.We can do lots of long fortune ed scouting.

"I was trying to find that place but couldn't get there."

"Oh are you on the wy to his headquarters too!"asked Catherine Vivian.

"I don't know for sure"he replied",ut we have been told we are nearest his parts of the besieging christian ar armies, than elsewhere, and if that is so that 's the quickest way for me to get h to him and bring him the information I have secured.But then it doesn't matter except for the mission you wish us to make with you.I could give you and your sisters the information too."

"you could!"asked Daisy.

"Yes."

"Do you know the dangerous and mighty general Purgatorian!"asked Hattie her tone both surprised and eager.

"Of course I do.He's my worse enemy."said the "Shaggy man spy"

"Then perhaps some day after this mission you'll do me and my sisters a favor" cont inued Hattie, , much excited.

"what is it!"he asked.

"Perhaps through the means of your disguise you can safely bring us within the enemys lines and get me an invitation as Glandelinian girlscout ch c heiftiens to general Purgatorian, so I can make the gre atest and grandest haul from his headquarters ever accomplished by spies.We must bring the recapture of Vivian Wickoy some time, and I and my sisters would love to acc omplish that."

Oh Yeah.Some of us boy and girlscout s should deserve punis hment, rat her than reward for allowing you dear Princ esses to suggest going on such a dreadful scouting and spying journey as that."said susan sorrowfully."

"I wish you wouldn't forget what I and my sisters have often gone t hrough before and yet am here to tell the story."Jennie said seriously."

"In always wished you wouldn't do it any more."susan begged her"It makes c old chills run down my back."

"Are you afraid of ade adventurge them!"asked Angeline Vivian lookin g at her in half surprise half regret."

"For you and your sisters I am.Not for myself.I can't help it Prin c ess, but yu you and your sisters are more important than all the res t of y us and we wouldn't like to see anything happen to you.Do you and your sisters ever feel afraid of the enemys one s in a while!"she finally asked:

"Don't know what fear is."said the Princ ess.

"what do you think Eva'Shall we allow the Princesses t o accompany us or plead to their guardian Jack Evans!"asked Susan of t he little knnew girl friend who had been flitting about the tent like a sunbeam because she couldn't keep still."

"Do asnyou please dear."answered Eva."The Princesses have escaped so oft n t hat I don't believe you could kill them if you shot them right here.I believe they're Angel Possessed.They might help t o amuse us by putting somet hing on that wic ked old Dandelinian general.

"Then if you willpromise not dto do anything rash"said susan t o the Princesses"I'll be glad to accomplish the mission, and have you lead us--if we happen t o get into the enemys lines in clever disguise!"

"Good, Excellent."cried Violet much pleased."You shall all also have a find fine dinner and good beds to sleep in for we wo'l't start untill to morrow morning.what food would you prefer, dish of beans pork or oats."

"Anything will do for me"said susan prom t prompt ly.

"What food would you prefer for your hors es, a bran mash or ripe oats in the shell!"

"Neither one."replied Susan promptly."

"Perhaps plain n hay or some sweet ju icy grass would s uit you better."suggested Joice musingly."

"But we have no horses."Susan explained."We came through the camp on foots"

"You don't understand."said Jennin laughing."You don't think we're going to "Hoof" it on t he mission do you?"

"Oh we're going to have horses sure!"

"Sure indeed or it would take us two days to get there."

"For myself I would like some pancakes and toast for dinner."said Eva.

"For dinner!"said Joice looking at her seriously."

"Yes for I didn't have no breakfast.I got lost."

"I could prefer apples and n ham sandwich."declared t he "h Shaggy man spy".

"I want pie."said Peter Michael.

"I declare."Exclaimed violet and her sisters in one breat h."It seems each of you want a different food."But of course only one of you,is a girlscout.The two others I see are foriegners and have been lost.But "aid Violet alone "we'll have trouble stirring up such food but we'll try to do so if it is possible but I'll have to make the pie.There's none in the camp."

"Can you cook s pie!"asked the Shaggy man s py" in sot on ishment."

"Indeed we can.We can cook anything.We learned it at home."

About half an ourhour had passed and they were called to another tent in which there was a large bin table set with linen and prat ty dishes , and on the table were the very things each had asked for.Violet,and her sisters had set their own dishes too but for themselves they had milk, beans, and some sour pork.

Susann hoof at cok was smoking hot, and the "shaggy man spy's apples were round and plump and rosy el checked, and he had four sandwitches.Violet and her sisters for some reason could not provide chairs for t hem or t hemselves, and so they all stood in their places, and after Grac e Before Meals they all ate with good appetite being hungry. Little Eva found three good sized wheat pan pankeskes on a large plat e and maine son, and Pat er Mic hael had also the same food as Susan, but he had a big slice of apple pie.He had cut it in half and offered half to Susan , he not being selfish but she declined as she wasn't fond of pie of any kind.The boy therefore had to eat t he two pieces as no one wanted pie, and violet and her sisters didn't c are for it either.For desert they had apple sauce.

Afterwards Violet herself called one of her aidecamps, which was her favorite one and bade him lead their guests to the vacant ten t, where t hey were to pass t he afternoon,and the night . It was a large large tent, but it had n o furniture, except military beds or ots,but our t ravelers were con t ent wit h these simple things because they realized it was the bes t the Princ esse could officer them, s ince they did send for the desired things and for some reason or other nothing came.They spent the afternoon in the tent r ading something and after supper, and as soon as "Taps"sounded th y they lay down on the mat mats and slept comfortably untillll morning.

At daybreak there was a dr dreadful noise throughout t he whole territory outside of their encampments.It seemed as every cannon in the whole seige and opposing enemy lines was in action, and that every shell and high explosive that the world could have had was being exploded all at the same t ime.When he heard t his the shaggy man spy" called out to t hem as loud as he could:

"I wis h they would stop doing that."said Peter Michael in a cross voice.

"It can't be helped my d ears"he said."If it 's a battle on ly Heav n could stop it."

They did not see Violet,and her sisters as yet , but the Prin c essas remembered tgem for a table had been brought into their t ent, with the food that is c customary for breakfast, but Violet had baked a piece of Apple pie for Michael thinking he would also eatvit for breakfast."

"Don't want pie for breakfast."said Peter Michael."Do you want it Susan or Eva?"

They both shook their heads, and susan said;"I ll give you some of my beefs t eak, the there is plenty for us all."

That suited the boy better, but the shaggy man spy said he was content with his Cream of Wheat, apples and ham and eggs, although he ended t he meal by eating half of Peters pie.Though he didn't c are for it in t he morning Peter was forced to eat the other half as he didn't wish to waste it .Eva liked her pan cak cakes and cream of wheat better than any other food though she drank all the milk that the others left so t hey all enjoyed an excellen y breakfast. It was explained to them by the guard that the Princesses didn't come to see them because they were disguising themselves, but that they were to wait until they appeared.They were told,"When you see seven Glandelinian girlscouts appear don't believe they really are and get scared."

Breakfast t ended, they passed through the encampment to t he side opposite that by which they had entered, violet,and her sisters guiding them through a maze of scattered barbed wired fence.There was the road again leading far away but toard the unknown enemy territory beyond.The direction they led them was there there was no such terrific cannonading and distant shell fire.

"You must not forget that we're disguised"said violet ."So don't stray far from us and get lost, as you couldn't recognize us, and we can't recognize you."

"We'll be careful pro "promished.susan.

"Perhaps no one ever beheld a more strangely assorted group than t he one which n ow swiftly rode alon g the road, through war scarred fields, and pas t groves of trees shattered by shell fire.Eva disguised like a little "Red girl.Was close to su susan.Violet and her sisters went first.susan rode along holding g Per Peter Michael in front of her, and the two boy dressed like a beggar boy presented an odd appearance.Strangest of all perhaps was the shaggy man spy" with his shaggy hair and whiskers, who rode along in the rear.None of t he party was so far really excited.All were going for into an unknown territory, but they realized they were having a unusual adventure in a st range country, and were much interested in finding out what would happen n ext."

About half an hour after t hey had traveled onward, they began to go up a long gently rising hill somewhat distant outside of the christian lines, there on t he summit there were trees but all of them shattered, which showed once t his district had been under terrific shell fire. By and by t his too cut by shell swept hill suddenly dropped down(hold it up) into what had once been a pretty valley, but now a scene of wars horrible desolation, where no trrrrrrr t he t ravelers saw t o t heir surprise, a small house standing by the roadside not in t he least damaged despite the shell fire which had cruelly swept the territory with such inconceivably amazing destruction.

It was the firstrealhouse t hat had been, that had not been wrecked in nowhall swept area, and they hastened into the valley to discover who lived there before proceeding t o ward th enemys lines.No one was in sight as t hey approached but when they began to get nearer the house, they h ard the most queer yet delightful sounds coming from it.They could not make t hem out at first, but as they became louder our friends thought they heard a sort of foriegn music like that made by a c sort of R German Band, but the music fell upon their ears as if it was a sort of march.

"What is it a sort of foriegn hand or a mouth organ!"asked susan of Violet .

"Don't know"said Peter Michael who thought she had spoken to him.

"Sounds to me like a played out phonograph."said the "shaggy man spy" as he tried to listen.

"Oh there surely just couldn't be a phonograph in this war torn land."c ried Susan.

"It's rather pretty, isn't it?"asked Eva, trying t o dance to t he strains.The music became more distinct as they drew nearer the house.They went inside the door but no no one but singularly enough the musical sounds they had heard seemed to come from inside of the house, thoughthey could find no one playing an instrument,and the house was absolutely deserted so far as they could see and devoid of furniture of any sort.They stood inside the first room theyentered, and listened to the queer sounds which continued.

"Why there must be somewhere a regular musicker."said Peter Michael.

"What's a musicker?"Asked Violet who had never heard such a word before, though she and her sisters had learned English well enough from Jack Evans.

"The house."said the boy.

Thinking some one may be hiding in the house the shaggy man spy"cried out in a loud voice"Stop it.Stop that dreadful noise."and in answer some fromsecmin ly seemingly nowhere, and the music seemed to change, and the words seemed t o accompany the words;

""on't do it and you cannot make me.""

"How funny"exclaimed Susan "I wonder if there is a singing and musical ghost in the house."

"That's all nonsense"declared Annie Vivian "Ghosts are only fables "ut now the music began again, and they all listened carefully carefully

"There must be something strange here nevertheless said Evangeline Vivian "I can't help it if I feel queer"said Susan."What a great mis fortune it is if this house is a possessed one and we went in."

"Yes,"replied the Shaggy man spy"But surely I never heard of devils playing music for that's only happy peoples doings.Maybe it 's angel possessed as I have heard of such things and of children and people too being that way in Abbiesannia.don't you think so?"

"Don't know what that is."said Peter Michael."Maybe the angel makes love to little girls."

Everybody laughed at this.

"Perhaps this house will be good luck to us."said Joice "h see how miraculously it has survived in the midst of all this past horrible shell fire."

"It's sure strange the shells didn't do the house an injury."responded the "Shaggy man spy".

The music was so loud at times that they had to speak loud in order to hear themselves.The shaggy man spy finally cried out;

"Who are you playing this music?" but there came no answer.They looked through every every room but there was no body there not even a piece of furniture and some windows were even out showing concussion of shell explosions had at least shattered out the glass .

"Who ever is doing it is pretty good"said Susan "and seems to me too I've heard worse music than that ."

"Here?"asked Peter Michael.

"I've forgotten just now it's so long ago.But this house is c ertainly strange---sin't it, and perhaps its the only one of its kind in all the world."

"Didn't quite understand the situation."said Jolo Jolva Vivian, with a puzzled look"But perhaps it is because some electric wires connected with some place else where there are bands playing must have gone"hay wire."

"What's that?"asked Peter Michael.

"Oh joing means something like short Circuit I suppose."explained Antoinette Angeline Vivian.

"Oh"said Peter Michael.

The music getting still louder seemed to jar on the "shaggy man spys "nerves but there was nothing he could at do. Then said Susan;

"I don't know how good this music is, but it seems to go as if it was a band in this house, so that is all that can be expected.Suppose some one disconnects a electric wire will it stop."

"I like the music."said Peter Michael who was staring hard into a smaller room where it absolutely seemed to come from it his little legs spread wide apart.To the surprise of his companions the boy asked this long question;

"How could it come from electric wires when all there down and the po es too?"

"It's a sort of possessed house then."said the "Shaggy man spy "but come my dear friends ,I think the best we can do is to continue on our journey before we become possessed too.We must try to find that general Purgatorians headquarters you know."

They listened for a half minute more however, and soon they left riding their horses faster than usual in order to get out of hearing.They had to c limb another little hill(take a pill) and u still they got to the top t hey could not escape the strange music which seemed to follow them.As they passed the brow of the hill however and descended on the other side, the sounds gradually died away, whereat they all felt much relieved .

"I am glad I don't have to live in that possessed house aren't you Eva"said Susan.

"Yes indeed."answered the little girl.

"The house seems to be nice."declared Peter Michael."Why are you afraid of angels if you are so good."?

"How do we know they're good angels or not!"answered the Vivian Girls a lmost altogether.

"Who ever is playing in there what her he is a spirit or not I hope the Prince never won't invite him to their birthday celebrat ion whenever they have one" remarked the "shaggy man spy""For the parsons music would drive t heir gur guests all c razy.Some one might have given us an idea Peter Mic hael,I believe it may be a spirit who had stolen a band music instrument when he or she was living and must have been forced to do penance in the next li life by playing it forever."

"What's a penance?"asked Peter Miche Michael..

"It's doing somet hing you don't like to do."explained Susan.

The se ene of desolation of the country was greater than ever now.Before the travelers appeared a sort of town with shell battered buildings, and wherever they walked they saw saw nothing green.They were nearing some low abandoned shell torn redoubts too, and the road which before had been smoot h and pleasant to walk up was rough and uneven because there was so much debris on it hurled hurled there by exploding shells.Peters little feet st umbled more than once.It had turned out to be close to the forenoon, and there wasn't a thing for their luncheon, except two ap les which the Shaggy man spy had taken from an old shell battered apple tree.He divided t hese into small pieces and gave a port ion to each of his companions.Susan and Peter Mic hael were glad to getthairs, but little Evan was satisfied with a small bit bite.

"Do you know"asked little Evan"If this is the right road tward the Glande linian positions as you call them?"

"No I don't replied Susan"but its the only road in this part of yhe the country so we may as well go to the end of it and see what we can.

"It looks now as if it might end pretty soon."remarked the shaggy man spy"And what shall we do if it does?"

"Don't know."said Peter Michael.

"If I had our map of this territory."replied Violet, thoughtfully"It could do us a lot of good just now."

"what kind of a map is it?"asked little Eva.

"It s a map of this part of the countryI captured from one of the Glandelinians one day and I and my sisters can find most anythin g on it .But I left it in our own headquarters you know, cause it ain't safe to carry it with us when we are entering the enemy territory."

"Is this the enemy territory!"asked Peter MihMichael.

"I should think you would know."said the little girl gravely."If it wasn't the enemy territory you would still see big swarms of christian soldiers and boy and girlscouts."

They had gone on just a little ahead when they found approac hin g on a horse a Glandelinian soldier. The soldier was rather s lender and grac eful, but he seemed to be a scout for he sat silent and motionless upon this horse fortunately just then not looking their way, but his hair was as black as ink, and he wore the custom of the Glandelinians Omarians called "Scoodliers"for they're so treacherious.He wore black gloves.His hair was banged in front as rose the forehead and cut close at the sides, and he wore the fashioned hats of the form all Glandelinians do of the "College Professor "Style.

"What in the world do you suppose he is doing!"asked susan in a hushed voice as the little bunch of travelers hide themselves and their horses and wat ched the motions of the glandelinian soldier.

"Don't know yet."said Peter Michael.

The soldier gave an order to his horse and both t urned half around their bac ks now facing them.Evidently the enemy was looking for something for he sat motionless as before.

Little Eva then cried "Look"(the gook) for another Glandelinian hors eman k just like the first had suddenly appeared.

"How c urious."said Eva."Havethey s een us and are they now lookin g for us do you think?"

"C an't tell Eva."replied Violet herself."but what's t he worry.I my sisters Susan and the Shaggy man spy here can a handle thirty of t hem easy here an d if they do attack we have plenty of ammunition and I an d my sisters are good orac kshots.We are never captured un ess we will it so."

Our frien's had come to a lit tle hollow in the t rr t orritory, and the place where they now stood was surrounded by jagged peaks of rocks , exc ept where the road ran through making a good strong position, where the enemy would be exposed without shelter while the defenders wouldn't be.

"Now there are four of them approaching"said the Shaggy man spy."

"Five"declared Jennie Vivian."

"Six"said Viol t Violet.

"Lots of em."cried Peter Michael, and so there were quite a row of the fierce Omarians and they were dismountin g t heir horses and going int o motions as if to surround the travelers .The Glandelin inns did not look as fierce an d as savage as they reallly were however but nevertheless knowing the n ature of these o Glandelinians and their daring and devil dare recklessn ess t he shaggy man spys face became solemn indeed t hough he had his pistols ready and had bade the two smaller children to lie down so they won't be exposed t o t he enemy fire.

"Before we start a fight, ask em who they are and what they want!"whispered Susan "or we don't want to m ke a mistake and take t hem for real enemies if they happen to be christian scout patrols in disguise and mistake us for foes ."

So the "ghaggy man spy" cried out in a loud voice;

"Who are you.?"

"We're Omarians you C hristian doge ."Yelled their leader"Andvif you know what is good for you you'll surrender."His voice was sharp and shrilll.

"Who in particular do you want!"called the "Shaggy man s py.

"YOU" a dozen of them yelled pointing their fingers at him."You are the spy we have been searching the country for."

"How do you know I'mba christian spy!"asked the "Shaggy man spy"

"You are the same one who raided general Purgatorians headquarters."t hey all shout ed as if one voice."Surrender."

"Goodness me"said Susan trembling a little"The Glandelinians must recognize you despite your disguise.

"don't want t o be a surrender."protested Peter Mih Michael, beginning to c ry.

"Hush dear."said the little girl, trying to comfort him."We don't want any of us to surrender." But don't worry I and the others will t ake care of you."

"Will you?"asked little Eva, who did not like the Glandelinians at all, and kept c lose to susan.

"We can fight"declared the "shaggy man spy" but he looked worried at t he pros pec ts of being besieged in those rocks.

"Surrender"commanded the leader again a little more impatiently.
"Don't want to surren der."wailed Peter Michael.
"The only thing to do"said the "shaggy man spy"to his friends is in a low tone"Is t o get out of this pocket of roc ks as soon as we can on our horses, and leave the Glandelinians behind y us.Follow me my deare, and don't pay any attention to what they do or say.
With this he began to march along the road to the opening in the rocks ahead, and t he others with drawn pistols kept close behind him.But the Glandelinians c losed up in front with curses and defiant gestures, and so the "shaggy man spy"not wishing to waste ammunition just then pic ked up a big loose st one whic h he t hrew at the nearest Glandelinians to scare them from the path.
At this the "Scoodliers"opened fire with rifles but failed to hit any of the travelers though the stone the spy threw stf st ruck one of the enemy with such force that he fell over in a heap greatly astodished astonished. In the confusion of the moment the "shaggy man spy"was thrown by a sudden swerve of his horse, but he got up and felt of himself to see if he was hurt but he was not.
Two pieces of stone knocked loose by an enemy bullet struck him in the breas t and on the shoulder but the stones did not hit him swift enough to bruise or other wise inu injur him.
"Come on"he said firmly"We've got to get out of here some way."and forward he started again.The Glandelinians began yelling, and firing on the travelers. The Shaggy man spy" dodged behind a rock, so did t he rest.Violet and her sisters began to answer the enemys fire with wonderful quick-s quickness.They hit several of the enemy.There was one Glandelinian soldier who was trying his pe best to get the shaggy man spy" and violet herself found it also hard to get him with a pistol shot.She couldn't hardly see any form of the man because the rock she stood behind obscured most of her vison and also to try a t o avoid being hit the Glandelinian stumbled around over the rocks, and tripped on them more t han once in his effort to get out of range and get back to his surprised c omrades who had not expexted expected to be fired on by children.anot her Glandelinian was trying to getcutside the rocks, and to get above them and rolla huge stone down upon them, but some of the Vivian Girls Jennie and Hettie saw his purpose and fired atbhim so rapidly that though they didn't hit him he nevertheless was obliged to give up trying to move that huge stone an d hurry back to his comrades .The little girls themselves being perfec t ly protected had escaped the shower of enemy bullets but t hey saw now that it was useless to try to get away from the dreadful Glandelinian Sc oodliers .
"We may as well fight it ough out good and hard."dec lared the shaggy man spy" in a determined voice.T e Glandelinians taking advantage of what t hey t hought was a lull in the firing began at once to spring from the roc ks with t he purpose to surround the brave little band, but as many soldiers as there were Vivian Girl Princesses went down at the first discharge of pistols, and the Shaggy man and usan also brought down four simultaneously.Then when for every shot a Glandelinian dropped in i his t racks, the rest bec oming g panic stric ken scrambled to saft y. Soon there was a lull and t hen one of the Glandelinians appeared with a white flag.
"Well what do you w want"declared or shouted the shaggy man spy.
"Surrender and we'll l t let the children go .We only want you."
"Don't let them take him away"protested Peter Michael.
"Hush"said violet a little sharply."You were told before not to worry,we'll t ake care of you.We have the advantage not they."
"What do you want me for.Am I the spy you say robbed general Purgatorians headquarters."!
"Yes"they shouted all together.
"Then if I was forced to surrender(he just said this tovsee what they would say) you musn't harm the children."said the Shaggy man spy "firmly.
"We'll do as we please after that."the officer cried out."They're girlscouts or t hey wouldn't have shot sixteen of my men down."
"We'll surrender all right"rer retorted the "Shaggy man spy"but aft er you first come and get us."
"We'll get you."
"come and try it."
The Glandelinians moved to the attack wit h great rapidity and there was some t hing about the eyes of these "Scoodlier", contrasting black and gray colors of uniforms and square topped hats that inspired the travelers with horror and they longed to fight their way to escape.The Glandelinians int ended by a concerted attack to push the children and t he man away from t he rocks and road so they would be exposed.This sort of desperate movement envl envolving a lot of vigorious firing was accomplished with a lot of success more succ ess than the Glandelinians had even hoped for, but it was overdone, and nenabled the children and the strong spy to cut his way through thos e in the rear, and t hey fought their way to freedom down a side path untill they came before a low high stretch of rocks.There was a stream beyond and across t his stream was a narrow bridge of wood.Over this bridge they retreated.It made violet and her sist rs shudder to see the havoc they and the shaggy man and usan had created among the persueing Glandelinians.As they retreated they cam to a small villiage of wrecked houses.None of these houses were no more than a story high so badly were they wrecked, and violet and her sisters decided it was best to make a stand behind some of the ruins and led their horses to safty before doing so.

"What's that!"asked the Shaggy man spy " as they approached the nearest ruin as a great tearin g sound rent the air, and a cloud of smoke like an eruption appeared about half a mile away.
"QA high explosive shell."Cried violet, and then she and her sisters shouted in the next breath;
"We're hard pressed.Hurry behind the shelter."
"Peter Michael, holding Susans hand in one chubby fist, and Evans in the other was so affected by the shouts of the approaching Glandelinians that he began to cry again, repeating the protest;
"Don't want to surrender I don't."
"Never mind"said the shaggy man spy, consolingly"This shelt er has room for us all so we will be able to hold them off untill they're tired of it."
"All right"said Peter more cheerfully.
But the Glandelinians w r were not ready to make an attack yet .They knew the nature of these ruins.
"I wonder what people lived in this town!"asked little Eva.
"No one knew and couldn't say.It made violet and her sisters hopeful to learn t hatthe Glandelinians delayed yhe the attack, but a moment later they started t o come forward in a sort of skirmish line.
"What sort of an action are they could to start here!"asked violet sharply of Susan, as some of the Glandelinians started a desultory fire.
"They're skirmishing against us"she an swered."We might have to ret reat from here too."
"We are not going to"said Jennie Vivian idging indignantly."We're go ing t o do nothing of the sort."
"Ah but you will soon."retorted one of the Glandelinians who had happened t o be within reach of hearing and overheard her.
"Pard on me most beaut iful vison"said the shaggy man spy to one of the Glandelinians "I must request your Ere serene Majesty to let us go our way without being made to do any such an act of surrendering.For I am respons ible for two younger helpless children here, and t herefore we decide to fight t o the last if you re refuse our request."
"True "replied the Glandelinian soldier."We love to obey you so very much so much that we on intend to gut your c hildren friends with real pleasure.But tell me do you think you can defend that mere wreck to the last ?"
"You'll find out if you make an attack."he said."Battle is as battle does you know."
"Violet turn ed to Pet er Michael.
"Do you think you can handle a pistol?"she asked.
"No"said the little boy.I'm afraid of a gun."
"I think you're afraid of your own shadow."said susan.
"Well those of you who have weapons hammer away at the enemy if the attack comes."violet commanded.
The place had been a sort of store house once containing bags of potatoes baskets of carrots, onions and the like.The few defenders were rather disheartened by t his time at the number of Glandelinians arraying before them, for outside of fighting to the last they saw no way of escape, and did not know how soon the attack would come on, and too knowing the situation the Glandelinians were more than usually autious and did not intend to do anything rash either.But the shaggy man spy,and the girlscout and violet,and her sisters were very brave and did not inted intend to submit to any of the Glandelinians without a desperate struggle.
"We must fight to the last, and sell our lives dearly if we run out of ammunition" Violet said"For if we do fail we will be no worse off than before, and to stay where quietly untill we're massacred in cold blood would be foolish and cowardly." The defenders seeing that yet no attack was comin g sat in a prepared group in variouspositions, and in spite of what seemed great peril t o t hem, never t heless spoke of the enemy being afraid t o attack.Yet Violet and her sisters in their hea rts knew the enemy too well and Violet finally commanded all the res t of the group to stand before her for they had observed that the enemy cwas losing caution believeing the defenders couldn't esc ape.So Violet told t he rest t o get out of the defense by the rear mount t heir horses get t heir grenades ready who had them and to ride as fast as they c ould for a side street, and out across the narrow bridge following in the distance.

"I'll carry Pet er Mic hael in front of me on my horse."The Shaggy man spy" said for he knew the little boys legs were probably too short t o be able t o ride a horse so fast by himself.Susan picked up little Eva and placed her in front, and t hen all urged t heir se steeds swiftly down the street.Their horses moved so quickly and their esc ape was so wholly unexpected that they had ac tually got h across the bridge and were going down a small side st reet, when one of the Glandelinians saw the last disappear.The soldier fired his pistol, and the sound of the shot brought all his comrades bounding out of numerous points of concealment, and at once they mounted t heir horses and started wildly in c hase.In fact had the Glandelinians used disc retion t hey would have let them escape for the fugit ives now were dangerous.The fugitives had reac hed a smaller struct and were heading into an avenue when t he Glandelinians gained on them and began firing rifle shots .One of the shots struck the horse Shaggy man spy was riding and almost threw him, but he halted his horse, set t he boy down, told him to run for cover and dismounted.Then he, susan and violet and her sisters dismounted, placed themselves behind objec ts of ruins , and as fas t as the Glandelinians came into sight brought them down sometimes horse and all with well aimed shots .The falken horses of the foremost Scoodliers kept the others from running close up thus checking the persuit, but they als o opened a withering fire in an effort to stop the escaping prisoners, c ursing and blaspheming at the same time.The Shaggy man spy shot down t wo of t heir officers. Presently the Glandelinians had suffered such a loss t hat the soldiers bec ame panic stricken, and they themselves began to beat re hasty ret reat.The Shaggy man spy laughed, and they remounted t heir horses but not to persue as it would be of no use.

"It's lucky we learned to shoot so well."Violet remarked"For we checked their persuit easily, and never missed one.But come alon g little ones(To Pet er and Eva) whovhad been good and scared all the while the firing continued"The "Scoodliers "Scoodliers"are whipped and won't bother us any more, unless they get reinforc e ments, and we may be too far away before they get help."

Peter Michael was still frightened and kept ins s insisting"I don't want t o surrender"For the victory had been gained so suddenly that the little boy could not realize they were free and safe.But violet,and her sisters assured him that all danger of their "Surrendering" was now past, as the "Scoodliers" would be unable to do anything for some time to come.They c rept up c lose however to see if there was any one amongst the fallen who may only be slightly wounded as they intended to take him prisoner but every one were dead except two horses which they shot to put them out of their misery.So now anxious to get away from the horrid scene as soon as possible, t hey hastened from the ruined town and regained the road just beyond the place where they had first met the fo l sh foolish Glandelinians and you may be sure they were glad to fin d their way t to the old familiar path again.

"It's getting awful rough traveling for our horses here."said susan, as they rode along(Go to Hong Kong) Peter Michael gave a deep sigh and said he was hungry.In deed all were hungry, and very thirsty too for it was dreadfully hot, for they had eaten not hing but the apples since breakfast, and t heir horses had had nothing t o eat either, so their st eps legged or lagged, and t hey grew silent and weary.At last they slowly passedcover the crest of a barren ihill with half burned andshattered trees and ploughed up ground and abandoned demolished positions and saw before them a line of green trees with astrip of grass at their feet which miraculously had escaped the shell fire of both sides.And also an agreeable fragrance was wfat whafted tward them. Our travelers hot and tired urged their horses forw r forward a little faster on beholding t his refres hing sight, and were not long in coming to the trees.Here also they found a large pure spring of bubbling water around which the grea grasswas full of wild stretches of straw berry plants, their pretty red berries ripe and ready to eat, but as violet and her sisters really didn't like straw berries, the ot hers with them lost no time in picking as many of them as they could eat .The trees bore apples so the hungru hungry adventures found themslves provided with plenty to eat indeed.They soon feasted to their heart s content.When the shaggy man spy"asked violet,and her sisters to eat some of the berries Violet answered; "We don't like anything sour."

"Would you eat some if you had sugar on them!"he asked.

"No we would not.We don't like that old sugar either.We never even eat candy."which was true."The only sweet s we like is if it comes in v fruit."

Walking along beyond the line of trees they saw before them the fearful dismal section of the north branch of the high gray Thumbelinia Works or fortifications t he maze of bob wired fences palasades and other works.No sec tion here was in action now but they could even see at that distance that the works were as alive with soldiers as a field would be full of lively ants.

At the edge of the awful looking fortifications was a long stretch of white and yellow colored redoubts and at other pon points a little forward where the long series of gray palasades. Beyond to the east in the opposite direct ion they saw also locming upward the great christian positions.

"All person persons"said violet have often been warned especially if they're foriegners not to venture upon this section of the "vivian Wickey Territory of "No mans land".

"For why!"asked the shaggy man spy.

"Bec ause in case both sides aravin act ion the d adly shell fire will tear to pieces every person who ventures in this territory.See over there.Well those are the c hristian positions.We wouldn't dare vent ure ac ross t o go to them here nor to the enemys either for no telling when one or the other side will start cannonading.No one can reach the Thumbelinia fortifications at this sector because if once the christian guns open up any one of us will be killed.And whatve horrible death."

"Oh "said susan,"I've seen these fortifications before, and its true t hat evenduring a battle no longest line of charging troops can ever live, who tries to attack these works so why should we try to dare d go over there."

"Then we musn't try it"answered the "shaggy man spy, thoughtfully."put as we can'tgo ahead in this direction, and there's no use going back untill we find out what Purgatorian intends to do concerning following up his victory at Aurandehondia, what shall we do next."!

"I do not know"said Peter Mih Michael."I,m afraid of those big forts .They look so funny like thevhous es of the Devils."

"I'm sure I don't know what to do either."added Violet , despondently."Even if we could get in by means of our disguise and shoswed pass es our uniforms might att ract the gunners of our own side and they'd open upon us ."

"I wish father would come for me"sighed pretty little Eva."But I suppos e father cannot find me now.If he came I would take you all to an easier entrance of the enemys lines, where you could reach the enemy generals headquarters asyou call it."

"don't want to go that way."said Peter Mih Michael.

"It 's very good of you Eva."said Joice vivian."but there are other things that would suit me andmy sisters than go going on too easy an adventure.I'm afraid if we took the easi s easiest means to accomplish anything we would soon only wish for that and become too scary for the harder things ."

That didn't help to solve the problem and t hey all fell silent and looked at one another questioningly.

"Really I don't know what to do."muttered the Shaggy man spy."gazing hard at t he distant fortifications.Peter Michael gotva stick and began to dig in the earth and the others watched him for a while in deep deep tought .Finally t he shaggy man spy said.;

"It's nearly noon now, so we might as well get rested for a spell, perhaps by night time we can decide what is best to be done.Some of you ought to sleep for the rest of the day and we then can t ravel saftly by night."

There was little chance to make beds for the children, but the leaves of the t rees grew thickly, and would serve to keep off the ni heat of the sun, so the shaggy man spy piled soft grasses in the thickest shade, and t hen t hey lay down and tried to sleep as much as the heat would let them.Long after the others were asleep however, the shaggy man spy"remained on guard, sitting in t he shade by the spring, gazing t houghtfully into its bubbling waters.suddenly he smiled and nodded to himself as if he had found a good thought , after which he t oo laid himself down under a tree, but not to sleep as he couldn't .H e was to excpted to sleep. He was too exc ited to s leep. In the bright even ing setting s un, as they ate of the straw berries, and sweet juicy apples, Susan said;

"Eva c an you do any scouting!"

"Scouting!what is scouting!"

"I mean can you do anything what we girl and boyscouts ourselves do, go far out in advanc e of an army and spy on the enemy t hat way but not going int o the enemys camp.T hat is what you call scout in !"

"No dear"answered Eva, shaking her dainty head "I wouldn't unders t and the in formation any one wanted.I should have learned."

"You ought to know some scout ing work, being a great generals daughter." continued susan earnestly.

"but my father never permitted me t o do any scoutin g."replied Eva.

"What I would like"said Violet is for all of u s t o find some way t o cross t his open count ry without attracting the fire of our own batteries upon us. The trouble is they'd open fire for the least sign of movement here beling the enemy were moving to attac k, but con c aling t heir intention.I've crossed it already andso did my sisters, you know more t han once, but then we warned the christian gunners first .We didn't warn them t his tim e for we came here unexpectedly.First a calvac ade of Glandelinian chors emen aided us ac ross, and not discovering us through our disguise we got back again for t he foe carried us across.Then Gertrude Angeline t ook us over with her squadron disguised as Glandelin ian child scouts, and a number of Glandelinians chanc es c haaed us back that time.You see it was help for us t hat did it every time except the first, and we can't expec t t o go ac ross now when t he gunners of our own side don't know who we are.They'd let s hells on us in a hurry and therefore we can 't expect to get across, and u yet take such awful chances.We fear our own side just now more than we do the enemy.Our gunners are dangerous and good marksmen.They never miss an object and we don't want t o be torn up by shell fire of our own side."

"No indeed"returned Eva with a shudder."I hate this terrific gunfire anyway. The noise is terrible ."

"That is why I wanted to find out if you could do any sc out ing."said Susan

"I'm sure I can, but little Peter Michael can't he's too young and probably would get scared if he saw the enemy let go with guns, and the only hope of sc scouting the "Shaggy man spy"has is crushed for us because he'll be recognized because he forgot to change his disguise.I don't believe he even knows a safe way ac ross this "No mans land".

"Don't be toosure of what that my dear."spoke the shagy man spy a smile on his face."I may not be able t o do any scout ing because of my queer makeup myself, but I can find a secret way to the enemy fort ifiations, and that would surely help us if you reallly desire to get there."

"How can you accomplish that!"asked Susan, while, violet ,and her sisters looked at him in surprise .

"I know a secret passage underground not far from here where we can reach t he fortifications."

"What good c an that do us!"Declared Violet a little sharply."The enemy guards would stop us in a hurry."

"No it won't "declared the shaggy man"Any one c who can easily find that passage is not considered an enemy for onlyany one of the enemy know it so easily.Therefore that would be good for us and we would be able to get through very easily."

"what good would that do then. "

"Qnyt hing."answered the shaggy man spy, with con fidence.

"Who is in charge of the passage way."

"Colonel Johhnu Doit.

"what colonel Johhny dooit"said Susan."He'd recognize you in a moment ."

"Nonhe won't.He never saw me."

"Let's go for the secret passage then"Exclaimed Jennie eagerly.

They went in the direction he headed for and in shalf an hours t ime; "He said

"Well here is it is.I have a pass for that tunnel for I recieved it two days a o ago."

Indeed they were before a sort of passage way thatseemed t o be a cave, and on each side stood four guards , but on e was a funny looking little man puffing a m smoke from a long pipe and holding a musket with bayon et attatched in ihis hands .His hair was black as ink, his whiskers also, and his whis kers were two feet long.His nose was broad, and stuck up a lit t le but his eyes were vicious like that of a weasel.His hands and arms were as hard and as t ough as the very musket he carried, and Susan t hought the old guard looked as if he had done a lot of hr hard work in his lifetime.

"Good morning Dad"said t he Shaggy man spy"prest pres en t ing t he pass. "Thank you and your companions for being on guard so good."

"We are supposed to be here so we never can let strangers in."said t he old man promptly as he examined the pass."But what 's happened to you and your little followers that you should choose this long and gloomy cave for a passage way.I would not have really known you at all sir if I hand't looked at your face."

"We were afraid t o venture acrosss the open plain for fear of the chris t ian guns opening upon us vf from the opposite side.We didn't believe we c ould even cross this plain at night because so many star shells will be in t he s y sky and if that revealed us t o the gunners they'd open such a shell fire as to ground us into the eart h, so I have come to asked you to help us t hrough this long passage way."

The old guard puffed his pipe, and looked carefully at the dreaded open plain in front of them, stretched so far ab away tward the north t hey could not see its end.In the distance westward was the Thumbelinia Fortificat ions but it was more than three smiles away.

"You must have a guide to go t hrough this passage way."he said briskly.

"what for!"asked the shaggy man spy.

"Why the passage way if not known to you and your friends is dangerous t o travel in.It is a regular long cave even though it has openingsat bot h ends, but if you go into the wrong directions you'll tumble int o pits.I'll guide you."

"Goody goody"c ried Susan clapping her hands delightedly.

"hen can we start!"

"I'll lead you now."said the man.As he spoke he knocked t he ashes from his pipe and put it in his pocket. He easily got another soldier to take his plac plqce and led them through,and in half an ohour t hey were within t he fortifications.

Here every one saw an unusal sight in deed.(you are in no d).All t he soldiers wit hin were moving quickly at different military tasks,---so quickky a that they were astonished, at the work the soldiers were able to accomplish. Every one of the Glandelinians who were mostly military Engineers seemed t o have different sort of ch sts and had in their chests a tool for everything h e wanted t o do, and they almost appeared as if they were magic t ools bec ause t hey did t heir work so fast and well.One of the Glandelinian soldiers was humming a little song as he worked, and violet and her sisters almost t hought t he Glandelinian was not such a wic ked man as he really was when they overheard these words to tc the song;

"The only way to do a thing, is to do it when you can,
And do it cheerfully,and sing, n and work, and think and plan.

2

The only real unnappy one,
Is he who dares to shirk,
The only really happy one,
Is he who cares to work. "

Wht Whatever this Glandelinian soldier was signing he was c ertainly doing things, and they all st ood by and watched him in amazement almost forgetting the mission they were to accomplish.He seized an axe and in a few good st rokes felled a small tree.Next he took a saw, and in a few minutes sawed t he t ree t runk into broad long boards.He then nailed the boat boards across a small gulfway between the fortification side walks.Ot her t hings he did made t he watchers fairly gasp with wonder, and bot h Peter with Michael and Eva looked on wit h the same absorbed interest and they only walked away when he suddenly looked up and said;

"What are you people staring at me for.didn't you ever see a person work before. Go to your camp where you belong.Get quick."

"Those lazy little lobsters ought to be made to do somet hing too."said one of the ot her workers."But no.We only have to employ child slaves.But I'll work before I'll buy those no account little brats no matter how cheat or ch ap you can get one."

Wit h this t he other man slammed down t he lid of his chest, and t he noise made t hem allwink, and they went away so as not to cause trouble which would probably have them investigated and then cause their capt ure.

"Oh its too bad, they're preparing for a terrific bombardmen t of our lines and are making what repairs is necessary."cried Susan .

They now looked more carefully at the baggage wagon which had come for t hem t o take t hem to general Purgatorians headquarters.It was a peculiar sort of a wagon and it s front was pointed like the bow of a rowboat, but it had four wheels the wheels in the front being the bigges t .Indeed it seemed a queer sort of a wagon but it was strong and was pulled by four strong hore es/

"Get in my dears"said the "Shaggy man spy." "I'm sure t he driver can manage the horses as well as any other can.All you need t o do is sit st ill in your places."

"At the earnest request of Violet and er sisters Susan got in first , and sat on the bottom of t he wagon just in front of the seat.Peter Mihael sat in front of Susan, while Eva leaned over the side.Violet and her sisters sat nearest t he end of the wagon, and the spy sat nearest the seat also.When all was ready the driver lashed the horses, and they started forward---slowly at first , t hen wit h added pspeed.Soon the horses were lashed again by the driver and the wagon went so fast that ovesy one held tight to the sides, and scarcely dared t o breathe.some of the outer works of Thumbelinia st ret ching in the east had t he formation of billows, and was in places apparently very uneven which formation was to make it too strong to be even assailed.Somet imes now overhead shells began to crash like deafening t hunder and the concussion of some of the explosions made t he wagon rock dangerously from side to side even while it was running, but it never quite tipped over, but the speed of the horses was so great that the "Shaggy man spy" himself became somewhat frightened frightened, an d ordered the driver t o make the horses go slower.As they continued on little Eva saw a very large and dark c loud seemingly as big as a thundercloud rise up about a mile or so away, and while in that seconds time she wondered what it was, there came a terrible rolling noise like loud thunder in the dist ance."

Violet and her sisters saw it too.The concussion and shock in the air frightened the horses so that they ow ran with all their speed.

"Look out "Violet screamed to the driver."Go slowly or we'll smash smash int o oxsomething."

He heard her, and tried to pull in on t he reins, but t he horses would not slacken slacken their speed.Onward an d on ward they went, and t he driver was in despair because he could do nothing to stop the wild rush of t hehorses. Then somewhere in the r a rear came a shockin g ear splitting crash, and from t he shock of the crash or co ncussion the wagon jumped like as if it was possessed, and everyone flew out and into the air in a curve like a sky rocket, one aft er the other c landing high upon the nearest earthworks amongst the big guns where they rolled and tumbled for a time before they could stop themselves. The shaggy man spy" and the driver flew after them, head first, and light ed in a heap beside violet,and her sisters , who bein g much excited at the time t hought the end of the world had come.Susan was feeling one of her front t eeth, which was loosened by knocking against her knees as she fell. Eva was lookin g sadly at a ren t in her pret ty gauze gown, and Peter Mic haels head had stuck fast in some sort of a small hole and hewas wiggling hislittle fat legs frantically in an effort to get free as there was something wrong in the hole which prevented him from breathing.

Otherwise they were unhurt by the accident, so the shaggy man spy"at ood up and pulled Peter Michael out of the hole, and went to the scene of the c rash to look at the wagon.It was a mere mass of splinters now, the four wheels layin g in four different directions one standing upright rather against the walls of a barracks, and the two hors es with nobody to check them were still running down t he company street while a c rowd of soldiers start ed forward to head them off.

The wind t hen blowing had torn a away the c anvass covering of the wagon and carried it to the top of a flag pole, where it got tangled in the ropes and flut tered li e like a white flag. It looked as if that port ion of the Thumbelin ia works were about to s urrender and a lot of soldiers tried to drag it down but it stuck fast.

"Well"t he shagg y man spy"said cheerfully"We're here, but where he here is I don't know."

"It must be some part of the encampments within the Thumbelinia wortificat ions." observed joice vivian coming to his side."

"Must it !"

"Of course it must..We are across t he "No mans land"ain't we.And somewhere b yon d here near Julio Callio section of Vivian Wickey is the headquarters of general Purgatorian."

"To be sure"said the shaggy man spy"nodding."Let's go t here."

"But I don't see any guides to show us the way and the soldiers won 't do it as t hey're too busy, and even if we ask them they may get suspicious."

"Let's hunt for some guards ."he suggested."There must be also guides somewher but you know we are not ofthair side, they did not even x pect us, and it would be hard to get another horse and wagon now."

They now made a more careful exam in examination of the fortified country around them. All was like belonging to the "GOD GOD" of Mars, and the sunshine was dull bec ause of smoke from burning fires and bursting shrapnell and cannon broadsides, and t here was no beautiful crisp air that delights the wanderer.Yellowish green smoke rose up to the sky away to the right, while on the left rose upward a group of black smoke clouds forming almost like tall leafy trees, bearing strange yellow flashes in its blackness that almost looked like tass els and pompoms. After looking at these a mom nt moment Susan said reflectively;

"We must be in the Maya section of the Thumbelinia wortifications, for I can tell from the colors of the smoke bursts rising for we're opposite Aurandebondia.I have heard a great battle is raging there, and you will notice that most every cloud rising in the distance is strangely black and yellow, that has any color at all."

"But I thought this was the sect ion that general Purgatorian lives in."replied the Shaggy man spy, as if greatly disappointed.

"D So it is"declared violat herself,"But there are four sections of these Thumbelinia Thumbelinia Fortifications.The North sections of the works are purple, and its the section held by the Zimmermannians.The east works are blue, and that is the section held by the Mic-Hollestinians.Down at the south is the Red Works of the Turmerannians c alled the Lucillio Ricksen Fortificat ions, and here where we are is the posit ions of the Conc Condesceninns and the Mercianians.T his is the part t hat is commanded by general Purga Gratio, you know."

"Wh o is he?"asked Peter Michael.

"why not much is known of him so far.His name is only what I told you of, but gvhe has been placed incommand here by general Quincynine Stanoklin."

"Where does he live?"asked th e boy.

"General Stonoklin!"

"Yes."

"Oh he lives in the section of Vivian Wic key called Mic-Whirther Janet,which is just in the middle of vivian Wickey, where the corners of the four bigger sect ions of the city meet near the con verging parts of the Norma Run River."

"Oh"said Per Peter Michael, puzzled by this explanation.

"We must be some distance from that section of Vivian Wic key." remarked the Shaggy man spy."

"That's true Jennie vivian replied"But we do not intend to go that far.It would t ake us a week the works and territory is so extensive.We'd better start on however and see if wecan't find some of the child slaves.They're nice children though within the ene ys enemys lines."she cont inued, as the little party began walking tward a group of Glandelinian child scouts,"And I and my sisters came here once with our friends Radcliffe, Angelinia Aronburg, and Penrod t o make a raid on a c hild slave camp and to capture the wicked overseer who had co many innocent children slaves."

"Did yo you conquer him!"asked Eva.

"why yes.He resisted and Joice shot him dead.After t hat we got away with a bunc o bunch of child slaves and we made them free you know, and t he slaves wanted to make me and my sisters their --leader and make them scouts."

"What's that!"asked Peter Michael.

"Don't you know what child scouts are!"

"Yes.But that world leader."

"Leader.Oh it's somoti something like b ing a boss of a number of people I guess.You see I and my sisters are bosses of our nation next to our fat her and mother, but we don't act that way.We're Princesses ."

"what's that!"

"You're a dumb dora Pet er "laughed violet.

"what's that."

"Somebody who don't know anything."

"Oh"said the boy.

"But I thought general Purgatorian ruled all of the Vivian Wickey sect ion and conducted the resistance of the works against the National Bei Besiegers ."said the shaggy man spy."

"So he does, he even rules everything in the city of Vivian Wickey, and all t he many big fortifications surrounding her on land and sea, but each sector has another lower genera l, not so high in command as General Purgatorian.General Purgatorian is the main gnnnn ." general."

By this time they had reached the spot where the Glandelinian boy and girlscouts had stood. Near here was a circ le of high trees and just far enough apart so that their thick branches touched---"or shook hands" as Susan remarked, and they appeared as yet unscathed by any battle.Under the shade of the trees t hey found in the center of the cirle, a great big searchlight.

"Why its one of those big searchlights"cried Eva.

"We'd better get away from here before we're discovered."said violet."The Glandelinians will think we are prying into things."

They did so.Then they came to a large pool of water in an opening of the fortified camp, and theyhall sat down to rest near the edge of the pool. suddenly the shaggy man pik picked up a envelope and drawing out the paper looked it over.

"Ah"c ried he" springing to his feet with eager joy"I've found something."

"Found what!"asked violet and her sisters, running to him.

"An important pass into general Purgatorians headquarters. Some glandelinian must have lost it.Now at last we'll have an easy chanc e to get into the generals presence."

"Me too"shouted Peter Michael trotting up to them.

"Of course"said Susan."It will allow every one os of us int o his presence, I guess.Isn't it lucky you found it "Shaggy man".!!"""""#####

"It is indeed." re plied the "Shaggy man spy."I hat ed dreadfully to go tward that dreaded place without some means of int roduction."

They soon continued onward and came upon a camp where there were a lot of child slaves at work.

"Oh what a darlig darling"cried one of the little slave girls , and would have ran up and hugged the little one had she not been so dirty and half naked.

Their joyful exclamat ions made the child rub his eyes, and look at his friends questioningly.

"You are all right dear"said Susan."They won't hurt you."She led him tward the child slaves.

"It's me"i he said in a pleased, yet awed whisper.

"Course it is."replied one of t he child slaves."But you look like "C hristians" to me.Don'y you know its dangerous if you are discovered.!"

"Well who will recognize us."!

"Some of those child scouts will."Pointing in the direction where a group of uniforms boys were approaching.

"Well we better start on our journey to his headquarters"said voice.

"I hate hate to leave this child slave camp."murmured the shaggy man spy with a sigh."These child slaves are big enough and it wouldn't be a ban bad thing to make scouts out of them and let them get even with the enemy."

However violet and her sisters told them who they were and said that if even of one of them could gain information for them they would find a way to set them all free. They to their surprise easily recieved the informat ion from a boy and therefore Violet told the slaves to wait untill night time.

They had not walked far ac ross a flower strewn meadow farvoutside the enemys lines and in the christin christian territ ory with t he slaves whom they recued by hookwinking the enemy, when they came upon a shell swept and t orn road leading tward the southeast , and winding gracefully amon g some hills with battle scarred hills.

"That way"said susan"must be the direction of the christ ian lines.We had better follow the road untill we meet someone or come to the camps."

Little Eva was dancing ahead of her in her usual spritly sprightly manner, whirlin g gaily along the smooth but rock strewn road untilll she passed from sight around t he curve of one of the mounds.Suddenly they heard her exclain"OH" and she appeared again running tward them at full speed.

"What's the matter Eva!"asked violet perplexed.

" There was no need for the little girl to answer for turning the bend in the road there came advancing swiftly tward them a column of boy and girlscouts t he "Fierce Vivianite purroughs" led in person by Angelinit Aronburght Aronburg.

As the t ravelers were on foot having been forced to leave their hors es behind there was no possibility of escapin g even in t he slightest c hould they be mist aken by the sc outs as enemies.A and too the Scouts w re armed to the t eeth like brigands and t hough many of the boys m d girls were very att rac tive looking they als o looked as fierce and savage as they were said to be.

Angelinia Aronburg whistled a signal to the rest and all halted before the travelers.She Shec She especially beheld the "Shaggy man spy" wit h a most disdainful countenance for she had never seen such a ragged person before , and then looked sharply at the ot hers.

Then she said to him in particular;

"whenc e come you Ragamuffin , and whether are you and your child scouts bound!"

"I have come from the Glandelinian fortificat ion s , and am wit h my frien ds heading back tward the christian lines."

Angelinia Aronburg looked sort of ack aghast at her nearest comrades and spoke in a whisper to a boy(Penrod) and turning said to t he "shaggy man spy" wit h a scowl;

"By t his I and my comrades perciev thou art one of the Glandelinian s pies ,for all the that c ountry from whenc e you c ame is enemy enemy territory, and general Purgatorian is the Prince and wicked "God "of it. You are under arres t wit h your followers."

"But Miss Girlscout general I am not a spy.I'm a christ ian and these are my friends.They're helping me."

"How is it then that th thou have come from t he Glandelinian camps in t hat rig.Were it not that I am too sure of you and your followers I would strike you all to the ground."

"We were spying on the enemy.Of course the evn dence evidenc e is against us we were in general Purgatorians territory,but the service we rendered to secure information was not hard.When we.sec omplished our mission I and they did as other wise ones do, look out if perhaps we can get back to t he National lines."

"There isen o girlscout leader.or boy either, t hat will t hus lightly let any person pass tward the christian lin es that can't give better proof than t hat, neit her will I of my followers as y yet let you go through, but since you claim you are a christian spy, and your friends are your followers , how come it, children must help you, when you who ar e big and strong should be their helper.That sounds like Glandelinian to me t hroughand through."

"But seven of thesechildren are the Vivian Girl Princ esses"he said wonder ing why even they did not say a word in defen se so thet they could be recognized through the sound of their voices .But just t o see what would happen and to try Gert rude An aline they held their peace.

"You have done in this answer according to the proverb"Changed bad for worse"declared Gertrude Angeline sarcastically." If t hey were Violet and her sisters they would have spoken themselves so I could recogni ze their voices. If t hey are the Vivian Girl Princ esses then I'm Imperior E vivien.Prove t hey are the Prin cesses to me and all shall be well.Otherwise you and your following are under arrest."

"Why don't you believe they are the Princesses!"

For a second she looked at the boys cout leader and then t urn ing said;

"How do I know they are not impostors.Consider again what you are likely t o meet with if you are only trying to make up a fraud.You and your following t here, wit h those other children, who seem to be child slaves ought to know t hat for all part, all t hose who oppose me and my following always come to an ill end, bec ause they are enemies and I am an enemy too.How many of them who t ried to hoodwink me have been put to a shameful d e death, and besides no one amongs t you Glandelinian s if Glandelinians you are have ever been able to deliver any captured by us out of our hands, for as for me and my followin g, as all t he world very well knows, have I do'i delivered, eit her by power, trickery, or by attack and raid those that have faithfully served me and my following g, from t he worse of your following, though taken by them as pris p prisoners , and so if you are not what I suspect you are prove it and I will prove a friend ins tead of a foe."

"But why should I and my following hav e to prove it !"

"you and your following have already done some t hings t hat makes it seem against you."

"Wherein have you discovered such things!"

"We wate hed you from a distanc e leave the Christian camps as you are now and entar the enemys lines-not ac ross the plain but through a secret passage way underneath which only Glandelinians really know of and which I and my follow ing were unable to find.You did of course almost faint at first in thinking of the dangers of c rossin g that plain, and had almost been persuaded to go back before you thought of going that way.Have you a pass e igned by t he Vivian Girl Princ esses!"

"No Miss Girlscout I do haven't.But I'm telling you the truth t hey are with me.These seven girlscouts are they, and t he other one is a girlscout who I know by the name of susan.I'm telling you the trut h.I am notva Glandelinian spy."

An gelinia Aronburg rode closer her hand on her pist ol holster and looked sharply at violet and her sisters. However she was afraid to t k t ake chances. She remember ed the impost er of days past ,which c aused P n Penrod to take her for a trait or against him and the Abbiennnian cause, and of suspec tin she was the one who had tried to betray him into the hands of the enemy and so she didn't believe a word of it . She rode back and had her followers surround the group.

"Seperate the child slaves from them"she said and half t he number of you take them to camp while I t ake these prisoners with me."

Then turning to the prisoners she said to t he Shaggy man spy"

"I am the chief enemy of all you Glandelinian s, I hate that Purgat orian and all his generals for I remember the doings at vivian Wickey in the past very well,I hate his laws , and people, and therefore you'll have to come t o camp and prove your statements.If you turn out to be what I believe, as a spy,wit h girlscouts posing at the Princesses and not the original thing, and as you had child slaves in your possession which I believe you intended to bring int o a massacre scene which is usally the case it 'll go veryhard with you."

As the others were going sout hward with the child slaves Penrod said t o Gertrude;

"We'll have t o beware what we do if we have these prisoners since dividing our force for if glandelinians come upon us in a big body, we'll be out of luck."

"I'm void of fear in t his matter"said Gertrude laughin g,"For I even swear by Heaven that these prisoners will not esc ape me for if we're attacked I'll shoot them all before they'll be rescued."nd she had a dangerous look in her in eyes indeed."

The Shaggy man spy"wondered why violet and her sisters didn't say something to prove themselves and as t hey didn't he began to have an inward fear that they may be fakes after all, and t hat imposters had even put it over on him and purposely led him into thisctrap.But t hen if they had they had been caught wit h him, and therefore had made anxawful blunder. He loo ed looked carefully at Violet and her sisters, and as some of them were smiling he felt sure that his fears was right an d would have said nothing insulting to them but held his peace. Had they really been enemies wi'l violet and her sisters would have done their best to avou avoid any child scouts.They had known t hey would meet with them but did not have any idea who the leader may be.

The party were led swiftly tward the christian camps all the way, and believe me they were well covered and watched for the scouts had not taken time to relieve their weapons from them.But knowing they were friends only making a mistake no one had thought of making any resistance.The girlscouts did not go the road that violet and her sisters or the Shaggy man spy had intended but went swiftly down a side road, and within half an hour they were entering the christian lines but not where the child scouts where, but the main soldier encampments itself.Here they were examined by the soldiers themselves but Gertrude Angeline took main charge.About ten mimutes later the other party appeared with the fifty child slaves and these were taken before the camp of the quarter master Sergeant to see if proper clothing could be given them as child slaves are always kept nearly entirely naked by the Glandelinians so they cannot run away.

Whatever weapons the shaggy man ary, and his followers had were taken from them .Then Angelinda Aronburg said;

"Notify the Vivian Girl Princesses will you please, that I have I believe seven imposters whom this "Ragamuffin "claims are violet and her sisters.I believe they would like to see them very much."

"But Miss Aronburg the Princesses have not been in camp for over a day.They went to spy on the enemy."

"Good night."said Angelinda Aronburg disgustedly."Well I'm not going to keep these prisoners on my hands as I have no place for them and don't want them in my camp."

"but we have no room here for them"said the Soldier."We're crowded with Glandelinian prisoners already.They were captured when the enemy was driven back yesterday from Delights Junction.They're still in possession of Aurandebondis but we'll attack that soon."

"You officers never have room for anything"said Gertrude almost angrily."Where the heck where will I put them then.I can't keep them in the child scout camp as it is not allowed.The Princesses wouldn't tolerate that ."

"Well I'll try to accomade them"said the officer."ut what about this little boy and girl here.They're not Glandelinians are they?"

"I don't know what the little boy is, but the girl in general St Claires daughter evidently stolen by these spies"said Gertrude."I nv never saw a little boy dressed like that be before in this country.He seems to understand our lan g language though, and says he has no no father who is a sailor."

As they were led away Violet and her sisters could not hardly supress their laughter.But they could see that Gertrude Angeline was soserious that she wouldn't let anything slip past her unless they could give the most profound proff that she was not being hoodwinked.what made her more suspicious was she had seen them leave camp, the day before, and also when out scouting had seen the shaggy man lead the party to that secret passage. Now in most cases only Glandelinians knew these secret passages across the "No mans land"and therefore Gertrude had been suspicious.She stayed out in hiding untill she saw them come back about the same way, and then hastily rode after them with the purpose to capture them.How she was fooled too was the way violet ,and her sisters disguised themselves.In many cases she could readily recognize them despite what ever disguise they put on, but this time the recognized them as easily as an ant recognizes what the snow is made out of which don't melt . Violet and her sisters knew it wouldn't do any good to talk, for Gertrude doesn't go by the sound of voices, knowing she has the idea imposters would learn to imitate any persons voice which they inded to make themselves up for. And they let this go on, with the purpose to see how Gertrude Angeline would take it , and to try the real mettle of the "shaggy man spy." To gain their esteem a person had has to be to their own idea or other wise he or she don't worth much to them. violet and her sisters were taken to a seperate tent, and ttttttttttttttttt Susan too.

They were closely searched for important papers. The Mat ron who examined them came to Gertrude and said;

"Maybe they are imposters or maybe they ain't Miss Aronburg but if they are,they are sure poor ones.I removed their hats from their heads and made them put on clean clothes and clean themselves and yet they don't all at all resemble the Princesses."

Gertrude went to see.

"Who are you girls!"she demanded.

"We are the girls whom you brought into camp"said violet.

"Oh is that so"said Gertrude fromw frowning."Getting fresh are you. Are you the Vivian Girls!"

"po we look it!"

"Well I'll say you don.t.pid youintend any imposing on them!"

"We did not ."

"Then why are you in a group of seven, and what were you doing with that "Ragamuffin spy."?

"We were not doing anything with him.He was leading us."

"Who was leading you!"

"The Shaggy man you call a Ragamuffin."

"Do you know anything about those childslaves you had with you."

"They helped us to get out of the Glandelinian camp."

"Likely story."said Gertrude with a sneer."All you Glandelinians do no matter what size you are is lie.You were going to have them massacred I'll be bound.I'll bet you played some him g over on the Princesses and that they are captured.did you see them in the enemys lines."?

"Yes I did."

"You did!"

"Yes ."

"When did you see them!"

"Immediately after they left camp."

"Then where in the world are they now!"

"They are in the christian lines."

"You are lying.The Captian said they have not been here for over a day. They didn't come back, and I believe you know more about them then you'll admit.If it is true you were imposters you'll face the firing squad even though you are girls.You know that in the order of the Princesses don't you!"

"Yes I do.But we are not imposters."

"Well that is for us to find out. Who was that other girlsout you had with you!"

"Her name was susan."

"susan what!"

"don't know"said violet, for she didn't .

"What was the Shaggy man Spys name!"

"We don't know eity either.We know him only as Shaggy man."

"Where did he get those passes into the enemys lines and out ."

"He got them from general Purgatorians headquarters."

"I believe that alright for the general gave it to them.But againWHO are you!"

"We are litt,e little girls who you had made prisoners."

"You are the most stubborn spies I ever saw.Well never mind you'll be closely guarded and then see if you will get away.I'll get some one who has time and who can make you talk.Forthe present adeau."

Marie Claras conscious was bothering her and badly too, and well it should indeed. she had been a foriegn girl within the christian lines, but she had been too friendly to a glandelinian disguised boysout also within the christian lines who had often come to see her and play with her, and she had yeilded to Fred Bensons insistence, that she should help him and six others capture or destroy the Vivian Girl Princesses so they could no more spy on the Glandelinian camps.she had at first been chorrified, and then yeilded and she had faltered when it came to her that she should have told him that it was wikced to make up such a dastardly plot against the Princesses, and that the Princesses and all Abbicannian child were to be spared to be considered as a mere victim of circumstances that such an unholy war brought about.she knew his stubborn and wicked opposition to anything connected with the Abbicannians and their Religion, and he was too blame for that, for he had known plenty of the Catholic Churches doctrines.Of the Catholic Church and its history he know plenty and yet declared that it was a Religion that when it once got the upper hand it would crush out all other people from the face of the earth.Fred Benson since earlier child hood had studied and went to Cat holic Churches often .There were no cat holics in the whole of any of the glandelinian armies, and when he came to the christian lines to do some of his secret service work he had to hide his feelings of hatred tward Cat holics,, and though he despised the dictrines and hated Catholics and God too he nevertheless went to Mass, Received Communion and so forth even wickedly to avoid suspicion.Yet he would have resented being called narrow minded and unfair, for wicked as he was Fred Benson wqswas a boysout of culture and tarlent who possessed many of the rugged glandelinian virtuses which still trived in is his own regiment.Yet though glandelinian, a lievto him was something abhorrent, to live a life that was a lie was the very depths of the abhorrent.He had met Claro in the refugee camps where he had gone while doing his spying works.He had been impressed by her gay cheerfulness and her attractive beauty.He had soon found he could use her for his own work as she did not then like or care a heck for the Christian cause.He had however never thought to ask her about her religious beliefs, and Marie had never mentioned the subject in their many conversations conversations at the outside of the camp as they walked t ogether up and down the company Street . They had known each other several mont hs befor he did find out she was a catholic, and it was a shock to him t o learn that t he beautiful little girl belonged to the hated Church even though she was not an Abbieann ian but an Irish french girl.He tried to grow cold toward her, for he knew if she turned out to be really a christian an d he went t oo much in gettin her friendship the Glandelinian generals would be bitter especially if he assoc iated with one steeped in t he doctrines of what to t hem was a Church truly to be as despised as Abbieannis herself.Try as he would however he could not put the wije winsome young child from his mind, nor keep her from his thought s. She could help him and only she and he knew it.The more he saw of her the more weaker grew his resolution not to displease his generals nor to incur their enemity.But then came the t hought.There are Renegrade Catholics t oo and she surely is one.She only did some of her Catholic duties as far as she had to never was friendly to boy and girlscouts of the christian side nor t o any of th the christian generals and soldiers eit her. And Marie was ever going out of her way to shower some little ac t of kindness and affect ion upon i him and al a always broughthim t he infiron information he wished to find out.Hithert o he had been rather shy in the presence of little girls of any kind but his resar res erve broke down completely before her gay and attract ive ways.He knew he could get plenty of help and information from her, and he also knew that if she was truly a christ ian and had only tried to trap and a him and if she did it would anger the glandelinian generals and they would throw him out of camp. Yet there was nothing to worry about.He was sure that Marie loved His Cause only, and when he could make her into one of his own girlscout t roop she would be ob dient to her commanders own wishes in all things even in religo religion.There would and could be no question that matters would be otherwise, for t rue success he knew can exist only where a girl and a boyscout of the Glandelinian side agreed together on the same subject.He could not see how there could be any close and intimate understanding if a each wanted to do the work different t han the other party or from fear of the christians finding them out ding disagree over the matter.

"such an arrangement he knew could never exix exist even on both sides.children scouts must come to cement a happy uniform in a cause of their own and t o make their friends and comrades bright and cheerful by not conficliting amongst each other.How could there be happiness unless either a boy or a girl scout going together yeilded yeilded to the same plan.Again he knew that tythe leaders of the children scouts have an obligation t o look to the military care of t heir following.On his side t hey only look t o the military training, on the christian side they did what he didn't like, look to the spirit ual as well as schooling and military and other training. He decided to have her help him secure or destroy the Vivien Girl Princesses.

"I will ask her to help me and six others capture them t o night."he suddenly said to himself"And if she loves my cause as much as she says she does and hates t hese Abbieannians and says yes then the rest will be easy.He had ha asked her on their walk down the company street that evening before the day violet and her sisters and the company with her were arr ested by Gertrude An eline.It had been so easy.she had said "yes" and then quickly he came to his second question.

"Of course you will leave details of the work to me.?"

She hestatin ly hesitatingly answered;

"But as I know the whereabouts of the camp more than you I shshould be able to arrange details, and lead you and your following to their headquarters bu by midnight.You know it is dangerous."

"He frownedat her reply.

"Marie don't ask me to wait so long as that.I simply won't do that.pon't let us quarrel at the very start of our work when great success and fame awaits a bot h of us.Leave the details t o me.You know I hate this fussand show.I will get my following disguise them as much as possible as those Vivian Girls, slip around to where their headquarters are, tell our following to be quik about the whole affair and then after we have captured them or killed them one orvthe ot her we'll be off to our lines before any one knows it ."

"But I am a Catholic and don't like the idea of committing a murder you know---"

"Oh well I'll yeild a point this time and you yeild one.I believe they should on y only be captured alive and you believe so.We will compromise by makin them prisoners and c arting them off.So that's settled, though the Glandelin ian generals back there will be shocked and surprised when they learn that a littl e Catholic girl helped me capture the Vivian Girls.To morrow I will break the news to old general Baywaith, and arrn arrange for some means to capture them.o So sweet dreams.To morrow night s we shall be on the road to our c amp together with the Vivian Girl Princesses.O"

With that he hurried off jubiliant. Marie Cli Claires conscious was bothering bothering her. she was in a daze.It had all come so suddenly.Was she now when all seemed so bright to give up the prospect of giving up religion and happiness because she wanted revenge revenge one one of the Vivian Girls who solded her for comin g late for Mass Sunday morning.Happiness?Could she be happy, if he if she yeilded her very oneious?Fred was a very wicked boy, and underst ood that as a Catholic she was subject ed to the regulation of her Church, and her betrayal of the Vivian Girls would be treason even t hough she was no Abbieannian i ian."Marie too was well instructed in her faith.she knew that the work that Fred Benson proposed would be for a christian a very wicked one.No Glandelinian matter what the Vivian Girls did for their cause had a right to sneak in and capture them within the christian lines without reason.If Fred Benson did not mean them real harm it would be differen t .But she knew the Abbieannian Country in its Canons on everything Military during a war recognizes the fact of a death penalty of any one tr trying to even as much as steal away the very child scouts and carry them to the enemys lines.Being a Glandelinin Glandelinian i himself Fred Benson was free to take any chance as he should or wished .But the c ax case of his desiring her z a Catholic girl to help him t hrough the sce scheme was entirely more dangerous.she too was a bapt ized Catholic, and could never do anything for the Glandelinian cause without being guilty of sin.She would be as bad as any of the Glandelinians then.Moreover she was taking an awful chance."Marie was doubtu.Was she to stifle conscience and to go through a dangerous spy ceremony with a hated glandelinian sect, which she knew would be very wicked, and live as a girl who would be as wic ked as the very Glandelinians herself or themselves.Was her sudden love for such a c ause to displace her once true love for God!In her heart she knew that, t hough exter nal respectability might clothe her in the eyes of all Glandelinians, she would be in the eyes of God and all the christian scouts she had known a very sinful impure girl.Fred Benson might believe she had a right t o do that for his cause but that would not make her less sinful.It would add to her guilt for she would be helpin g a innocent boyscout, and would be doing t hings which she knew she would be under a moral obligation not t o do.Her life t oowould be one of brazen impurity.she knew too that Fred Benson a hated lies, and hated even the thought of a lie.He had the old sturdy virtuess of his father and mot her.That he had asked her to go through a dangerous ceremony was due to his ignorance of her moral obligations, the natural result of his ingrained hostility tward the Cathoi Catholic Chruch and of t he grave peril of going through the ceremony.

Marie sat white faced.What would her mot her and fat her t hink of it all, if they knew that their darling lit tle th daughter had felyered and even c onsented to lead a life that would be so dreadful and abominable in the sight of God, and that taking s ide wit h an enemy who was fighting for sowic ked a c ause and als o als o whose soldiers murdered children in such shocking ways that phot ographers would not even take pict ures of it.Yet how could she argue wit h Fred B nson Ben son!He would not now listen to any explanation, certainly would not consent giving up a plan onc e he decided to go through it.Again she knew he would bring her into great trouble too if he was t o she if she was to back out of it, and he would never make the promises required by the Church t o give up such a dastardly kidnappin g plan for all really is not fair in war.Of course t hough a friend she did not love Fred Benson , and he did not love her either.But she had been u hurt, hurt dreadfully by t he repo pr reproac h of violet vivian for her almost omissing Mass in on that sunday morning because she had been t oo sleepy to get up early and she wanted t o get even some way.Just she put it out of her hear5 heart when Violet offended her so,when she believed t hat the Princ ess had no business to butt in her affairs anyhow she being a foriegner.

Yet she now knew that she should not have encouraged Fred Benson t o have her help him in his scheme.she should not have allowed her heart to go out to the wic ked glandelinian cause when before shehad really t ried to be a real good little girl.An enemy boysout does not allow his feelin gs to manifest them selves if he does not recieve encouragement.She had en couraged him to ac c ept her hel p, and had shown that she had liked his wicked cause, even when she had noted that he had at first been reserved, even cold t ward her because he knew she was a foriegner and a sort ofv Catholic and christ ian.It was her bewitching bewitching smiles her playing and playful gaitygayety that had brought him out of his shell of reserve.Time an d again she had deliberat ely delayed at her front gate of the interm interment camp for refugees untill s he knew he would be coming uo if by hanceos he would meet him.Hisx desire t o have her help him in his plot had not been thrust upon her.She had deliberately gone ahead in her infatuat ion for his wicked cause, knowin g full well that Glan delin ia was a most excessive and abomination in the sight of God, and that her Church frowned on Glandelinin as a Hall on earth, and prayed only yet for the nat ions C onversion if such was the Will of God.Though she knew the spirit ual dangers of taking sides with the Glandelinians, and that it would lead to great unhappiness unhappiness may bring her a world of woe and trouble, and probably the danger of facing the firing squad on the charge of aiding an enemy, she had defiantly put scruples aside and had done all she could to win Fred Benson to her side so she could get "even"with violet and her sisters for that slight scolding and tearful reproach that violet had given her.If fools sliding with such a country are afterwards unhappy was it not even unmust for her beyond measure for her to encourage or to even try to win this attentions so he could be able to seek her help as she knew all the ins and outs of the child scout and ot her christian encampments..Knowing how wicked Glandelinia's cause was, was she not absolutely unjust and committing an act of Treason against her own faith and Abbieannias cause by leading him to believe that he could get all the help possible from her.The Church warns against one uraging the attempt ions of one who is an enemy of God and all Religion.Her warning is fair both to any person of any christian religion no matter what their faith is and it is only by resisting the impulse at the very start that the spiritual dangers and unhappiness may be averted.Marie had not resisted these impulses, she had wilfully gone ahead and now a crisis had become or come because of her actions in her desire to get even with Violet , when she ought to realise no matter how sweet the Princesses are in nature, they are as fierce as little friends if you gain their enmity and be treasonable to them.Her wicked sin the worst sin on all record had begun at the very start of her infatuation.If she had known better she might have stopped on time but probably she didn't realize how big her sin was at the time, andthat some have even been struck dead for attempting harm to the Princesses, as they were Angel possessed, or otherwise they could not have gone through all they did and survived as they did and will to the end of the war.Her mothers picture and that of herfather stood in her little desk in her tent.The eyes of her father seemed to be stern and disdainful on her, but the eyes of her mother seemed to look at her, counseling her.she knew what her mother would council.she could almost see the lips moving. mog moving saying,"Give that little scoundrel the gt gate and don't be so sinful as take sides with such cruel massacring bloody Glandelinia." "I can't give it up.You don't know not her, what it means not to get even when I was scolded for something I hardly meant to do when you should know how hard it is to get up early in the morning.I'm not one of those crazy christian girlscouts who go about shooting down soldiers who also have fathers and mothers brouthers and sisters no matter how wicked their cause may be."

"Your Father is a good man"the lips seemed to answer."He brought me up to the alter and I was always with God's grave grace a christian woman and a good mother.You too can be a christian woman if you put Glandelinia's cause from your heart.You missed Mass that morning and the Princesses had a right to tell you severely about it."

"I can't stand those eyes."

Marie opened the drawer of her little desk and roughly flung the picture inside.It was as though she had flung her soul away had cast aside every vestige of her love for her God.She made her resolution to defy Mother, friends Abbieannia and God.

"I can't I won't give it up.I will go through with it .That Violet Princess will suffer for her scolding she gave me.I won't take it for any reason."

But Marie St Claires head wasxpounding.Last night the illuminated hands of the clock in Her bedroom had pointed to five before she finally fell into a restful sleep.How could she sleep?It had been a long desperate fight for many hours against conscience, against home tradition, against her religious instructions, and she had decided not to cast aside conscience but murder it, to reject and defy home traditions, and to spurn religious instructions.She wouldlearn to love the wicked Glandelinian cause, be the boysout had asked her to help his six following to capture violet,and her sisters, and she would;she didn't know she would run into disaster as such feat would be unsuccessful.she would follow the love of Glandelinia's cause even, even if it meant the firing squad and the loss of her soul.But she was fighting the last thought as all fight it who deliberately cast God from their heart.Why had God given her a heart , if she was not to follow its desires, its dictates?Her conscience had answered that question for her;"To save your soul."she put the answer away quickly, very very quickly for it made her feel nervous and very uneasy and guilty too."To save your soul.The words kept running through her mind.Then to reject God and side with Glandelinia is to lose ones soul.Yes, but she would ever Marry Glandelinia's cause, no matter what it meant.She would cast aside religion, tell herself that she did not believe even in Gods reqr rewards and punishments.Impurity is always ready to smother reasoning to garb sinful action in excuses.If these fail to stifle conscience, then as its last resort it loads the yeilding though trouble filled victim to renounce the revealed teaching of Christ .

It was night time. A strange coincidence had happened.Violet and her sisters had succeeded in escaping from the tent they were in , and almost immediately afterwards, eight children in gray uniforms except one which was a girl had been captured and placed inside the same tent without any one knowing the difference. When Gertrude Angeline learned violet and her sisters were back to camp and in their tent, and had seen that the "former prisoners"were still in the tent, she had heard they had "tried"to escape and were recaptured with a new new one who turned out to be Marie St Claire who had helped these rascal in an attempted plot to disguise as violet and her sisters so they would have a chance to get into their tent and carry them away.The spies however were boys but with almost the knowledge to imitate Violet and her sisters.But before she sent the prisoners before Violet and her sisters Marie St Claire was called for by a boyscout.His face was white and grave, and his eyes were those of one who harbored deep anger and resentment.He told her she was at once wanted by Miss Jennie Francis turner the Matron girlscout leader of the Loyorians.

Her He brought her before the girlscout leader.

There were two others in the tent with her Annie Roonie, and Dorothy Gale. Dorothy Gale had handed Jennie Turner a slip of paper.

"Miss Clare"came the cold calm voice of the girlscout official"I understand by the wording on this slip of paper that you were engaged to help a Glandelinian boyscout and his following to capture the Vivian Girl Princesses."

"There was an emphasis on the "Capture" that aroused her opposition.

"I intended to do so because one of them unjustly scolded me."she answered boldly "And we would have succeeded had not one of the fools blundered."

Before this Jennie Turner had come into her tent in her usual reserved and absorbed manner.While all enemies even had to respect her, they feared her cold defiant calm eyes that seemed to read the very depths of all the souls of her following, following and enemies as well.Yet she was a kindly girl scout and not severe to her following when you penetrated the cold exterior and her life was one strict in or her love of her cause and in interpretation of right and justice. She went on ;

"To betray Violet and her sisters because one of them scolded you?"Miss Clare Your Foriegn Nationality, and your Foriegn views are none of my concern as long as they do not clash with my Countrys cause, and affect those in whom I am in deep concern.It is because of your International Views that I have decided as the Chief of all girlscout leaders here,that I do not intend to allow you to be retaining your freedom any longer, and it is because of your International Views that all of the other boy and girlscouts and every refugee concerned has promished me to have nothing further to do with you, and you also can take Your God whom you defied and turned traitor against that your aiding the foe was not a success or you would have faced the firing squad this very evening at sundown."

"My International views.Then you are an enemie enemy of all Foriegners, and you would make them hate all Foriegners.You dislike Foriegners, and you would have them share your injuctice."

"In u In justic e!" And Jennie Turner rose from her chair and stood up haughtily and angrily and her eyes flashed and she scowled fiercely."Do you you little fool speak of inju in justic e when you do not know the meaning of the word. Yo^n young girl I told you that your International views are no on cern of mine unless they clash with my Countrys cause, and affect those in wome I and my following are interested.In your Case I will not allow you to commit a disgraceful act of injustice."

"Is it an act of inmustice in justice for a Foriegn girl who also is a catholic to side with a cause whom her own heart tells her she should do when one of the Princesses offended me."?Marie angrily asked.

Jennie Turner was lookin g at her with those cold blue penetrating eyes.She stood there so calm, so reserved that it angered her, but still left her helpless.

"You ask if you have a right to go on as if have because your heart tells you so and say I'm committing an act of Injustice.I will answer you.It is not for me to call it so I am right but it is an act of the gravest inmust ice injustice for you a Little Catholic girl and a Foriegner of a Nation I usually respect deliberately to aid Glandelinian spies and boyscouts disguised as the Vivian Girl Princesses to carry them away as prisoners or maybe worse, when your and my Church and your conscience yells you that the ceremony you have agreed to go through would be the wickedest act on all record, and would leave you not a christian, but only a wicked, unmust impure girl unworthy of any decent persons love, and make you more wicked than any of the wickedest wickedest Glandelinian generals themselves .Your very ego and your religious instructions told you so.You're ten I know it.You insinuate that I am an enemy on all Foriegners, and would make my following an enemy of them too.

If you were a tr true c Catholic, faithful to your Holy Church as we Abbicann ians are and to your conscience, and had tried your best to be a good girl and joined the girlscout troop when you had often been asked to do so, t hen I would have respected you and loved you, and I would have con gratulat ed you, and would have seen you were worthy of our love and confidenc e.How oftm you were asked by Jean Saunders, Jack and others to join our t roop and you curt ly de dli declined because violet slightly reproached you.But we a l l have had our eyes opened t o what a life of sin and brazen defiance of your God and conscience you were prepared to lead under the pretex of love for Glandelin ia and her Wic ked Cause, and every one now sees that they no longer can respec t you mus much less love you, and you are Excommunicated from t he Church for t he Girlscout army chaplian told me so.Angelinia Aron urg on my advice is going t o conduc t you to sorrow before the very Princ esses you have intended to bet ray, and you'll be sorry to made them so angry.You'll find out whet her you can trifle with them or not, and now so far as I am concerned, t hat will end the case.You wil be deported out of this camp a week from to day when safty for travel allown it.You can take God you are not court marshalled and s hot as a traitor."

"End the c ase!"

As she was led away under guard she staggered out of Jennie Turners tent.

"End the case!"

"Yes but not with God and her soul if she repents.She was led to her own t ent in a daze.Bewildered she stood looking at the cont ents of her tent , at her desk.She noted the absence of something there.Sick of heart and wit h a great fear of facing the Princesses on the morrow, s he sank into a c hair fighting the flooding tears back, and took out the picture of her mother. How understanding now those eyes seemed.How they looked into her very s oul-- so kindly, tenderly sympathetically, forgivingly . The lips seemed t o move, to speak to her.

"Repent of your foolishness, forgive the Princesses, and come home to me and t o God.You'll never be on their side any more.With God's grace I was always a chaste woman.You too can be a c haste little girl if you put this wic ked Glandelinian c ause from your l ittle heart.Show the Princesses to morrow you're sorry for your wrong and surely they'll forgive you severe as they may be ot herwise."

From her heart!You from her life for she was coming with God's grace t o see that no Glandelinia's wicked cause is worth the loss of any persons soul."

There came also a realization t to her of her immense folly. Before t his happened she had had every boy and girlscout as her best friend too. None of the boys were girl haters as you do find many in the c ountry she c ame from, and never did they ever so much as pick a fight with her or amongst t hemselves or even a have t he slightest cross word.Their goodness an d all other good intentions had amazed her.She had also at first loved even Violet and her sisters as she loved her own parents, but she had been a very high spirited self willed little girl and usually revenged any supposed or real wrong done her though afterwards she had been sorry for it, and especially as to the result of her revenge. Now t he boy and girlscouts would not so much as look at her, in fact they acted as if she didn't exist. But being good t hey did not wht m any one may t hink spread the news over her foolish sin t hroughout the whole neighborhood.They did not even speak of it .But she feared nevertheless t hat she was done for..As good as the Princesses are, and as right eous as they are she knew the frightful result that comes to any one who arouses t heir anger, and what they could not do, since they are the Princesses.But she really was tr l truly sorrow for the wicked t hing she did. She wept for a long time that dreadful morning and later in the evening she asked one of the boyscouts who passed most pleadingly if he wouldn't just be good enough to her t o bring a priest to see her as she wanted to confess her sin.I At firs t he was very onstimate in his answer"No" but her pleading, ent reaties and tears finally made him give in, and he said;

"I'll get the priest if he'll come.It 's up to him only after the dreadful thing you attempted to do.But Confession won't save you from the punishment that will come upon you."

However he himself had trouble with the priest.The priest didn't believe the little girl was sorry for her sin, but finally he came t o see her.what resulted is private here but nevertheless after the r priest was gone she seemed to be a new girl.

Yet the poor unfortunate little girl couldn't sleep all t hat night.

"Oh God must my whole life be shattered just because of one foolish mistake." she cried."I cannot,--my God do not let me lose my faith.My fait h is going." She had an awful realization for herself.To morrow night sshe would not be in such a beautiful camp.she must go forever and leave the happiness t hat had come to her durin g these few short months in the christian refugee camps--and all because this foolish sin she had committed had caused her house of happiness to crash to the ground. All night she lay t ossing on the cot and couldnot sleep and when morning came she only had succeeded inerying herself to sleep when she was awakened by the guard.

"You are wanted at the headquarters of the Vivian Girl Princesses"said t he girlscout who had aroused her."You are wan ted right away.I will lead you there."

After she heard this announcement Marie st ood in the middle of t he Company street petrified as she want,wait ed for the horse t hat was to be brought for her as the distance was too long for walking.A cold clammy feeling swept over her body, and she was unable to move.she also was t rembling, and a faintness and dizziness was upon e her.She would have ran away only she couldn't make use of her legs.vinally the party came leading the horse for her and she was al most unc ungraciously helped to mount. Half an hour lat er weeping and afraid she was ushered into the room where the Vivian Girls were.They had heard in t he meantime of the capture of the real would be duplicates, and had wit hout l etting An e Angelinia Aronburg know she had arrested them at firstby mistake notified her that she and her sisters recognized the spy and the little girl with him as real friends, that the child was susan Barrol and the spy a c hristian and Gertrude had let them go with apolo s of apologies and saying she was sorry for her mistake, but that she had to be careful when she didn't know what persons who appeared to be strangers were up to. When susan was br Marie was ushered into the presence of violet and her sisters, the seven disguised Glandelinian boyscouts were just being led out under a strong guard, havin g been questioned by Violet and her sisters and then sent away.

Joice Vivian who had arose as she was brought in motioned to the weepin g child to take a seat.

"Miss Marie Clare I have sent for you and so did my sisters.We were almost heart broken and my tears stained the paper that I wrote on, but I and my sisters rec ieved some consolation when we heard from our own priest who heard your Confession last night, though he told us nonthing of your sin, though we know it any way that you really were truly sorry.At first when we heard of your almost betrayal of us our hearts had been full of despair, and since we had been compelled to send you away, we wondered what t he future would hold for you.As we here in Abbicannia are really all good children as you have seen we never did and do not brand you as a criminal which you'u really were for the time being. Therefore we say as we forgive you for your folly since you were and are really sorry may God We Pray forgive you also as great as t he sin was.You had committed before God a greater sin than you even expected and your penance will be a heavy one nevertheless.You had often before knelt at the alter railing morning after morning, and then only yesterday you had c ome from Gods holy table, and almost betrayed us into the hands of the enemy bec ause our dear Sister tearfully rebuked you for wilfully missing early Mass sunday morning and compelled you to go to a late Mass.Oh it is suchas you my dear but poor boob that drives souls from God ttttt God an and make a moc kery of our own and your religion.May God forgive you as we forgive you nevertheless.We are too noble not to forgive you since wyou are reallly sorry, and we have signed a petition on this paper to be sent to Jennie Turner t o allow you to remain if she will.But the penance will be this; You had refused often when asked to become a girlscout.Well you'll be forced to be one and will have to work but you'll be watched for months as a prisoner nevertheless and not one of us untill we see that you really make good.Then if you do, we'll every one of us in camp, let bye gones be bye gones and you'll be one of us as if you never committed the sin at all.For the present the case is ended. Bt But be wise and please don't be so foolish as to inc urs rash raven geful feelings again. Revenge leads to c rime."

Then she was c led back to her tent still weeping, but feelin g bet ter for she had not expected to get so easy off at that.But she had kn no known that when any one istruly sorry violet and her sisters are very Merciful no matter how seriously they had been offended or double crossed..But t hen it seemed her pen anc e nevertheless was very hard.she had n ever desired to be a girlscout vwhen she had often been asked by those who had been her best friends to enter, because she had heard t hat it was a sort of hard life, too a many military duties, that the child scout shoolin g combin ed wit h elementary and other Schoolin g was hard to accomplish, and that too t he boy and girlscouts she heard had often gone on hazardous adventures , and she had feared dangers of any sort.But she was probat ed to be as one of t hem, but yet not as one of them, but as a sort pf prison er, but compelled to do as they do.She had been notified she was ll allowed the free use of t he camp, she was allowed to go anywhere she pleas ed as long as it was not outside the h c hristian camps, or the refugee camps.The later she was under t he strict est oderstо keep away from as she was barred from that .She wondered what her the child scouts would forgive her or would they still n ot pay an y att ntion to her.

Shecwondered too whether the petition of the Princesses to Jenie T urmer would work.Of cours e she is not the main head, as the Prin c esses are, but n ever theless she knew that whatever Jennie Turner does, the Princ esses takes it for granted t oo.Jennie Turner as she had seen was a lovely and beautiful lit tle girl, but when any one did wrong s he was as severe as s t igress and she generally never relented in anything that she did.Would she accept the petition. porrors if she didn't, then she would have to face the perilous journey of going back home, and where her parents were was so terribly far away.But would Jen nie Turmer really be so cruel as not to sign that pait pot ition.When she rebuked her she herself the poor look, had talked back to t he girlscut general in chief and had therefore an gered her greatly.And Jennie Turmer was dreadfully strict intttttttttttttt justific ation and h hard very hard to get along with when you did not gain her favor.Pretty as she looked and grac efully active in her manners Jennie never helens was very severe and sharp lookin g, she watched everything wit h n an eagle eye, and t hough she to Marie almost resembled the Features of "Ozma " in the Oz books, she had a cold look in her eyes, her mouth was somewhat sinister in expression and on cold before when she looked at any one she seemed to read your very soul. Too she had heard that to the enemy there was no child scat , not even the Vivian Girls who were as dangerous and as vice vicous, and she was frightful when in a rage.

There were only two enemies who somet imes defied Jennie Turmer and that was the "Nutt and Jeff" Intern ational Professional spies, and yet now they have not so much as meddled with her doings either for fear of her t igress like fury. What would be the result of the pet ition.She was soon t o find out .It was sometime after dinner, when she had finished, when Mildred Maxwell(not her stern child sout whom Marie sometimes feared) arived on foot, and said;

"Guard where is the girlscut or girl called Marie St C laire."!

"She is over in that tent there finished her dinner."

"Good I want to see her right away."

She went into the tent and stood looking at her for a few minut es.

"Miss Jennie Francis Turmer has sent me to bring you to her t right away." she said.

At first Marie had a sinking of her heart for since her first meeting wit h her she dreaded even to face Jennie Turmer. But s he had to go for she must learn whether she would be leinent wit h her or not. But instead of bringing her to the tent where she had been before she was brought t o t he headquart ers of violet an d her sisters.As she was ushered in, she saw Jennie Turmer there, looking over some papers with Violet and her sisters, and An el An galinia Aronburg there also the chief of all the girlscuts but not the same sort as Jennie Turmer. As she came in an d Mildred wit h her cust omary salute made her respectful x exit, Angelinia Aronburg herself arose from her chair and said;

"You Marie Clare are assigned to my division of Vivianit es on probat ion for three mont hs .Miss Turmer herscame to me to plead your cause as she believed we should give you another hance.I'll con fess that at first I refus ed t o listen tovsven any reason, but when Jennie went t o Violet and her sisters my best friends here, to state that she would give you a chance and sign ed their pet ion, they hastily sent for me.Well for their sake I'll give you a chanc e. But your penanc e is going to be severe believe me for what you did.I nor any of those who had c onfice confidan c e in you had never believed you'd fall int o such a dreadful sin as that .Had you been a real born Glandelinian you would have been respec ted as only a brave darin g spy, as the others who lured you on were, but you made an act of treason. But yet for all that we will forgive you, though I'll have a hard time to regain the friends hip of any of the scuts in your nehalf so it is up to you to regain it yourself.I'll put you on probation t o morrow morn ing.The first dut y will be to direct t he Stat ionsy youngest scuts in cleain g up the camp.After revelse you'll go on a risky scuting tour with me and some of my followers .I'll tell what you'll do other wise, and if you make good, and never fall again int o s in we'll if you turn out more to like our work allow you be be one of us.But remember Marie we're giving you on e chance.Fail int o any sin like that again and you'll fac e a firing squad as you're like one of us now.So be a c areful."

Then Jennie Turmer after bowing t o the Princ esses,and salut ing t o Gertrude said; to Marie.;

"I have s igned the petition and therefore you are free t o remain in t he camp. But remember what our Chief of girlscuts t old you.Be careful.You may go, and may God Forgive you for your foolish sin."

It was a very long time(get your diss) t hat night before Marie Claire could sleep(peep) that night. She was worrying about the pros pects of t he morrow.She had never seen child scouts called "Stat ionary ones"and t herefore she never knew what they really did. Ad And she feared t oo t hat t hey knowin g the rash t hing she had done, that they would not do anything for her even if she was forced to be a direct or over t hem, for if t hey knew her deed they would be enemies and des pise her. she however did not fear any t hrilling adventures if such was t o be given her t hat day also for in fact she was brave quite out of the ordinary, and often her mother had been compelled to chide her for her reckleasness in the fac e of many dangerous stunts she had done in s her younger days. finally she was able to get t o sleep, and did manage t o sleep somewhat late in the morning for no one had c ome in to wak n her. finally when she was awake and arouse arose from her cot , h she dres sed her self wondering if she would be given any uniform like t he child scouts wore. When she was fi fully dressed and had said her morning prayers she was led to her Mess tent and after breakfast,Mildred Maxwell came again for her, and on horseback brought her to the camp of t he Stat ionary Corps. Claire Marie now to her surprise that though in uniform these child Scouts were much younger children many of t hem only six to eight years of age,and the duties assigned t o all of them was t o clean the tents of t he older scouts, t he Company Streets and after makin g everything s as neat as possible them allowed to go and play whatever gamesthey wished untill dinner time.The way a great numb r of them looked at her, as Mildred Explained the situation to them Marie feared sure they would disbehave because they would not like her, but in this she soon found they were greatly mistaken.They first went t o their Daily Mass and Holy C ommunion then had breakfast an o hour afterwards, and then went t o work as soon as t he Vivianit es went on t heir various duties.At firs t Marie found t he task a little difficult as she didn't know much of the ins and outs of t he c amp, and at first didn&T didn't know how t o go about it , even though Mildred had explained what was to be done.The Company Street she was assigned t o overses were policed by the Stant ionary very carefully not hing left behind. Indeed the children were far more obidient in everyt hing than she had expec ted expected them to be, but when she spoke t o them somet imes t hough they wouldn't answer her. This hury hurt her keenly, and she t hought t hat t hey were not as good as they ought to be for Abbiesnnian children for they shouldn't be so ugly tward her especially when she was sorry for what she had don e.But the fac t was they had been instruct ed by their superiors not to spok speak at all during hours of dut y and she didn't know t hat .Had she herself used the little nurt hority she had been given over them properly and gave t hem the Command"At rest"she could have been in pretty good c onversat ion with them, for in fact none of these Stationary Scuts kn w knew a t hing of her offense, as no one in the camp of the Lagorians ever spread a word of her sin t o any body, not even the Vivianites knew of it..Finally s he heard some ot her superior some distanc e away call s ome command that sounded like"at Rest" and she began to suspect that uncon sciously she had kept the children "at attention"all the time,and therefore was the reasontat hey wouldn't speak to her.Therefore to see what the result would be she after drilling t hem for about an ohour called the same command, and then seeing it was the hour for recess as all work was accomplished she allowed t he dismissal to be sounded. Then a few minutes later some of the young children who had stood lookin g wonderingly at her finally came around her and one asked;

"Are you really a girlscut Miss.You do not wear s uniform!"

Fearfully of the result Marie had to confess wha why she was plaed here and t he same one after lookin g at the rest of her fellows, bot ys and girls said;

"We are very sorry you did such a foolish thing, for you don't know how nice and good the Princesses are.If you only knew what they suffered at hthe hands ofthe enemy in the past you would not have done such a foolish t hin g.But sinc e you since you are sorry don't worry about it .Do as you are asked to do and ma be when you get us ed to us, and the bigger on es you'll be glad to become one.You don't know what you are missin g.Be wise.We're all your best friends and you don't know it."

"And such words and sentences from one so young as if she had been grown up and could speak so. Finally the time came when Angelinia Aronburg s ent for her to go wit h her on a severe scut ing test.She was brought before her in her t en t and as the guard went out the great girlscout chief said;

"I'll have to decline taking you out with me to day as I desired to do an other business prevents me from going.You're to go though wit h my frien d and assist ant

"iss Angelinia Ric hee.I have sent for her, and I wish you t o wait in t his tent until she comes.If you make good wit h her then you'll make good wit h me.
We are doing this not only as a penance but we'll soon prove to you your foolish folly of not wishing to have become one of us.You don't know what you're missin g.But I believe after several months of probat ion you'll be standing before sit her I or Jennie Turner askin g for t he enlistment papers .But wait here.she'll be here in a few minutes.I hope though you are not scared of adventures ."

"No I am not"said Marie almost haughtily."My mother other often reproached me for my recklessness in mann many t hings."

"But listn here"said Angelinia Aronburg more decidedly."Adventures you'll go on but no rashness do you here do you understand. We don't want any one performin g dare devil st unts here.The enemy is not to be trifled wit h remember.I'm warning you on t ime so if you disregard it you are responsible what will happen to you not us."

While she was waiting that waiting she wondered what Angeline Ric hee was like.
So vast was the child scout camps themselves, not alone c ounting t he main christian lines, that s he had not even heard of that girlscout . Yet she was kept somewhat longer in waiting than she had supposed..Gertrude was herself beginning to wonder what was detaining her, but t he fact was t hat t he messenger, had been detained for some business reasons by Penrod for several t minutes, and therefore was a little late in delivering the note t o Angeline Ric hee . It was ther efore about twenty minutes before bot h in t he tent heard the swift galloping of a horse then itstopped in front of the tent .Half a minute passed and a beautiful girlscout wit h long golden curls came int o the tent first with a salute, and then sat right down beside Angelinia Aronburg.
After the two were in a short conversat ion which was on us unusally friendly one Angeline Richee gave Gertrude a hug and kiss and then arising looked straight at Marie.

"yes she is the one"said Gertrude."Don't worry t hough, they say she c an ride a hors e as good as any of us."

"Well then it's all right"said the ot her and tye the serious look left her face.She salut ed Gertrude and then motioned to Marie said "Come." and they both went out. Angeline said not hing more but direc ted her to mount, which she did on the ext ra horse which she had brought and t hey bot h went off. They did not stop untill they reached the Burrough girlscout camp, where half a dozen stud sturdy fierce Ama zon looking girlscouts were already coming up on hors b horseback.These had been assigned by Angeline Richee to accompany her on the scout ing expedition of trial for Marie which Gert rude would have done had not strict military business kept her from it. They took a circutious path out of the camp, and within a half an ohours of swift riding t ward the west were out of the christian camps but not yet out of hristian territory. At first however Angeline Richee was somewhat apprehensive, and dist rust ful of her new charge..she had heard wit h great disgust an d grief of what s he had dnt nded to do to Violet and her sisters, and was afraid that Marie's repentenc e repentance was not sincere . There is such a thing as only forced remors e bec ause your sin and guilt had been found out, and t hat your punis hment only fitted the attempt because it had not been success ful.In fact t he offense of t his kind was a sort which in the eyes of t he Abbiannian aurthorit ies merit ed a firing squad, or a life imprisonment but as Marie was only a foriegner and also had not been a girlscout at the t ime t he offense therefore c ould only bring the punishment of "Probation."That word in t heir s ense meant that the offender would have to even against her will, do t he work that is accomplished by the highest grade of girlscouts the purrough Vivianites, for a certain space of time as set by the superior, and also to fac t he perils and hards hips of the same.If she or he quailed in t he face of dan ger ither she or he would be looked upon as a coward, and would be rejec ted from the c ommunity altogether.Jennie Turner had written down the decree of "Three months and fourteen days of Pr b Probat ion for Marie, aft er which she then could be released from Probation and be allowed allowed if safty allowed it so to return home, or if at the end of that period of t ime, she had shown good quailitifactions, bravery, and proved her sorrow for her sin was sincere by good behavoir sh she would be allowed if she desired t o become a girl sc out, though she could only be w voted in, and not accept ed in as others are by mere registration.It wasn't that she c ould only be voted in because she was a foriegner, but bec ause of the sin she sit her committed or had been about to committ but in which she had been frustrated by the capt ure of those Glandelinian boyscouts sh and she herself. Angeline Ric hee had gave a sort of signal to her followers,and that was for them to watch her as closely as an eagle does for its prey.

Angeline Richee was slightly afraid t o trust her.And what made her a lit tle more apprehensive Marie had to be armed too for if she was to be on "probat ion" she hasato do all things that a girlscout does, and if she was sincere then it would not be just to make her go and do these things and not have w apons weapons to defend herself in case she met with any of the dangerous Glandelinian s .
It was some distans e tward the enemy territory and therefore as fas t as the part y rode it took aboutd half an o hou r for them to reach reach it. As t hey got to the desired spot s Angeline Richee told Marie to go s ome distanc e t o scout ahead and see if there were any signs of the Glandelinians or any of t heir patrols. She obeyed and rode hastily forward. Some of An geline's followers feared Angeline Richee was making a mistake in trusting that girl to go so far offalone for if she really did sympathize with the foe she had now a good opportunity to make good her esc ape. But Angeline ric hee c omforted t hem wt elling them she and two others had faster horses and if she didn't c ome bac k at the appointed time they would persue her even into the enemy's lines if n ec essary.But she believed by th e the very looks in Maries eyes that she did not intend to decieve her.

Yet soon however(ever or never) Angeline Richee began t o get a little worried after all for Marie did not return and it was five minutes aft er t he appointed t ime.She was just deciding t o investigate when she heard the sound of a horse on a faster gallop than was nec essary for any one on the ret urn and a mimit e later Marie appeared.She looked white in the fac e and sick, and appeared as if she had seen something that frightened her.

"What's the matter?"asked Angeline Richee somewhat sharply."Did you see the enemy and di did t hey scare you?"

""Nop---- worse--- oh worse than---that"she gasped"Oh---oh I'm sick, t hey-Re they-Re going to oh-- I can't say it--they're going to-!!"

"speak up girl.Said Angeline Ric hee shaking her what "the t he trouble."

"Oh l Child--child---slaves over yonder""she gasped"t he soldiers, t hey're going---going to murder them.Oh God What shall we do.I didn't believe-Oh I didn't believe Glandelinian soldiers ---would do that.They're going to murder children."

"Say are you spoofing me just to lead us in a trap!"said one of the others while Angeline Richee looked as if she too doubted the word.

Before Marie could answer there came from the distance but not too far off a terrible earthrending sc ream from some child, not of fright but as of one being burned by fire or tortured by fire.The sound was horrible and everybody amongst the girl scouts and boys whitened in their faces as they heard it .

"I believe it is true"said Angeline Richee.

"Oh---oh what can we do!"cried Marie.

"Did you count the soldiers"said Angeline.

"Yes, there were thirty.I c ould-nt count---the ---children. There---there-there-were ---too---tttooo-tototo to many."

Angeline Richee had fifty of her followers.Again came tn t hat frightful petious shriek but Angeline didn't wait any longer.

"Remember"she said to Marie"You are as one of us on Probat ion.You have to hjoin the fight too.Are you game?"

"Yes ."she gasped."I'll--d---anything---die ---ti save them---I ---would-- I certainitly---would."

Angeline issued a sharp command to her t roop and in a flash they had t heir dangerous sabres drawn. "Forward"she fairly screamed and Marie gladly led the way.In a few minutes they came upon a shockin g sight.About fi e hundred children were t ied by wires to trees, and the Glandelinians were just beginning their turetore before murdering the children..The Glandelinians saw t he wildly charging girl and boyscouts with drawn sabre but t oo late to even draw weapon or mount their horses.Those who couldn'tescape showed fight most des perately within f ull view of the surprised and terrified c hild slaves, but they couldn't even do a an in u in jury to the chils scouts . Marie in the attack was far in advan c e of t he others and she c ame upon two Glandelinians who had mounted t heir horses and start ed t o rush away.She showed how game she was by quickly overtaking them.One had unslung his carbine and tried to r c rash her head in with the butt but she shot him wit h her pistol and sabred the other from his horse without a sc ratch to herself.The fight was over in only a few minutes.On y sixteen Glandelin ians got away and they were badly wounded.Those who did not escape had been killed as knowing the c onsequences if they were caught while in the act of murdering c hildren they had refused to surrender and fought to the last..Angeline Richee would have given anything to have captured a few of them, and make an example of t hem but in this e he had not been successful. Then too it was tough work to free the children from the trees and get away with them before any more of the enemy would appear in a bigger body, but it was finally accomplished after some length of time, and yet no Glandalinian made any appearance. The was a weaker and more timid of the children were playing on the horses of the girl and boy scouts, but the rest of them had to work of it so it was quite some time before the party with those they had rescued finally reached the christian camp..They indeed surprised their fellow girl and boy scout when they arived with five hundred almost totally naked child slaves, and a lot of weapons with which the Glandalinians had intended to use in their cruel scheme and also the weapons of the soldiers, and their cartridge belts..When questioned by Penrod who rode up at the sight Angelina Richee answered;

"We just fraternized with a thousand of children in time.No lives lost except amongst the soldiers and that is no wory of ours..If we had accepted a few of them alive, all of our troop here here would have seen a grand show."

"There seems to be quite a number of these dreadful scenes lately lately at that "said Penrod."How did you discover the Glandalinians at it ."?

"This girl here whose name is Marie Clare discovered it ."said Angelina Richee proudly."And also she was the first to be in the attak attack.And could she had handle a sabre.You ought to have seen it. n And I couldn't have believed it of her."

"You mean this girl who's on probation"said Penrod looking amazed."And only yesterday yesterday she almost betrayed the Princess es to the enemy.And it was I who caught her."

"Yes it was her"said Angelina Richee"In attacking the enemy she was fiercer than the whole of my squadron."

"Congratulations"said Penrod grasping Marie by the hand and shaking it heartedly."You have done one good turn to restitution for your mistake.Keep on as you have done and you'll be making good.You seemed to like our kind of work after all."

"Marie blushed but could not find words for answer.But Angelina Richee said in her behalf;

"I believe when she gets used to the Probation she won't wish to quit.If she turns out as we wish for and her repentance remains firm and she does n't do wrong any more we would be glad to accept her in our ranks, for she sure can fight, and for a girl of her age too."

"Where did you come from before you ever came to our country!"Penrod asked of Marie.

"I came from the State of Michigan."

"State of Michigan!You're an American then . I thought you were from Ireland as they say you are Irish."

"My parents are Irish that is my father was"said Marie."My mother is French.I was born in Michigan but we came here way before the war when I was a small baby."

"Oh I see. Where did you learn to wield a sabre like that!"

"Boy and girlscouts let me practice sabre drills before I committed that sin."

"But why did you allow you to do that since before then you had no intention to become a girlscout and had refused when you were asked!"

"They had hoped they could get me into it by coaxing."

"And now you're in it on probation.How long are you to be in this!"

"Three months and a half."

"Three months and a half.That's short for probation.Who degreed that ?"

"I believe it was Jennie Turner."put in Angeline Richee.

"If it wasn't "said Marie."It was Angelijia Aronburg.She sentenced me to probation for that length of time."

"You were lucky you got off so easily then ."said Penrod."She's very severe when she is offended.I'm surprised she made it so short.But what do you intend to do when the time is up."

"I do not know now sir.But maybe I'll know then.But even then if I wanted to I couldn't be one sir without my parents consent."

Before Penrod could say anything in answer to this a girlscout about nine years old and with long bob black hair and strikingly pretty came running up to Penrod fluttering a letter in her hand and she was all tears .

"Oh Master Penrod, Master Penrod "she cried in great distress, "Oh surely I didn't do anything wrong wrong I surely didn't."

"Didn't do anything wrong, why what's the matter "answered Angeline Richee herself dismounting from her horse."

"The Princesses have discharged me from the ranks on the charge of not obeying a call to their headquarters."she cried."Oh Miss Angeline Richee, Master Penrod I didn't mean not to come, I didn't didn't get a call honest I didn."t"

"Hush, hush don't cryso."said Penrod also getting down from his horse."Maybe they made a mistake. Let me see the note."

The little girl weeping bitterly handed the note of discharge to Penrod. He read as follows;

"Miss Jeanie Anderson is discharged from the ranks and is no longer a girlscout because she didn't obey the call for duty at the headquarters of ours this morning at Ten oclock. signed,

Violet , Angelina, Jennie, Joice,
Catherine Daisy and Hattie Vivian."

Penrod read it over carefully and so did Angelina Richee.

"I'm sorry said Angeline Richee to Penrod"but I'm afraid we couldn't do anything for her."

"Maybe, and maybe not "said Penrod rather sharply.

"Why what do you mean!"

"I mean plenty."When ever Violet or her sisters writes a discharge certificate it first goes through to Miss Angelinia Aronburg and thence to Jennie Turner who sends the dismissal to the officer of the command wherein the one is to be discharged. Can't you see.Wait her of their names are signed here and it looks mighty fishy to me.I'm going to Miss Angelinia Aronburg right away and see what's wrong."

Penrod told the little girl to come with him, and as a horse was brought both were mounted and they set off from the spot to the chief girlscout general Headquarters.Angelina Aronburg happened to be absent but Penrod learned that Jennie Turner was still in her tent so she went so he went there. As he and his grief stricken companion were ushered in Jennie recieved him as only the best friend would, but Penrod came promptly to the point at once.

"Message of discharge "she said surprise.Why none passed through my hands this morning at any hour.Let me see it Penrod dear."

She looked it over the message having been typewritten . She told the little girl to sit down on the chair and she took off the reciever of her telephone and immediately got the Headquarters of the Principesses on the wire.

"who, yes this is Miss Jennie Turner.Is the Vivian Girl Principesses in!"she asked. There came the answer that all of them were out except Daisy.Daisy was called to the phone by her maid. Hello"said Jennie Turner is this Daysy yes, well I have a note here brought to me saying that one of our little girlscouts Jeanie Ann Anders had been discharged because she disobeyed to obey a call.It's got your name and the names of your sisters on it, but it has not been endorsed either by Miss Angelinia Aronburg or myself.What!What . You and your sisters did what, Oh I see. Oh all right. I'll wait." she hung up the reciever, and turning to little Jeanie said;

"You have been hoodwinked by some one who meant to do you some dirt . The Princesses didn't write no certificate of any kind, Daysy said she and her sisters to day have been too busy at their Schooling work to even think of writing a letter.She's coming right away even from her class room.She wants to see that note."

"I thought there was a catch to it somewhere."declared Penrod."When I read that note I saw there was no name of Gertrudes or yours on it and so felt sure it didn't come either to her or you.I wonder who put that up.If we could find out we'd make it hot for the culprit believe me."

Ten minutes passed and there came the furious gallop gallopping of a horse.Then some one dismounted, and in came Daisy Vivian. The others arose as she entered but she bade them be seated.

"Your telephone call sure startled me and so it did my teacher."said Daisy. Teacher told meot come right away and get that note.I want to see it ."

Jennie Turner handed it to her."

"I'm going to have this looked into" said Daisy as she read the note."I'm surprised too Penrod dear you didn't recognize it is not even my handwriting, nor that or any of my sisters.And a man wrote that .I can tell a mans handwriting any where .."

"I didn't take time to examine the hand writing"confessed Penrod with a smile."The poor little girl was so excited I didn't think of anything else."

"Who could"said Daisy."Well some one is trying to trick some of our followers into believing they're discharge.Well I and my sisters this afternoon after school are going to lecture every girlscout in our commands not to pay any attention to notes not endorsed by either Angelinia Aronburg or Miss Jennie Turner no matter what the hand writing is.And if we catch the writer of this I'll have him flogged to the skin I surely will."

Then she turned to the little girl and said;
"As you had recieved this note you must come wit h me to headquart ers.I'll have to make restitution for this."
Penrod helped the little girl onto her horse, and Daist Daisy t oo and both rode off to the head headquarters of Violet and her sisters."Penrod also followed.
Just as she came in o her sisters arived having gone out on a scouting tour and daisy at once showed them the note and pointed to the little girl who had recieved it.Instead of saying anything to that they at once went to t heir room and examined every bit of their writing material and things but found nothing was touched.
"The one who wrote that was wise enough not to use our things"said Viol et ."If he had we could easily have traced him through his finger prints.Then she said to Jennie;
"Yourwere foolish to carry on so Jennie.Didn't you know that any note no matter what it is isn't worth anything whatever if it isn't signed also by our chief leading girl or boyscouts.That it doesn't count !"
"No "said Jennie I didn't .I was sure scared."
"And it isn't even our handwriting"said Jennie who was looking at the note herself more carefully."It a mans hand writing .and yet poor Jennie let him fool her.Go bak back to your ranks little girl and don't worry over that any more.As for a call we never sent an y. We were too busyhat school this morning. We were just c oming back for our afternoon schoolins.We got to learn lots and lots if we wish to defeat the enemy."
Being reassured that she was safe the little girl felt happier and thanked violet and her sisters very gratefully.After she was gone Jennie said;
"A part of this letter was typewritten, but our names were signed by a mans hand.I'm going to have one of our clever Gemini members see if he c an't trace the fellow through this hand d writing providing he is still in camp.This is in these times a capital offense and if he didn't for any dastardly intentions he'll face the firing squad I'm sorry t o say."
The real fact was that w who ever wrote that note did it within t he enemys lines and through crafty spies had it transferred to the christian lines so that poor little Jennie got it. That afternoon during school hours, Violet and her sisters as excused the teacher from duty for an hour, and had all the boy and girlscout officers assembled before them and gave them full in atructions as how to t l tell all their following not to believe in any not es no matter how small or important that are not signed by also Angelinia Aronburg Jennie turner or any ot her high officer."For said violet who did most of the speaking;"Time and again some prank or spy may do somet hing to put it over just like it happened tolittle Jennie.Once even I and my sisters nearly ran into a trap by almost foolishly believing in a note of that sort .We recieved what we supposed was a hurry call from our own Father, and had we not discovered soon enough that it wasn't his hand writing we would have been captured.We fortunately not only avoided that trap but caught the rase sls ourselves.So remember no matter what note comes to you do not pay any attention t o it what ever whether it be written by hand or typewriter or telegrap telegraph if it is nit signed by Angelinia Aronburg or Jennie Turner for none of our nots come t o anybody without first bein g sent to them.And so queer are their han d writ ing that it would be an astonishing miracle for any one to be able t o opy their handwriting. so whatever happns happens if you recieve any notes any of you or tou your following that are not properly signed, bring them at one t o either they or us and we'll find out the clues.But don't fall for anythin g like she did.She of course was so frightened that she almost took sick.she can't be blamed however as she didn't know that the notes should be endoursed and therefore she surely believed she was discharged.And another t hing t o remember which she didn't know I suppose, knowing some one might try t hings I or my sisters do not write letters or messages of any kind by any t ypewritin g or any writ ing machine whatever nor do we use any print ers.We use our own hand and any one who can duplicate our hand writing is a marvel t hough on some occ asions I believe it did happen. Therefore do not any one take it for granted what a message says if it is not signed by either Miss An gelinia Aronburg or Jennie Turner.Just bring those message s to the proper aurthorities to be examined and all will be well.We know there are a lot of Glandelinian agents of some kind who would do those things to get somebody t o leave the army so that our ranks could be thinned or something or maybe t o capture them or other.Glandelinians of the Scodlier type would do that especially for those Omarians are a treacherous lot.That is why they are called Scodliers.
So for the last time don't believe any note that is not endorsed by any of our highes t leaders and not written by our own han d.We'll try our best to learn some hand writing too that no one else cal duplicat e.Now you may go bac k to your c ommands an d God Bless you all in your efforts."

WILL THIS WAR LAST FOREVER OR TO THE ANNIHILATION OF EITHER ARMY?

"We but that was a fight!"Said Jennie after she and her sistern had recovered from the horror of their experience;"I fear that they might attack again to mor-ow."
Evans was in the tent with them and Jennie said;
"Evans, I'm going t o have you made a general reason as I can see my father. You proved yourself a hero and saved me twice."
"Yes I see that."Said violet placing her arms around Evans as he was bathing her wounded feet ;"I saw him have a fight with an officer at the starting of the battle and that officer nearly got him down."
"He had me down."Said Evans wiping her feet gently with a sponge;"I broke my own sabre over a grenade's head, but as was determined to get another,sabre, and to take the officers and I did ."
The brave little girls pretty sweet Evans watched the Angelinian red cross corpsconing in with the wounded on stretchersas even in thousands of wagons and carts and prayed inwardly for those their in the great struggle.
"And this great battle happened on the 30,that August."Said Jelen;"I was Wonder where little Eva was during the great fight?"
"Couldn't keep her away ."Said one of the nurses. She is another heroine and saved your father from being wounded. She is seen to be one of your division s of boyscouts."
"Oh goody."Said Violet;"But I hope she does not get killed. And I wonder if generals Hanson and Bicknell we will hear of this fight, and the slaughter of children by the explosions in those two lines of stockades!"
They might."Said Evans;"If I ever get there they were I would send a message to them telling all about it. Will until the world whole world hear if of this child but here. Then there will be something something doing or my name is not Jack Evans."
"Some of the new Glandelinian generals looked like Beery men."Said Catherine!
"I couldn't help feeling creepy crawly when I saw them. And hey that division of Zimmermanndine chased us. We but we were frightened and bewildered. How did you old a hide them Evans!"
I"I managed to escape with the routed division, and even then I was going to lead a force to your rescue when you little girls made that wild trip across the river on those old log burning rafts. You little girls have well all right and I love you all the more for it. I even hear the names of those airships blown up by the enemy for I have the list of them here. No you little girls went to see it. I picked it up after a fallen Glandelinian captive dropped it."
He produced a large sheet of paper which gave the name of the forticient tens of the stockades.
Inde t Fort Zachary was the worse scene of the battle so far as predicted. The christian forces under Julo Mindernine, assisted by others had made a sweeping assault upon the stockades in this vinicity but were defeated ith the loss of 900,000 to that of the enemy 1800,000. But the same christ ian forces had again attacked the enemy making a severe and cr el engagement both sides being losing eight hundred thousandand here the christians in the second assault were successful.
The christians under Mindenine and Cannine had assulted the fortifications of Auranddebonica but had been slo.kingly defeated with the loss of I,XI3,000 while the enemy loz lost 988,899.
Assaults just as vic vigorous were made on the fortifications of Bonbon. These fortifications were harde hard to capture and here the child slaves and prisoners had been treated more cruelly than the rudest man had ever used a rodent. A larger number of the nemy had been stationed here and way before the battle had fortified the place day by day to hepinr to keep the 800,000 child slaves there from being rescued and succeeded in the horrible manner previously described in the frightful explosions. The fortifiertions of Bonbon was in realitly a poverty stricken city of prison pens forts builded for captured innocents and guarded by the stongest stockades the Glandelinian could erect [illegible].
During the second assault on Aurandelonia which again had been a christian repuse, thechristians had succeeded in capturing Bonbon but when all the other fortifications had finally been captured all the children in Bonbon before the explosions had been killed all their bodies being fe irly sliced open and their intestines exposed everywheres.
General Pope had assaulted the Glandelinian stockstockades at Bonbon which was guarded by the glandelinins under Richard Yoe, John Cannons. Here the conflict had raged with the most appalling fury for four hours and during the fourth hour of the conflict a movementof the enemy deceived Pope and supposing the enemy to be retreating at last he ordered a close and swift pursuit. The pursuit was started but nothing much gained and terrible disaster followed. On portion of the Aurandicalion ground Popes advance a had been assailed in an ambush and in the most cruel sanguinary conflict which ensued the Angelinians were defeated and driven across the Bonbon plains in frightful rout, and then the stockades had burst into a volcanoe of flame and din, tons of wreckage cleared all around and Pope was killed. General Hampton also assaulted the enemy under Kee Boo who he in the Bottle fortifications and the fighting here had also been very severe. The christians assaulted general Michael Clandelini and assaulted the Omanians under Honking very furiously and for three hours varying fortunes on both sides resulted, the fighting however finally resulting with the defeat of the christiansand their leader woundedwhile the christians lost 2,100,000 to that of the enemys 1,900,000. Pope had ben wounded in the struggle also

In themeantime general Vivian and many of hisofficers went off to investigate the scenes of the terrible explosions. After some hours he arived at the scene where the first line of stockades had been blown up but where they had at stood were now o only smouldering embers embers But strewn around far and wide were the mangled bodies of soldiers and children still unburieds Many od of the children lay with their frontal portions gone, and even the intestines. Thousands of others lay in heaps bloody corpse corpses many w with their heads , arms or legs gone with all their intestines protruding.

A deep abyss like hole was exposed all along the points where the explosions had occured but the deepest point was in the center of the line of stockades, and pieces of fish, piles of intestines, arms legs, chests plates, and sliced bodies by thousands lay crammed at the bottom partly roasted.
Blood lay like pud puddles of rain water and all the surrounding trees and bushes were stringed with intestines and besmeared with blood.

It was a sick sickening sight to general Vivianand which filled hd with rage, and emotions This indeed had showed him the frightful power and violence of the great explosions to do such a horrible this thing as these dids
He wheeled his horse around silently however and followed by his staff returned to the lines.
The first thing he did was to look up the Vivian girls as he feared they were among the mangled and torn children in the destructive explosion s at Poverty Rows
Learning however t hat they were in their tent with Evans he sent an orderly to summon them to his headquarters, in thenew positions miles away from the terrible scene.

THE SO STORY OF THE VIVIAN GIRLS.

As the little girls were still talking to Evans the orderly came up and saluting said;
"General Vivian want's to see you six little girlsand Evans. He wishes to know how you ex escaped the disastercus explosions at Poverty Row."
"I'll get your horses ready."Said Evans.
He soon led them to the tent and helping the little girls to mount sprang upon his own horse and away they swp sped for general vivians headquarters. At nine o clock they reached thegreat christian generals headquarters and were immediately ushered into his presences.
Eva was standing beside him resembling a little angel in her own dazzly dazzling beauty.
"I was worrying overyou little girls."Said general Vivian;"As you six were at Few Poverty Row with your signal corps when the explosions occured. How in the name of Heaven did you escape?"
"We were not near enough."Said Violet ;"But oh it was terrible. We were covered with the int estines that fell upon us from the very sky and were chased by a thousand of Cannons Zimmermanniane It was a narrow escape for us indeed. We were rushing forward waving our flags, and encouargaing the christians soldiers onward, when all of a sudden we had ben stunned by a horrible roar sounding more like if the very ground under us had broken out into a vonsano volcanic eruption thaneverything before us semed to shoot up into a great sheet of blood red flame , followed by inky blo black clouds of rolling smoke which made it very dark almost like night, and before we knew what hapened a tremendous showerof wreckage human bodies fish and intesti es and un utensiles of evey every description besides fragments of thousands of firearms and cannons pelted my men, the shower killing many than did the enemys fire. So fierce was the scene to us tha t it looked as if the worls world was coming to its ends Then terrible confusion reigned among the christians and they retreated like a stampeding herd of cattle and we were borne along with its Then we had to run for our own lin lives for Clandelinians of the worse kind were after us and we managed to get awau away ly leaping into the Mc-Whirther river leaping across raft after raeft there untill we crossed.
Oh God we will never forget it."
"Wh t done it?"Asked general vivian;"Did the enmy or one of our random shells?"
"The enmy set fire to it and then as one of my boyscouts told told me he saw a se shell from the enemys lines, not ashell by hundreds of high explosives crash among the stockades after the clandelinian soldiers had abandoned it and then came theexplosions.It was a storm of clandelinian she l's as they came from the direction of the clandelinian batteries."
"This occurance will have to be looked into."Said general vivian grimly;'' Probably more than one million nine hundred thousand children children had been b t b, blown to pieces by the explosions and all on account of JohnManleys meanness. If I and Hanson had known his true nature when we first met him we would ha have shot him down without mercy. He is a great danger to the world and even his ow own nation and so h is his father who is really worse worse than his son. If he Thoeman Frderal and some of the other butchers were not their leaders perhaps the child butchery would never have occured.Look at Le onia Mledonia Bicknell and Bluemannia, Adele-De-Carte mush-in-t he-head and some of the others. Any Glandelinian under these generals ought slaying children would pay the penalty a thousand folds.

These generals are great and it would be a Blessing of God if they were the main heads of the Glandelinian army and not the three wicked Manleys. This slaughter at the stockades of course was done by Ambrose Fullers men.''

''But when is this big and horrible war ever going to ei end?''Asked Violet pleadingly;''It just rages on, and a on, without any signs of an end.''

''I know that but it cannot be helped.''Said general vivian bi tterly;''It might last another year yet or probably more, and indeed were are getting the worse of the wh whole thing right now. I looks as if we are going to be the losers. But I have something to say to you. Baldwin want's to see you little girls as he is severely wounded and would like to ask you something. I consented but I adive you to watch carefully around his headquarters and have your pistols ready in case you run into a trap, for you will have to cross a part of the enemys territory there.''

''Can we go right away? '' 'Asked Jennies

''As soon as you like.''Said general vivians

The little girls after bidding him goodnight, started out followed by Evans. To reach general Baldwins headquarters and lines they had to cross a certain landscape which was unknown to them and occupied by a part of Picknells victorious Glandelinian troops. The moment they reached this glen the woods seemed to fairly blaze while there came a deafening roar of musketrys.

If it had not happened to be that this volley had not been fired too low it wouldhave ben fatal to Evans and the little girls. Their horses were riddled by a storm of bullets and the little girls were thrown, but not injured however. The little girls got up as quickly as they could while Evans h go gasped;

''Quick Quick his way little girls. We got to get away before they surround us.''

The little girls unseen by the Catholic Glandelinians in the darkness of that rainy night dashed after Evans.

In a moment half a dozen lantrens were flashing, and a swarm of Glandelinians gathered about the dead horses. Suddenly the leader stooped and picked up violet's bonnet.

''It's those vivian girls.''He cried;''It's a shame to do it, but they were probably trying to spy on us and it is our duty to catch them if we can. Forward men.''

The Glandelinians with loud whoops swept tward the pi point where they had heard thepatte of feet, but the little girls heard their desperate persuers coming and ran with all their pa speed.

''Fire of if they come too neare.''Said Violet to Evans;''If we cross that poontoon bridge over thatroaring river we are safe.''

On came the Glandelinians with devilish blo dourdling yells, and reached the bank just as the little girls jumped onto the poontoon bridge.

''After them.''Cried the Glande linian leader;''But don't any of you men shoot or dare to fire. They are only children and must be taken alive.''

The Glandelinians were rapidly swarming over the lon long string of boat rafts and the little girls saw that they were gaining on them as most of the Glandelinians were on horseback. Evans drew his fourty four, and blazed away at the nearest Glandelinians causing one after another to go reeling into the streams.

''Bring that impudent Angelinian scamp down.''Roared the Glandelinian leader.

Evans pointed his the revolver at him and said;

''If they fire they might hit the little girls instead of me. If youwere Catholic Glandelinians as your uniforms showd shows you would not chase children whether they were spies or not. BAH, you are Free Masons and Zimmermannians in duseuise as Catholics. Advance any f further and I ll shoot you down like a dog even if you was a Glandelinian pr fria frir or priest. You will not get these childre children and if you do it will be over my dead body you dirty Free Masons.''

Many of the Glandelinians recoiled at this and the leader cried;

''Hey you are wrong. We are staunch Catholics and if your angels companions were spying on us it is our painful duty to fy and get them and will do so if we have to risk annihilation in so doing. Your words do not daunt us and you are like a puppetif you get us going. In truth we are not Zimmermannians but are Gurdes for facts and so do not tri fle with us you young puppy. And in my heart I swa swearthat I love the children though enemies of my country, and if they can furnish to me proofs that they are not spies I will give up a the persuits, but to get to Baldwins headquarts or where ever they say they were going they will have ro go another way and not the way they were going as my lin es barre their way in all directions. They will have to sumit to arrest and if they can furnish proof that they are not spies I will release them.''

''We were not spying.''Cried Jennie;''We did not nkow th at your lines were even t here and ren unexpectedly into your ambush. Bah do you call yourselves christian s when you lay an ambuscade for little children. If you men advance a step we ourselve will open fire and you the leader will go down the first one. '

''Where were you going then?''

''It is none of your buisness.''Cried Jennie;''We tell nothing to enemies of God. God. If you are cathl catholic glandelinians prove it by giving up the persuit for we will never surrender ourselves as prisoners. What do you think us girls are sucudal fools t o give ourselves up in the hands of the worse glandelinian butchers alive. Bah, come and take us if you dare.''

''Back men.''Said the leader; 'They are not to be persuid.''

The men obeyed the leader following last. The little girls seeing that they had cowed the desperate glandelinians and seeing that their danger was over went another way but slowly ,Evans keeping watch behind.

''It is strange we did not see those bloodthirsty glandelinians.''Said Evans bitterly;'' as he placed his arms around Violet and ,ennie and drew them tenderly to him. If ''If we had not len on our horses we would have len riddled with bullets.'

''I be lieved you saved us anyway.''Said violet; ''for if you had not spoken up they would have fired at you and probably hit us instead.''

''We gorgot to tell papa of the bravery of Evans.''Said jennie reproachfully; ''i ought t o have''------

''Never mind said Evans drawing Jennie closeer to him;''I don't care to be pro moted. I done it because I se you see I love you and cound not help it. And if I am made a general I would not be able to be with you so constantly as a generl has to be always with his command.''

They had now reached the other bank and soon turned again in the direction of Baldwins lines. It was not long before they reached Baldwins lines and was challenged by a score of sentries at once.

A searchlight wax turned upon Evans and thelittle girls, and one of the guards recogni sing them let them passinto the lines. But after t raveling a few yards he called them back and said;

''What was that sudden volley w which was fired twenty minutes ago? Anything very serious?''

''A troop of Glandelinians fired upon us but only shot down our horses.''Said Angeline vivian;''They did not persue us t very far.''

''Where are you going little girls?''Asked the sentry.

''To see general Baldwin.At least papa got word that he wanted to see us.'

''He is not in his headquarters.''Said the sentry;;''He has gonecut to iv investigate the volley fired recently.''

''We can wait for him .''Said Joice;''Where is the Starring prisoner captured during the battle fourty eight hours ago.Is he locked up yet.''

''He is aprisoner yet.''Said the sentry;''He tried to escape twice but failed. All prisoners who pas s the death line are shot and he knew it.''

''It is too bad we wounded his companions so severely.''Said violet;'' They attacked us and we shot them down in selfe defense.''

''You had better hike along now.''Said the guard;''As I hear horses. It must be general Baldwin coming ba ck with his searchingparty.''

At once l the little girls sped for his to house and reaching it waite waited on the veranda.'

Baldwins gruff voice was soon heard, and then he appeared on his fine gray mare, and dismounted in front of his headquarters.

He dismissed the tri troopers who had went with him and had an orderly put away his horse..... Then he strode up the steps like some huge giant meeting the little girls unexpectedly on the veranda, and gave a jump thinking at first they were celestial spirits. He had indeed ben surprised for he had lost all hopes that the vivian girls would come for hehad believed they had been carried off for in his invi investagation he had fought their horses and even had been chased for miles by the foe during a serius running fight and only by dint of courage and his trickery finally mannged to eldue his foes and get away.

He knew that it had been a demeniacal act on their part to fire at the little creatures in ambush, but then he realised that too probably the enemy did not know at first who the party were and no doubt suspected an Angelinian surprise party coming to attack them.

He asked the little girls to follow him but forbid Evans to enter saying;

''You may stay outside just now my boy. They will be safe with me and there will be no feeling on my part as any one might foolishly fear. A man of my nature cannot be trifled with.''

Evans shoved but muttered to himself

O-o-o-o-o-o-o-o- if any Glandelinians are in the house w or gotin while he was away and harms a hair on their heads, or If I hear a scream I'll shoot them down like a dog. Baldwin might mean good, but I got t o watch just the same for there is no trusting any thing nowadays with the treacherous glandelinians sneaking around in our own uniforms.''

Violet and her sisters followed Baldwin into his reception room where he stood like some big giant claiming the fir flesh of some little girl.

"It is a shame that I have such a bad temper but the things going on now-adays is enoughto drive any one insane." He said self-reproachfully; "I am a very powerful man as you see but am really no match for the Glandelinians when they mean to surprise me and my searching party. I saw themcen ant of my brother general Buckwinson Baldwin when he threw your sister violet to make Hanson give in. Well as Isaw from my own room Hanson did recoil but he did not lowerthe weapon which he pointed at him and which made himlose his temper and commit the act. Somehowever it seemed as if Hanson thinking it was me could not forgive me though he said he would. What made me feel bad was that he never spoke to me since nor did me good byel untill he found out his whole mistake.

Well I have that vey very man a prisoner here now and he says that he is heartily sorry for the actand that if you do not forgive him his heart would be broken. I'm sorry to say so but as he had been the cause of all this trouble I took Braggards command away from his exposing the rascals, and sent him up to a higher officership, and has full com and of my whole artillerydivision now. The man r related has not naked forgiveness from his heart for when I was absent he had killed my guards left in the house to watch him and left his terrible note pinned on my bed.

I have found from this note that he is a dangerous man and all I ask is forgiveness for being so careless." And to their surprise and emotion he fell on his knees before them the big burly giant as he was and wept like a child.

Angeline looked at Violet and then at Baldwin.

"We would have ben here sooner if it had been for the two battles following so quickly." Angeline said with tears rolling down her fair cheeks and laying her little whitehand on Baldwins shoulder!

"We have nothing to forgive you for, as it is not your fault that he plyed this mean trick on you and not away. All the Glandelinians are spiteful to you because they want you to be a poor abused man. We all do forgive and love you and only ask you to control your dangerous temper against these Glandelinians and don't don't do nothing rash. We are very unhapry ourselves, and I fear we will not live a great while longer on account of the carnageand it really greieves us to see a great general like you cry this way for something or for our own selves."

Angelines round ben eyes were overcast with tears, large bright drops rollingheavily down one by one and falling on her little white hands. She laid her head down between her knees and sobbed while her beautiful sisters standing by Baldwin also went.

Evans was tempted to peek in and the sight sight surprised him so deeply that tears sprang to his own eyes.

"Angels indeed." He thought; "I never saw little girls like them. Their beauty almost breaks my heart. Who could help loving them littleangels?"

Violet took outfrom inside her waiste an envelope and said;

"Dear Baldwin; here is another curl of my hair to replace the one burned and as a sign for my love of forgiveness also though of cous course there is nothing to forgive."

Baldwin lifted his head and looked at VioletsWith a trembling hand he took the offered offe offered hair and pressed it to his lips. Then hedrew Violet to him and embraced her as he never done before.

"If any more man lay blame on you little girls. I'll make sure about it before they can makd make any confim confirmation about it." He said; "That general Braggard of the Glandelinians who had started the trouble, had tried scores of times during the battle to shoot me down like a dog and once I had a duel with him with sabres but he escaped. I had also sent general Roblinia away by your fathers orders for though he was an Angelinian he was in the wicked plot. I did not sent him away away in disgrace for your sakes, and allowed him to take all his belongings with him. But he nevetheless threatened to be my enemy for life and join the Glandelinians for his disbandment from the Angelinian army."

"He is a traitor if he does." Said Angeline; "He hurt us cruelly the other day when he tre tried to accuse us of ri running away from the line of battle when we did not do so, and will be doing a mean heartless thing if he joinds the Glandelinians. And after all what he did we forgave him, by and by his threats to you did is a good sign that he means to be our enemy too."

"If" Violet suddenly gave an exclaimenation!

"I believe that is the man I saw before." She said; "For I recognized him or a man whom I'm sure I seen as an officer in your command as a Glandelinian general during the battle just past. If he really did so It will kill me." She added with a hu hitter sob."

"When did you see the man!" Asked general Baldwin alarmed at he last sentence."

"During the battle of Mariachiecanico. He resembled Roblinia a good deal." Said Violet sadly.

"I would not pine about it." Said Baldwin; "I know that you love every body whether he be for good or bad and I don't blame you. It might have been one of your old time Glandelinian enemies you recognized instead of Roblinia for I know one resembles Roblinia a good deal. "If he really turned traiter it would be woe to him if he ever got caught."

He again embraced Violet and then also the other little girls and then allowed them to go. In the meantime general Vivian had went out also with a number of men to investigatethe sudden volley which Baldwin had heard. He had travel travelled down a certain road which was lighted up by a full moon when he heard the thunderous clatter of hoofs and saw a hundred horsemen in gray coming straight for him.

At one word from general Vivian his officers scattered, general Vivian wheling his horse and raching down the road at breakneck speed. The Glandelinians reached the spot where general Vivian had halted in hearing them when three score of Angelinians all of them officers suddenly appeared from all sides. The Glandelinians had ran into an ambuscadebut as they overwhelmed their assailants their soon dispersed them after a desperate hand to hand fightand raced after the fugitivegenerals. In a moment general Vivian reached the scene where Violet and her sisters had been taken by surprise and dashed onto the pontoon bridge when a thousand yellowcoats were after Him like hounds.

Ten bloodhounds were let lo se also and these persued general Vivians horse and gained swiftly. Quickly the general drew his fourty five fourty fives and as one of the dogs sprang for his horse fired twice shooting the dog through thehead.

The Glandelinians gave a yell at this and started firing but the aim was badin the dark and the bullets flew wild.

The Glandelinians dashed across the pontoon bridge and as they set up a simultaneous shout general Vivian recognized the voice like Braggards.

Seeing the rest of the dogs comingtoo near general Vivian brought them down with well aimedshots, then fired at the enemy. Reaching the other side of the bridge he saw a regiment of the Glandelinians swarming along the bank to intercept him.

He seemed caught for to swim theriver seemed as risky as to face either peezuer.

But quickly he wheeled wheeled his horse and turned it toward the stream. As they plunged in the Glandelinians yelled, hooted and fired several furious volleys, bullets whistling dangerously close and about the general one taking away his hat, and one cutting off a lock of his hair. His horse swam up the stream gallently the Glandelinians following on either sidefiring incessantly.

"I wonder how I am going to escape." "Thought general Vivian; "They seem bound to get me, as I am very importan to them. I'get to elude them somehow.

He glanced around and saw that both banks were swarming with Glandelinins and that a hundred score of the boldest on horseback were tearing through the water to get him. General Vivian opened fire and three of the cavarly men sprawld from their horses and flibndered about yelling for helpless they be drowned.

General Vivians horse was swimming like mad and as he laid acor across the horses neck a shower of bullets whistled past him and bespattered the water.

"If I could only hide somewhere." "Said general Vivian to himself;" Then I could probably elude them."

He saw somethinglike a broken bridge not far away and as a cloud passing across the morn moon madeit so dark that he was unseen general Vivian swam under it and hid in a dark nook.

In a moment more the sound of many horses and tremendous splashing were heard on the water in the water and on the bridge and then those in the water came under the bridge and looked around.

"He is soon hiding somewhere." "Said a voice that sounded very much like Braggarts; "He couldn't havegotten away from us this quick. Itis impossible."

"But where is he?" "Said another officer; "He can't be under this bridge for if he was we would see him."

"He is taking advantage of the darkness." "Said Braggard; "I have sharp eyes and saw him go under here. He is hiding in some nook or something."

The Glandelinians searched dillengtly but furing the halt general Vivian had slipped away quietly and reached the bank and was racing away swiftly toward his lines as fast as his horse could carry him. The moon came out at this moment, the light revealing the general dashing down the road which Violet and her sisters had taken in going to general Baldwins headquarters. The Glandelinians on the bridge wheled their horses and sped after him at a thunderous gallop. The same sentry who had spoken to Violet and her sisters heard the strange far off sound, and the shouting and yelling, and gave a signal which caused the camp fire to flarw upin all directions but no one was seen a slouth vi volley firing was occassionally heard followed at times by single shots. A random bullet them struck one of the sentries and with a cry of "I'm shot fell dead.

An Angelinian on guard at another part of the lin head heard the distinct sound of galloping and cried stepping behind a tree from force of habit;

"WHO GOES THERE!"

Scarcely had the challenge ceased to echoe through the woods before there came a series of faint reports, and echoing the reports came two louder ones.

The sentry saved himself by his precaution of stepping behind a tree as several bu'llet bullets whistled past him. Thefires flared up bright ly but no one was in sight though the sound increased steadi y, and a fusillade of shots rang out in fury. The Angelinian was indeed puzzled l but he kept on the watch nevertheles . Viole and her sisters with Evans arived at this moment and hearing the sound of many horses studied it closely. The fires had died down by the time they arived so that not even the least glimer could be seen.

'''It sounds like if some one is persued.''Said Violet;''

' The sounds are growing louder!''Said Evans;''So boys hide in ambush and we will surprise the Clandelinians and rescue their fugit ive.''

The men scatered behind trees or bushes and awried the new comers,and in a few minutes there was a thunderous clatter of hoofs, a horseman dashed past them, and then grey shadows seemed to dash after him yelling and cursing their flashes of guns s e shi ng shining like light ning.

Then all at once the woods seemed to turn into an inferno as the Angelinians opened fire on all sides. The Clandelinian horsemen a thousand or more in number were demorilized but those who had not fallen fought like fiends against the Ange linians who swarmed tward them.

They managed to break through the ring as more Angelinians came running to the scene , and those who had not been cut or shot down dashed away persued a short distance by the Angelinians. Whom the Clandelinians had persued the Angelinians never learneds though to Evans and Violet and her sisters the fugure of the fugitive fugitive seemed strangely familiar and made them have an inkling that it had ben general vivian himself but they said nothing about it.

The next mor i morning dawned bright and fair with the enemy still within sight. Movements weremade among the christian lines but there was no signs of the batle being resumed. Thedey was sultry , breezy and scorching hot, and a little smoky from thefar distant forest fires. But for a time the christian armies were out of the path of the forest fires, but yet they feared that new ones would be started by the enemy or on ac ount of the battle.

Violet and her sisters though they did not show it were sad at heart. They yearned for the ending of the war and longed for home once more. The climate here in southern Angelinia was too hot for them, bei being in the heart of the tripocis and they suffered terribly from the heat day by day the more so because they could stand more cold and e even could bath in ice cold water as go d as any one could in warm water without any effect. So on them thehat inded was torturesome.

There had shrdly been any rain since the batt le of Cedernire of way hforeit also and only one cool wave had ensued. Not it was hotter than ever, that steamy and sweltering tropical heat w ich made the whole army suffer. Despite what the reade might think few fevers even broke out a mong the christians and hundreds of doctors attended them t to prevent the spread. This day the temperture was one hundred twenty in the shade and the air like the blast of a furnace.

The breezes were hot and somewhat smokey and wreaths of smoke mists obscured the distant trees at times. Violet did not even be, believe that the war was ever going t o end untill wither army was annihilated. She knge the stubborn nature of all the Glandelinian generals and their officers and then there was the Kings army at the capt iol of clandelinian who could join thearmies of clandelinians and help repell the christians should they ever try again to invade Clandelinia. And what if Shoeman should link Hanson and make a junction with Manley or the other dan gerous general of Clande / clandelinia?

Probably it would not cause general vivian to lose the war as yet, but it would make horrible carnage and bloodshed than ever and this is what general Vivian was trying to avertse....

The Angelinian governement at theordersof general vivian had promished t o send more reinforceme nts but they hadn't arived yet. Violet and her sisters looked wistfully tward the direction of Clandelinia. Evans noticed their melancholic look and tear brimming eyes. Their beauty had always struck Evans with indescribable motion and their innocence had greater effect than ever. Never was there a morning that he saw them miss Mass or HolyCommunion and they always sang in the choir.

My what singing! Evans could have sworn that there wre angels sig singing, and not mere human beings. And every time t hey sang he seemed fascinitated with awe. And yet he a mere promoter, and a Captian of a large Angelinian regiment of cavarlyhad the previlige to be their guardians....

Yet he was more than a guardians he treated them bette than general vivien himself and almost made the great general jealious.He comforted them in many woes, played every game he knew with them, even ball games for rough little girls as they were they could throw and catch as an ordinarny baseball man and even use the batt like the batters do and never miss a single strike..... This had of course amazed hi him to the quick, for they even worsted him o to a hundredfold. Their flings which made all the more fun he c could never catch.

''Probably this won't last much longer.'He said ashe sat down on a long beside Violet ;'' I know how it feels, but if it had not ten for child slavery or the Crowley massacre it would not have occured..... But anyway it is too fierce to last much longer(Indeed he was greatly mistaken. The fuol lengthof the war was four years andn half before it was finally over as we all soon see)))))

And think you will soon get a chance to catch or capture Manleys daughters . When you do succeed then the war will end.''

''We capture Manleys daughter.''Exclaimed Vo violet in amazement ;''Why Evans he has no children.''

''It is my mistake then .''Said Evans.''I meant king Manleys daughters and not john Manleys.''

''It is already done.''Said Violet sadly;''''We caught them during the massacre of Chamberline or Cedernine I mean, and they are now in Northern Angelinia somewhere but I have heard the that they had ben recaptured by the enemy.''

''What are you going to do with that Starring boy you had moved over into your lines l last night from Baldwins lines.''Asked Evans....'''

''I don't know.''Said Violet;''I might turn them over to the guardain my papass lines or retain him as a prisoner here.''

''How did it come that the Clandelinians butchered Angelinian children at Andrean that you told Starring about''Asked Evans.

''The Clandelinian governemets put them up to it.''Said Vilet Violet;''Oh the time we had there among the slain.!Oh Evans if you had only sen!!At la least see us and the others.I know the sight would have made you insane with rage , and probably now at out ages were are in now we ourselves would not have been able to stand it as we did then in our younger ages.''

''Ain'tthat one of thw causes of the great clance-Angelinian war!''Asked Evans.

''Yes or mayle no, for severs as the hor i horror was and though it lasted over seven months no body said nothing about it and we ourselves were too much a huc bunch of little cowards to snitch.''

We were twice kidnapped during that bloody reign of terror and il treated probably as bad as those in the island prisons are now We escaped without our lives during that great Hell-mell-tell-mell fire in later years in during our fourth experience of the reign of terror, which of course which was not so bad tward us, though r equally so to the other poor children e or mayle worse.''

''I know how that started and its cause also .''A Said Evans.

''Was it Incendiary.' Asked Angelina.

''Yes two Clan elinians disguised as Angelinians fo forced seven little child slaves to set the fire in a celever way and almost in the three wings sim ultaneously. I was there and saw the fire, but never saw you little girls.''''

''I believe if it were not for you we would never be happy!''S Said joice;'' Evas you are the dreas dre dearest friend we ever had.''And with that she threw her arms arould him and kissed him. Evans plafed his arms around her and embraced her pressing her heart to his.....

"ONE OF THE MOST TERRIBLE DISASTERS OF THE WAR"

Though thegreat forests fores skipped the armies it was only its great branch. The main sea of the great conflargration, was advancing tward the city of Mariskocinia, and in the city millions of christian men women and children were held prisoners and this city was in ruins in many places on account of the concurrecion of the recent battle. N t only was the city in danger from the advancing forest fires but from general Manley as well who had sent a swarm of airships to shell the street with hose house rending ranggang shells. All who were Clandelinians in the city had been warned by messengers sent by Manley so that Manley or the christians I mean were only in the doomed city.

At half an past eight the third morning of the battle or after the battle I mean the roar of the gang-gang shells swept through the cirtye The quick vibrentions caused by the earsplitting explosions shocked the build buildings to the fa ground far from the vininicty where the shells dropped and part of the tow tower walls of the of the Angelinian river Ferry buildingdropped with a crash as a shell struck it. On St Michaels street twenty gang-gangshells being dropped at one time, exploded almost simultaneously and rows of walls or buildings far from this street swayedand toppled and fell for hundreds of feet on tangled masses of team wagons, and men women and children crushing out their lir lives in t a terrifbible death by suf focation.....

Hundreds of horses who escaped broke from the vehicles and dashed in all direction directions, elerctric wirews were brought down by flying cornicesand many tons of bricke bricks sputtered into the streets.

Men women and children who were thrown to the ground from the vibrations were blown to pieces by great shells dropping among them. Walls were torn from buildings by bursting shellsand sleeping people were thrown beds and all intothe street, other shells then to land among them. Crevices were torn in the streets by the exploding shells and from the upheaval caused by thegreat explosions the earth in places rose like waves of a tr troulled sea. A large prison which was full of child slaves and which was an old rather frail frome house seemed to dia disappear into the sky amid flame and smoke and clouds of debris as a shell struck it and a portion of the lo lower story x could be seen and that was in a tag tan glad mass of ruins. When the following fire swept over it later this formed the funeral pyre for some two hundred thousand two hundred mangled and bleeding corpses corpses. Houses rocked on their foundation from the vibrations and were thrown against each other some crushing like mere eggshells. As scores of to hose deadly bombs let lo se at another point a large five story hotel dropped into a heap of debris from the distant concussi concussion crishing the lives from some three hundred and fifty of its occupants.

The roar of the gang-gang-she shells continue continued thunderously, and one struck an orphan asylum which fell to ie pieces burying all its inmates under tons of wreckages. All of over the city chimneys dropped into their compi ompo component parts and whole sections of buildings struck by shells were razed and fell while the air was filled with flying debris and dust.

The city halls domw reared after years of hard labor, was torn asud su asunder by a shell which buried itself t ere there and exploded, and pillers with tons of brick and stones fell, their heavy crash adding to the earsplitting din of the explosions..... The debris buried an emergency hospital where many crippled and fever stricken children were lying helpless.....

The children aroused to instant teror beat at their attendants tore their hair and beat their faces untill the bl ood streamed.

A steward and several nuns were crushed lifeless under the mass which cut off the escape of all the inmates. The la hall of justice was blown to pieces by ten shells exploding at one time and startledpedestrains called for deliverance, but their al orts were in vain.

All over the city men women and children poured out into the streets like ants only to have the high explosives burst among them. In the tenderlion painted women in flaming wrappers ran screaming into the streets only to be blown to pieces by the shells which dropped like hail among them.

The al rways became alive with captives who rushed to t e the windows with heartrendi heartrending screams only to be buried amid tons of wreckage. Some tried to come down the fire escape and others crowded to the stairways in an mad rush for an open space only to be caught by tons of falling debris. In quiej quick succession came other explosions of gang-gang-shells and high explosives, accompanied by more violent vibrations. The streets all over the city became crowded with a confused and excited multitude of people running into each other dodging the flying debris, fragments of shel s and the sputtering wires. Many were barefooted and in their night clothes and many thousands of chide children boys or girls had not the suggestion of a garment. Thousands of old men were only in their night shirts and trousers. Mothers wearing little to protect them from the intense heatf the day sought to comfort crying children who clung tothem. The throngs shrinkened by the scores of terrific explosions stampeded to the center of thestreets, to the publict squares and to the parks all filled t with the terror of an annihilation.

Airships fairly darkened the sky over the city and their rain of shells had started fires for large tongues of flame appeared in a dozen places which spread with widening circles tward each other. The most important fire began at the powder house portions of the walls having ben torn away by the exploding shells so that tangled electric wirev s started a blaze which quickly burned fiercely, and igniting the whole building the structure bis blew up with a greater din than the explosion of the dellmelltelmell prison and shot a cloud up into the air as if some huge crater of a volcano had broken out into a violent eruption. The explosions within the space of three hundred miles shook buildings down to their foundation for a mile.

The engine houses had also suffered from the shellsand the christian firemen were bewildered by the large number of fires and though they started or got into motion immediately, attacking the most dangerous portions hosts dropped among them by the score killing and maiming many. The booming of the explosions could be heard atinter vals and fiercer and fiercer came the advancing line of flames. This indeed was no sham battle. Thousands of frame buildings were to blown to bits by the gang-gang-shells brick walls went up into the air and crashed to t the ground, the fire swaping onward. Several buildings had ben already on fire when blasted by shells the terrific explosions scattering a hundreds of flaming brands. Steams of humanity surged through the streets in panic and disorder wearing all variation of clothing large numbers soughting the ferry shipping around the edge of the advancing flames and crushing in a solid mass to get aloradd aboard the boats and away from the scene of calimity but shells dropping among them killd hundreds.

Others who sought the parks and sug squares were despersed by great showers of shrapnell and shells, while in a very few hours the fire was sweeping through one third of the city, the little spots of flame which the fire orginated long since had joined forming an ocean one conflagration which rapidly consumed the wholesale district forming a raging fore o fire ocean.

All the earsplitting crash of the dropping shells now and then could be heard an explosion which came from under the streets. Hundreds of gas mains were being blown hup by the tremendous heat. A loud earsplitting roar a burst of flame a thick cloud of smokeand an immense reservior at fourty fifth street had instantly released its pent up contents. Thich smoke hung over all the dist district districts and the sun seen likly appeared only as a deep metallic hell. The fire progressed forward unchecked from seemingly all directions, cinders were blown hundreds of feet into the air, large sections of tin arose in the hot draughts and twisted being held aloft by the pressure of the superheated air before they fells. Now and then many kinds of birds, with wings singed and breath driven out by the terrific heat and smoke dropped lifeless to the street or would fall into the seething sea of fire. Thousands of cats with their furs singed ran out to be rescued and carried about in arms or to dieffrom the flames, yelping dogs ran about the crowds in everybodys way. Even thousands of rats andmice rushed from the holes stampeded in the streets and dodged about in terror.

The sky grew darker and darker from the smoke which seemed to fail in despersing the airships which dropped more shells than beforetheir reports bing now continuous and their destruction terific. The fire was worse than ever though they appeared more brilliant and larger.

Many windows became lurid then the flames shot through the roofs of these houses which became like great torches. All this time with shells dropping among them poured the human flood through the streets. Many people who had ran into their homes to carry out their goodshad ben killed by shells crushing the structures, and the streets were filled with hurrying men women and children, man dragging trunks, carrying carrying grips or placing them on their backs huge sheet wrapped bundles containing all they could get in their haste. Yet shells killd and main maimed hundreds of these per lomb and thousands of men women and children could be seen lying with their bodies torn torn and their intestines fully exposed while blood lay in puddles.

And all from the frightful havoc of theshells.

The flames extended over a wide area lighting up the entire city and the country outside for a hundred miles. Thousands of flashes could be even seen from general Winfields lines which marked the explosions of shells and the officers seeing it wondered inded what was going on, andwhat made the terrible red glare and all the clouds of different colored sheets of convulted smokewhich spread far over head of them. But however the enemy in their intentions were frustrated.

More than three quarters of the inhibitants managed to escape and were refurred inside the christian lines, while the christian batteries were trained to por their shells at the distant ships and stop their spreading destruction and so many were soon brought down that the enemy were glad to give it up and return back to their lines ,hundred ships having been brought down and three hundred fifty disabled.

THE BATTLE OF MARSHMELLOW, AND IT'S RESULT.....

September 24

Though badly beaten at the battle of Cathtletown Choeman was not discouraged. Having recovered general Bicknell of the christians had made a junction with general Hanson but this did not daunt Choe,an Sheemans. After reforming his af army at the region of the Marshmallow creek Choeman ordered a simultaneous atack upon Hansons lines, and had his army make a forced march at midnight, the soldiers being ordered to creep along ly stealth, leaving behind their canteens lest they should make a jangling sound. At daybreak with an unearthly yell the Glandelinian soldiers rushed upon the sleping camp of Bikenlells right wing.

The foremost of the soldiers were so surprised that they were thrown into great confusion and nearm nearly one million men were taken prisoners, while one thousand three hundred guns were captured in several hours by the enemy after three desperate bloody onslaughts. The remaining christian troops many millions strong fought like that many demons for four hours inflicting terrible slaughter among the enemys lines but they could not hold the charging Glandelinians cutting their whole linesto pieces and driving them back in the wildest confusion.

Bicknells main line was thrown forward upon the assailants making the roaring scene like a red sea of flame ,blood and and dr destruction.

Hanson heard the grumble, rumble and d furious roar of that fiery fray, and was compelled to ad advance to Bicknells rescue and his forces under Fredrickson Parson engaged Sheemans center.

At the first collision the Angelinians under this great commander lost over four hundred killed and one million one hundred thousand in wounded, and one hundred and twenty thousand in prisoners. A second terrific onslaught was made which was repulsed with the loss of two million, two hundred twenty five killd and nearly four million injured. General Zimmermann recieved reinforcements under general Bellionand these divisions were sent to support Parson who had had under instructions after his second bloody repluse retreated across gatherines plains where a massacre of the first line of the assailants took place.

A terrible conflict raged here between Fredrickson Parson and Filtsmand which incea increased in fury rapidly. General Granders divisons of Glandelinians under a heavy fire commenced a race but was beatch lean beaten with intolerable loss.

General Grainer wished to get to Sheemans plains ahead of the Glandelinian general Federal P johnston and always sent reconting parties on the look out.

Beldon Federal led the advance of Johnst one army and soon Grainers scouts discovered a portion of Sheldies and James ,egrees armies pouring in overwhelming numbers across Mt C~ rmels crossroads. Gant ons main divisions under Simon ,egree and general Alfred St Clare joined them from a flair and threw themselves upon Grainers forces with indescribable fury. Grainers forces were crushed to fragments and now hard pressed he was forced to withdraw, while Simons divisions fled with desperation to force themselves ahead of the christian columns b t was crushed to fragments with the wounding of Simon Legree.

General Hungerford and Brintlinger came to Grainers aidand soon the scene became like an in ferno of smoke and flame and wholesale slaughter. In frightful bloody throes both sides surged forward and back wards in retreats counter charges, sometimes interminpling in fierce hand to hands fights and everything was like a sea of smokes Alfred St Clare fe'l severely wounded and general Deming St Clare was instantly killed. Ganton and James Legree fell as the Angelinians made a roaring onslaught upon which myriads upon myriads of flagsand standards came together in one shredded rags, brigades melted army into fragments amid storms of fi flame and smoke. The Clandelinians repelled every bloody onslaught in away that never done before and fought with such brutal courage and desperation that the angelinian columns torn and mangled, and with their whole divisions reduced to remenants had to withdraw from that field of flame and hells infernal dins

The batle was terrible and general federal Johnston and even Mc-wol'ester Johnston had simultaneously thrown their whole divisions forward to a general atack and another another sight like at Grahmas Lanes of Cedernine seemed to ensue. The n oise of The noise of the terrible conflict re ached the inhibitans of Marshmellow and they being alarmed took t air belongings and fled setting fire to all the bridges in that region behind them to prevent them as a means for the enemy in case they were giv victorious in crossing the rivers.

The Angelinians counter atacked in overwhelming numbers against the two Clandelinian Johnstons while the christian officers sent many telegrms appealing for aid. General Beldon Federals divisions of clandelinians wearing light grotle green uniforms and high black hats attacked Grainers center which had fallen back on vivian Lonsins lines and rallied, withdevilish fury. The center held for two hours untill the Clandelinian cavarly three million strong came rushing forward like a mountian of men, and then they were about to give way we when general French with his artillery arived and shelled the gravlines slaughtering88,000 horsemen at one discharge, and within a quarter of an hour cutting the cavarly forces to pieces and pulling their lines terribly.

The main body of general Mc-Pollester Johnst ons army now came up however and Grainer frightfully overwhelmed was obliged to retreat but contested every step of the way paving the line of retreat for seven miles with clandelinian dead and wounded.

Indeed no one can imagine the consternation of general Picknell at the fury of Gic Shoemans onslaught. He had long before the contest planted al the hat guns of Baker ridges and now these were o concentrated upon the clandelinian columnsand these swept the advancing waves of men & fragmen fragments with storm o after storm of shot shell, grape and canister , a herculeanian cannonading breaking out all along the two lines of christian chain of lateries under Holaham and Aldolphin W/ Wilson and twelve thousand clandelinians went down seemingly per disc broadside. Millions of the clandelinians now at rushed forward against Barker hills with tremendous fury and during the almost preternatural carnage the ridge was carried by overwhelming numbers, though the whole line of assailants had ben fairly shivered to a scatered swarm of fragments. The other scenes of the battle was worse. Oh the horrors i ofit. I makes me shudder when I think o of it. It was a regular butchery of divisions and brigades. Tward noon Shoeman had met with a complete and bloody repsule but two hours after the assaults were resumed on Hansons main center with redoubled violence.

As general Hansons center had not ben taken by surprise they managed to hold firmly and repulse every onslaught with frightful decimation of whole clandelinian clandelinian brigades each a million strong. Fiercer stacks were also made upon the right and left and even aroeplanes shelled the christian lin es only to be brought down by the score by the Angelinian marksmen. Shoemans attacks that after noon were more desperae desperate that those of the morningand the mutual losses so dreadful thatit would not be fit to describe its The town of marshmellow and five others were set in flames and new forest fires were started by the tremendous batle which raged on the same day that Marshchoscinia did. Tward late in the afternoon when the battle was so furious that muskets on both sides roared like a million cannon, general Hansons right wing was rolled up and displaced.

Yet the left and center stuck to their positions though picknell and Hansons with Bellion , Grainor Sunderford , Brintlinger, and Cormell had all been severely wounded. Never for a moment did the million cannon like roar of the battle cease, whole divisions brigades and regiments had ben practiacally swept out of existance within a few hours, whole lines had been mowed down per volley, and then yet millions of the Clandelinians had come on anew and threw the themselves against the christian lines with all the fury they could asrume but were hurled back with fragments left the slaughter being tremendous indeed. Late that evening , disheart ened and discouraged Shoeman withdrew from the assault the result being n ot only a crushing victory for the christians but it also enabled Hanson to make a great advance, and so enable general Vivian to save his army in the other bate seen in the next column of this sheet. At night Shoeman s started general forest fires to cover his retreat, Hanson managing to follow however, and many desperate and bloody skirmishess ensued for two weeks afterwards going on every day at t that too.

CLANDELINIAN BATTERIES SHELL GENERAL VIVIANS LINES.
THE SLAUGHTER, THE RESULT.
THIS IS CALLED THE BATTLE OF ZOR DU RAR BECH.

Several days later Evans who had ben playe playing with Violet and her sisters head constant explosions, and wondered whether ments.

"They seem to be in the direction of the town.''Said Violet;''I wonder if we can see with our glasses.?''

She looked in the direction of t e sound with her glasses. Everything being in a mass of vapor she could not see n thing and no they were forced to let the matter drop. They left the log and strode tward the lines hand in hand. Evans had Violet and Joice by the hand, Jennie walking with Violet and Angeline with Joice while the other little girls were far ne uhead. T heir da dazzling beauty impressed every soldier who saw them and Evans himself felt awed.

"One would think that he is in the presence of celestial children when walking with you little girls.''Said Evans, but blushing.

''Why ?''Asked Violet;''Because we are so good and mild?''

"Not only that.' 'Answered Evans;''I don't wish toflat flatter you little girls but I must say your beauty affects me with the same awe as if I was in the presence of celestial children.You little girls are so beautiful and so is Eva''

''? Maybe so''Said Jennie!But many are loved for their beauty andnothing else/. But we ain't.W We hardly have an enemy in among the christian lines. Do you love us on accountofour beauty,or for our beauty and Good ness?''

''For both.''Said Evans; 'Though I cannot decide' which is the best. There has never ben little children like youthough all here in this Angelinian country seem good and behaving. You lit le girls have for forf forgiven men for deeds that few would would never pardon. When you little girls are that meek and just as beutiful in sould as in body how can anyone helploving you. I believe you would even forgive Manley Starring, the Federals and the othe wicked generals , wouldn'tyou?''

''Yes .''Said Violet;''I would sooner be cut to pieces like the other children were, than to see poor Manley or his father and two brothers and the other foolish clandelinian generals lose their souls. H John Manley was a good man once and a friend of our's We pray for his save conversion every day and for the con versions of the other generals so that they could get to heaven in caseshe would ever get killed in battle. They great generals as they are are no safer than the privates and neither is the clandelinian king though great as general as he is.''

Evans saw tears in Violet's eyes, an as she said this and drawing her closer he said kindly:

''General Manley of or the other wicked clandelinian generals might repent. But if I were you litt le girls I would do something for them, which would probably win their friendships and conversion, hopelessly wicked as they seem now. Mayom Raymond Richardson Federal himself is really more than athousand times wicked that Simon Legree in ''Uncle Toms Cabin' '' itself, and he had even killed eva's poor friend Uncle Tom. It is probable that Simon Legree might had , had a chance if that woman Canayhad not scared him to deathwith her ghost play.''

Violet said nothing but looked pleadingly into his face. Oh that sweep wistful little face, with its violet eyes, rose lips, and delicate but yet indes criably beautiful throate A strange emotion seized himas he looked down at her and tears filled his own dark blue eyes. If our readers could have only caught a glimpse of them they would have felt the same. Many beutiful children were general or are generally delicate in shape but it was not so in violet and her sisters . All through their time in the army they have atracted much attention by their beautifully formed bodies, and were such airy, fairy little sprites in of femininitythat they by hardly did seem real at all. Evans also had been given giving the little girls such meals as to make any ones mouth water, even if he had had incurable indegestion. Healthly food which builded them up fine taking out any delicateness that might be threatening in them. Evans was a splindid cook and many a swell meal had been eaten by his envy e cavarly men. One thing that surprised Evans was that Violet and her sisters never cared for sweets not even ice cream. though some times after considerable coax coaxing they would eat a little of it and not a full dish. When he looked down on that aw sweet face what must have Evens thought to himself? He was mute with emotion, but he drew Violet closer an determined to protect herand her sisy sisters from all the de mons of hell. And true enough my dear renderers we will read thrcugh, during that the lit le girls would not be any prisoners any more if he had not been wounded so many times du during thw war. As they trudged along Jennie started to sing a hymn which her sisters finally joined and unconsciously Evans was soon sig singing with them. General Baldwinwho heard it was fascinited and did not know where it came from. After the hymn was finished Evans blushed as he said;

''''It is certainly the singing of angels I could almost say. You girls it se ms could even outrival them. I cloud not help joining.''

Reaching their tent Violet turned to Evans and said;

''Do you like to hear t the story of our treatement at Andrean and other places during our fierst experiences?''

''Boter not all it.''Said Evans with emotion;''I don't believe I could stand it. It might kill me to hear it.''

Angeline her eyes brimming with tears said but a sudden burst of feeling;

''''Evans if h it had not ben for you I would have died when I was sick. Then you treated me better than any of my brothers or friends did, and made me happy despite my suffering. That is something my sisters did not know of and now you have made this place like a heaven to us and not satisfied you still increase our your goodness to us. You saved my sisters from death at the prisons at Marischoec ino when the glandelinians persuited us so closely and did not tell me to escape your reward, and when you were found out you refuse rewards. You even saved Jennie from that shell and all of whom attacked during yesterdays persuits by the make-believe Catholic landelinians as I believe they were. We were in the hands of an human angle all this morning and we have ben treated by you like as if we were already in heaven. God loves all that threats children kind, and we invoke his ful' blessings upon you. If general vivian was here now I would ask hi to make you a major general and a step brother. You have ben kind to us and we ask God to bless you in all ways.''

Evans was thunderstruck at these words and recovering answered with a vin''

''You lit'le girls deserved all you got from me and as for the Blessings---yes blessings, you deserve a tempest of them and probably have them now. You don't realize it Angeline though that if I am made a general I have it in my power to reward you as handsomely that you would almost faint from joy. You are the goodest little girls I have ever known and who are more beautiful in soul than in body. I have you in my power now and if you are not happy cherubs in my presence, my name is n ot Jack Evans.

You little girls have more than a friend out ofme, for I have sworn by the Bible that I and my brother John Evans that we will be dead first before any glandelinians takes you prisoners within our prei presnecewhile we have a dr drop of fighting blood left in our viens.''

Late that afternoon Evans and the little girls seeing large columns of smoke arising from the direction of Marischeine went out to investigne the cause.

''We would almost think that the whole world was threatening to burn up.''Said Jack Evans;''So many new fires are springing up everywhere.''

''You should saw there are new fires springing up, and more than that will you impudent brats surrender before we cut you all to pieces.''Suddenly a angry voice was heard to say, and before they could recover their surprise, they found themselves surrounded by glandelinians.

In the twinkling of an eye Evans drew his guns and blazed away untill he had mowed down a score of the grayccats, making a trench in the circle of the enemy, and causing tremendous confusion.

''W Quick lit'legirls , wake your escape.''Cried Evans striking right and left.

The little girls dashed away , Evans escaping in the confusion by his furious and unexpected attack.

''Such desperate and slippery litlle elfs.''Exclaimed the leader amazed and confounded;''Chase them you fools. What are you standing there gaping for.''

The man obeyed but followed cautiously, fearing the brace of fourty fours that Evans carried. They rapidly ans and quietly gained upon the fugitives when there was a flash and a report and the landelinian officer with a cry of;

''GURSES!'M SHOT.'' Reled and staggered and fell to the ground severely wounded. The other glandelinians became enraged at this and dashed off into the woods lut fi e of them dropped almost simultaneously. The rest scattered with with a yell t the wounded leader cursing and swa swearing at them.

''You are fine soldiers .''He said in scorn;''Running away from hose six little gutteranipes.''

Evans heard these insulting words and fired at him again but the shots only grazed the lieutenants heads.

''Curses .''Muttered Evans with a laugh, but outloud so that the glandelinians could hear it. Curses on the luck. I thought I could shoot straight.Curses.Curses curses on the blooming luck.''

Seeing the grayccats rushing forward again he retreated the litt l egirls having ben far ahead by this time. The l glandelinians not being able to find the little girls turned their ate ntion on Evans but to their surprise he could not be found. So they fina lly gave it up and at that time Evans had rejoined the little girls. Evening approached and then night. The little girls had just aroused fr om sleep the next morning though it was still dark when a startling earsplitting explosion a few hundred yards away from their tent aw a startled them. They got up hurriedly and put on their clothes while the sound of gang-rang shells aroused hem still more followed continually by a far off forming of great guns.

They inde d heard the muffled soundof many guns going off somwhere, which continued steadilyand by the time her sisters were all dressed more and more shells seemed to be coming. In a few minutes viole was dressed, and then Evans appeared all nervious and unstung. Terrible explosions succeededench other in old endless succession and showerd of dirt rained upon their tents.

''Our lines are being shelled by the glandelinian batteries under Manley.''Exclaimed Evans;''Come one of the shells of it land on this ent. We got to seek for shelter somehow.''

The little girls followed Evans and they could see by the almost dazzling glare of the searchlights that chief Engineers general Wells cannons were arriving to open fire upon the christian batteries which being not being up could not answer. Violet and her sisters were indeed surprised and so was Evans.

''I have edesire to go over to general Baldwins lines and see the display.''Said Violet.

''No don't go please.''Begged Evans.(''The glandelinian batteries are dropping shells upon his lines like a severe hail storm. See look at the thousands of fle flashes. Pl Please don't go.''

''Suddenly they heard a loud buzzing sound and lo kins up to saw to their horror something like a large rocketshovering and soaring high above them, then it flashed into a blinding ball of sparkling light fol'owed by a terrific sound like a thunder roll. Simultaneously there was a terrific flash far behind them followed by a mighty earthquaking like crash which almost stunned them and they saw terrible tongues of fire flare up for a moment.

''Oh this is terrible.''Said Jennie as more glandelinian cannon began to boom with greater vigor;''I believe they can to annihilate us as papas guns are not in position to answer and it would take several hours to get them ready.''

Evans clasped Jennie to him and felt that she was trembling a little

''This is enough to unerve anyone.''Said Evans!''It sems they mean to do some evil to general vivians armys.''

More and more glandelinian batteries began to thunder the din sounding like a far distant run e of volcanoes in eruptitions in the direction of the low heights.

Flash lights revealed the scaring shells , big mi monsters at that . Some of these would e plode in the air in mark time fashion others would drop celan to the ground and explode with a roar enough to throw Evans and the litt le girls of off their feet. One exploded only a hundred feet of the litte little girls and so close was this explosion that the vibration threw them to the ground headforemost and they were quickly enveloped in the smoke, but i uninjured however.

The little girls when the got up clung to Evans and now saw more flashes along the summits of the hills that looked like thousands of bright blue and red fireflies.

Sometimes the flashes lit looked like the will-othe-Will--the-- will--o--the--wisps these a appearing and disappearing score at ond-once while other flashes seemed to undulate among the wooded sides.

Then far t o the front of the litt le girls withinthe heart of the christian lines there came many terrific flashes of all colors like gren red blue of violet and white or fire colormingled with heavy detonations, and even bright fire like flashes flarged up in many directions lighting the horizon with a sheen of lurid glare, minly imagled with smoke of various colors. Then they were startled by herculean scre-ches far above them and looking up saw what appeared like hundreds of sky rockets moving in one direction. The little girls were fascinated and watched the display with awe and wonder.

''This is a wonderful sight. 'Said Violet;''And they seemed to be directed for Baldwins lines;''It is a wonde those shells did not explode.''

''They look to me like a flock of in sense skyrockets with beaning tails.''Said Jolce;''They seemed to bent about as if they were in a gale.''

Then now saw something fiery drop from the sky then they seemed surrounded by the fiery flashes of explosions and they were showered with dirt twigs and grass.

Then glared flared up glaring fire.The glandelinians were now bringing up more guns into action and as the thunder of cannons increased a little more the litt le girls were horrified to see a flock of bombshells nearest them over t their heads. These exploded one after another in rapid almost endless succession like the di discharge of musketry.

Two lines of trees were already on fire and tree were crahing down swiftly. Many og of the shells were with pathway overthe Vivian girls were moving swiftly t o and forocoanionally exploding with bright flashes and there were so many that the little girls would not count them all. Flashlights pierced the sky in networks coming from the enemys lines themselves, and it was indeed a weird sight.

Suddenly there was a roar far above them and the little girls looking up saw a shell dropping straight for them.
"Scatter girls quick!" Yelled Evans! They obeyed but sprawled to the ground to avoid the fragments. The shell exploded with a horrible roar and clouds of dirt gravel and dust pelted the little girls. A thin stream of sparks again descended toward where the little girls lay but they realizing that it was meant personally for them, got up and ran again their hearts beating fast with their exertions.
Then as the shell explodedtheconcussion shook the little girls from their feet. Several shells fell within sight ofEvans but their explosions did him no harm as he was lying downHe was alarmed for fear thatthe Glandelinians gunners aiming purposely at the little girls would kill them. He saw several shells drop drop and reel about like footballsthen burst with terrifying detonations. A score of Angelinians surged up th at thi this moment to save the vivian girls when all at once there was a red flash among them and all of them went down men led and bleeding. The little girls themselves found themselves rising into the air and then to the ground again from the concussion and were enveloped by a cloud of smo smoke the little girls being dazed by the vibrati on.
A sergeant a few yards away lay on his back with his body torn open. Other men layabout mangled and torn. Then a gang-gang-shell high in the air was heard to burst with a deafening detonation, the fragments flying down among the trees with aloud crash of of rending branches and the tree soon became enveloped in smoke and flame.
He then ran to where the little girls were lying and helped them to their feet.
The cannonading was now morere virgo vigerous and as they looked for a place of shelter they heard a groan near by from where the seargeantlay.
Despite the danger of the shells they investigated and fou found f found a captian groaning in pain, he being the only one who had not been killed.
"What is the matter?" Asked Violet kindly; "Where are you hurts?"
"My leg is brokens" He moanad; "I was injured by that shell."
Violet asked Evans to examine his leg carefully and he did fing finding that he his prostration was from a shattered thigh, knee and foot. Violet tore off a strip of her outside dress and bandaged it up as well as she could. Several men came up at this moment and after thanking the litle girls heartily, he captian was carried awa away on a stretcher made of muskets.
General Baldwins line was still bombarded by Manl Manleys batteries the roar of cannon waxing louder and more louders Bright flashes could be seen as constant ly as reports were heard und raging fires were starting in many places. Indeed the litt le little girls could see that more and more cannon were blazing forth into action on theside of the enemy, the din being now awe inspring and ter ifically deafening and earsplitting, as the enemys whole chain of batteries let lo se , wide min es rent the air with more terrific explosion s than the shells. Andeed the air sky was dotted with the shells which looked like a shower of meteors in the sky. The little girls were bewildered by the danger they were in for there was no telling when a shell would drop among them. A high explosive exploded twenty yards away from t the tree where the little girls huddled together t hrowing great clouds of dirt wreckage of trees and smoke for hundreds of feet into the air. The storm of shells fal ing like rain honeycombed the rolling surface of ground with long furrows, shattered thousands of tres in a few minuten, started raging fires, plowshed hundreds of trees up by the roots at one explosion and tore away fences and hedges and shattered frame houses and barns to mere boards and shivers.
Shells of all kinds now began to drop by the hundreds while more and more cannon added the shells dominating, the whole rolling surface of ground like dainties nents on Infernoinferno. The little girls were pretty well scared, and almost defeanined , never hearing such a din before and thwy could see by the s searchlightsthat many thousands of Angelinians had already been killed and wounded. Indeed the enemys line of artillery seemed like a long sheet of undualting at streams of Will-o-the-wisps and in the far distance by a terrific glare upon the havens the little girls could see that a great conflargration was raging. The litt le girls were shocked by the hellish uproar of cannon and terrific explosions and fearing that a regular storm of shells would soon rain down among them beseached evans to Evans to move to some safer spots.
Evans seeing that the shells were becoming dangerously constant said;
"Let's make for that large groove over there."
They did start for the groove and soon found that here the rain of shells was more furious and that scores were high explosives crashing in just as many terrific explosions per minute. Several artillery batalions were coming tward the litt le gil girls the men intending to answer the enemys fire but then shells dropped among them mangling all the men quickly besides the horses, killing and wounding thousands and din disabling all theartillery. The rain of shells and shrap nell and high explosives waxed fast and furious and the littlegirls apprehending their danger looked frantically for some shelter. They soon realized by a redoubled roar that more than three quarters of Manleys batteries of large guns were in action and the litt le girls could see that it was directied upon Baldwins lines as thousands of explosions were heard in his direction. The sky was filled with an almost dazzling sheen of light of lurid color fr from the raging fires and yet more were starting. The ground quivered and trembled from the concussion so sensitively that Evans and the litt le girls could hardly keep their feet, and from the deadly volcano of flame and din the li tle girls realized that all of Manleys guns were concentrating mas sed ly upon Baldwins lines whose guns were brought up but the fire of the enemy was so severe that scores after scores were disabled or blown up and so had to withdrawn. The cannonading seemed to rend the heavens. A shrapnell shell exploded twenty feet from the little girls bringing down down a tre with a crash while simultaneously a louder crashing earsplitting roar told that more Glandelinian guns were going into action. The din was something terrible, the ground trembled more badly and the roar of the exploding shells succeeded each other with appalling rapidity. Evans himself was a little scared not for himself as he feared no bursting shell, but for his beautiful friendse.

A regular flurry of flashlights exposed the silent cannon of another christian artille artillery line, then suddenly the little girls saw something like scores upon scores of fiery rockets fall among these guns, there were hundreds of bright blue or blood red flashes, terrific tumult of detonations that li viberated the ground like an earthquake and fragments odd of many cannons flew up into the air.
Then another rain of shells burst among the guns and still another, and still another came confusion and consternation being among the surviv ing Angelinians.
"Drat! those black hattered graycoated devils." They heard a general shout.
Then he was hoisted twenty feet into the air by theconcussion of a high explosive several hundred feet away, then they bec began to fall thick ad fast, and big showers of dirt fell upon the litle girls.
Suddenly there was a devilish shrieking sound behind the littlegirls, and glancing that way , Evans to his horror saw a great projectice headed straight for them.
"Lie down quick or a shell will hit us!" He fairly screamed.
Violet and her sisters did as they were told, Evans throwing himself into a deep hole. The huge projectile struck a tree rending it to the ground with a thunderous crash, smashing all its branches. The shell fell among the cannon where it ex ploded with a horrible detonation sending up into the air a regular volcanic erupt ion of dust dirt broken gu cannons and rolling clouds of smoke. Evans staggered out og of the hole just as he saw five large fragments of bur trees all on fire fall to the ground. The little girls saw saw the officers commanding mutter commands to the artillery men, but hell seemed to let loose along the enemys chain of cannon and the christian guns had to be withdrawn as the position became untenable.
The little girls had never seen such a cannon fire a very blasting furnace seeming to have broken out as the Glandelinian gunners hammered away as fast as they could reload and fire.
The little girls could not stand this horrible din, especially when they were exposed and seeked in vain for shelter. They seemed to be in a regular volcanoc crater so terrific was the din, the flashes of gigantic explosions, fires, storms of sparks showers of rocks and clouds of smoke of white and black clo colors, and from the terrificglow of the conflargrations. General Greathearts batteries and also coming up and trying to answer were dominated by the Glandelinian batteries and also had to be withdrawn having lost a hundredpic pieces which were di disabled.
The din did indeed remind the little girls of the titan throes of the fiery Calverinian voc volcano. Hell seemed to have broken loose and the constant nearest flashes were blinding. Other batteries far in the distance to Violets left were also volleying and thundering seeming awful, in perfect salvoes and the litle girls wondered whose guns ther they were.
"I see a score of new fires which to me seems to have a weird appearance and horrible!" Said Angeline; "They must have been started by shells dropping [illegible]"
The flash of searchlights were more consant now and quite alarming and soon soon a most deafening grandeur of cannonading swelled the din. The nos noise was now intolerable to the little girls it being like a warefare of many titans most deafening odious and almost preternatural. Whole brigades twenty rods away threate threatened with annihilation retreated in confusion and the little girls were all killed by another rain of shells and shrpe shrapnell but yet they did not budge from their shelter for fear of being hit as the storm of shells were now as thick as meteor showers, rain seeming to be not so thick as the storm of shells flaring with a livid glowing wake in the sky. They made a continous clamor to [illegible] crashing together and exploding. Angelinian [illegible] close to Evans falling [illegible] giant shrapnell fell into a bucket and exploded, scattering a tremdn tremendous shower [illegible] A few moments later colonel Beir were seen stricken out of a pile of dirt heaped up by the explosion. The little girls and evans dug him out unharmed and turning to [illegible] were staring with wide open eyes and gaping mouths he said;

"What was [illegible] Nothing serious happened. Prepare to retreat with [illegible] guns. Don't be looking at me.I'm not important."

The men obeyed, he cannonading of the enemy grew increasing minute by minute... The little girls knew realized that the Glandelinians were lumbering away at Baldwins entire positions with all their vava available pieces and those grounds seemed to the little girls to be blowing to pieces so great was the clamor. The little little girls [illegible] to their ears trying to shut out the sound which was twice as loud as before. Every one of Manleys batteries were now in action, and never in their lives t did the little girls witness such havoc. They had learned that all of Baldwins lines were under the main range of manleys main bateries of largest guns and here the shells exploded so frequently that the roar as was as continous as a fusillade of one thousand muskets.

Shells and shrapnell fell faster and more furious along thewhole line the lurid and blue flashes making thescene weirdand ghastly.

"This is terrible ."Said Jennie with a shiver;"Will it never cease."

Even felt thrilled and awed as all not [illegible] though the little girls declared that it reminded them of their experience during the canon cannonading at [illegible] the great Vivian [illegible] Mt. Q[illegible]. But this awful cannonading was far worse. And in a few minutes violet and her sisters were witnessing a most horrible sight.

The cannonading had become so terrific that many of the Angelinians among their [illegible] were forced away from their works, and were [illegible] miles a few minutes later Many at other points had to [illegible] to support h for the same cause and [illegible] B[illegible] was blown to pieces by a shrapn ell shells Between the opposing forces there was an open surface and the awful damanition here was beyond describing, as many [illegible] dropping here that to the Vivian girls it looked like [illegible] fiery [illegible].

The [illegible] surface offered no shelternot even for nature . Hundreds of screaming [illegible] came down here pendicularly per minute plowing like fiery [illegible] of fire, [illegible] like the cannonading itself.

Three [illegible] were blown to pieces, or shattered to arth, or blo[illegible] [illegible] showered in torrents, furrows and craters were blown in the ground, fences of any kind were shatered to pieces and havoc of all description ensured [illegible]. Once in a while loud crashing artrending explosions would swell above the roar and the littlegirls learned that the shell's were blowning up cassions , gun carriages and ammunition wagons by scores. By the tremen sous uproar of all of Manleys batteries the din was terrific, the clamor ring something awful indeed . The little girls believed that Manley was trying to pound the christian lines to pieces with his parks of art illery for many projectiles plowed the ground into craters and blew the woods into gapsandif the litle girls believed that if twenty volcanoes were all in their mightiest activities they could not make the din of Manleys batteries and indeed the little girls believed that general vivian was either deaf or dead or something t at he was not aroused by its Once in a while a few christian cannons which could get a chance to fire became overheated and was compelled to be withdrawn and so no christian battery was shawring and violet and her sisters knew that if their father was not aroused soon the christian line would soon le dominated and hurled back in confusion without even being able to charge. Hundreds of barricades were tossed into the air as if though they were made of dea feathers and several gun cassions not a far from the litle girls blew up with a volcano of flame and din and from a new terrific cannonading, the little girls knew that Werners parks of artillery were not now trying to respond to the enemy, w Werner having over five hundred guns but the din sounded as if he had thousands in action. This of course was not from his guns but from the shells bursting among them and losing three guns hung hundred guns he had to withdraw them while he said to one of his officers;

"What in the h--l is the matter with general robertAngelic vivian. Is he dead that he does not come to see what is going on. You go and arouse him if you have to pull him out of bed or throw water on i him."

As there was a bright moonlight sand as the search lights were numerous the little girls took out their ra glasses and surveyed the situation. Far to the southeast they could see hundreds of dull red lurid flashes and large puffy balls of smoke. They also saw that hell seemed to rain her fire upon Baldwins lines which were withdrawing his lines seming to be the target of more guns than was con centrated upon any other point of general wivians lines.

"Baldwins lines must the the target of more glandelinian guns than any one else. "Said Evans;"The glandelinian batteries are certainly thundering awful."

The little girls took a longlook with their glasses and saw plainly the terrible storm of shells or shrapnel shrapnell and high explosives that were rained upon his positions which seemed in a fierce confla[illegible].

It [illegible] that the glandelinians intended to either silence or reduce the christian guns by cannons and even airships were tried for it and as Manley had realized that Baldwins batteries was a long chain of cannon, but it happened that the christian lines must concentrating upon the grounds of Zoe Du Rae

Beck's Run as had not as yet had time to bring up their guns and batteries and so the [illegible] got to be brought up to answer thurh several batteries had come up and tied to answer only wit with disasterous res results and to no avail. Terrible [illegible] strongs of mines of the most powerful mines protecting the christian lines had been exploded by shells and this had made the whole line along Baldwins front appear as pleasure euptions for several moments. One of the Angelinian artillery parks stationed themselves behind Baldwins retiring forces but so severe was the incessant rain of shot and shell that the response grew grew feeble and gradually ceased entirely. During all that scene of sut stupid carnage the little girls and Evans at last took the daring courage courage to ride with all haste to Bi Baldwins lines, but reached it on foot their horses being killed by shrapnell fragments. Baldwins line of guns were supported by long lines of infantry, consisting of ten million five hundred thousand men under Major general T hompson Dunn. Q Asthe little girls reached his lines Baldwin met them as he was directing the retret of one of the batery divisions.

"Well ain't his a great morning for it so early as it is with all this conflargrations and din?"He said;' I've gotten word that Manley has no intention of attac ing u our lines with infantry but is endeavirong to drive the christian lines back withguns, and that the only way to stop this awful can [illegible] cannonading is to charge those guns. If your father was aroused probably;") ----

"I will "It would bring on stupendous carnageand losses for our lines."Said Violet hor ified;"But probably it is the onlything to be done.I'm wondering anyway what is the matter with papa that he dos does not hear al this clamor."

"But just the same I doubt ifthe assault would make any success."Said Baldwin;

"At the right of those terriblechain of glandelinian artillery there still remains two lines of stockades filled with child toilers, and there are so many there, that for two feet apart they would form a dreary line over five hundred miles long. Butwe can't help them poor would unless our onslaughts which ought to be made wo would be a success."

"We have got to win and that t is al' there is to it."Said Jennie fiercely with a stamp of her foot;"How long shall we permit this vastest and saddenst of processions to Ake its stumbling way into the jaws of the Mint Minotaurs, the glandelinian prisons that feed upon young lives. We must try and win the assault and if it is not overwhelming enough and gets repusslsed we can go at it again and again until the foe are forced back and their bateries sicencede."

Violet sent a dispatch to general munn while her sisters went o'f to bright up her signal corps to aid Baldwin in signalling general Vivian men of the dangers. Evans helpled violet and her sisters with the flagging and then he turned and said pleadingliy to violet;

"Violet dear don'tyou and your sisters go forward and join in on this conflict. The carnage might be more terrible than we Bi think and you littlegirls mightbe killed."

"We are not going to join."Said Violet ;"But on only to fling the signal corps of other commands. If we don'tdo this the men willlose heart.We won't joing the conflict though."

"I'm sure that Baldwins men will win the assault."Said Jennie;" General vivian will rush troops to his support. I'll send a messenger to warn general vivian of this horrible cannonading and of the danger threatening Baldwins lines."

Violet called one of the boyscouts and said;

" Go at once will you pleaseand tell our father general Vivian that our lines are being shelled by the enemy th and that Baldwin thinks the only way to stop the glandelinian cannonading is to make an overwhelming atack and aske him to send reinforements right away."

The boy saluted and was offe Every where could be heard a redoubled roar of the cannonading and shells were becoming terrible.

THE FIRST TERRIBLE ONSLAUGHT, AND ITS RESULT.....

All the while during the furious lombardment the hemisphere presented a magnificent and astonishing spectacle-- the shells resembling fiercy particles thick as hail crowding the con concave of the sky as though some magazine of combustion in celestial space were discharging its con contens tward the earth. Indeed thewhole heav heavens appeared as if illuminated withgiant skyrockets appearingalmost as numerous as the sars stars flying all in one possible direction and Baldwin was thconstant expectation of theshell's falking upon him. The shells appeared like gigantic meteors bursing in the sky. Indeed his incessant play of dazzling brillian brilliant exploding luminousities had ben kept for up for one one hour before Baldwin had planned of the attack.

General Vivian himself was suddenly awakened by the most distressing cries that ever fell on his ears, filled or mingled with a tremendous salvoes of looming sounds, crashes of terrific explosions and the like. Shrieks of horror and cries and commands, and shouts yells and curses could be heard from Angelinian officer, mingled with the roar of retreating artillery parks the wild t umultous gallope of thousands of horses, the clanging of ste steel and all kinds of volumnes of tumult. While arn estly listening for the sound he suddenly heard a loud voice calling near thedoor his name.

The great general sousе taking his sabre and girding it stood at the door and reaching for his hat pistols and gloves. At the samemoment he heard the same loyish voice still beseeching him to rise and sw swing;

'''Oh my god the world seemes on fire. Conflargrations, horriblexplosions and confusion everywhere. General for God's sake wake up. The enemy are shelling our lines with all their cannon and we c cannot get a run up to answer.Hurry lease general beforeit is too late.''

The great general then opened the door and it was difficult to say; which excited him more ------the awfulness of the scene-----thedistressed cries of thousands of wounded, the wild scene of confusied retreating batteries of artillery,and the confused tumult of cavarly horses and men dshing this way and then thatand the bright flases of scores of rending crashing explosions. Upward to one thousand one hundred man y law aristrate on the ground near his headquarters mangled and bleeding, some of the wounded with the bitterest cries, some with their hands riased imploring God to save them.

The scene was truly awful and sublime,, the wild dash of the art illery explosionsfromed a sone ofunequalled sublimity, for never did he see rain fall much thicker than the glowing shells fell ward his lines, east e west north, n north it was just the same. The earth semed rended in twain by the titanic din flamming arches thousands of feet seemed to rise with crashes that stunned him and the horison to the southwest was filled with a terrific glare.

Even the luminous sheaves of the shell explosions p passedthrough all the dee colors of the Rainbow even from Violet and sapphire to green and purple red. Sometimes the columns of flashes issuing from the resplendent arches mixed with blackish rays, rising simultaneously at different points along the horison horizon andsome times unitedto form a sea of flame prevadedly rapid undulations to die away again.

General ,ivian himself being told by the boy of Baldwin a plan said that it was the only means and just as daybreak was about to come, though still dark the first of the advancing colun column five million strong were moving forward to storm those thundering batteries. The whole column rushed forward in three long parallal lines seven deep waving their thir standards and flas with great enthusuasmme The first line of assailants after moving across half a mile of open groun d reached the line of glandelinianmines which the graycoats exploded with earsplitting detonations. At the same to time a horrible storm of shrapnell and shell's swept the first line which fairy melted away into fragments, dirtrocks flesh timbers and grass showering the other Angelinian columns and the ground for many miles. On pressed the sedond and third lines the fires of the Glandelinian cannons became so terrific that large portions of this line withered. But the rest of the assailants reached the Glandelinian batteries and attacked the gunners, swarming about the cannons but encountered a murderous fire from the entire fristline of Glandelinian infantry. The on one whole quarter of the line surging among t guns went down into dead wounded and dying, but the attack of the survivors could not be stopped. They threw themselves upon the first line of infantry with merciless fury and for whooly for four hours the two opposing opposinglines as mad atlaze and dead and wounded lay in heaps.Part of the Glandelinian artiolery was taken but at this critical monet moment the other Glandelinian divisions arrived and these were thrown upon the assailants in full force hundreds of fo officers got going down amid the frightful cann carnage while the glandelinian muskatry roared like a hundred thrillion cannons.

Another two hours of greater horrorprevailed t he Glandelinians sticking stubbornly to their positions pouring storms of canister upon the christians, and soon the whole line only less than one quarter left come back leaving a horrible spectacle of what had ben.

Two hours of lull in the infantry charges followed, when general roswell puster johnston with other commanders advanced forward with eleven million five hundred thousand men and these made a desperate assault with the most greatest fury and losses occured that would have made our readers doubt. The whole of the Glandelinian frontal lines seemed in general conflargration and at last more reinforcements came up and the attacking forces losing millions in prisoners and falling became reduced to only five hundred thousand and the surviving columns were hurled backonly one line having remained to this column and his was o torn tottered tott ered mangled and bleeding.

THE SECOND GENERAL ONSLAUGHT.

Afte these two successions of as aults had ben made general Vivian sent general Baldwin to make his onslaught with his fourteen million men and this was to be supported by his artillery as they could not be now be used as the enemy could not fire so much on the christian lines now onnaccount of the as ault.

It was late tward noon time however before the assault was even in preparation and the advance did not begin till thre oclock. The Glandelinians met this brutal assault with damanated desperation, and down theAngelinian columns with a horrible fire of musketry and artillery along a front of fourty seven miles and the only reason the christian line was not wiped out was because general Vivian kept up fierce concentration with fresh forces led by himself in person and soon the Glandelinian gunners running out of ammunition fought hand to hand with the christians but in vain and soon the Glandelinians were forced to give way and retreated in the wildestconfusio the christians pressing down upon them with walls of bayonets.

This sightindeed filled the vivian girls with the greatest horror.

''Oh Evans .''Cried wilet Violet as she met him;''When will this ever end? This batle is so horrible.I don't like it, it makes me shiver. There must be about fourty million christians killed or wounded and taken prisoners alreadys.''

''It indeed is terrible.''Said Evans;'' And his war does seem to be so long. But come away little girls .Lets let's not look at it.''

The litle girls followed him with a melancholy step and with tears in their eyes their ears ringinglike bells from the frightful din of the batt le.... The sky was lighted up brilliantly by the da zzling fires that frightful bloody night which cameon the room of battle redoubling everywhere, the scene being flaming red with hells destruction as far as eye could reach. The little girls could see the dull glow also of the far distant foes forest fires and wondered to themselves as if everyting was to be destroyed.

A scene of bloody

A SCENE OF BLOODY ZN AND FIERY HORROR.
THE VIVIAN GIRLS CAUGHT IN A MAELSTROME OF FLAME AND DESTRUCT ION? THE BRAVERY OF THEIR FRIEND EVANS.

Raging forest fires were approaching everywhere, as well as the fiercery crash of batt le, and while all thechristian artillery was limbered and started forward Bl Baldwins artillery officers gave orders for a furious advance against Manleys right wing.

Evans realized that another big forest fire from Be main one at Cedernin e was also advancing, and others from the result of the bombardmentswhich had ben a failure andwhich was probably causing Manley heavier losses now than the christians.

The flames were leaning to a great height burning up everything in its path and advancing somewhat sw swiftly.

''I believe we are going going to be chased by a forest fire now as it seems.'''Said Evans;''This is theresult of the bombardent and of the main ass ed of fre fire from the battle of Cedarni s.''

Violet and her sisters did not answer, but Evans realized that they were trying hard to keep back their tears....

Evns led the Vivian girls tward general Manleys headquarters which had ben a few mo c moments ago in general vivians possession but where ever they went they saw fresh fires staring hereand there, and at times the fiery long undulating streams of crashing musketry and reeoling cannons Several christian airships were still soaring in the reddened skies but were not dridropping any bombs.

''If the glandelinians see us th they are liable to shot at us withtheir cannns cannons s.''Said Evans;''We got to keep in the darkest places where the retreating glandelinians will not spy i us.If they do general vivian will only find out remains.''''

In a few moments stopping a moment to realize with terrifying certiity that he and rthe litt le girls were lost in the batle and body strewn woods, w with the trees shattered and all branchless, and with the whole region fire menaced became demorilized.

The tall trees were outlined against the smokey lurid skies, the air banging oppre oppressive, smoke thickend, while all this while they were confused by the orgry of batle sounds.

''We have got to get out of here as all these woods will go.''Said Evans; ''Look how bright the glow is.''

Consternation lasted but moment among the litle Vivian girls. Thedanger imminent instead of far away the little girls sped on. FOR eventhough a full realization of their peril had not dawned, the rawhs freshening south wind and the ever thickening haze through which the moon turned red as the angry eye of God confirmed them. To be trapped in that wilder ness with that fire storm sweeping down upon them that they knewinevitably meant death in its o most terrifying form, the ever thickening smoke, the growing brightness of the conflargretion hastend them on.....

''The fire is probably a good way off ye. 'Said Evans;''I'l get you little girls out of this. Only don't lose your heads thatin all. The first thing is to see where we are, and what's whats.''

His smoke reddened eyes fell upon a patriachal hull pine that hoved its top two hundred fet high. He drew his pistol belts tighter than before the little girls had time to question a reproach -he was climbing swickly up among the dead lower branches, got a handbl hold on living wood, and in a couple of minutes was ziggazing far tward the top. Already he had reachedthe safty limit of the height. The tree tip was already leprinning to sway and bend as he flung one arm around the stem. Holding aside the tufted needles with the other hand he swept a rapid anxious glance over the vast expanse of mountier sideand vale, the river reaches, and the sky.

''She'n sure coming some.''He muttered. His face grew red and very stern. Even he to himself he dared not ad it the great and growing peril. From that lofty aerial height the whole country seemed a map, a maze of bewildarment and unspeakable danger. All the country to south and west lay under a dense drifting rolling clouds of blood reddened smoke blanket. Like a hugely irregularcrescent here vapor hidden , there lividly burning, a sea of fire was knowing its way down the valley with a great prolonged hissing roar. Other valleys he knew musthave already been licket licked and a over Mt Killmanjo the advancing fire sea had already flung much much nearer than he had even guessed, driving on with batle clouds bellying before it in huge veluted thunderlods, the fire marched.

Evans wiffed the un unmistakatably or oder of burning junl jungle trees, pine forest and also what seemed like turpentine and rosen.

''Like bacon smoked with corncobs in a barrel. 'Thought he;''She's coming as fast as the bird cans, that's no dream, and not even ten miles away, not now not even sevens''

Greater fear than he had ever known tugged at his heart. His own preddicaments never so much as entered his mad. On the danger of the vivien girls brought great dread. Thinking fast, he gazed or gouged the outpost of the advancing fire , he noted their extent, their trend, and menace. Of to the left framed betwen two hills the whole flank of some unknown ridge was burning as clear as any furnace withe swift onward upward slant. Over it boiled, then shredded out into a vast and diffuse curtian the white and strangling smoke.

''No time to waste here.''Ejaculated Evans. Then whe with an already formulated plan he scrambled and swung down the giant pole. Dropping the last ten fet he landed scratched, butless breathales but unhurt.

''We've got it ticklish indeed.''He said approaching the little girls;''We can't stay here a signle moment. A sea of flame is advancing with the speed of a hurricane seven miles from us. Even if we save our lives by keeping under way water, t the fire will jump thewidest streams as if they were not there at all. It'll sweep the whole country back of us into such a mess hant that we can't get through for days. Only thing we can do is to strike across tward the northeast. Now come.''

The 4 little girls answered nothing. Already the growing brightness the silencing of night birdsand insects, the the strange unatured hush that had fallen over the forest was beggining to numb them with aparalyzingfeare. Forest fires and its typohon of fire gales were their only dread.....

They swftly went on. As Evans noticed the exci excessive dryn ess of brish and the thick drift of needles he shook his head with ominous forboding.

'Winds over my rig t shoulders.''He thought ;''That will give me my direction. If this holds off an hour and a half we will make it.''

Thus with an uncoming tor or behindt'em with the tracl trackless wilds before them they started northeastward but inside of a few minutes they were wh wholly lost. Of the six Evans was the only one fitted either by strengh or dress to battle with the undergrowth. It hooked at them ,it whipped and tangled them. Violets clothes were present ly reduced to rags, and her sisters scratched andtorn and breathless, terrified forgot their hats and cartridge belts.

The strong figureof Evans beating a way through the smokey forest now seemed to the them all that held hacj look death. Up precipituous p n e ridges down ravines through moss- lofted jungles and over rockey ledges ,Evans led them.

All calculations failed. Progress was barely one bird as fast as he had hoped. Unforseen ob stacles perpetually turned them aside. They were galled by whipping underbrushe. Many times they got tangled among the thick grown trees. To make passages Evans had to stamp down many a moose heads or wood or older thicket. Violet was spent and choking, the darkness again lay heavy the whole sky was obscured and they were conscous of a lessening of the wind.

Evans realized what this meant the beggining of the indraft tward the approach ing fire. A strange hush had fallen. No longer rippled the roulade of the night woodpeckers no longer sounded the cry of the cuthird or the whipt whit-whit-whit of the teethers ttail. Off over the last great hill the had decended while a dull coppey glow was beggingging to reverberate on the dun sky. At last Evans rea lized that thy could go no further ithout thing a restes Jennieseank down panthing.

Angeline leaned against a beech trembling adand shaken. Violetwas moping her brown brow with a orn sleeve standing beside Angeline and breathi g hard.

For a moment the e was no word untill Jen ie had regained he breath. With tremul tremulous lips the poor child tremulous lips the poor child asked;

''''Can't, can't, can't we c get to some lake or riverd do you think evanr?''

Evans made no answer. He looked down at ji Joice w ho her face hidden between her hands was crushing as though to shut out t hr the dr rfying prospec t, cin confusion fear a d and anger fought for master of Jacks mind.....

Drawing a capacip capacious breath Evans hailed with all his might !!!!!

''WHO---O-O-O-O-O-O--R-E-E-E-HR-R-R-R-R''

There was no answvr. There were no Angelinians within call who could rescue them. Then his voice bellowi gout like a morse's blare onlywaked in dyingechoesss.

Evans t hen fired four quick shots right into the sky like crackling puncuations to his shout.....

''Nothing d ij doing.''He said;''Iv'e got to do it or play it out with lone hande''

''Shout again , why don't you ?''Stammered Violet

Evans shook his head.

''No use .''He griminaced;''There'n no one to hear usand I have only thirty cartridges left any how. Iv'e got other use, no I can'twaste the m.''

''What's the mischief's to l done?''Panted Jen ie. Violet and her other sisters as much confused ad theyhad by this time recovered their breath and were a anxious to start onward againe And all thatEvans in his anxiety could exhibit was a short dry l laugh.

''I----we .''Began Violet but Evans wanting her thoughts negatived it positival ye

''No can't .''He commanded;''We must wAve got to start off again. The fire's coming a tea tearing. We got to go for Alleys lanes which is five miles away or maybe less.''

''Can't we find a river and go on [illegible]''Asked Angeline.

''No that leads southward into the ver very trap which we are trying to avoid. No time to fi follow back and around. ONly thing we can do is strike a cross No come.''

Joice seriously swallowing tried to speak but could utter no sylable.

He gently raised Joice and onward he led fending the boughs and creepers from her faces They made better progress now though the [illegible] ing as less stifling t he smoke thicker and the dull copper glow to an orange color. Hudge more he might ly the smoke drift and by the messier sid north side of the trees Evans now laid an easternly course. Behind them as they plunded onward afar dull humming sound strangely weird and [illegible] itself heard.

Also high in the air the smokeflrls began to be flecked occasionally with specules of fire and breathing be ame became very difficult.

''We have got t o strike down hill here somwhere.''Said Evans;''We got t o find some swamp or bog. Pretty soon now I presume it will get a trifle warm.''

Keeping at their tacks the increasing glare thatnow overshot the whole westrn and souh southern heavens, they xrushed and struggled through the thickets and briers. The smoke had now grown so dense that the fugitives could hardly see a hundred yards in either directionsVV Evans knew that it was probably that the fire must have been or overx swept Baldwins positions. Gasping and struggleand stul stumbling every now and then they suddenly came out upon an old deserted road through the burning forest. They were so exhausted that they again had to stop fr for he breathe Fhr off they caught sight of a mountian top whi ch was a mass of incandescent ruin glowing and weltering like millions of tons of living coal.

But why in that direction ? Evans could not understand.

''I hope that it don't mean that I.m turned around and lost my bearings .''He thought;''Great heavens I could have sworn that I have kept the right of ways''

However there was little time for thought. Already the hot breme by the wind was sensibly felt by theme They could hear plainly the incessant groaning and crash ing of the ravushed forests, and a score of sparrows confused by the approaching fir fire sea almost dashed into Evns and the litt le girls. Through the woods sounded here and there a rustling as if some beast terrified had taken to flight. Evans tried to get his bearings No time now to reach the lake as the fire was advancing too fast .Lowlands they must find and at once. There lay their only hope. Even a wide brook might save theme

''This way.''He cried.

Down the road he beat a path for Violet and her sisters. From moment to mo ment the little girls strove to motion their lips with a dry tongue. Haless with dishaveled hair, ripped clothes bloodshot eyes who would have recognized Evans as a man of an hour ago.At this moment there was a cry from Violet as she fell headlong among t he brambles and weeds. Evan s turned on d sto coped to her. He heard her moans. He gently lifted her up but she was unable to stand and cried out;

''Oh my foot.''

He paused a moment and saw that the poor little girl one ankle was caught in the scraggy roots of a spruce.

"Broken!" He gasped.

The little girl was past intelligible answering however, and tried in vain to shake her sobbing Evans knowing her grit understood. For a moment he knelt there beside the little girl trying to think. He pressed a very dirty hand to his brow. He lifted her up with muscle wracking effects or at efforts they lunged ahead.

The little girls were shivering and sweathing in terror.

"Evans" Wailed Jennie; "If it were not for you we would have perished long ago. But now you had btter better leave us behind and save yourself and violet. We ourselves can't escape."

"Sh-h-h-h-he" Said Evans; "I'll not let you little girls perish. No breath to waste. I can carry here"

All of asudden at this moment Jennie fell and injured her knee. Evans was confused. Yet her othe sisters knelt beside their weeping sister who raised herself with pain. One arm she cast around Joices neck and the other she cast around Angeline. Evan in that moment of pei peril Evans was thrilled at the sights They staggered to their feet and lunged ahead slowly. But from the forest at one side burst with a tremendous crash and breaking of branches a huge humpbacked ungainly creature, not five rods from them it stampeded through the dark and smoky woods.

Evans caught a glimpse of his its broad huge muzzle and its branching antlers. Then it vanished.

"What is that?" Panted Angelina.

"Moose. Here. This way." Evans anss answered jerking his head sideways; "The animal knows where the lake is. I got turned aroun ds Maybe we can go through--his trail"

"On and on they stumbled, over rocks and fallen rocks, now tripped by twisted vines, torn by bushes, scourged by whipping limbs. Evans face became a mass of bleeding wounds. Evan Angeline and Joice who had taken head to protect themselves sufferedasevere punishment and so did Catherine Hetie and minave

But still no lakes. And now the fire was swe ping very close,, and all five of them were all nigh shocked, Violet speaking no word her face being buried in Evans shoulder, she did not even groan..... Thousands of the d first birds which had but lately gone to roost were now declosed by the glowing glare on earth and sky and once more began hopping from ti twige to twig with little cries, of or taking flight, launched out drunkenly into the heated air and myriads of insects mistaking this ne for the tripocal mornig morning enjoyed their last brief flight.

Through the heavens droned a roar----bar like awe compelling. Evans felt his heart pound hickly, his mouth begn to grow hot and dry, but st ill he fought and reeled and flundered on.

Suddenly he hr heard a noise. Angeline and Joice had trip ed and fells Evans mentally praying a cased Violet down and stood there a momenton the lectic glare now reddening among the trees. He rubbed his wrist all ridged and lined where Violet's fingers had grippede At the three fallen one he stared with a half discouraged look and his jaws fells The smoke was becoming so thick that the trees before them grew dim at the distance of fifty feets Stopping he craddled Jennie up and carried her a certain distance and then set her down and did the same with the other three carrying them a lengthy distance by turns.

"I reckne" Said he; "That I can haldle this porposition a, alone which ever way it turnes"

So down the trail he fought carrying them each by turns. As he carried each one he managed to gasp;

"Don't look what ever has happense Just hang tight, tight, that is all."

Already over the hill top off at his right the advanced fire seas had already begun to fling their lines. On the wings of the wind what now threatened to blow with the force of a hurricane they flew everywhere. Hundreds of comets of incandec incandescance were beginning to whirl and srop all about the terrified fugitives, the fire seemed to come and down the hill the main sea of fire was already roaring. Momentarily there was some brighter glare which had shown where the gale driven flames had leaped at one clear drive right to the top of a dead birch or pine. Thich Thick as clous clouds of swarming lambic sparks and brands were whirling hey stung and blistered the fugitives and the open glare of the heat was so great that it threatened to shrivel parch and shrival, Evans and his precious charges. The smoke was a breath of the fire giant, and here and there the dry snapping of the flames was broken by the leaping explosions of some trees green and full of sap bursting with the ardent incandescense.

The lake Evans only clear idea was.

But where! Stopping a moment he peered about him a, all but blinde He felt his very hair scorching. His breath came in aches Gasping he tried to speak to the little girls to an sure them. Then he noticed that they were limp limp.

"Good God, they have fainted." He realized. And for a second the temptation one came to end the whole infernal agony and flight, to have it over with, but headlen Hellam of the blistering rain of sparks and iron a brands he perceived dimly that toward the left the land sloped sharply down. Thither veering as it were through an ocean of smoke he pl plunged carrying them each one by one. Almost across his path five huge resinious conifers had caught aflame. The hurricane of wind smiting these dead trunks fanned them into vivid b blue fi fiffers Like tremendous swaying torches they stood in Evans way. Dazed utely uncomprehending for a second Evans stared.

Then as by instinct Evans whipped out his fourty fours. He snapped it to the leel level but dropped it again.

"No." He spat; "I won't waste good lead. We will probally need it if something surprises us. I'll try and get around them. No use wasting lead on those trees and their falling would probably bar our way all the more. "Let the fire consplit those trees."

Booming furiously the trees suddenly broke. Slowly at first, then faster faster they whirled over in a vast quarter segment. Backwards the fire roared and con vorusuated with a million yhets of flame, dnw down into the already smoking greenery they crashed with acho chaotic tumult. Then there was a sudden surge of heat an Aetna ofof far flung bra blazing braids. As one dreaming Evans thought;

"That's the way I've got to go thr throughthere."

Itgrew to be a dream a nightmare, a hedious shocking fighting agony with but conrad vague glimpses of the Vivian glens He felt their weight no more as he ca rried one after another. He was dressed to even feel no heat though his very clothes were smoking. All thought was abliterated as he staggered on, realiz realization of pain, of exhaustion no longer reached hime He seemed not a p spectater ranther rather than an actor on the tragedy. Suddenly he knew that he was [illegible] and almost fallen.

The shock aroused him.... A An infernal appallin g roaring and crackling soun d overwhelmed his sen senses. His breath scorched. The fire was only one hun dred yards away..... He desperately carried one after another crying out to god an d the angels to save them, not thinking of himself. Atlast he burst through someting something, as he felt something cold and wet.....

"Is this what it is like to be dead?

An aching wonder filled his soule The plunging scheredshim, res reason returning. He dragged he little girls in with him and finding himself w waist deep in water did all he could to restore the little girls to their senses. Behind him the thick overfrown trees and bushes were already smokinginto flame while over the surface of the waters wiwhite vapors were arising.

Hundreds of brands swirled hissing down, flaming brands plun ging to extinction. Darkness, and light, smoke, steam the wide sown seeds of fire whirled in whirlwpools of chc co clouds ove thesenarimsoned beam of the stream as it appeared to be.

He had succeeded in bring ing the little girls to and farther and farther they wi we waded into those friendly depths while under their scorched and blistered feet the smooth gent ly sheving san sandswailded easily affording cool relief. Violet shivered violently as she recalled the nights terror, stress and anguish. Now she began to sob pitifully with those abandoned strangling sobs that no man could hear unmoved.

Evans set his teeth into his lipsand desperately plunged on the stream bein being a quarter of a mile wide. Evans tried to sooth Violet.

"There, there, please don't, you musn't cry now." He said; "It's all right now and we are safe. It will be a long while before the fire can ignite the other side, and maybe it cannot do so either as he stream is too wide."

As Evans carrying Violet staggered out of the water and up he sands tward where Greathearts army ewas or had ben encamped Violet suddenly roused herself, started gasping as one who awakens from a frightful dreand dreame A'lmost at the same moment a mans figure draggled se spent and miserable tottered into the clearing. With a madmans shrill horrible laughter as of a lost soul, he stumbled tward where the christian army had been. Evans his throat raw with heat, and smoke and thirst uttered a hoarsecry.

It was Baldwin who had got caught in the fires awdu awful grasp. It was not the christian general Baldwin but a man Evans had known for ages. This man sank to the ground but Evans was by his side immediately. Violet's sisters bathed his head in the cool water of the stream, Violet still clinging to Evans sobbing and trembling with fear. The man was soon brought around.

"We will be all right now I guess." Said Evens; "No brands are falling here yet though the smoke is still heavy."

They trudged onward soon catching up with a portion of general g Greathearts divisions who were being hard pressed by a large Glandelinian asault assaulting column, these columns having been retreating to better cover u d under heavy fire.

The fury of the whole batle which raged for fourty eight hours without the slightest pausecommited damage and destruction to nature and lives that it was almost impossible to des describe/

All the talcums and tans of the retreating Glandelinians had been either burned of or carried off by the victorious christians, and one of the long glandelinian trenches had been by the fury of the christian c shell fire buried in a terrible rdge of broken shatt ered tree and branches an windrowed in dead wounded and man led bodies.....General Baldwins lines of assailants though successful in carrying the batteries had beencurshed to fragments and only reinforcements concentrated uponthe counter begring Glandelinians was the only means to hold them back general Baldwin having ben severely wounded. Violet and her sisters who had been caught in the terrible conflict especially the horrible shelling of the christian lines had escaped with only minor s scratches but their perils was not as yet over as we will soon read and once they were prisoners. General Vivian la learned that general Manleys badly smiten lines were retreating tward Tartaria and that Manley was sacking and burning all before him, riding avery town and city in his path of retreat. Farm after farm had been cleaned out of everything they consisted, town after town being sacked and set on fire untill the wars desolation extended for many scores of miles during the retreat.

The storm of devastating fury of battle was terrific in the early morning . The waves of Glandelinian columns in fr furious counter charges upon Vivians center on the ground of Zoe Rae Bechingtinca dashed across all lines of works in their irresistible onrush, but faced a fire that submerged the christian parapets completely with dead and wounded Glandelinians.

The sky was aflame with the fury of battle and for an hour though cone wave of Glandelinians were driven back, after another with curshing and mangling losses othe waves succeeded those receding and so the onslaught never had a moments abatement. One surge of Glandelinian after another broken into fragmantes amid crash and roar of millions of muskets and thousands of cannon but only to go back badly smitene. Tress ty shell fre fire were borne down in myriads and the attack was so fierce and steady that genral Vivian became alarmed. Indeed the mightiest waves of men he had even seen broke over the parapets and breastworks like tidal waves against the breakwater, only to be torn to pieces and hurled back.

But despite all these repulses general Vivian knew that ti this portion of his lines would not be able to hold. For wave after wave only returned to t the assault with d red oubled fury the combatants and shells howling screaming an and yelling fiercely. Finally the Glandelinian surges burst clear over thefirst and seconf wasecond lines of works and ce clear over the tgird alsoand soon the whole christ ian line at this point was giving way. The musket volleys and cannon broadsides were coming in fiercer blasts from the lines still holding the enemy attacking with ever increasing fury, and soon the whole center of general Vivians line was rolled up in the greatest confusion.

WERE THESE INCIDENTS REALLY THRILLING?????

Indeed one of the most ter iblest sights of the Glandelinian w war was really Van leys surging armies aming the stream of smoke confir f conflargrations of musketry and the damanating crash of thousands of artillery, ad as their lines went to pieces t their full lengthe Ther formations in their advance, and thenwful secrecy of unknown terrors which were concealed among these fury stricken hosts of Omarian Curdas Simmermannians and Mc-Hollestinianswere always looked upon in awe.

Violet and her sisters with Evans and a large boyscout party amid the undulating sotming blase of musketry and cannonhad ben flaging all the christian signal stations who could see them amid all this fiery storm of battle and now the litt le girls and Evans were alone all the unfortunate boys having been wounded.

To glance down and witness all these at acking columns in their wi whitest fury, and in all their terrors se med would seem to forever dwell, to forever struggle. It was with slow cautious steps that the little girls with Evans and the boyscouts had ascended a higher rise of ground and the fatug fatifue od climbing up the steep and rocky cliffs might have as well an daunted theme But after several stops they had reached the summit, and sudd shuddering shudderingly the little girls before they had begun theirsprawling had gazed at the long torn and mangled and half smoke hidden ling lineof graycoats. Many fiery explosions severeal hundredfeet high they had witnessed and funereal volumes of tortuously ascending smoke came c seething upward in the far distance mingled by a lurid glow which told that the forest fires were still burning. The sight of the whole battle ground was like some earthliy hell. The smoke seemed to rise in myriads of fan fantastic convulitions pouring forth from behind projections and united with the vast crimson masse mass which rose sublimely upward from all the christian batteries of biggst guns in action.

Thousands of charred trees ap appeared among the enemys lines, roasted earth and scorched and burning smoking grass were all mingled together to form a horrid soil, and here they had started fla gging untill one lad after another had been shot down by the storming fire of the assailants.

The rolling red and ilo black clouds of lu bursting high explosioves were mingled also with blue lacl black and purple red clouds, and even the smell of burning turpteutine came to them distinctly!

The mass of fiery conflict and conflagrations which por poured forthand overwhelmed he battle lineshad now passed onward leavingonly desolation expcced to view and filede and burning plians gray and purple with dead and wounded of both sides.

To have been caught by these overwhelming torrents of human being in gray seemed more appalling to the litle girls , than did the other charging Glandelinian armies, and feeling uneasy on the thought of being seen and fired upon the little girls and Evans finally drew back behind a large ledge of rocks which was a peninsulay porjection of the cliff which formed a precipice on the other side seven hundred feet from the groun d. The whole storm of battle was a terrible sight indeedand they watched it in awe. A large rocks near Evans was loose and he accidently shoved it downthe frightful precipice. Violet herself was nearer the brink than the others and pointing to the deadly precipice Jennie said;

"Look out violet. The projection you are sitting on is weak and giving way under you LOOk out."

Just as she jumped away it caved in with a roar and disappeared into a crumpled a mass belowIt was a narrow escape for violetand she did not go to near after that.

In another direction they saw that on other long lines of men torn and mangled were disappearing in other clouds of smoke and this was pierced incessantly by hundreds of thousands of dul dull red glaring flashes making the most horrible sight they had ever seen and which seemed to have increased. The rumbling thunder of thousands of cannons made their refuge t tremble like an earthquake, and t they could occasionally see the fiery conflargrations of musketry andcrashing shell and shrapnell explosions which made clouds of sulphur color besides white or other colors.

The little girls knew that also the farthest regions were still seas of burning trees and even fromthat distance they fancied they could hea feel the hot breath of its sulphurious vaporsand now heard the subterran sean roaring of musketry and cannons far to their right where everything was one white out curtain ofsmoke pierced by innumerable flashes.

Thousands of greay great explosions in that directions would flar up with the sti steadiness of salvoes scattering sprays of flame dirty dirt wreckage and black clouds for great heights.

As the advancing enemy were now coming tward this hill the little girls were forced to leave this scene and reaching the lower ground found a wagon load of children stranded in the mud and many Angelinian soldiers trying to get them out.

After some labor Evans managed to extracate them but suddenly around the bend of the road the head of the advancing Glndelinian columns appared, shells tearing down among the trees in a fiece tumult tumulte Half a hundred of the Glandelinians seeing the wagon filled with children lost all their bearing throwing all precautions to the winds and giving chace yelling like demons.

The driver saw them coming and lashed the horsesuntill they were galloping in full speed? But the Glandelinians set up a wild shout and persued them at a tearing speed being able to see the fugitives despite the smoke has haze and delivered a rattling volly from their pistols.

The bullets missed the desperate drivers buthit someof the Angelinians bringing them down the children in inside the wagon ling too much frightened to scream.

TheseGlandelinian Omarian-Curdes who were mounted on fast horses drew nearer every moment but suddenly out of the bushes sprang a three scoreof other Angelinians who opened fire and then followed along side the wagon to kp j keep the enemy far behind untill rescue came.

One of the Angelinians galloped off in another direction to bring help while the others galloped on with the flying wagon w full of children ce cheking the furious speed of the enemy little. On after them dashedthe enemy but not so fast now as the Angelinians kept firing rapidly at them bringing down a graycoat at every neare nearly every other shot.

"If you don't stop at once at op that wagon you skunk."Shouted the Glandelinian officer ;"I'll riddle you with bullets. We are bound to retake those butternips rescued from our burning stockades and by the name of Satan we are going to do so or I'll know the reason why. T"

The driver payed no head but lashed the horses withhis whip and his increased their speed.

"Drat that fool of an Angelinian."Cried the leader in disgust and he whipped out his one hundred and fourty fives."Halt or I'll fire."He shouted.

"Fire away."Mocked the driver;"I do not far your old bullets, and besides yuo can't hit me.I'll die first before I,ll let you lay your hands on these innocent children."

The Glandelinian cursed and swore roundly in volumes and fired the shot hitting the driver in the back, and he sprawled from the seat onto the ground.

"Gra't hit you eh.?"Laughed the Glandelinian officer;"Well by gad I did so."

Another man however jumped from his horse into the seat and takingthe reins started the horses at a breakneck speed, while some otof the Angelinians firing a volley riddled the Glandelinian leader with bullets.

The Angelinians following alongside the wagon, kept up a rattling fire

e p emptying a good number of saddles. The Glandelinians retirned the fire rapidly and incessantly brighing the angelinians down by tens. TheGlandelinians even lashed their horses unmercifully to make them gallop faster but the wagon which had the start in the face place gotfarther and farther away, though already ten men who had driven the waogn had been killed.Reaching an old house the eleventh driver drew reins. The children were quickly driven in and the horses hid in the buses. Then Violet and her sisters and the Angelinian soldiers went into the house barricaded the doors, and thrust their muss muzzles through thewindows and opening a terrible fire on the enemy, the driver bolting the last door and then using his pistols with terrific effects.

But the glandelinians dismounted and ran recklessly tward the house, and though a score were shot down at once, the rest reached it and using their muskets as clubs ten of them tried to bater down the door, but those nearest were shot down and the survivors compelled to run.... Now several glandelinians had felled a tree and three scores lifted the largest branch and rushed tward one of the doors, and him himmering away at it, but seething fire was poured upon them,,, and the survivors were compelled to drop the heavy log andrun for their lives.

But they were not cowed and three scores of other glandelinians took up the heavy battering ram and made an assault at another door, while the rest kneeling down a considerable distance from the house kept up a heavy fire. But again those using the logware forced to drop it and run under the heavy fire from the windows and loopholes in the log door, and the log rolled over some of them and crushed them under its weight. The Angelinians inside the house were firing as rapidly as they could reload and the fo floor was covered with paper cartridges.

The glandelinian leader was in a boilboiling rage and he ordered all his men to rush forwardand thrust their guns in as many of the loopholes as they could, but as they rushed forward every loophole darted its tongue of flamand the enemy fell rapidly, and the survivors were compelled to resume their attack at a very d safe distance. A Volley after volley was delivered at the house and just as the Glandelinians using the battering ram succeeded in breaking in the door, five hundred Angelinians suddenly appeared and then more and more and now seemed to kept keep on coming without stopping. Being these overwhelming numbers the glandelinians scattered after firing two deadly volleys.

Several hundred of the Angelinians took possession of the children. Sixty of the Glandelinians had been killed, and a hundred badly would w wounded and only fourty escaped, as fifty survivors and the wounded were taken prisoners.....

The christians lost sixteen also in killed he, he ,he and eighteen were wounded... At the same time thisoccured a large city had been destroyed by the roaring shells from glandelinian cannon and then from forest fires. By the help of many of the officers during a severe storm of shrapnell fire general vivian managed to have his left main wing a advanced tward the vinicity of Taturia, and this being down done he was a enabled to reinforce his crushed and broken center with reserves and reinforcements to such an extent that the assaults of the enemy a o along this point was checked.

Violet could not hold thinking of the time when she had been wounded in the hand during her escapefrom the enemy after being suspected of spying on them and of the oceans of suffering she and her sisters had experienced during and was before this great wr war hal e started. Jennie did not forget the other children who had shed their blood for Christ and the Catholic religion, and Jennie also remembered when the cruel Glandelinian judges tried to make her and her sisters renounce their religon by intreaties, commands, brilliant promishes and terrible threats that had been brought to bear upon them. Shewas proud to think how she and her sisters had resisted so proudly do bravely and fur firmly. Indeed violet and her sisters had great passon for all the wounded soldies falling in this titanic strof stl strife and often gave them their own basket s of food, and help the doctors dress their wounds.

Although Violet or her sisters did not recognise general Samuel Nance who had been wounded with Baldwin they had an affection for himwhich they could not explain.

At ten oclock that morning when she came to dress Some ward she saw Eva s standing not far from her and as she looked at Eva she thought to herself;

"She must be almost as beautiful as my guardian angels."

Her appearance was indeed heavenly, and her face was almost half as sweet as her s or her sisters. Kindness and happiness was always seen in her eyes despite the horrors of this great titanic war her hair being golden brown her features mild and delicate. Her robe or dress was of fine dext ure s silver belt hanging from her scarf an her sheath was of the purest gold. Under her rod robewas a golden armourand she had a greay great shield and two brilliant white horses on either side of her. Crowds of the smallest children had surrounded her having the appearance of beautiful little cupids but wearing dazzling white robes and also had pretty horses which were also as white as their robes and they had long flowy hair of black golden and brown. Violet and her sisters did not know what to make of it and believing that indeed these were celestial children they were almost awed.

It was during the time when general Zoe Rae Aronburg's massive lines of christians were struck by a mighty wave of glandelinians and carried all before them that a dad occured which boththrilled and horrified the army. It was the worse confusion that Violet and her sisters had ever seen among a troop of christian soldiers before, shells crashed everywhere among them with din which blinded the survivors and blackened their fingu finger nails and which almost rendered the little girls paralized with horror and almost deafe.

Just at this moment when all seemed a fiery conflargration all around, when the earth seemed to ro rise into the air in shre shredded fragments , darkness as hell breaking loose from showers of earth and clouds of smoke and the streams of flaring but hooting of horrible explosions that one of the Vivian girls saw one of the priest with the Holy Eucharist in his possession and persued by at least half a dozen glandelinians who were firing at him , the shots however flying wide. Violet saw the priest as he was kneeling beside Aronburg who was wounded saw one of the nearest graycoats holding in his hands a casket which he was aiming at to her horror not at the priest but at the Monestrance that he was holding.

Violet at once suspected what the catrif cartridge was aimed for not only directed at the priest but really more at the Monstrance against which the villian had a fke fierce hatredness. Her sister tricks. priest saw did not see the rascal. Animated by lively faith, and devoted love Violet rushed through the throng of panic stricken men and while muterin a pe prayer stood between the blessed Sacrament , and the fiends weapon, just at the moment the shot was fired. The cat cartid cartridge fort unately struck the heroic child in the hand, and with a pale pleading look tward Heaven ,seven she sank to the ground or rather to her knees at the feet of the priest while several soldiers who appeared to be officers who were trying to rally the panic stricken column s rushed forward and managed to overpower the brute before he could fire again.

The priest deeply moved had the presence of mind to take the Sacred Host out of the monestrance and give a particule of it to the slightly injured child saying;

"My child you are worthyimmediately to recievethe body of our Lord. That run was aimed directly at yourheart, and by the mercy of God that bullet was armed ai nai aside."

At this moment every soldier present being reinforced and rallying, including her own sisters who had seen her brave deed, praised, cheered and yelled in deafening ecb chorus, cheering until the air was rended by the din.

Guns were also fired in prison as and so many of the soldiers who could embraced her, and ever rode her on their shoulders, throwing their hats high into the air.

She was at once while the forces were pressing forward again taken before general vivian who hearing of the deed said;

"She certainly beats me in bravery. I do wish she was a boy. Then I would make her a comander in chief of my troops."

Of course all the others would have done this heroic deed if they had seen the danger of the Blessed Sacrament, as soon as she had but their attention had not been directed that way. The man who had attempted to fire at the blessed sacrament had also been dragged before general vivian. The looks on his face convinced general vivianthat he was hopelessly beyond repentance, and though he tried his best to make him realize his h error nothing whate er could convince him and he had attempted to get away to strike to Violet down for interfering and making him fail.

"Then cruf crucify the fi fool." "Biased general Vivian;" "Crucify him. Away with him."

This bloody work was done immediately. Simultaneously to this or what caused the fleeing of the priest was became during the furious charge of the glandelinians whose line of assault had extended for fifty miles a hundred Catholic chr churches in the wrecked and burning towns through which the enemy had passed through had ben robbed by glandelinian forayers, the Sacred Posts of every chr church was Dissecrated and everything inside the church and all religious articles were riddled by bullets of cut and hacked by the sabre sabres od of the Glandelinians. This made general Vivian both sad and angry but nothing could be done and yet to the poor general the enemy just now though repulsed along Aonburgs frnt seemed to be winning the battle and were.

One great onslaught had been made by the glandelinians against once of his positions s on Canton hills the losses being 656,740 on the side of the enemy in slain alone and 1,400,000 were injured.

Violet and her sisters knowing of the awful lossesin the battle going on now had increased their prayers for the poor sould in Purgatory Purgatory which of course they had always done since the age of reason. Even many a time during the battle Violet and her sisters had gone out in the hot tripoel sun and undr fire of the most severest intensity and kneeling there beside the wunded who were pleading tward heaven with outstretched arms. The little girls sometimes accidentally knelt on sharp h edge d boards or nettles, and though this caused them great suffering they never left the poor wounded whose every sufferings and misery were for her heart heartrending to see. T Thousands of the wounded christian soldiers who suffered greatly lessed the children unendingly more for prayers than for treatement. T d indeed the whole scene before the little girls was more like the slopes of bottom of the abyss of Purmatory. Many of the wounded soldiers who weranot exactly prostrated sat all around just quiet and calm but what joy on their faces as that s they saw these six little angels and even with Eva coming amongthem. Violet and her sisters could not see no fire or anything else any more on account of the thickess of the smoke of di distant battle and all these wounded were suffering intense pain, many interiorly. Violet and her sisters prayed fervently for these poor men in mortal an agony o and for their souls, and then even now they could hear voices about them from n many of the wounded saying;

"Oh you verykind child deliverers. I thank you, I thank you.

The little girls even had themen come around to get the wounded under shelter which was done and oh how the men did which that the little girls would stay by them and never leave than them.

During the hour of eleven oclock when the little girls were far in the rear of one of the la longest christian firing lines and where the musketry was in one deafening encrolitting porlonged crashing roar the little girls again found themselves in danger. From ravines and small crevices mancheivous goblin laughs seemed to be heard and the little girls fancied they saw strange confusing forms and strange waving caps among wwhere the firing was the heaviest. Violet and her sisters fearing that trees may be some landelinians lying in ambush shrank back in amazement their hands on their pistol butts. Remembering their guardian angels they resumed their way through these horrible scenes. T here? What were those hosts of figures approaching? A rider on a fiery steed advanced tward them while from behind smoking bushes more crowds of unorganized men approached the children with much drawing and swaggering. Thwware leading fiendishly black dogs, covered with mouth their eyes glowing fiey in their sockets. Behind everything was now enveloped with a curtian of rolling convoluted black smoke. These dogs to Evans and the litle girls were more hedious than any dragon they had ever seen in Fhiry stories, and this sight alarmed the little girls.

The a very air was filled with noxious vermon each one biting striking stung themselves detesting and tearing t he other huddled together in balls and knots, seathed away from those frightfully advancing wall of flames.

A dense smoke filled withthe most small of burning brimstone and horrible noxious vapor of burning animals and human beings crept over the little girls and in the distance the litt le girls could see angry hissing flames who line aloft seming to near the very skies. The clandelinians had lost sight of the little girls on ac ount of the smoke and they retreated for safty, fierce air cries and imprecatutions breaking the dull roar of the conflagration and the crash and clamor of batle. Around them Violet and her sisters saw nothing but smoking shru bbery, every blade of grass was already scourched to blackness and not even a littlegrass did they find growing on the rocks. No little streamlet babbled here nor was the distanthumming or of the bloody battle linesand the howling of the approaching conflagration broken by the soft sweet song of bird birds, n ot e e even the familiar accents of the human voice had they heard since the Clande inians Clandelinians scattered from the scorching heat. Peculiar species of insects in a noxious ugly swarm crowded over the tops of the highest rocksle king all he the more fearful in the intense lurid glow of the fire which lighted the sky so bright that the scene resembled a lighted red hell. The ground was even strewn withbleached bones that gleamed yellow in the light of the fire.

Suddenly they heard in the far distance in the direction of the firing lines a confused rumbling and tumbling sou d sound followed almost simultaneously by a roaring sound like the booming of more than 500,000,000,000,000,000. muskets and twice that many cannon and the concussion threw them them headlong into the patch of shrubbery as if they were foothalls.

Simultaneously in the far distance a mighty sheaf of flame shot high into the air fol'owed by ink black clouds that spread over the sky in vol convuluted billows.

"Something exploded."Oas ed Violet;"I never heard such a nei e ni noise before."

The h T he little girls now whel'ed their horses Violet saying;

"Dear Vans please tell the adventure to no one but my parents and the christian ld leaders.

"News came in during this time that there was another horrible massacre of children going on by the victorious enemy and of the heroic defenders fifty thousand children having been curelly murdered, and one million seven hn hundred christ ian soldiers who had defended the position in front of the christian atonakdes had been massacred in cold blood. Simultaneously a large villiage had ben set on fire by the clandeliniens who had ben cancelled to abandon it to theChristians who were advancing successfully at that portion and this had formd a new forest fire con suming the city of Calonia. Theenemy also had ben threatening the rear of general Vivians right wing, and ev several of the officers seing the impending danger and seeing that it was too late to retreat had set off three thousand of the bigrest mine heides letting loose simultaneously with all the lit est guns and exploding shells and this had checked the enemy n id the most terrible and loudest explosions in any battle before. But this was not the terrible noise Violet and her sisters had heard. The cause of the explosion was thus,;

General Evans who was deep in getting his forces our out of a dangerous trap into which they had ran into, and while at the same the that look wwww wh who was pa withviolet and hersisters and unintentionally passing a beautiful crucifix and turning away as if he did not wish to see it, and which as he didnot look back and she clasping her hands and weping bitterly;

"Oh Evans lo ok back lov in just once Oh please look back, ples se"And which in utter amazement he had swung his steed around caught sight of the crucifixsurrounded by nettles and brambles, the meekly bowed crowned tor thorn crowned head, and it seemed to call out to him;

"Take me al n alone from the forest fires;"

And he grasped as he realized he had passed unnoticed, and without the slightest hesitation he dismounted, went up to it sank on his knees ,kissed the c thron crowned head as he arose, and after muttering a prayer extracted it from the ground General Evans had seen funny lookingknobs in the ground and no sooner had he gotten out of the way when there was a great eruption of dirt clouds, of smoke flame which shot thousands of feet across the stretch of ground, and in which n hundreds of thousands of trees were shivered to pieces, twelv seven thousand Clandelinian mines had went off and Evan [illegible] escaped just in time. The mines going off simultaneously had made a ter rible [illegible] heard for miles and miles as plainly as a loud rumble of thunder of a coming storm, and Evans was not able to be [illegible] for nearly k three weks.

The very scenes of battle, with the far distant forest conflagreration a resembled a grentsubterranean world of fire, slaughter and devastation. Death like sounds came from the fire seas, which reddened the earth almost as brightly as the skies. (Waves/like arches of flame appeard now and the, and flaming more shaping likefiesy fiervstalactites and stalagmits hung from the blazing mag nolia trees.

An hour after Violet and her sisters were witnessing another scene of horror. A general onslaught was made by the enemy the shell fire seemed to tear the massive grey e waves topieces, and to splinter the palm trees by thousands. The flashes of shells going off by thousands o mmong theenemy was terrific being in seried lines of lumini us flashes, now a steel blue, then flashes and stream would come together, then the flashing was prolonged, the rail fences an d woods in the vinicity of the enemys lines were borne down amin amid the rain of hell into splintered wreckage, the explosions of so many shells with their crashing roar seemed to roll down the river val/ valleys, and was reechoed from distant knobs , seeming to come from every direction, from the sky, up from the river valleys down from he hills and from the t op of the bending twisting writhing trees, which threatened to crash to pieces before the driving forces of theshell storm , then came cloud bursts of canister and minnies, grapeshot poured in vi vertible torrents, the grey waves recoiled and melted away by scorand back the whole torn and bleding line went in confusion only to reform and repeat the desperate as assay, striking blow for blow. Violet and her sisters with Evans were in a deplorabl position without shelter of any kind standing air simply beide the tall trees trembling with fear and shivering with the dread of that some of the shells of the enemy would yet get them. The smoke of artillery had become so thick and added by to that of the fires that they could not see one another any more and as they were all scattered apart they could not come to any decision as to what was to be done. For more than an hur they were already standing there having witnessed the enemy makethree desperate assaults only to have their whole line go back in mangled grun groups and then fiften minutes after to come un in another frightful suf suge surge, the christian lines again to burst into a fierce con flargration of musketry and cannon a fire which would sweep all beforeit. There was indeed no prospects of the furious onslaughts abating or of rescue , tree were now crashing down all about them hit on the top by shells and their condition was really a desperate one.

What should he done now? A courageous no member of the little terrified party went from tre to tree and by much shouting got the party together and ur urge d urged them to continue their way even should it require the greatest effort as to stand still in this terible region with shells burstingall around and minnies moaning in a screaming concert would endanger the lives of each and every one of them.

And moreover, the wwwwcme flashes of shells threatened every moment to appear among the lowew lower trees against which they leaned. So prcupin their wey furthe further from tree to tree they moved on through the frightful cind cloud wreths of dense smoke. All at once violet stopped and said faintly;

"For God's sakes a felingof terror is coming over me and I fear we shall all perish miserably. What a terrible disaster. Oh God be merciful to us Follow me and join in prayer for the poor souls that through their intercession they may save us from ourimminent peril, otherwise our last hour has come.''

107

All obeyed her exhortations and from their inermost hearts prayed aloud ten ''Our Fathers and ten Hail Mary's'' for the sake of the faithful Faithful departed. Then faint and exhausted and half suffocated they dragged themselves along ut until the smoke parted revealing the path which the terrified party had to go, and here ravenle d lsure them was a frightful precipice, and a few moments more and they would all have disappeared into thenbyon. They stood aarivted to the spot being speechless and benumbed at what they saw. Blessing the way ways of Devine p Providence Evans and the little girls continue their was and suddenly come upon some Glandelinians who had rushed tward some frightened all children escaped from a Glandelinian stockade, and though the children had screams screamed piteously and ran as fast as they could the Glandelinians had caught them and after taking off all their clothes had tied them to trees, two of the army coats having got all kinds of rubish that would burnand piled it at their feet. They had also poured gasoline over the rubish and over their bodies rubbing the oil and pouringon more and more. The Glandelinians had just cut their throats and also set the rubish on fire when an Evans and the little girls appeared.

Evans at once s shot the Glandelinians downbut the children were burned to death before the little party could reach them.

The little girls had after this proceeded for half a mile when all of a sudden two armed men stepped out into the road, and when the little girls looked back they saw their way both blocked by others.

''Well.''Said Violet nervously ''What is you want of us?''

''You children are prisoners.''Said one, and the little girls were ordered curtly to dismount. The little girls did so without protest. The men whom the had never seen before and who were entirely different from the Glandelinians or Angelinians secured the little girls wrists by binding their wrists despite their protestthat they would not run away. No one paved any head to what the little girls did say but on e of them leveled a four e fourty four and ordered them to fol ow where hey wanted A few minuts later they each were set against a tree bound hand and foot and left to themselves. The forest was full of noises from the distant battle. There were even sound of human voices on all sides, yet the little girls wereleft desolated. They wondered why. They wriggled a little and rolled nearest to the line of firing they saw in the i distance but they could go no further. The cords hurttheir ankle so the they came to rest and began to consider their position somewhat. Presently a voice reached their ears; it was clearly from some one who was standing by a group of trees and on that another voice. The little girls listened.

''The attack t then is fixed for this very hour general''They heard some one say;''

''Yes .''Said the second curly;''The feint at the eastern lines will be made first but the artillerymanuk will take place on the extreme left of the enemys right and the guns will be trained upon their rear. We should start at the very hour appointed by your commander in chief.''

The little girls made an attempt to sit up for they knew the generals voice a d and the pain in Violet's ankles drew from her an exclamanation;

''Jacob Baldwin.''

The next moment they were faced by six scowling fellows who seized them roughly.

''Pardon sir's, our legs are bound.''Said Violetcivilly, indicating her bond feet and that of her sisters as she staggered. In front of one of the trees were three officers seated on a log. One of them made an undertone remark t to the two others and stared at the little girls in the hands of their captors.

''You know the fare of Angelinian at spies?''He asked in a cool voice, looking at the little girls with a frown.

''Thog your pardon but we have not spied. We are Angelinians who fell into the hands of your men while going on a road and who were for some reason left bound here, and have not been responsible for our actions.''

' Angelians indeed.''Said the man out curtly as general Baldwin of the Glandelinians hearing the voices cameup.''What are your names?''

Baldwin managed to recognize the little girls despite their dig disu disguises and said;

''Those are the vivian girls men. Ha,ha,ho. How it satisfys men now that they are in my power.''

The three officers and the men faced each other and then looked at Violet and her sisters in amax amazement. There was no time to contemplate however for sudde nly there came a surge of men in purple and the Angelinians were surrounded and captured while the little girls were at once liberated. It was indeed a hot sultry day and standing in a beautiful green covered lawn were Violet and her sisters with Evans listening to the far off crashing of the mighty batle. Evans was leaning half supporting himself on a fence post. His black curly hair half concealed his forehead and hishlue eyes flashed as Violet's head affectionately was laid on his breast [illegible] brought the Angelinians to their rescue. Her gaze was fastened lovingly on the excitened features of the young captian before her.

''No,no.''He was saying;''You litle girls must not go as long as the foe are storming the christian lines so furiously at Tataria. General Vivian's left wing had been attacked during the morning already ten times, and I'm afriad I,ll have to go and join in the fight.''

108

''But Evans dear you will be killed;I know that the enemy are at acking in awfully great numbers, and they might kill or capture you in the battle. 'Said Violet with tears in her eyes;''There is danger everyth where to day and if you fall we may never see you again and probably by completely unprotected.''

''Violet dear you don't understand of the arms peril, with the enemy assaulting so furiously and of the perils of the cristian troops piying through the blazing towns all along the line.If you litle girls don't go I won'taithe, but if you do so will I .' As he spoke his eyes kindled with a blazing hatred of the Glandelinians and his very soul soul seemed to yearn for the safty of the children still held prisoners in the factories at Tartaria.

'O ''General Vivian will be bound to win the battle or them at any risk and they will not get their hands on a hair of a single child if he can p prevent it. 'Said Evans;'' All his reserves have been ordered to go forward and help repell the furious onslaughts and cannot stay back m much longer butwill have to set off right away. Don't you know of the danger of the children in the fortifin &tions of Tartaria if the enemy once get [illegible] them.''

''I know .''Said Violet sadly;''But are are other parts of our christian armies who could go at them and seize them away. And Vanson ain't far from Tartaria and he can do it.''

''No indeed. His army has to battle with Rhosmann and he could not thrash Manley at all without behelp from us. Neither can general Vivians force thrash Manley without help from above. You see you are all making a favor which even with all may love for you is impossible for me to grnt grant even if I wanted to. We will all have to go I tell you, and I tell you right now I don'tlose faih in god and I know I might pass through his titanic battle alive.And horrors listen to that terrible roar of cannons. Thatis a sign we are needed.''

''Don't, don't say that please.''Cried the agonized child;''We will always love you even if you are killed in the battle and never cease to pray for you, and please don't cease to seek consolation in prayer and the Holy sca Sacraments. We love you as sister can love an only brother, and we will never be happy again if you are killed.''

A sad look had during this speech spread over Evans face and he said with genteler tones;

''''Go a follow that Devine Call that you and your sisters are [illegible] You are always with your sisters as Pios Pious as Saints and mind you, you never need to expect to see my me lying among the dead. I'm having a feeling now that I will pass through all this horrible strife alive.''

''When will we start.?''Asked Jessie [illegible]

''As ''As soon as the bugle sounds''Answered evans;''I may see and talk to you little girls for the first time when the batle begins.''

Evans left the post and strode tward the distant roaring battle lines followed by Violet and her sisters who were crying bitterly. At this moment there was a damanating crash before them and a shower of dirt sho fell over them and the whole seven fell on their knees and the little girls cried;

''Oh please dear Mother of god don't let the enemy win my more foghts in this horrible battle and let the christians rescue all the poor children from theprisons and child labor committeesand have be battle to shorten. And oh Please Dear Mother of God save out freind Evans and do not let him fall.Amen.''

''Why Violet you dear little Pansy where have you and your sit sisters been ?''Cried John Evans coming up at this moment with a great forceof cavarly men;''We hav have been looking for you everywhere. General Vivian wanted you.''

The little girls told John Evans allin tons that would have touched the most hardest hears hearts. The little girl held their crucifixes tight ly clasped in the palm of t their purepetite hands pressing the crufixes to their lips and utered their sacred names. All this while Jacks face wore a disturbed expression and kissing him tenderly violet said;

''Well Jack dear we must say good bye, since yo are going to leave. We will have to bid you farewell here.''

For a moment he answered her not a word but stared at her sadly and then said;

''Wait a minute and I,ll come back.''

'' In a m few minutes he returnedwith something in his hands.

''These.''He ;''Said in form of [illegible] We [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

Violet and her sisters then stood still' their hands being thrown back and their eyes fixed, tenderly , lovingly on their pillow ori crucifixes which they held securely in their grasp. Their modest Sui[illegible] were very pale from their great sorrow at Evans departure.

Violet sighed.

''Are there any loved ones left to us. Is this cruel war taking even their last joy and happiness away from them?''

Their eyes clo closed and their thoughts went back back to the sad incident just written. They wre suddenly aroused from their reverie by a light stepand starting up they saw the spirit like form of little Eva. Violet fell back exhausted against a charred tree.

''Well how has my friends been to day?''Said Eva in a cheerful tone of voice.

''Oh Eva Darling you are so cheerful and happy. You always bring sunshine among us. We are never happy and we have been thinking of Evans so much , lately since he left us that we had thought we had seen him as in a vision though just fit fifteen minutes ago he was [illegible] firing line; probably t o his death, and that he was calling to us from among the fallen.''

Jennie was thinking to herself as Violet was answering E vans question;

''Where was Evans and what was he doing now. Was he already killed or captured, and would she a never see him again. Perhaps he was far away now with God himself in hea en and with and that there was no one who was around to love them but ther their father Uncle and the hardy soldiers now.

''M ''Now dear Violet you seem to be more sadder than Ihave ever seen you befo before.''Said Eva;''I wish you and your sisters would not woo worry so much about Evans, or he may be safe. Pray for him violet and your sisters and God's grace wil l do the rest. We can no more can do no more than recommend our dear ones to his loving care. And as he was your best guardian god will surely protect him.And already H General vivians left is advancing successfully, and now theenemy are doing their best to ston his advancing wing b t of no avail having been driven back time and again with hor ible loss.''

''That startles me.''Said Joice;''When did it ha pen?''

''Just fifteen minutes ago. It in the fiercest fi ht I have ever heard ofthe Glandelinian assail[illegible] and routed and the whole christian army is soon going to march against Maulova main line and t then the battle will be won.''

VIOLET AND HER SISTERS FIGHT A SAVAGE HORD OF GLANDELINIANS UNDER GENERAL BRAGGARD..... E

''That startle me still more.''Answered Violet, while her sisters looked more sad;''Oh long will this cruel war last!Will it never come to an end.?''

''It will have to some day.''Answered eva briefly.

Violets face expressed disappointment.

''Why violet whatis the matter''Asked Eva;''You are looking all the sadder.''

''Oh ing va was only hoping, only wishing and ------praying, that-----that------ ----''She could go no farther. The sentence ended with a sob. Eva laid her hand soothingly on violet's head.

Ik ''I know whatyou were wishing but never mind .''She said;''For Gods way are wonderful.Justthink when general Vivian wins this battle we will have Tartaria in our possession.''

''It would be the happiest day if Eva did not go away.''Said Angeline.

''I hope and pray that it may be the happiest day---------even if he is going, and dear little Vivian girls don'tforget to prayto night especially for She grace toperseverein love and ser service of God.''

''Yes Eva we won't forget.''Answered Violeternestly.

''But dearn s.''Continued Eva;''I have something to say to you, something that may shock you all, but I hope that you will pray that my fears are unfounded . Do you understand my dear friends?''

''Yes Eva we do.''

Poor Eva sighed. The hatred that she was obliged to unload her burden partly on the shoulders of he six dearest friends repelled her, but she reflected that it was bet er for them to her the real truth from her own lips, than perhaps later hear it related to them l y the cruel tauning words of others. With an affectionate smile she lade Violet and her sisters to come closer. They knelt at Eva knees just as they had so often done when they learned to say their pa prayers attheir mothers knee.

''Friends.''She said abrupt ly; ''Have you often wondered what became of your brother Germainia Vivian?''

''Yes eva we have not forgoten him. Please tell us evert everything. We will try and stand it.''

''ll right Said eva b''But you look so paleand worried that I,m almost afraid to tell.''

Eva smiled. It was a sad smile filled with love for her pretty girl firnd friends.

''Do you know my dear dear friends that your brother is with[illegible]nnleva divisions under federal, and fighting not only against the christians but against God as well!''

''Why Eva we have not heard of im so long that we thought he had been killed in one of the battles''

''No denying he had not. I myself knew the Glandelinian brin [illegible]rgard himself for two years and at t at time though he was a Glandelinian by birth he had ben the best of men and the truest of Catholics untill his enmity towards the Angelinian Pope because he fail d recieved a Favor from him through the mans of God. Since then he had never entered the Mass meetings and two days before the outbreak of the war he had cru cursed God. At first I did not know why he excused himself from Mass and wereook god. When he had met me a and told me fiercely that he had cursed God I nearly fainted. When I aked him whyhe had done that wicked thing he only wheeled his horseand dashed of off giving me for answer a mocking lo laugh and saying with a black look;

''Eva kep away from the Glandelinian front for I advise you if us Glandelinians lay hands on you you will suffer for your rashness.''

Since then aneand during theoutbreak of the war he had disappeared , and just about two days ago I happened to meetyour brother and Braggard together leading large armies of free Masons and those kind of Glandelinians, called Curdos, Kurds, Armians-curdos, Simmermanniane and Mc-Hollestinians which I know to be the fiercest Glandelinian fighters in the Glandelinian army. I realized then that he was a Glandelinian an officer and commanded a division of Glandelinians who only early this morning had made great charges against General Vivians center.''

Eva paused to wipe away the tears that were one by one flowing down he cheeks then she continued;

''A note was found by one of the Angelinians after the central lines of your fathers army had finally rolled back the enemys lines which he said read:

Thathe was glad that a number of children, had been slain at Calverine, and he was glad that the guards p t put your poor sister Jennie in that fire after having t that powerful medicine put on her body, that he wished that he himself had taken you little girls to the slaughter pns at Calverine, and Adrean and wished thathe had ben theones to have caused theother children to be butchered and cut to pieces. Your brother wrote this not Braggard of course.''

The memoryof this overcame Violet and her sisters and they buried their faces inther hands and wept bitterly. Eva almost as sad as they, tried tocolmole them . The little girls sat silent for see several minutes with their faces buried in their hands while they pravedfervently for their sta straying brother.

''Violet. 'Said Eva wiping the tears from her own eyes;''Ain't you going to get your boy scout commanies ready to held help in the batle going on.?''

''No''Said Violet;''I'm not t going to run these lads into useless danger for anything. We will remain where we are. The battle line is too full of terrific exol explosions and no one can tell what happens.Itis more quite and peace ful here, and it always mas make me feel better where it is more quiet.''''''

All of a sudden there was the sound of heavy firing of nearly a hundred thousand muskets which rolled like continous thunder and this was so near that they were startled.

''Gracious what's that?''Gasped violet;''What is all that firing so near?''

The only answer was a red reels of terrific flashes far ahead of them followed by a hundred crashing corsplitting explosions at once, and again and again frch crashes of hundreds of thousands of muskets his time added to the din, terminiting into cylls and shouts, the sound of bayonet duels and sabre fights, the galloping ofthousands of horse, the roaring of dashing artillery and suddenly a big force of Angelinians hoved into view retreating in great confusion, and also a large body of graycoats were swarming toard them from an opposite didirection.

''Quick for the nearest point of the woods.''Gasped Violet;''

Q''Quciok before those Glandelinian see us. '

''Oh those hateful free masons.''Muttered Eva.''

The little girls crawled between some high shrubbery and then retreated tward a half ruined wooden house entering and barring all the doors. Again and again came the tremendous outburstof bi-volleys and scattering shots. Violet and her sistes could see the approaching Glandelinians through tr the window and feared that they were some of money Satens men. So they were.

As the e enemy drew nearer, Violet and her sisters unstrung their ammunition belts and loaded t eir pistols .....Eva told Violt that she knew how to shoot so Jennie handed one of the guns to her. Violet looking through the place quickly fou found ammunition en ough for them t to hold out for a week but still they did not wish to waste the cartridges. The firing sounded more heavilyon the outside Eva staring at the a approaching Glandelinians with wide open eyes.... Theywere sett setting long lines of shrubbery on fire.

''We must see that every one of our shots hits the mark.''Whispered Violet;

''Put we must be careful and only wounded the Glandelinians as we must do no un necessary killing.''

Violet then aimed her pistol at the nearest Glandelinian and fired the first shot and that graycoat dropped with a wild cry.

Her sisters soon began firing as the Glandelinians made a rush and a man went down at every shot. The Captain Glandelinian leader was amazed at such a stubborn resistance and oh wondered who were in the house and how many.Being that the little girls were having trouble in reloending their weapons Eva said;

"Let me lond your gund guns for you so you can keep on firing without ston ing."

"We do."Answered Violet and Eva loaded th them as rapidly as they were being emptied. The firing between the Glandelinian soldiers and the Angelinians to the righ right had increased tremendously but the little girls did not py pay any hed.

Eva discharged her pistol between times, and /loading Violet and her sisters also , firing as fast as they were reloaded and with good aim too the ground being strewn with wounded gravecats.

"Oh there is an awful lot of those awful Glandelinians."Sighed Eva as she was reloending an empty pistol!""Yes it but you little girls can shoot some though."

Eva soon dinocvered that there were more of the Glandelinians than she had thought yet the little girls knew that she coul they could hold out for a long tde. They kept up a rapid fire upon the enemy who returned it incessantly many bullets passing close to the little girls who had many a nearrow escape from being hit.

"Eva."Jennie called while hammering away withher pe pistol;"Olivne you lots of ammunition handy. We may need it in this great resistance."

"Plenty."Answered Eva;"Enough for us to hold outagainst them a week."

The followingmoment a bulletwhizzed through the room cracking a jam pot and shattered it to pieces while another struck a crufic cruf crucifix but not d doijng any more damage to it than knocking it down from the wal".

Violet picked itup and put itinto her waistpocket . The enemy were yell ing fiercely outside in a threatening manner while a score were coming forward with a battering ram to batter in the door. Eva and two of Violets sisters sprang to the nearest window and gave them a rattling volley. / h h half a score of the Glandelinians fell sprawling on the ground while the other fuch curadingand so swearing came on all the faster bound to reach the door even at the risk of annihilation. Their leader who was Braggard was in a rage for he had seen the children w firing through the window and he realized who they were and ordered half of his men to make a fierce assault. Samulal Wan Nance having repuoled the other assailants saw thic occurance and said;

"There is something going onmen and we must see what it is."

"All right."Petr returned his brother;"Lead the way and we will follow.

They would still hear the sound of the heaviest firing a short distance away.

"Forward boys."Cried Fred, and a they all hurried on through the woods and suddenly came in sight of a low but beautiful mansion a fence standing o in front of it and sndy trees at one side. There were one thousand glandelinians before the house all firing at one one time three hundred advancing toard the house in a body with the evi dent intention of forcing their way in and plundering the place. Examining the scene with his field gnlasses Fred Nance /looking through a side window caught sight of a child leading a pistol. As the Glandelinians advance Fred saw the child leave the window and lost sight of her.

"I CAN'T BE BY POSSIBLE THAT OUR LITTLE BAND IS FIGHTING THREE THOUSAND GLANDELINIAN AT BAY!"He gasped.

The Glandelinians thought to get the best of the children but they sudde lnly met with a reception t that they had not expected. Coming again to the window a gun inmash hand Violet began firing rapidly bringing down one after another of the enemy while her sisters and Eva appeared at other wino windows and hastened away opening withering fire upon the enemy. Several of the Glandelinians as Fred Noi noticed had cannon with them and these they now trained upon the house, while another three hundred swept forward to charge upon the house Violet posted herself at one of the windows again, and as the Glandelinians came uching up fired her pistols a untill they were emptied and many of the Glandelinians pitched headlong and lay still where they had fallen being seriously wounded. Two of the cannon were fired and the shells crashed through the room and out of another window exploding with ter terrible vi violence.

Unerved Violet stretched four other Glandelinians out on the ground while another score was coming on carrying a heavy log withwhich they meant to beat down the door butViolet and her sisters fired upon them mowing down all carrying the log, the log crushing down upon some of the other Glandelinians and holding them fast.

Then the the little girls again fired a rattling pistol volley and laid many a Glandelinian wi who got within range low. The little girls i discharged their pistols in rapid order but fully five hundred Glandelinians now came dashing into the clearing many carrying blazing brands, but at one the brave girl defenders poured in a terrific volley and more than three score of the Glandelinian Glandelinians fell in the that mad charge toard the besieged house. All the defenders emptied their pistols Violetbringing down a fierce looking Glandelinian officer toppling him into a mass of hot burning bush and causing him to yell and then after staggering to his feet turn and with his clothes all aci afire run for a near by creek where he plunged in.

Time Then there came the rattling of musketry and the whiz ing of bullets through the windows. Then there were thunderous re morts from the pistols of the little girls and several of the Glandelinians sank in a lip limp mass right in the their tracks Another officer plunged forward and broke his neck by dashing his head against a rock Violet herself then d shot down two more of the Glandeli inns, and another Glandelinian officer fell back shot through the soldier Treds men were advancing as fast as they could but the house seemed t so for that he feared he would never get there in time. At this moment a large company of Glande linians rushed forward, as a shell crashed through the door splintering it. In bounded the Glandelinians Braggard in the lead looking like a handsome pirate with his black mustache. Despite his handsome looks he had a fierce expression in his eyes and over his face and had a long back black beard and long curly hair. In his hands he held a drawn swod sword and pistol being also armed with two fourty fours. He stared amazed at Violet and her sisters and Eva who were standing at the top of the steps to which they had retreated with pointed guns in formidable formidable array themselves and as he put up his sabre and stood with folded arms he gave them a fierce look.

The little girls could at once see that the the general was the one who had caused them all the sorrow sorrow after the great battle of Fredernine and gave a startled cry. The men were going to spring for the little girls but Violet cried;

"Back boys, back I don't want to have a hand in any revengeful of airs against your leader Braggard, despite all the harm he had caused me and of other troubles since Fredernine, but if you make one move toward me I'll kill him like a dog just where he stands "And she covered him with both her brace of pistols.

At this there was a quiet hush in the whole place and so quiet it was that the nearest roar of musketry could be heard to be mingled with the steady booming of cannon which continued for several minutes. Braggard anyhow had gained a position unatwinkling by the door. He after a score of men n entered threw himself upon the door sending it shut with a crush then wheeling glared upon them with suspix suspicion and amazement.

"So violet and your sisters, what are you doing here anyway""he hissed with a bloody look;""And the little girls noticed that he held in his hands now large plain glass bulbs filled with "itroglycerin.

"Talking about shooting me."He hissed;"I'll say this if you attempt attempt to stir from here or come toward me, or deter my men who are to go for you I've got enough Hot Nitroglycerine to blow this house high into the sky. Right in my hands I have enough."

He held up both bulbs as if ready to throw them while he said again;

"You will never escape me except to go up into the sky. Many of us officers have passed orders to the all the christian children to tree and blown them to pieces. Now are you satisfied you little rascals""he demanded making a gesture as though to throw one of the bombs to the floor. He had expected the little girls brave as he knew they were to fall back in indescribable terror, and he was smiling with cunning attention still ready to throw the glass bulbs that he held in his hands while he continued;

"I reckon you little girls know me. When I burst into this house you so strongly defended I had at first not the heart to take you and banish you to suffering again as I had gratitu gratidue when you forgave me once when I was a prisoner in your lines. But now as my men had attempted even without my orders to go for you you have become treacherous by threatening to shoot me before I could explain and now as if I have fully eight hundred thousand victorious Glandelinians in this vinicity your escape or rescue is uttely impossible and another thing-----"

Before he could finish the drums beat the call to arms, sudden storming discharges of musketry was heard and the forme t men came hurrying up.

"The christian have rallied under Jennie and are coming forward."Was the cry.

Braggard at once dashed to the front entrance.

"To your posts men."He cried;"The Angelinians are upon us."

Then one of his aiding generals came running up.

"What is it general Calliga?"Asked Braggard drawing his sabre

The Angelinians are approaching in great numbers general. They outnumber us vastly."

"We will hold our ground. Post a hundred marksman in the house.

Calligas rushed to do the command while another one of the Glandelinian officers came running up.

"Generals Nance, Evans and Jennin nand a force of Greathearts men are breaking our lines all to pieces.""He cried;"Our battle lines have broken out like an inferno."

"Head your posts every one of you."Commanded Braggard waving his sabre;"This place commands the road and the river. We will do our best."

The Glandelinians pra prepared to defend the place with their lives if need be while far in the distance could be heard a frightful rolling of musktry and crash of hundreds of terrific explosions.

Ammunition was distributed in pen plentiful quantities, pistols were stuck in belts and muskets were pointed, and and sabres buke buckled on. Every Clandelinian was ready to give the Angelinians a rousing reception, Brag ard and five hundred men taking their pin position in the house

The christi ns came ly the road and along the creek Be sharpshooters in inside the house and in front picking off hundreds after hundreds of the christ ians as they advanced. General Mance his eyes blazing entered a stream and began slowly fording it. A volley well aimed was fired at him and then another but he seemed to bear a charmed life as not a shot struck him. The n a division of Bobs cavarly came dashing upand the Clandelinians all along the lain main line of battle met them them bravely with the bayonet driving them back. More cannon started thunder muskets rattled and boomed by t housands and pistols were cracking. The Angelinians were now charging again hoping to rescue t the children and secure the envied position secured by the Clandelinians.

"Pen fire." Screamed Brag ard; "Hold your ground own with the Christian dogs."

The Angelinians now pressed forward in solid lines and fiercely the battle raged for twenty to hirty minutes along this point the Clandelinians keping up a steady fire n and defending their pos position like Spartian heroes. Mance hurled a great number of his best troops at the gallant Clandelinians and the carnage became dreadful. On came the Angelinians under such a terrific fire that terrible havoc was dealh among their lines. Violet and her sisters looking out of the windows of a closet they were were hiding in looked at the scene of carnare withamazement sorrow and dread. Sabres clashed by thousandsm muskets were roaring, pistols cracking point blank and man many on both sides used their bayonets with ter ible cue cruelty.

The Angelinians charged in a large body and muskets were rattling and pistols cracking all along the line. The Angelinians came forward with great determination, but the Angelinians found that their progress would not be as rapid as they would like itto be and they were greatly enraged. They were now obliged to fall back despite the fury with which they had fought and the gallet gallant Clandelinians drove them back still farther pouring a withering fire upon the confused masses.

Angered by beyond doubt the christ ian quickly rallied and turned upon the plucky Clandelinians confident of scat ering the enemies of God and perhaps capture their leader and rescue the children Theycame on with a rush Bob hurling his forces upon the grayccats from the wi woods and a tumult of bayonets and clubbed muskets pikes and sabres ensued

In the meanime Violet and her sisters were thinking of their experiencewhen they had not long ago sen several children taken before this very general Bragard. They remembered when all was astir there when this same wicked and cruel Clande linian general questioned these poor children about their religion and remembered when they had said nothing one of the Clandelinian soldiers struck them a heavy blow on the face nd commanding them to speak and when Bragyard flushed withanger ore ordered them to speak and they still remained silent tat a disgraceful scene ensued. They remm remembered when the Clandelinians who held them mocked and struck them without mercyspitting on their faceem, buffetting them, blindfoldin blindfolding themand smiting their face while Bragyard laughed. They had also remembered about the newsof their capture which had spread throughout the army and of every Clandelinian talking of it. Bragyard had declared that they were dangerous children who if not killed must beimprisoned all their lives in the island prisons as they would bring ruin and defeat on the nation.

The little girls remembered that when Brag ard asked these litle children, or at la leastasked his men why they accused the children they had answered;

"If they were not those accursed christian dogs and enemies of Baten and you we would not have delivered them up to the m. Their father and brothers who are in the christian armies had spied on us many times and we caught these little girls to revenge it."

Violet and her sisters then also remembered when they themselves had been slaves at Salverinia of their refusal d to do the wishes of the highest judges and also of cussing their lasterto or sprawl over a table and go a sitt ing in a dispan of hot water.

Violet and her sisters also remembered when they themselves were almost on the wayto the island prisons which to which they had been sentenced by Governer Federal for life. They remembered when the sentence was recieved throuh t hroughout the city of Salverine with a howl of tru triumph. They remembered the large per procession of Clandelinians that formed and which set out in haste first the Clandelinian captians on horseback to preside at the punishment and slavery and to maintin order in the ever increasing crowd of Salverinians, who threatened the Clandelinians, nextthree heralds proclaiming the crimes of the condemned which they had com ited against Clandelinia Then a score of other child prisoners to be crucified and burned alive. Last of all as they remembered they themselves came weak and tottering, soldiers who were to take them to the place of horrors being on either side of them. They remembered the laughing and sh shouting crowds of soldiers behind in front all around, an immense multitude of them heeting and jeeringthise nearest threatening the prisoners with their sabres or guns.

They remembered the spectacle in the Clandelinian army with the masses of men checking up every lane pouring along the arches of branches. Climbing and de scending hills in endless procession. Tant tall trees they remembered were filled with eager sightseers, captians and general generals hurrying about amongthe soldiers in a fear of anxiety lest anything should happen to enable their prisoers to get away and escape their punishment. They r remembered that the way to the horrible place was long and painful, not up hill n ow down, and the sad faces of the little girls during t that journey which would have moved hearts of stone but the hearts were of the Clandelinians were more harder th n than stone that day and there was no more pity for them than there was for a ratend the litt le girls had filled the air with their lamentations. The little girls remembered that it took more than twelve hours to reach the dock leding to the place of horrors a place of indescribable suffering, a palce of terrors.

The little girls remembered their indescribable terrores at the sight of the vision of the island prisons where the torture and sorrow and cruelty was worse than any one could even think. They remembered when the rage of the Clandelinians had become more and more ungovernable, thirsting like wolves for their blood, and they re membered that when they were brought to the cheif guard he had ordered them to be scourged which as the litt le girls knew which was a punishment so ore cruel and really degrading that it was reserved only for slaves. Any a po or victim had often died under itand in itself it was far worse than death. The little girls rem embered while trembleing with indescribable fear they were stripped naked and fastened by their wrist and feet to high pillars, while six Clandelinians stood on the step to deal their cruel blows more surely, and without fli flic flinching one bit struck them unmercifully with their horrible iron niked lashes which had tore their very flesh to the bones. Oh the horrors of it and no friendly face an anywhere at that time. The they remembered when th they sank gasping to the ground that thy they had been dragged off and cast into a stinking dungeon, and their faces which had been so beautiful had been quite disfigured disfigured, swollen bruised and besmeared with torrents of blood, their limbs a true trembling so that they could scarcely stand sinking to thefloor and crying more pitcously than they had ever done before. They remembered that night when a force of rebellious Salverinians broke into the prison and rescued them in the face of the Clandelinian officers. The little girls sud shuddered when they thought of these things.

"Suddenly Violetfelt something run across her shoe, some thing that thrilled her to the marrow. Ben another and another something rached across Sandies feet feet and she drew back against the wall. The celler was filled with large re rodents. Violet and her sisters were hardly ever scared of rats or mice as were many girls but they had a right to fear these kind s for they were danger ous and ravenious for human flesh. The little girls uttered a scream as thy kicked half a dozen from them, but the rats came running back, and the children fot them running up their clothes, squa squaling all the time in theu their fury. The lit le girls swarmed with the terrible animals and the darkness of t he celler in which they had been hiding prevented the children from seeing their fiery eyes, but they could feel them as they dashd against them, biting in their rage, and tearing at their dresses inthair wild eagerness to get attheir flesh. There seemed to be thousan thousands of them and the celler was indeed alive with rats as ibig as house cats "ithas much energy as they could muster they now tried to beat off the wild legions.....

"Oh God help is us." Gasped Violet; "We will be eaten alivend we can't beat t t e them off....."

The rats came from all over the place and the chil ren began kicking with their feet, and were soon tearing the savage rats from their clothing. Violet who had some matches unentitionally / lit one and she and her sisters shuddered at the sight revealed by the light. The whole floor of the cecler seemed a mass of fierce rodents , but also they saw a narrow passage leading from the cell.

"Come." Cried Violet as she kicked a lot of ro ratsfrk from in front of her; "We u must make a dash for the passage. God only knows where it leads, but let us hope it is to safty."

The children dared darted away and rushed through thenarrow passage persued by a swarm of squealing rats. It was all dark inside and they were liable to run up against a beamon a post, butthis thought did not stop them. On they went untill they stumbled aga nst a ladder in the dense darkness and the next moments with rats still clinging to their clothes, they climbed upward as fast as they could. They had not spoken during the flight from the rat haven but when they escaped to the upper parts they saw sixteen Clandelinian officers standing around and talking inlow undertones. The chief officer was a hans handsome man dressed in a velvet gray uniform with blue and green trimmings and a large hat with a large plume, which beheld in his hand. His hair all curly was golden brown in color. He wore an elegant sabre and a brace of gold mounted pai pistols while his trouser was of a cream yel ow co color and covered with pictures of skull and bones.

He stared in amazement when he saw the little girls then folded his arms and looked all the importance he could assume.

He glanced at the little girls as they halted in the room and for a moment curled the waxed ends of his furious mustachioes. Then he wheeled giving a command to the soldiers by a signal to leave the room and they left.

"Who are you little girls anyway, and how did you get in here, from the lower cellar and why" He said turning to the children.

"We did not wish to be eaten by the rats." Answered Violet her hand on her pistol butt.

"Rats be hanged. You are afraid of rats are you "Blurted out the astonished Olandelinian; "And I thought the Vivian girls were brave "

"Angeline stepping forward and looking the Olandelinian general in the face said seriously;

"Don't you dare to call us cowards, as we are no cowards, and could use you as a tag target any moment. And besides those rodents were dangerous."

The Olandelinian looked at the child with flashing eyes.

"Damanation for you." He roared; "Silence If you tak talk to me any more like that "I'll have you tied up and cut to pieces. Why do you be foolish Christian dogs and what is general vivians intentions during the battle he winning on us now which we have been fighting so hard to win ourselves"

"It is not any of your buisness what his intention are." Said Angeline and any way in reality we do not know. How dare you to question you. You fool of a Olandelinian who left your pistols on the table beyond o your reach are really in my power and a prisoner. And yet you question us like as if we were prisoners "

The wicked Olandelinians one eye seemed to start at this answer and for half a minute he gazed speechlessly at the children who did not even wink and covered him with their guns.

"You have mutinied against us poor enslaved Olandelinians " He cried; "I have captured children before But you at are the boldest ones I have ever seen. I your prisoner why----"

"Call your men and you die." Said Angeline.

"I did not say that I was going to call the men you gutter snipes. How many friends have you got behind you that you do this. to me and yet take me by surprise?"

"I won't tell you." Answered Angeline.

"I asked you a question and by the name of Satan you will an either answer me or die roared the Olandelinian in a rage trying to reach over for his pistols.

"I'll even have you sent back to that den o of rats bound hand and foot if you do not answer and let me go free you little gutter snipe. I won't have such sto stubborn children make a prisoner of me or be in my way. You will either answer that question now or go back down in that cellar of rats."

"You shal not." Cried violet as she to stood firm firmly before the Olandelinian; "You shall not hurt me and my sisters and for your on own safty move a couple of steps farther from that table or I'll blow your brains out. God is our protector and can save us if he wishes to and it ain't no sin to kill such Satanic dogs as you Olandelinians."

"I'll submit." Thundred the Olandelinian officer with a fierce frown; "But I don't wish y to hear Gods name mentioned again please if you will."

"I would rather obey God than you any day." Said Violet without any fear."

The Olandelinian flew into a rage at this answer and again the fool trying to cow them threatened to throw them into the haven of rats if they mentioned God again to refused to let him go "

"If you please sir " Answered our little girl heroine; "You can throw us into the den of rats if you like but you will have to disarm us first though."

"What , do you dare me." Cried the Olandelinian; "I'll do it you gutter snipe if I ever lay hands on my own weapons and it will be a sorry day for you."

"Jennie go and get those grace of pistols on the tabel tabe l tableand Joice go and see if he has any other weapon and if he has take it If he makes a m ve I'll drop him where he stands "

The l two little girls obeyed Joice finding on the man two small automatics in his pickets taking beside his dagger and sabre from him

"These actions of your tells me that you little rebels are the daughters of the great general vivian." Said the Olandelinian with a scowl; " I know it too for you have their beauty And I suppose you are the neices of his brother Hansen Vivian"

"We more of your foolish w questens and follow us." Said "violet; "And it none of your buisnes who we are either or who our uncle or parents are. Come and be quick , and let Joice ti ty tie oyour hands behind your back."

The face of the Olandelinian assumed a deep crimson.

"Stab me but this is luck." Chirped Catherine as she held helped "i Joice to the Olandelinians arms behind him."

"I know you are the Vivin girls for your boldness shows it." Said the Olandelinian soberly.; "So you are general vividas shep? And you made a good capture indeed for I'm general Atanic." Then the Olandelinian o utterned some fierce words to himself the rascal working himself into an ungovernable angor and he now demaned

Violet and her sisters fiercely to allow him his freedon freedom but they refused.

"You had us a prison once your self and showed us no mercy whatever." Said Violet severely; "You had even turned on us throwing out your handscuely gauntleted hand demanding how we would like to be strangled to death and have our bodies mangled or sliced up. That is a job you Olandelinians have ben trying to do to us since we were prisoners among you way before the war and you showed us no mercy and you were the one who had us trambled on our p way to the island prisons and it was you who scourged us when we were tie tied up there helpless untill we sank almost dying to the ground. And suddenly there had come into your room where you had us a little figure that had at first startled us. It had be n but a gone little girl three years old my name of Zoo Ba Bee Hennington, and half naked and you the re rascal had wheeled upon her with a curse, and shot out your hand to capture her.

The child with a piercing scream had retreated to the opposite wa ll, you darting swiftly af at the frightened child and though the child nimbly avoided you, and caught you around the legs in indescribable terror and begging you to have her alone you only struck her in the back with your sabre cutting a gap in the childs back and as the the child uncoiled herself and feel fell to the floor bleeding you only clutched the child orutcurally by the throat and squeezed so hard that when the child was dead her eyes se still protrdu protruded and her tongue stuck out.

And now you ask u s for mercy. Forgiving as we generally o are it is our dur duy nevertheless to take you prisoner and prisoner you will be if we have to tie bind you hand and foot and throw you out of the window to do so."

"So you will not let me go h eht" He hissed his face suddenly darkened under a cloud of passion. "If I was loose now I would kill you."

The general whose name was Dragon ordered the little girls again and again to allow him to go but they only ordered him to follow them to the rear said.

The Olandelinian fumed but there was no way out of it and he followed after them with the tramp of some huge elephant.

"It is more advisable if you will walk with more quietude if you know what is good for you." Said Catherine; "We are afraid of noise with so many of your comrades around and one of our gunsmay go off accidently."

"Are you lit le girls going to shoot me down in cold blood.!" He demanded.

"No your excellency. We shoot no man down wither he be an enemy o f God or not. We have stood our ground against you many a time when in your power when you tried to force us to work on a sunday and did not allow you to browbeat us."

This was in keping with the spirit of the man monster as Violet and her sisters had justly and rightly galled him and the children did not intend to let him go under any conditions. The Olandelinian as he followed them every now and then tried to work his arms free but something in the eyes of Violet made him hesitate.

"What he cried. Don't you intend to allow e me my freedom' When I plead te you?"

"NO O"

"Ha he cried stamping his foot; "You may laughatme now but if lever escape again I'll make it hot for you neve fear."

"You certainly made a great mistake in ordering your men out of the men.room room when we appeared." Said Violet; "If you had not done so you would have had us prisoners instead. It was your faultthatwe got you."

"Damanation but that is true." He yelled; "I would kill you if I was free."

He turned fiercely upon the little girls and found they were laughing.

"Ten thousand furies ." He roared; "What do you think I am a clown'I'll report this occurance to vanley if I ever get free once more."

"Which you never will e." Said Violet.

"And besides we do not care if you did tell him." Added Jennie hotly and fiercely; "I know what I think you are to o. You are a fool for you acted like one by ordering your men to go out at our appearance."

The Olandelinian generals looked at them again with fiery eyesand turned his face away. Violet and her sisters heard him gr w growling to himself as he walked all the way down the hall withthem. Violet and her sisters were not at all afrid of this f r furious Olandelinian general and indeed it was a nervy part on t heir side to have dared to make him prisoner. Dragon himself seemed to have had enough for he continuedwith them even to the outside of the bul building without anymo more words and Jennie said to violet as she smiled;

"Violet we cooled that mandown a little. I heard himboast to an officer during the fighting for the possession of this house which of course the foe had gon th that he would giveus an unpleasant time if he ever got his hands on us andhe is now our prisoner instead."

"We don't intend to let any Olandelinian browbeat us Jennie. "Said Violet

"We hate the character of the Free Masonics and we would like;-----"

Violet was interrupted by a scream from that part of the woods where the Agelinians last had been seen and in a moment a frightened little girl came running t- ward Violet and her sisters. Two Olandelinian soldiers had wanted to play his helpless little girl, and the child had screamed pitcously at t otheir at their approach, and as the child came running down the long lane she tripped on the roots of a tree and went sprawling on the ground. The Glandelinians put their hands to their bipeanal laughed till the tears ran down their faces, and soon the entirewoods seem to ring with laughter. W Vi-let flushed for the poor litt le girl was stunned. Joiceasprang forward and was on the actof lifting the little girl up when one of the Glandelinians roared out in a loud voice;

"Let the little simpleton lie where she is you snipe or I'll do the same to you."

Joices answer was to fired suddenly at them bringing both the Glandelinians down and then lifted the li ttle girl up and while she done this she got a furious look from her prisoner Dragon who did not give vent to his rage as he was helpless. "Catch the little girls and those others with her and free the prisoner." Cried some more of the Glandelinians mo ing their sudden appearance."

The other Glandelinians ran forward and the lit le girls fled at their approach bounding across a patch of grass with a wild scream but she tripped on another branch and sprawled as before.

"This is the height of meanese." Said Angeline; "Men who would subject helpless children to punishment like that is worse than devils."

"What is that." Said one of the Glandelinians coming up close to her."

"You heard me." Said the bold child facing the Glandelinian soldier with clenched fists." I spoke loud enough and if you threaten to do something my sisters will fire."

The Glandelinian glared at Angeline with all the rage he could assume;

"If you little gutt ersnipes did not have us at a disadvantage with your old pistols I would cut t you all to pieces." He shouted.

"You will never get the chance." Said Joice as she glanced at two of her sisters as a signal to approach and bind the Glandelinians hands behind their backs before they could do anything; "It will be a sorry day to your cause if you ever do even try to cut us up."

"Never mind we may have our chance someday." Grinned the officer like a fin fiend;" And then if you and your sisters are get in my power I'll make you talk the toe the chalk line."

ou are doomed to die anyway or your treatement of the child and for your abusive language to us." Said Joice hotly; "A nother force of the Anglinians are coming now and youwill have t o go with them as well as your general I have here/ And here they come now."

It was true for up came a christian force led by four officers, some of the privates forming a line and advancing toard the captive Glandelinians and the march d soon resumedand though the Glandelinians inwardly hoped thatsomething might happen to save them their hopes were unfounded and soon they found themselves far in the rear of the victorious christian lines.

During the last of the furious batle Violet and her sisters had seen as terrifying a sight as ever met their eyes, or ever met the eyes of man. It was more awe inspiring than a great volcanic eruption. Portions of the assaulting columns of Glandelinians appeared greatly agtied, shells seeming to fall from all directions upon them. Several portions of the Glandelinian columns melted away, their lines appeared suddenly full of fire and smoke and the roaring of the storm of exp loding shells and bursting highexplosives could be heard for fifty miles. The main portion of this Glandelinian columns had the shape of two gre t gray wings, these coming on with appalling fury. The main Glandelinian column ever came rushing forward with scathing violence, and the terrified little girls watched all the christian centemeter guns as they blazed a storm of horrid trails through the gray columns thousands of Glandelinians were lifted up by terrific explosions whirled heels over head and compel compell to complete a cartwheel turn before they were dashed stunned and bleeding and mangled to the ground. But speeding onward the terrible Glandelinian columns struck a part of of general Vivians right wing , and the outer sections of this christian line was torn to fragments by thefury of the imapc impact, and the outer wall of his headquarters and the roof was blown away by a high explosive shell. Light pictures however were left hanging on the wal ls thelamps were left on the tablesand the lace shades were not disarranged. The explosive blo blew a scores of beds and mattresses from the house an d his was dropped among Hansons lines t twelve miles away, the explosion having such great force. Not even hay was spared for in a hundred livery stables among the christian lines used for t e horses of their officers every thn tnin everything was blown up, and many heavy gun car inges in the same stables were blown to bits. In general Greathearts headquarters which was torn to pieces by two great shells and where he and four other generals James Can on, Zor Zcerinnianienianiania, Clyde Quimbie and Blackington were killed.

In this place which had been leved into sagging ruins black mud covered the tottering walls, even of the walls of the outhouses near by althoughno such mud could be found anywhere in the neighborhood. At general Buckwick Baldwins headquarters a shell explosion tore off the front wall of the house and setting the building on fire. It also carried away every sign single tre surrounding the building from the force of the blast, and two of Baldwins officers generals at that by the names of Braggard and Maurice Castellion were severely wounded, and with Lovell Buster Johnston severely maimed. The assault was so fierce that Hansons lines had to come to general Vivians rescue with all his forces, and during the hig ht height of the onslaught the storm of explosions was terrific and Hanson had been caught directly in the path of the human avalanches surging back and forth with flaming and smoking lines. e escaped uninjured though a he appeared within the main line an hour afterwards atired in a chicken coop. The batle had aged also near a large gh ghookne house and a shell landing sq squarely on the building had exploded shattering it like kindling woodand the coop had be n blown over his head in such a way that his arms were pinioned to his side and he was unable to remove his" great and beautiful "Bonnet."

The same shelldrove a great stone weighting three hundred pounds through the 3 weather boarding inth and nin plastering of general Vindraines headquarters near by across three rooms a distance of six hundred feet and lodged it in the walls of a rear house he hind it without even breaking a corner of the great stone. So great was the ve locity of the great stone that the wind of itpassing turned over a stove and a great table at the same time, knocked several generals wounded to the floor and the latho itself as it pas ed thrcugh the wall were cut smoothly without cracking the plaster. Many hundreds of boards by the same explosion were driven into the ground and strong veregreen found driven into the barks of trees, and even into a brick wall of the ruined headquarters of windermine which had been shattered by the concussion. All the chi chickens in the destroyed chicken house had been fairly gutted and stripped clean of every feather and the explosion left a sulphurious smell in its wake as if his infernal majesty had ben out for a walk.

Severe as the bat e had been neither army had been crippled and soon the enemy had abandoned al further assaultand retreated in confus ion southward. Four fourty eight hours all of the whole christian lines and thatof the enemys had been aflame with horrible carnage and thousands of the best corn corn fields had become the scene of blasket de p desolation. General Vivins army had sa sank into a welter of blood and he was ha ; happy indeed when the battle was finally over. Christian losses was over sei seventeen million in killed wounded and prisoners and of the fallen there was only four million.

The lossesof the enemy were withheld.

BATTLE OF RHINIPS CREEK. CLAUDELINIAN POSTS PUTCHERED, THOUGH PROSISTENT IN ATTACKS. A REAL INFERNO. THE AIR A MASS OF FLAMES. THE PILES OF DEAD.

In a few days after keeping up a battle less campaign for nearly a year after his last great fight at Banno Jermania Vivians forces numbered nearly 68,800,000 men in the main majority of these Claudelinian troops being massed upon Hanson ian army which had been sent north by general Vivian to try once more to wrest Chl varina out of the hands of the enemy. And here for two days without any infantry actions, and without cessation for a single minute had been concentrated the fire of eleven thousand five hundred Claudelinian cannon.

For these very two days Hunsonia had swept with five hundred batteries thickly massed, the plains before Fraimies Dun in an effort to prevent the strong and vigorous concentration of Langues Claudelinians who again and again rushed forward on the third day to make frightful attacks. They were repulsed time after time while a tornado of shells and canister tore their nipreat columns millions strong to fragments at every charge.

Had the Claudelinians succeeded in concentrating their own guns they might have succeeded but brigade after brigade was demolished and instead of forming one single linebroke into two separate columns and enveloped the Claudelinian surges, thus cutting off the enemy from the main body of his army and crushing them back are scattered and thrown in the a most horrible confusion. At the same time in an inferno plain Fontaine and Fontaine lines of graycoats were annihilated across the Fraimies platen but two hundred thousand Claudelinians were taken in prisoners. But however the Claudelinians had no intention of abandoning the attack and at a limited time their own heavy artillery was at last brought up and began pounding the grounds of Fraimies Dun to prepare the way for another great infantry charge. Soon the biggest Claudelinian columns shoulder to shoulder advanced to a general assault but had their infantry lines been as good as their guns the Claudelinians might have succeeded, and with an ardour and tenacity that had never been surpassed, the Angelinians hurled the graycoats back, each succeeding wave of the Claudelinians breaking helplessly to small pieces against the impassable wall of christians whose guns fired seven hundred thousand shell in four hours hours completely changing the appearance of the country side, crushing portions of the main line of resistance, and tearing thousands of treasand men together to shreds and barring all approaches to the south. However the Claudelinians redoubled their efforts to take advantage of any confusion but the Angelinians immediately began a counter charge making a double quick march and leaping at the first lines of the foe with irresistible fury the clash being murderous to both sides. The stunned christian lin es were not to be denied but went on to the second ring of the Claudelinians while reinforcements were being hurried to their support. The Teutonic lines covered west of Costello the retreat of the counter at not being redoubled by the christians, while an artillery fire surpassing in intensity any previous action of war to the carnage and the whole line of advance was covered with a horrible shell fire.

The Claudelinian forces however recoiled leaving Zes Gilgithlas forces cut off and surrounded by christian troops. The christian fire raged with increasing fury but new Beelzebub brought up more heavier masses of Claudelinians whose attacks were made repeatedly and in quick succession and inmuch heavy masses as to continue the slaughter with unabated fury. The titanic onslaught along a front of fifty miles continued on the Claudelinian losses being terrible but as fast a they fell fresh armies swarm ming on. General attack was delivered against the extreme edge of general Wolfroys positions but as in the cases of the proceeding assaults, after a fearful slaughter the Claudelinians withdrew /leaving hundreds of thousands of dead and wounded on the battle field.

At the same moment an unapparelled attack was made along Col Donald Armonias lines but also ended in failue failure, the broken and mangled brigades of Claudelinians being forced to fall back under thediabolical fire of the christian guns. For an hour during the infantry attacks the whole region had been an object of a frightful bombardment. The air had been filled with thousands of projectiles and their whistling and singing and groaning and explosions produced a noise truely infernal. All these engines of destruction was concentrated upon the assaulting columns and in the midst of this could be seen general Beelzebub and Beelzebub, who were sometimes half covered with the earth thrown over them by a shell and sometimes they disappeared completely in clouds of smoke.
When they reappeared they were as tranquil as if nothing had happened, continually only frantically to urge their men on. Sudde nly a s c score of erm ormorous ex plosions made the earth fly around the christian positions in immense clouds huge shells digging fantastic craters in front of the christian lines. And also before their lines was a frightful spectacle

Where there had been supporting columns of infantry nothing had remained while the broken wire intanglements had all been cut down or had disappeared under the earth, the exploding shells had thrown on them. The main army under Beelzebub despite their awful losses continued to advance in closed formation despite the deluge of shells that burst among their lines. The situation of the Claudelinians was critical. Thousands of the front columns toppled and torn were flying, while myriads of others covered with earth and blood cowered to shelter themselves behind the walls of dead. The first waverers wined out, their being piles of bodies on all side. New waves appeared however which tried to make headway against the rain of steel, but they could not advance and began to give ground once more. The christian fire was rectified and their projectiles cut wide lanes through the Claudelinian waves, but more Claudelinian waves formed more formidable and more fourious.

The Claudelinians swarmed like ants and came on despite the christian shell fire. At this moment new christian artillery began to fire in a manner truely terrifying the huge shells in exploding throwing huge waves of flame on all sides, the Teutonic line became like a terrible conflagration and volcanic eruption from the shell explosions gun musketry and cannon firing, while large bodies obstructed and formed low ledges before the Claudelinianssaveral of whose columns surged to fragments rose way and took party in flight.

The main solid survivng surviving Claudelinians columns came on leading and reloading their rifles without cessation while the seventy fives from the christian guns fell among them and then the hundreds of mitrailla masses entered into action with might and main. It was no longer an army.
It was a few scattered groups of men that one saw torn by a rain of shells and bullets squeezing close against one another as though for mute mutual protection. One of the groups, before one shell disappeared as if they had been swallowed into a marsh. Those christian shells. What frightful work they did.' Never would the christian officers forget the fragments of human beings that fell just on their feet. Never could they forget that terrible picture.

Siegfields Grey columns continued to advance in monstrous mas - s masses protected by their artillery, but at things their formant brigades torn and shattered amid an inferno of shells broke and wavered, halted and disappeared and their attack also failed.

Timanoi again the christian officer had said:

"No the Claudelinians will never capture Fraimies. They will only break their teeth there. The thing for us to do is to make the beast pay dearly for their recent wanton destruction of our forests cities and towns and helpless children."

The main fury of the battle advanced toward Junatime, one with a roar of cannons musketry and other firearms that made a most odious horrifying and deafening scun d. General Tyndara Claudelinians made a furious advance across the creek and moving upon the lines under Costello tore or ploughed their way through a portion and probably no one could have any idea of the almost unnatural fury with wi which t these furious Teutons would cheer in their a appalling and screaming yells. The vigor of the enemys attack had increased continuously while t ward Tyndaras eastern wing or southeastern wings a large columns of Germans charged followed by others, masses of thousands of the foes foremost men advancing with leaps and spring springs and bounds. The whole multitude came rushing forward with furious speed the main column crashing through the solid wall of christians so furiously that it paralyzed many soldiers and Claudelinians stunned all the bloody carnage and destruction. Many Claudelinians knew that at such a the foe was very vehement and the general mood of destruction became frightful that the ground shook, the soldiers [illegible] through cut through the ranks platoons of Claudelinians to pieces. Here Germans there where the attack was also pressed with great fury and determined numbers by scores of Claudelinians were swept and torn to pieces but the surging sedges of graycoats rushed against Germans lines like avalanches and only recoiled when the christian machine gunsent forth fearful showers of grape and canister. The very heavens seemed to sway from the battle din, the incessant [illegible] Claudelinians progressing toward Valdeau line and all the [illegible] coming forces put attack against once another were delivered to closes to the frightful to furyof the struggle and so strong was the powder smoke that a atmospheric [illegible] seemed to take place in the atmosphere.
The Germans crazed with the fury and frenzy of the destruction go going on around them advanced in strong forces upon the christian lines with mad and furious yell and soon every one could have been terrified to see the terrible blizzard of debris wreckage and v bodies that flw up into the air for thirty mi-s as the christian mines were exploded, but the avalanche of surviving graycoats terrified and toinsensibility and crazed by the slaughter of their comrades deshedon over this ground of death, charging furiously like the avalanches of hell.

General Tyndara Claudelinians also plunged on attacking the christians in a frenzy throwing back Teutons Germines lines and crushing them to fragments.

The Claudelinians pour pouring over the captured works yelled like a million furies but the christian gatling guns under general Timmili o u opened a withering fire tearing to pieces all the columns of graycoats that came with in range. Both the lines of Tyndara and Beelzebub were fairly lashed into pieces pleasa every surviving column , lying way before the storm of Constantinus and Angelinius even their surviving columns being smashed to pieces.Amid the roar of their own guns along Pannonius right ding the awful avalanches of graveoats swallowed to plough their way in unbroken lines in the fury of the christian fire making a most tremendous roar as the cannons poured showers of deadly projectiles upon the assailants. The army of the Gladelinius divided into two and it seemed as if the attack at one point was going to be finally checked by a barrier of purple coats, but the seemingly avalanch of Gandelinius was swallowed horribly by the surrounding columns that the attack never ceased and the long human barrier went to pieces before the repressure of the attack at once.

The frenzied Glandelinius progressed onward crushing to atoms every small column & bursting and then seeming to abandon themselves wholly to rage. The more fierce the resistance the more grew their fits of fury ch which became exceedingly dangerous& the Cnarians dashing themselves via, violently and furiously against the christian line amid the hustle and clamor of the battle.

The roar of the terrific battle as it ascended toard the lines along the Priapitz was more like the sound of a bursting pipl e planet or like a tremendous growling million cannon like roar, the fearful unearthly sound of the battle being heard within th the distance of three hundred miles and seemed to awa the very heavens

't the per pendicular roar of the battle which reached throughout the day try the castle and houses trembled in their barn s and fello ed with intense anxiety its very modulations in order to inform them selves of the direction to which the unseen danger was approaching exhibiting eve ptone of the most intense fear " he main assault of the enemy struck general Sedwicks lines with the most energitic fury hollowing most lustily in their terrific and most furious G''Dewit yell'', and trying to mow d w nmow down every body at in their path with the most ferocious style the Cnarians under general Vanneyer rushing upon Pannellantare lines amid a resounding crash of musketry of cannon which mingled into a endless and most appalling unidistinguis roar ad led with the sh shrieks of the wounded and dying. Again and again the murde rous roar of the attack was repeated with bloody inconceivable fury "hole thousands of men per minute were mangled by the shells t the horrible roar of the battle increasing very rapidly the very heavens ranging ing the sound the appalling roar stunning the survivors, whole platoons of men being borne to pieces amid the shrieks of deathmutil n

As theyenny increased the fury of the attack the roar of cannons and musketry became more horrible the windrows of fresh dead and dying made a horrible scene as many large platoons on melted away into dendead wounded, the christian artillery fire causing terrible devastation, the bombshells alone literally mangled hundreds per minute.

At the same time hag surges of graveoats poured upon Sedwicks right wing in an irritated manner despite the fury og of the shells which mangledthousands severely multitudes being mowe d down, their very skin being severed from their bodies many having their shells fractured and the rest being lamented dreadfully and torn fearfully.

In the meantime on Sedwicks lines held to the end volumns of the foe under Ignorance advanced fortunely across the farms plains which wasdominated by shells the din being so heavy and terrific that it made the ground tremble the detonations of the exploding shells being so continuous & of that made a dreadful and lasting echoin fearful. Th avenueman was on of unparalled awes the bursting shells tearing the wounding lines to pieces and asunder with great ilo dihirstyness.

"owever such was the violence of the enemys at ack that the whole sections of Sedwicks lines of the southeastern wing threatened to give way as their lines were going to fragments ong long piles of dead and wounded Glandelinius lay in front of Sedwicks works but the ay surviving graveoats poured on with the most terrific fury crushing his advanced line and dreadfully routed rallied up. The whole battle field was one vast mound chasm reeking with dreadful fury theWhole confusion exceeding a everychara .

Pig billows of graveoats under Gapis was thrown upon Sinders massive line and the hundreds of thousands of wounded cursed and screamed shrilly "t the same time the foe was forcing Sedwicks lines they also at acked Curtiss lines h wh whose earthworks were a soon submerged in the fallen, many of the dead being found later on with their bodiesnlf covered by mud and earth their eyes starting from their sockets in all the expressive hor ors of a violnt death. A Hundred thousand soldiers had been killed during the terrific onrush of the foe which showed the extraordinary fury of the Cnarians. At the first appearance of the crushing overwhelming Cnarians any of the Angelinius could have believed that the end of th e whole universe was near so fierce was the s oke of bat le and flame of bursting shells The Glandelinius appeared highly irritated by the losses they suffered and all the time seemed to throw assaults with greater violence as they advanced bearing down upon Sedwicks lines and bearing down every opposing columns in its path.

For a long time general Grantserys army manaaged to check the onrushing foe butnthe assailants roaring and shrieking in rage assaulting assaulted himines with terrible energy the fury of the assault fort forcing thewhole of Granburys lines to give way despite the deadly fire which mowed down the assailants by many scores of thousands. A crushing and crushing with a regular Glandelinius pressed on crushing the still opposing lines to atoms. Thousands of soldiers were buried under tons of debris thrown on top of them by exploding mines some dying of strangulation and suffocation, many having their mouths and throats fairly packed tight with dirt .

The most daring of the Glandelinius column s oped across Chelsea meadow withstar tile alacrity, their own fire roaring furiously and soon two others made a junction with this assuming the appearanceof two immense fangs. These swept upon the christian lines in a savage manner. One of these columns came so vil violently in contact with Katrabrooks brige as that after a furious engagement in scattered those sturdy Angelinius in all directions clearing this line of trenchesour out completely. On progressed thecolumnsstill shaping like fan fangs coming on at a frightful charge the shells that fell among them making a crashing din and scattering fragments of men furiously.

The columns went crushing across and through Hanscone glen where the fur o f of the she shells fairly tore the trees to pieces, and dashing the mangled corpse in all direction

Whole windrows of men were being precipitated tothe groundby the shells and assistar as the Glandelinius common in a headlong rush and soon the gray and purple coats mingled in a paroxysmm of furious hand to hand fighting that became intolerable, the Glandelinians fiely cutting the Angelinius down in the frenzy of their fury and hurling them back again on and again in the most violent manner. breaking the christian line to pieces and soo smashing whole platoons of purple coats in their headlong swep the fury of the attack being extremely fierce and dangerous.

Again and a t again the Cnarians themselves went to the assault smashing jagged purple lines to pieces, and fiercly hurling the fragments back to all directions and rushed furiously over the captured works, but not a fire from a newand firmar line of christians that made a most ter ific rear and mowed them down like snowflake in a severe blizzard.

The horror of the terrific slaughter could not be described. The only chance for the survivors who had run into the trap was the line of works they had carried and back to this they hurridly flung themselve, but more and more came to their aidand t then the deadly charge was continued though a deafeningroar of gun on and musketry seemed to tear the rocks asunder. The Glandelinius rushed madly over this exposed space, the onslaughtbeing made with such force as to force the solid christ ian wedge back several yards despitethe fire intrenchment, but their foremost lines were riven to p to pieces, the nearest columns colliding with the frenzy stricken Angelicians and meeting annihilation. However one part of the christian wedge was hemmed in by Millers assailants which attacked so furiously that their lines were shattered to pieces thus enabling the enemy to cross on with in creasing fury before fresh divisions arrived, to pour in a fire that continued with an earsplitting roar. Never before with these christian armies was there witnessed such horrible carnage which looked all the more hadious by the contrastand the bodies aspectof the battle itself was a an ole object of terror, the battle assum ing a an indescribable fury, the crash of musketry and artillery resembling the din of the earsounding thunder of earthly destruction,being added by the shrieks of the victims and the earsplitting roar of cannons which continued in an incessant fusni-ade. Apollions main columns ch charged upon the main line of Pannonian center and many platoons of men were hurled into the airby blasting cone of mines and a large scale section of Apollions lines seemed to go into fragments.

As more came to the support of the ragging christian lines the roar of death and destruction increased and immense clouds of dirt and wreakage was hurled into the air by he bursting gang-gangshells which blew up with a loud clamor, the survivoring assailants clashing with the christian lines time and again the clans firing making such a rattling and such hadious noises that the affect was indeed something awful and could not be described being enough to deafen the florecsantitudes of combatants while at the same time fierce streams of canister poured among the assailants and sinking at the same time a terrible whirring and roaring. Clouds of graveoats s fi fairly dashed forward through this storm of death and destruction and attacked the christians whose guns sent imad their great roar which could be heard for miles, he thick white clouds of smoke hiding the combatants at times

As the combat continued two roaring columns of smokedebris and dirt suddenly rose high into th the air air and then descended in hundreds of torrents , the masses of assaulting lines fairly undulating like the wave of the sea extending for many leagues and Hanscnin feared that his very lines were going to be forced.

Windrow of dead and dying miles long lon long were exposed some attaining a dept of fo r four feet and at other points the bodies covered the fe fields like some plateaus many leleagues in length while hundreds of small piles were also found.

It was a horrible slaughter indeed. All the near by plians were covered by the frightful seas of dead and wounded while the immense columns had swept despite the steam blast scream of the shells and the torrents of canister, on in unchecked victurious waves. Great and new floods of graveoats poured upongeneral Hansonias center with indescribable fury and the roar of the conflict was so great that it seemed as if the earth would be torn asunder. The assaulting columns seemed to unite addingand swellinginto one vastmass their flags and banners making myriads of brilliant colors. The fury of the battle continued steadily and as more and more came to the support of Hansonias center it grad gradually increased in the most terrible violence the attack of the foe breaking loose with irresistible fury the flaming lights of the thousands of expld exploding shells shooting across or through the assaulting columns like long furrows of fire.Themusketo made glitter ing flashes like d red fiery arches disappearing ,and and again to flash forth in living lustre amid the most sa savage roaring, plaintive howlings ratlings of clashing guns and the shrieks of those being cut down the groans of the unfortunate injured who bewail their approaching eb end. Yet all this appalling tumult o of the sanguinary conflict did not prevent the half mai mained survivors from hearing the shrill serpent like hissing of grape and canister and the burst and horrible roar of cannons and musketry which deafened and almost blinded them.

Every assaulting column that camein contact with the deadly cannon was rent and split int o many fragments the bursting shells and the minnies tearing their lines to pieces with the most horrible fury. The storm of canister swept among them with ominious whistlings accompanied by the horrible earsplitting roar of the bursting h shrapnell, the flashes of cannons and their bursting thunder swiftly succeeding each other with a perpetual crash and roar.

N The most appalling circumstances were the massive columns in gre gray w which stretched across Erminies run and advanced with a fury that was beyond description the force of bombs shrapnell, high explosives and minews seeming to whither and set whole forests in flameswrenching and uprooting thousands,,and scores of masses of men which in the twinkling of an eye they shattered into fragments, and thousands of men and horses which they dashed stunned and bleeding to the ground at th at ernormous distance.

Atthe same time the main columns of assailants continued to rush swiftly in one direction hurling and crushing themselve upon the massive lines of purplecoats returning, a fire with a roar which mingled with the rolling thunder of the cannons and terrific air piercing explosions. Woe to the multitudes of assailants which found themselves along in the track of this terrible scourge in such a case thousands were lost without hope at even a long distancefrom the hammering christian guns.

Mulitudes after mi mulitudes seemed to be mowed downby the annihilating christian fire which swept other Clandelinians down continually in ww sere scores of whole platoons. Trees numbered by the thousand were blown up by the roots the violence of the exploding shells sending the trees to fragments scores of mulitudes of men were literally strown on the ground or covered by the awful storm of foliage or earth and rocks.

As the assault began to spread along the whole of Hansonias line there came a more terrific and frightful roar that resounded far and wide and the whole heavens and earth seemed to open at each explosion, the terrific roar of the bal batt le horrifi horrifying the fleeing inhibatants who were leaving their threatened cities and towns. The horrid roaring of the long broadsides poured out in quick succession while imm immense seemingly endless streams of grayoats seemed to be torn to fragments, then as more came onthere came a roar of musketry and cannon that no one could describe. But on and on came this stream of grayoats under whose feet the grass seemed seemed to be witheredby the storm of canister their return fire making a most fearful roar resembling the approach of th the worlds end.

After the battle Hansonia whowitnessed t i this frightful assault estimated that the violence of the attack almost tore its way through his main linesand for a time whole sections of brigades unable to withstand the assault poured in a simultaneous wit ering fire and then gave way rallying only when rescued by heavy reinforcements and an artillery storm which shook he ground like an earthquake with the hedious roar resembling the din of a thrillio thrillion cannon which the screaming of the shells ,and the hissing of grape and canister and bullets resembled steam vants in a blast, dreadful sounds which were never forgoten .For hors and hoursduring this frightful assault the heavens seemed to be filled with the most indescribable roar of the battle, hundreds of platoons of the enemy being literally blown to pieces or dissolved into windrows of dead and fying by the terrific christian fire. The surviving assailants extend ing the shape of a long narrow stream advanced with frightful velocity. Never before were columns of men seen so hedious and the thunder of the cannon on both sides roared more fiercely and ad ding to the din of destruction and assuming a le hellish expression. The scene was so terrible that probably the very ang angels would never forget, being covered with immenser fields and windrows of dead wounded anddying the roar of the bloody battle exceddeding that of before the assaulting lines being riven into a thousand pieces, the appalling fiery forces at time surg ing tos and fro and the christian divisions that did yeild ground quivered convul sively as the canister poured upon their own lines made a continuous and screaming roar. The mangling of tothe men was frightful and indescribable the clash of the batle making the most sig singular and awful noise ever heard and the booming of the cannons themselves as as incessant as the pater of the hail stones on a bearded roof the flashes of the cannons being stupendous keeping up an intermittened glare.

wear before was there such a terrible sight,t he but le resembling some terrible hellish visio on visito vision or infernal regions the avalanches avalanches of gray coats attacking with indescribable fury and screaming with rage. Along hansonias main lefthe battle started and raged with redoubled and amazeing fury and sheafs of musket flashes extending for milesflashed among the christian lines with a series of most violent roaring explosive sounds casting a sheen of white smoke for a score of miles. The assaulti g columns were swept to pieces amid themost piercing uproar and steamblast c screaming of the shells whose explosions re nded more hodins of the men to pieces. Clouds of earth was hurled int o the air by mines which rended long thick massive lines of men in gray to small fragmentsand swirled awful showers of dirt and debris. The advancing columns of Clandelinians were e ormous furious and dangerous their attack on Hansonias line increasing with the most greatest fury their own guns setting up a more louder universal and horrible roar, mingled with savage grinding noises a withering storm of highexplosives and sharpa shrapnell being poured upon Hansonias lines. The Clandelinians fought with savage fury in the hand to hand fights the baypnets clashing against bayonets making a perpetual restless grinding noise the assailants meeting the withering roar of the christian fire without flinching and massing themselves against th3 the wedge line purple lines shattering their columns, the fury of their attack increasing to such an extent that they threatened to sweep the christians back right and left.

New batteries of christian cannon opened fire with a roar that seemed to split the heavens as the grayoated columns mingled with thepurple coats in vehement throes. Never before was there such a frightful assault seen, the Clandelinian columns spreading out far and wide advancing furiously the battle seeming to rend the world by its titanic uproar which became more horrible horrible than ever the din of the batle making an uproar that would take all the small and big explosions, the muskets pistols a cannons and other firearms in this world to make. It seemed as if nothing actually could check the furious assailants who gan gained and kept every inch of ground amid the most terrific confusion . General Costellicos army which had been riven asunder was not actually shivered or smashed to pieces whole columns having dissolved, and the din of the batt le had made many of the survivors din for life. I

Indeed the Clandelinian columns were like the furious legions of hell charging again and again upon t the christian lines and though t the gaps made were wideit seemed impossible for anything to disperse the assailants. Immense gaps appeared and disappeared, big tree trees were split into pieces by shells a score of high powdered explosives bursting simultaneously everywhere at times.

The assaulting columns seemed a quarter of a mile thick or in serried lines and over fourt y miles longand di did advance with greater fury and a/ along general Pierces lines the fury of the enemys attack was now also directed im ense fresh columns uniting with the former assailants. This column was a terrible force of Clandelinians but fortunately those under general Simons did not hit Hansonias squares bea being headed for his center led by Pheal Phelans divisions of Curdes the fury of the attack upon these christian lines tearing all the foremost squares to pieces and scattering the fleeing survivors in all direct ions. Part of this assaulting column had now dissolved into dead and wounded but the main surviving columns swept onward in its course. On toward the main line swept those awful colu n columns of assailants and soon a monsterous sea of men un de mosshery overwhelmed Costellicos lines which daring to stand to the last met with complete annihilation, their generl general escaping by a miracle.

A park of cannon s of heavy calibre ww was massed upon the assailents at this point but they never got a chance to fire.

This line of assailants though leaving a regular sea of dead and wounded behind them as they theyadvanced. It seemed as if the force of some army of fiends was trying to wedge itself against the christians so terrible was the assault of the enemy which kept up comina continually depite the brigades of men that dissolved o into pieces, and of the shrieks screams and howls of the fallen, and of those being overwhelmed by the human flood was hearte hr heartrending.

So fierce did the Clandelinians yell at times that it sounded as if millions of screaching demons were filling the air. Mulidues of Clandelinians were destroyed inthe mad rush against general Hansonias right, whole massive brigades were shattered to pied es pieces, and everything on the line of foliage was mowed by down by the christian shell fire.

T Hundreds of thousands were nearly rendered deaf by the horrible din of the battle , the enemy seting up a new series of yells that made a universal clamor like the screaming of a thousand tornadoes put into one. Thehand to hand fighting was terrible, muskets clashed against each other in deafening confused tumults, a the enemy rushing in druk drunken rage and like strag strange legions of demons all about thousands going down in mangled corpses in their collishion with the massive christian lines, their front lines twice fal ing to pieces like millions of sl splashes at once.

The Clandelinians fought like damanated anarchy, a re n regular hell legion of grayoated soldiers seemingly gone mad, the combants literally cutting or tearing each other apart or wide open, banging the heads of each other into a pulp.

T982. 524 125

he furious onslaught of the landelinians cur crushed the foremost christian divisions to fragments, whole sections of wide w swarms of men becoming smeared like in a frightful hell of destruction, whole masses of men worse than any ever seen yet r rushing forward through all h his fiery turmoil, and amid the shrieking roar of the deadly shells the christian batteries and whole lines at times seeming to be wreathed in fire the forcie force of the assault m becoming more and more violent increasing furiously n and continueing to increase.

From the christian guns thousands after thousands of deafening detonations proce dedeach otherrapidly, the last line of massive christians being split to pieces, the shells making the hev heavens hedious with their rattling uproar. A hundred monsterous platoons of landelinians came into almost close quarters with the retiring christian lines and poured in a withering fire that made a niose as to fill the air with a countleess million deafening echoes.

The noise was horrible and here wallides of men were literally killed. Debris was scattered in all directions by the explosions and to the armies that advanced upon generals Vivianaias lines assumed the shape of immense chuc church pilliars being fl flooded every now and then by the fearful smoke of the es p exploding shells which caused indescribable damage. The whole length of the columns changed into a seemingly e ndless stream of human beings the advance guard striking Bernards nNnth corps amid a blinding roar of musketry and cannon and it soon dia disa pp de disappeared and the whole christian line was hidden in a sea of smoke while the awful ih hissing canister pouring upon the assaulting foe could not be descri ble described while soc, sock like on objects appeared frequently among the surging columns which would dwindle away into dead and wounded. These sock like clouds were from bursting gang-gang-shells whose fragments tore the very trees to pieces by thousands and which made a great rattling n inoise. One immense column of this army of victorious landelinians swooped down upon Logans squares destroying them the all killing the christian general with t their storming blasts of musketry fire, and simultaneously swee ping tward Mc-T urners lines whci which o opened fire with such a frightful roar that the clamor could be heard for four hundred leagues.At the advance of this mon most dangerous and stupendous columns of landelinians the opposing christian lines under Clinton spread out in very striking and ga ghastly shapes, the batt le beg beggining to look like some huge nightmare of hell.

The army of assailants having alrea y crossed the western part of Dominies mun seemed to produce itself to a greater length that christian gathling guns that were being trained upon them being captured before they could fire a sig single shot. The immense columns of the landelinians swept on forming two seperate streams of men which advanced as fast as mon could run and no one seemed able to check them despite their irksom exertions to bring up more can on which when in coming up were only taken.

On pressed the frightful torrents of landelinians with a ap palling fury enveloping t the christians line the landelinian leader Fitergerson urging on his men. For these christian forces there had been no warning of the danger and in an instant by the sudden fire on both sides at point blank hundreds of thousands of lives were lost.

Thousands of cannoneers sprang for their guns but before they could give jusy just one discharge a yelling surge of landelinians overwhelmed them, crushed the supporting infantry like lines to atoms and forcing the survivors back pouring the canister upon them from he captured guns,like a mass of tossing flame.

Bigger columns of the ensmystill swept on supported with the horrible gathling guns and from the very heart of this fearful wholesale slaughter rang, the cry of hundreds of thousands of mangled, while unusual strong gusts of grape and canister fairly tore the rallying christian columns to pieces, scores of thousands of mangled disembowled human beings being revealed among the windrows of the foliage.

It was as if thehand to death had covered them with a veil, crashing sr shrouds and sheets of fi dirt and clouds of debris foliage and smoke from bursting shells wrapping the victims in agonizing death.

It was a regular seething hell of death and destruction, the very air seemed aflame and theexplosions of shells seemed to rend the very skies. General Anthonys brigades of landelinians had ben shattered to pieces in meeting the frightful shell fire of the enemy thevroar of batle becoming n more intense as the enemy progressed onward overwhelming and crushing Hindernines left wing. On and on rushed the landelinians and mingled with the mulitudes of Angelini seamid the awful shrieks screams and curses. Such a hedious pandemoniuman of din of the batle redoubled in fury, the enemy increasing their machine gun fie from minute to minute in a despierate effort to prevent the massive christian forces along his front from rallying pouring vast orrents od canister that cont inued to tear their whole brigades to fra fragments the stupendous shattered columns of foolish Angelinians spreading out in separate divisional lines and opening fire themselves in a most frightful manner, and tried again and again to rally to make a sweeping charge upon those sputtering gunsonly to be swept down in hundreds od regiments the conflagratio n started by this battle throwing the most ter rific glare upon the heaveens the night afterwards and filling all the neighboring mountian regions with a crimson sheen of light.

T983. 525 126

Finally z at last being reinforced heavly the christ ians were enabled to counter charge, and this counter charge continued to rage with terrible violnce violence, their columns extending seventeen miles, the christians closeing in on the enem enemy in a hand to hand fight which made the worse noise ever heardand the quantities of regiments crushed and shattered and wiped out by the terrible storm of grape and canister was frightful. He deadly fire of musketry and pistols at point bn blank wiped out whole columns. Whole brigades av even seemed to disolve but now the christian lines having doubledtheir length resumed the assault with redoubled fury and greater violence the very heavens seeming to be in a blinding hellish u uproar. The solid lines of purple at times were riven into many parts but the main line forming into one solid wall rushed forward with tremendous ferocity but every on one of the gigantifc columns extending for miles seemed to go to pieces before the fire along the Masonic lines the surviving brigades wavering for the moment but the main lie still continued to sweep on , though the foremost lines twenty miles long disolved away into a most horrible field of dead wounded dying or panic stricken who lied down to escaped the fire, but the others still pressed on and in a m few minutes the Masonic lines under general Clanson were forced back by this crushing onrush which seemed to carry every obstruction before it. For miles lines of men on both sides so mad to disolve into dead and wounded the losses being frightful the christian soldiers sweeping upon the whole of the Masonic lines in possession of the guns, the fury of the attack increasing to such an e extent that most of the guns were abandoned the Clandelinians returing in great confusion.

The works along this point could not be seen the dead and woun wounded lay so thick. Never before did the Clandelinians under general Germinia Vivian fight with such frightful fury and the worse about it was that the furious fighting increased and continued to increase, the rallying Omarian Curdes ,Mc-Collestinians and Zimmermannians trying to retake the guns. The batle along this point roared like a noisy inferon and every assaulting column of Clandelinians that came within range of the guns were mangled to pieces. The left grand division of Clansons line of curdes were crushed to fragmants in the same assault and the largest strongest sections of Omarians under Nelson were rendered to fragments simultaneously , dead and wounded unindating all the batle field s now, all of the works and the dep trenches being chocked with the dead bodies of the slain. The appearance of the scene was like the ''Valley of the shadow of Death.''

The battle seemed to be drawing forward toits highest fury.

Seven divisions of Omarians had been crushed during their frantic efforts to retake the guns their lines having been completely torn to pieces, the loss of li live along this point having reached half a million. The attack along this point, however soon terminated in the landelinians retaking the guns and driving back the christian for keeps his time while along Hansonias front, the ene enemy had with withdrawn but still great forces were concentrating upon general Vivianis whom they wished most ardently to crush. Seeing that Clanson had abandoned his at attack the Angelinians themselves made an advance uponhim and with extraordinary rapidity, the ap aspect of the coming situation f being frightful and appalling was the symptons that followed.

As t the enemy opened fire along their entire line it seemed as if a long stream of fire undualted and seathed the firing making a sudden series of rending crashes like the explosions of hundreds of thousands of shells an and cannons which seemed to shake the very earth, followed instantly by another but more awful roar which seemed to rent th the air like a million cannon as other seried lines of landelinian infantry let loose with their musketry and cannon, the startled Clandelinian hosts realizing that the christian armies were advancing in fearful force and that now they must stand their ground or be routed , and his caused the sudden furious firing already predicted.

The very ground seemed to burst asunder, the air seemed in a sea of fmn flame amid the awful roar of the batle, the very plains of the battle field seemed to break out in blasting volcanis eruptions, the onrushing christian line did divi ding into two, and as more and more aded to them they again formed one coming nearer to the enemy.

The christians finally struck the Masonic lines under general Marcucian wedging themselves against the foe, with th the pressure of an avalanch, the uproar of the very firing at close quarters shaking the havens as it seemed, and mingling wih a deafening snarl. The clandelinians were forced to give way the christian pressing on i with amazing fury, though one whole wing of their mai l main line seemed to disolve away, while the center seemed riven into many fragments, and careening platoons of s soldiers while from every one of their surviving lines there came a series upon series of awful musts musketry blasts which seemed to stab the very lines back andforth with their sea of flashes general Carriesns divisions of t the foe having collasped into fragments

During the frightful onslaught men were blown or riddled to pieces in whole sections by the guns , and even fragments of tres, stonefences and masses o and windrows of wreckage were blown into the air by the storm of high ex explosives, while clouds upon clouds of debris dust and tons of bricks were scattered for nearly half a mile like snow the c clouds of dust being as thick as the powder smoke itself.

The assaulting columns of christians poured through thegaps made, myriads of beau tiful trees within theenemys lines were shattered to pieces by the shells from the big christian guns, and many times clouds of stones fifty to tonsin weight were hurled into the air in countless fragments by the force of the explosion s and scattered among the christians. Whole plains were covered with the wreckage and mashed in the dead and wounded. Secton sections of massive christian columns were blown to pieces by these monsterous shells thashells tearing asunder every column they struck with a roar that could be heard for a score of miles.
However the angelinians advanced with irr irrestible shatter shattering every oppos ing mass of Guardians they struck advancing upon the Masonic lines with an awful fury despite the shells that tore whole sections of them to pieces killing thousands. General Mc-wollesters left wing had already been completely destroyed and half of his center was reduced into killed and wounded, the surviving columns being shattered and borne down by theirresistible swep of the Angelinians who came on amid the frightful rear of dead death and destruction, the enemys lines being rended to pieces and the survivors scattered.
The explosions of the immense gang-gung-shells cont inued to tear through the christian lines as though through empty air, tossing hundreds of tons of earth and wreckage into the skies and mangling whole regiments of men. Indeed the high explosives threw incredable quantities of debris into the air with a ma terrific earthsplitting din, many thousands of Angelinians were killed or wounded per shell, al the bridges crossing the Ermine were blown away or wrecked and of some of these nothing remained of the terrible midley or mortar stones twisted iron and timbers when more shells landed there. The whole line of charge presented a fiendish sea of wreckage and mangled bodies a sight more fearful than Dants could have seen.
Vast mulitudes of purple coats had been caughtby the terrible explosions and thrown violently down or rended to pieces and so completely buried by earth thrown by the explosions that one could see only a half covered head, a gaping mouth or a hand miserably crushed in. Many human bodies had even been found honey combed with holes or torn open so that they resembled the children butchered by the Babbelinians.
The storm of canister had also gave sounds like the moaning of wind, while the shells as theyflew through the air before exploding made the sound like the letting out of steam and as theymitu mutiplied geting more louder and screaching every moment moment while the firing along the enemys second main line had now burst forth withextraordinary violence the immense christian columns cutting their way through the most pupulated parts of the Masonic lines and so ter tifying became he din of the batle that any one could have instinctively expected the opposing lines to literally destroy one another. The pushing avalanche of christians was fearful the battle now roaring like a hell of destruction, thebodies on both sides forming tangled heaps.The christians however pressed pressed on like Unearthly spirits of destructioncutting the enemys formost lines to pieces. It wasboth a fierce and magnificient sight. The Angelinians pressed on like a series of avalanches amid a tumult of wild destruction the fury of their advance being stupendous and fan facanating, their eastern wings reaching and bending tward the terror stricken multitudes of Babbelinians under Cindon and escape was literally cut off thousands of these literally threw down their arms and surrendered, while the rest rather than give up eithe fought to the last breath or committed sucido.
At this moment now lines of guns were brought up by the Guardian Gurdon under Dimes ad these opened a horrible storm of fire the exultant ma mid n line of grayco gra / graycoats yellinglike hundreds of millions of demons and under this fire the whole front line of themain christian force that was advancing was completely cut down, other columns disolved into into windrows od of dead an d dying, the storm of g high explosives from these guns sweeping to pieces huge streams of trees, sein sending into the air huge c clouds and splintering huge masses of rock. These guns seemed to sweep all before them with their terrible storm of shells making a noise as if the whole universe was coming to an end but the attack of the christians though rolled up and crushed was soon resumed with re doubled fury the opposing columns at the right rushing upon one another and to mingle in the wildest confusion of hand to hand fighting.
Thou ands of men were viom violn violent ly tossed into the air by the concussion of the high explosives and were badly maine maimed. Platoons of others wre were hurle hurled into the air in fragments of human flesh and thrown down at a great disance
The whole scene of the batle field was like a the verygeneral forest fires itself and like the approach of then end of the world at the same time, the nearest discharge of the noheaviest artillery andmusketry being completely drown ed by the earsplitting crashes of the thousands of shell explosions amid the shrieks screams and yells of the victims who were buried under tons of earth. Even the first greatest loss that the christians suffered since they started their fierce coun te counter charge was cua caused by the high explosives, which were seven hundred an d fifty thousand per hour all along the line of both sides combined. In addition to the horros occasioned by the horrible battle the desolate survivors were exposed to the rab ravages of fire. Certain parts of the distant woods was in a fierce blaze which at times became so bright despitethe daylight that it could be seen for miles.
The woods were on fire in a hundred dif ferent different places at once and continued to burn without intermission. The millions of wounded were so dejected and terrified that the y kept up a storm of wails and screeches every one having their eyes turned toard the flames and lo king on with wild terrified grief which was interrupted by the cries and shrieks of the already threatened victims reachese re reached.

The illuminated gung-gang shells were the cause of the conflagration .. their explosions setting fire to the foliageon the ground and the tree tops the frightful conflargration spreading to neighboring villages and being there joined by the smaller ones increasing to such a degree that the scene was awe inspiring.
Duri during the arly n and latter parts of the batle the destruction of li fe had been appalling and nothing was more distressing that the sights of the poor wounded horses which seemed sensible to their sad fate. Thousands of horses had been killed, scores of thousands wounded during a single charge, and many of these seemed left on the battle field to burn. The scenes of horri horror exceeded all descrit description. Nothing for miles could be heard, but the shrieks of the hundreds of thousands of injured not picked up yet, also sighd, groans and incessant wening, and the survivors could not take a step without treading on the dead and dying.
Along the trenches among the mounds and ridges of dead and wounded lay hundreds of ammunition caissons and broken artillery all in wreckage with their masters horses and drivers almost crushed to pieces, hre multitudes of soldiers with bleeding bodies mingled with half crushed blood besmeared officers ,many with their bodies torn open and their intestines all hanging out there scores of thousands of richly uniformedvolunteers either in the same or worse condition or just expiring. Man y of their necks, backs, thighs, legs arms and ribs were broken , skulls crushed , others with with vast stones on their bea n breasts, and many shattered h human trunks and intestines lay all about. Thousands near thr the shell craters lay almost buried in the rubbishby the explosions crying out in vain for succor, there being left to perish like the rest. The sight was fearful, but the sight of the mangled was more terrifying
The largest proportion of the soldiers dead wounded or dying, had been buried under tons of dirt and wreckage and atorms of universal shrieks, cries and groans and sighs all n the ascents of grief wereeverywhere heard, while the impossibility on account of the raging battle and the i fire, of rendering from deaththose wtr wretched victims rendered still more hor owing the cries of despair that concealed in vain for help and compassion.
The new scourge already described had been added to all these calamities of the battle argumenting their horror:
"FIRE:"
From amid the batl battle stricken forests regions the raging fire was seen to rapidly increase into a vertible wall of flames. The gang-gang-shells had kindled variouscon combustible substances of the woods. And as hundreds of d divisions of either side had been cripoled by their losses during the battlethe absolute want of many fire fighters and needful appliances rendered i lall the efforts unavailing it and it was impossible to stop the ra ing progress of the flames which continued to burn and become a sea of flames. To so many simultaneous disaster of such a fiery battle hundred hundreds of t others had ben added, the horrors being beyond description, the terrible loss in prisoners, the fall in officers and generals, the loss of great parks of artillery on both sides and the Flande linian divisions under Mondorbury which had given up the assault against the Masonic lines had been first overthrown and then annihilated in trying to withstan d a counter charge these aggravation of hor rors and disasters having reduced to c com plete despair the remining christian ariarmies who hema be moaned their frightful losses.Not a trench wich had ben recaptured bythe enemy could be distinguished on account of the bodies of the fallen being covered several feet dep with corpses. The loss oflife was appalling fourty thousand already having prish perished by thefire and many hundreds of thousands of more by the rain og shells and high explosives before the rescuers cu could reach them. The greater number were buried under the tons of earth and foliagewreckage thrown up bythe burst of high explosives while others perished in the fires that were kindledin most of the forest districts where the flames were fed by resinous foliage. Not a few especially among the officers were suddenly engulfedin the hundredsof fires which seen in all direcions gave the woods the appearance of having been covered with networks of fire streams.
Many thousands who were only hav half buried in the debris and who might have been saved had there ben help at hand were left to perish in the flames. Of still more thrilling incidents during the retreat of the christians was the care of the Vivian girls who had went to his army to see general Vivianda on an imporent message before the great battle started.Having fainted from theconcussion of fo fifty high explosives going off simultaneously near them they were lifted out of the drebris by someAngelinians who bearing them in their arms l hurried with them tward the last of the retreating forces, only to be killed by other shells. Ten times a number of Angelinians even officers went to pick them up after the first rescuer were killed but shells laid them low also, n and though pelted by the falling embers of tree tops other Angelinians managed to secure them, and reaching a long strip of woods these rescuers found it to be a furnace of fire so barring al farther progress in that direction. They however fled through one smouldering stretch of woods after another chased by storms of falling embers and flying sparks, and pursued by the Germanian hordes who yelled like demons. The whole woods to the left of the rescuers was becoming a furnace of seething fire but from their desperation they managed to reach the retreating christian lines.

Among the retreating christian armies the conduct of the blazing high explosives was terrific, the shells descending among the columns like a storm of roaring booming and banging hell fire and brimstone scattering the windrows of dead and wreckage like chaff and wiping out whole brigades. The smoke of the shells blackened the bodies of the dead and killed and the mangled wounded pinioned by shells perpetrating still more atrocious freaks. During the rest the high explosives killed sixty thousand and wounded two hundred and sixty thousand making thirty thousand corps among ansonias retreating corps and spreading desolation for three scores of miles. No battle had visited northern Angelinia so near Calverinia which can compare in extent or energy to this one since the battle of Cedermine and which wrought such terrible disaster disasterin so many cities. In this battle with Germaine Vivian and Vivianian within the time of eight hours nine million ninty nine thousand had fallen, (9,090,000 had fallen on both sides and yet another big toll of lives were to be added before the retreat was over for the retreat was only along a part of Vivianias center and not along the whole christian line which were still attacking and repelling attacks with terrible fury. The concussion of this battle had demolished the fairest and most massive cities in its nearest vinicity and the ruins had buried multitudes of helpless children and other none combatants to a terrible death. It was the bloodiest, the most bloodiest battle in thewhole war that the armies under Germainia Vivian had ever engaged in and their advantage though splindid came with a fearful cost. Apollyon Apoleon Ignorance, Pugnosa and Goondoon had been killed and over ten million had been killed wounded or taken pr prisoners.

On the side of the christians general Vivianin had been seriously wounded and general Hansonin had to replace him. The total christian losses was over 9,000,000 in killed and wounded alone and three million had ben taken prisoners in themorning and more than that in the afternoon making a total of fifteen million This battle was almost like another Cedenineand the fiercest one that had ever raged on the Erminie. The results of the batle that afternoon had aken effects on violet and her sisters and made them believe sure enough now thattheenemy were to win the mighty contest. The severely wounding of Vivianin had almost broke their hearts and what waxwas worse they could not see him to deliver themessage for his safetydepended on his being kept quiet. As he had progressed on so brilliantly Germainin Vivian had captured two thousand cannon besides small arms ammunition and stores of immense valueall of w which were given up without shot or a single defense by Wens and Burgersons christians and an arnsel of millions of dollors wo worth of ammunition and arms was also in the enemys possession during this last sage of the batle thei there being more that than one hundred and thirty five million Glandelinians on the field while half of those were already marching north ward. General P. P Federal had now ben appointed commander in chief of the Glandelinian armies opration again against Hansonin by Germainia and a fierce counter attack of the Angelinians against Twinces lines was repulsed but the Masonic Masonic line under Twiggs were driven back with frightful losses whose retreat became a panic and attended with wild disorder and demorilization about 300,000of these Glandelinians being taken prisoners with a loss of 4,378 killed and 21,489 wounded in a single minute. The christians lost 11,011 killed 24,481 in wounded and 34,460 in prisoners with no thousand more cannon and large qa qua ntities of small arms. At the same thi time this happened general Bermudason Vion with Ben at nacked the christian grand division defeating the christian force withthe death of their general Ben Hennie and simultaneously general But ler Phelan of the Glandelinians turned the right of Vivianias still standing forces held by Moultree with seven hundred thousand prisoners a hundred and ten thousand muskets and five hundred thousand dollars worth of stores. Yet simultaneously general Kauffmann Sterling surrounded and captured the christian leader general Millian and his brigade of one hundred twenty seven thousand, eight hundred and eighty eight , men while at the same time a christian force of one hundred ninteen thousand seven u hundred was annihilated by the Glandelinians under Generals P P Phelan W D Failon and C P wolan while another force of Glandelinians under general Johnston Baker and three hundred thousand of his men were slain in ambush and over five thousand prisoners the only survivors taken. General Edmund with one hundred thousand of his men had reduced the christian fortificated wrokd works at Phillips plain but general landing in an engagement with wilks lost fourty thousand men in slain but nevertheless had captured the christian camp and checked the rally of general Thompsons force of christians.

Though the battle had been won by the Glandelinians the losses in officers on both sides was frightful. General W. O.Gorged of the Glandelinians was wounded, general Watrabrook Stuart of the christian was wounded and also on the side of the enemy Davidson was wounded. General Bridge of the Glandelinians had fallen mortally wounded with general Lane also T ilgh, Mania was also wounded General Floyed and a few of their command with general Ander of the g Glandelinians managed to escape but Granft and Fisherton were killed general Curtis was wounded general Burns and Rams Aronburg , Bern general Memo and a slip of the Glandelinians were all mortally wounded and Berkick was killed. General Wisher Intkhosh were killed on the christian side and general Deane of the christians were woundedand general Simon Simmilkin and Hendroe Johnston on the theside of the christians was wounded and Culbero who had succeeded him was shot dead and Carl forced to surrender. General Carloscia, Nealboro, Flellania, Procile, Clellania, Burnside, Sanderford of the Glandelinians had been killedand generals Veech Kirban , Bragbardine Rousau Grans, Van windman, Grandan , Grieson Mc Fen Holms and Homer Nelso and Thomas were all mortally wounded while Dragoon Gilm Daniels Pantine , Rusty Tracy and Hudson were all wounded. The other christian leadrs were Gardener, who surrendered, Fairbanks Shreveport , Granier Wenny Noble, Richmond Hindermine and Stwart Johnston, Bancock and Warren Waldon, Glader and garrison were all wounded. The rest of the Glandelinians generals who were wounded were Gilmore, Fatze Ridan Sturgeant Dunn, Sanderburry, Morgan Sturgenat Phelan, Shermannia, Blakheart, Mc-Phierson Gannon, , Stedmon, Glaran de Hogan Jones burosward Mc Monohue, Hardheart, Gordine , Weldon, Mc Nothingham.

General Peabody of the Glandelinians had attacked the christians at the main pointsof the Erminies runand here theGlandelinians had caused the christians to flee in utmost precipitation. General Hindermine had rallied his one million to two hundred thousand men to a high degree of efficiency, and transforming morethan three quarters of this forde to the rescue of the fleeing christians and this force under Mc Idonia Costellicewas fiercely engaged at Aronburgs meadows by general Hornking at the head of only five hundred thousand fresh troops but was replaced with theloss of hundreds of thousands. At the same time Hork Horniokines left wing was checked by christian batteries at bloody knell lames where the Glandelinians had fought well for nine hours withheavy loss having a chance at last to flank Hindermine and annihilate two of his brigades, who also fought well wallforcing the christians to retrat with havy loss in guns killed wounded and prisoners, and though hundreds of demented Angelinians had tried desperately to make a stand it was of no use.

General Johnston wolan of the Glandelinians was killedin this terrific struggle but at this moment general Carlodnia arived on the scene with heavy reinforcements and mov movingthese divisions across the Erminie made a fierce attackon t the Glandelinians. General Carlocia leading his troops was killed on he christians side but the resultswas well in coming for fresh troops handled in a masterly manner were irrestibleand from the ferocious counter attack the Glandelinians at this point lost all they had gained, besides one hundred seventy three of their own guns The Glandelandsequantitiesofguns thandthessian line was made by the whole of the Glandelinian army at seven o-clock and for an hour or more victory for the Glandelinians seemed to tre mble in the bla balance for Germania vivian was seriously wounded and his aiding general Roswell Buster Hellerton was killed but despite despite this the christian army was finally beaten after more terrible slaughter, but there was no rout or disorder among their lines, and the enemy did not follow up their advantage when they had achance to crush general Hansonia. In the whole batle the Glandelinians lost 16,242,392 in killed and wounded alone. The christian losses was 18,087,,893, in killed and wounded. Had the Glandelinians general Woodlania who took Germanias place known the extent of his trium ph he might have followed and destroyed the retreatretreating christian army whose numbers in this battle from 80,000,000 dwindled to only 20,000,000 from men who deserted of or who were taken as prisoners. He did not follow however and lost an opportunity when he could could have snatched it easily and hadhe smatched it he could have ended the war rightthen and there captiring the whole of general vivianias army wither they surrendered or not. For being so careless the Glandelinian governement took his command away from him and placed Thomas Federal in his stead.

As Violet and her sistes had wished to see some of the warvin the Eastern part of Calverinia Hanson vivian had them sent to Hansonias army far east ad the littlegirls had been there just in time to witness the big battle of Erminie pun where the wars greatgreatest tragedy of all occured. The supreme main commander had beenkilled at the highest fury of the battle and thus the reason why the battle had been lost.

131

CHAPTER SEVEN.....

PANDORA CAMPAIGN GET IN EARNEST. ONE OF THE GRAVEST DANGERS OF THE WAR THREATENED [illegible] AT THE HANDS OF RADCLIFFE.

While the battle of Ermininis creek had been going on big Glandelinian armies or divisio didi divisions under Hushuam Manley, Hosmann and Hicknell, T amerline and Aronburg Federal had been united on one long marsh and was so reported to be con centrating on Hollingbar and Kidland Run with the intention of stricking the bigest blow of the war. Hushuam Manley sent a recall to Mendlini a, whose army under Thomas Federal came back which indeed relieved the decimated christian armies under the two wounded generals Hanconin and Vivianis. They were helpless however on account of their condition and the ruin of their armies to repell Manleys advance and they cloud rely only on the ig Abyssinkilian armies encamped in Northern Angelinia to pitch into Manleys great host. There was no word however or any way to send word, for all the communications with these Abyssinkilians had been cut off and destroyed and all roadways fields and woodlands had been barricaded to prevent any swift advance.,on the part of all all the Abyssinkilian armies.
One of Hanconins generals however believed it advisable to sent the little girls north to Abyssinkile for the trip would be safe as all the northern country was free from the Glandelinians just now all of those in the north having joined in the with the forces in Galverinia to prevent the christians from coming too far in there.
Many of the generals disagreed of this plan, and then all thought it best to see whether the litle girls were willing to go or not and so they were summoned to general Vivianias headquarters.
"I know that you little heroines realize the danger of the nation on account of the disablement of two great generals/ of the failure to wrest the Galverinian country out of the hands of the foe!"Said general Rudolph Lewing politely;
"And summoned youon a very important matter. Manley , Tamerlins, Hicknell, Hoeman and Tomas and Aronburg federal are advancing with the big est armies ever seen to strike the mightiest blow, and on account of the disaster in the batt le of Ermininies creek, our nat nation is in the gravest danger, for your father and Uncle cannot spare armies to sent us as they have the can do to repell the two Manleys, Shoemannin and the other Glandelinian generals down south. With the Abyssinkilians we cannot communicate because of the havoc made by the foe and we ourselves are powerless to repell Manley's great forceon account of our losses and the disablementof the nations two greatest generals next to your father and uncle.
You little girls alone can save usbygoing north to call the Abyssinkilians forward.
he goingis safe or we would not take the trouble to ask you. Of course you are free and can have your way about it. Onlyif you go you may save the nation you love from being conquered by men who has been so cruel to you, despite your mercy shwon."
Violet and her sisters did not know what to answer and stood spellbound. It was indeed the most startling news they had ever heard. Angelinia was in the gravest danger and should the foe win they knew that they themselves would be lost. Indeed the little girls were also dumbfounded at the mistake of these christian generals for there was no safe going anywhere and to reach Abyssinkilie they knew they would have to go way into northern Galverinia where the worst Glandelinian armies were intrenched. But they made firm resolutions to bring on the Abyssin kilian armsand merely said
"You generals are mistaken, for there a is no safty anywhere now as to get to Abyssinkile we will have to pas through Galverinia. But come what may we will do it, as to die in the nation being conquered will be more horrible than caught by the enemy now."
And they started off immediately. They did not know of course what direction the Abyssinkilian armies were encamped but without their knowlegdege wthey were to go through a series of perils which almost proved futal several times. Bya short detour they managed to cross the barricadesmade by former Glandelinians under Germania Vivian, but after going on for some distancesaw great forest fires moving on the m from the southwest. This fire happened to be a swift pacer and the little girls knowing that it would be folly to try and race with it even on horse back decided to go northwestward, where the timber was more clear.
The atmosphere had becomevery hot, dryand stifling and only in an hour the air was so thick with smoke that they could hardly see their way. Several times they felt like turning back and even wished that Evans was with them. T heir plight was indeed distressingand t they suffered terribly from thirst. However they bravely continued onwardhoping to find some stream. The forest fires was advancing nearer and nare and the skywas becoming terribly red, and the air more hotter and stifling.
The torture of the little girls was something terrible but bravely won in this case for they suddenly came upon a good sized stream, and after refreshing themselves with the water, they s started across hoping that the stream was wide enough to hold back the fire untill they could outdistance it. As I had said before Rudolph had indee indeed been mistaken about there being no perils for really this whole region was infested by by Glandelinians, theOmarian hordes under Kline and Osborne being concentrated not far from the smoking volcanic fires of the [illegible] eruptions.

132

The little girls were dismayed to see that the Glandelinian army barriedtheir way to the north,and to try to go northeastward would only endanger them to the fires again. As it would be death either way the little girls dd decidedto choose the northeastly course and soo wheled their horses in that direction. At his moment a shot rang out and Violets horse fell throwing her to the ground.
"Good God they se us. "Said Joice;" We have got to get away and that is all there is to it."
Violet was quickly helped on to Joices horse and the six fairly raced tward the east followed by almost a hundred Glandelinians, all on the fleetest horses. Violet and her sisters headed for a fence which theor horses leaped with perfect ease. The Glandelinians were close on their heels and seing their peril he little girls were compelled to aim at themarest riders, but before they could fire these Glandelinians wheelled and made a dash for safty. The other Glandelinians made for the fence uttering their weird devil vell, but the little girls were pretty far ahead by this time and rapidly outdistanced their persuers, who reluctantly abandoned the persuit having expected easy victims.
Their danger however was not over for other Glandelinians were advancing in another direction to intercept the little girls and bring about their destruction.
Fortunately the little girls saw them coming and made for the stream they hd recently crossed. Into the roaring waters they plunged and lay low on their horses necks to avoid the dange of being hit should the Glandelinians open fire. Violet looking behind saw the foremost Glandelinians who were on horseback plunging into the water with great splashes while theothers were racing along the banks on both sides shouting and yelling for them to stop.
Violet and her sisters did notpay any heed to the Glandelinians but continued on down stream their horses swimming as fast as they were able. The Glandelinian horsemen behind seemed to be gaining on them and the foremost man who happened to be general Dick Slate, an old time Glandelinian general mentioned several times in the bookordered the litle girls to halt or he so shot .

CHAPTER EIGHT.

THE CLEVER TRICKS VIOLET AND HER SISTERS PLAY ENABLE THEM TO GET AWAY....

Seing a long branch hugning from a tree the little girls by means of a rope pulled it down into the stream, thus barricading their desperate persuers. As they went on the little girls saw men and horses tangled in the twigns and leaves of the big branch, and there was a babble of confusion, cursing and swearing, and imprecations.
A scoreof theme on a shore had to ride into the stream to the rescue of general
Slater and the others, thus causing a delay which gave the little girls a good chance of outdistancing their persuers, and ride to the shore with comparivtive safty, and then dash off into the woods.
The remainder of the Glandelinians led by general Hortensenia continued the chase riding in three three directions so as to head off the childre n from escape.
Seing that they werein da danger of being surrounded, the little girls dismounted hid their horses in thick shrubbery and climbed up to the top of a good sized tree and hide in theleaves.In a few minutes each party of Glandelinians met , to the surprise of each other at not finding the little girls nor their horses.
"They are hiding in these woods somwhere."Said general Hortensinia;"And must be taken at any cost."
"The only way to rout them from their hiding place is to set the tree tops on fire
, as I have an inkling they are hiding in one of them."Said generral O'Donnell and Hortensiala gave te the order while Hortensinia got a score of men who were good climbers, and these skimmed up the trees very close to the one the little girls were hiding in and lighting torches applied these to the dry leaves of the trees. Several were even climbing up the one the little girls were hiding in, but Violet drawing her pistol struck the first man that appeared a stunning blow on the head, and the man fell fully fourty feet to the ground. At this occuravce the others hastily decended the general rushing to theone who hud ben fallen.
"Struck on the head with something."He cried;"Men fire a volley into that tree.
The soldiers obeyed and thelittle girls seing that the bullets whistled threatening ly closely to them and that the flames from theotter trees were catching the foliage of their hiding place clambered like monkeys from tree to tree, and hidden by clounds of smoke produced by the falling blazing foliagedscene c descended cautiously to the ground, and leaping their ponies which they easily found dashed off, just as several of the Glandelinians saw them and opened fire . Violet and her sister Jennie felt a stinging sensation in their right hands but not heeding the wounds they continued on.
"After hose kids." yelled general O'Donnell in a rage;"They are getting away.
FIRE."
Half a hundred men remounted heir horses, while two scoresof otherel others fired a terrific volley. Joices horse staggered and fell, and the then Jennie'sand Anne lines but the little girls escaping uninjured continued on plunging out of sight of the Glandelinians into a thick line of the brushwood. To the Glandelinians they had again mysterously disappeared, and the Glandelinians did not know what to make of it, as they had expected them as an easy prize, and though they had pursued children before and hundreds of times they had never gotten away even not a few yards, and the Glandelinians had pursued these six for nearly half a mile alea l already and yet didnot get them."

"Great kids sure enough. "Yelled the leader, dumfounded and amazed at the strange ways of the children;"Set the brush wood on fire, for they are hiding somewhere."

All of a sudden one of the Glandelinians shouted;

"There they go younder across a bridge to the east."

Atonce the Glandelinians rached raced after them dividing into two parties one going westward and the other southeastward so as to cut them off before they got acro across.

"Once they are between two fires they will have to give up as they will s rely be afraid to leap into the roaring lea river."Said the Glandelinian leadr;

"Go after them hard before they get acrosse"

The maneauver was completely successful but before they could get near enough to fire, and to the surprise and consternation of all the Glandelinians the little girls leaped to the railing without the slightest hesitation and made a dive into the water all six almost simultaneously and swimmingfiercely hid in the darkn darkest nook under the bridge.

General O'Donnel was furious. This was the fourth time the litt le girls so cleverly escaped him and he flr flew into a terrible rage at thid being outwitted in such a manner by mere striplings as he called them. Part of the force went back and began to search for the fugitives, while the rest guarded the bridge.

"They must be caught at all hazardes wither to massacre them or not."

Said O'Donnel;"I don'tknow who those kids are, but by their easiness of escaping me four times IM I'm getting mighty suspicious that the they are no mere children and that they are desperate beings and may cause harm to our armies. They must be caught at all hazards s I believe by the name of Neptune that they are the very Vivian girls I've hra he heard so much about."

About a score of the Omarians on horse back waded into the stream and under the bridge and started a deligent search but could not find the little girls at all. As they waded far beyond beyond the little girls saw a chance to slip away, unseen and so plunged into the water and quickly swiming to the schre and dodged into a thicket.....

A ga Glandelinian saw them and fired but the bullets flew wild..... Some of the other Glandelinians saw them also, and started on anothe chase followed by the others.

"T hose Glandelinians are bound to get us."Said Jennie;"We are in great peril indeed indeed. We ought not have avoided them Omarians for when they set upon their mind to do a bing they never gg give up unless compelled to by the desperation of their fugitives."

"We will have to do something deperate before long."Said Violet;"Let's make for t that flow flower field over younger. There may be some boats of hose there which we could throw among our persuers. The confusion caused by the hes would enable us to escape."

In a few minutes Violet and her sisters suddenly came upon a part of party of Abyssinkilins who dashed to t their rescue routing the Glandelinians... From the Abyssinkilian leader violet and her sisters learned that the Abyssinkilians knew of thegreat danger of the nation but that their advance was haried on account of his forge of Glandelinians which were personally under general cannonia.

CHAPTER NINE.... THE BATTLE OF RADCLIFFE .....

General Cannonia who had beenwith his body guard at Clifftonia assumed command after a terrible battle had raged at Lillian Radcliffefor four days, and in which the Glandelinians had been pressed back for miles. Ithad however during the pro ceeding days rew required etornice efforts to push them further on and every hour had witnessed tremendous and disasterous charges. On the fourth day the mighty contest with all its pot pent up fury burst on Radcliffe and fortunately for the Abyssinkilian reinforcements , more reinforcements of Concentinians arived from the north on the eve of the general struggle. For scores of times victories on i either side rocked back and forth amid the most horrible carnage,the tremendous cannonading and musketry crashes of the battle made a noise as if to defy the very fury of Hell,and which had never paused and the whole batle field which extended for nearly a hundred miles in length reaped with burning villages and trees, and which was one one smashed tin the dead and wounded of both sides. Time and again the opposing forces had crushed and mangled their armes armies against each other amid the supreme and exceeding fury of damanation, and for a time for the Abyssinkilians whose right wing had been three times annihilated but reformed by reinforcements, the victory seemed to hangon the fl balance.

Though not so long in detail it was a mighty battle, and nev more sanguniary that Fmminies Run and the entire losses for weeks were unknown. General Morton aline on the side of the Glandelinians a brother of the Glandelinian commander Joe Kline had been mortally wounded in the afternoon when the battles fury seemed to make a hell out of the very atmp atmosphere.

Cannonca had launchedthe heaviest assaults but in vain. Each attacking column had met with complete decimination or destruction and at theheight of the contest Cannonia himself had been wounded seriously. Yet the bat le had continued for three more days . Over six million Glandelinians had been killed in the terrible struggle during theose four days and over thirty million had ben wounded or taken prisoners making a loss of 36,000,000 alo altogethe and not long after five million more had been taken prisoners making 41,000,000.

Poor Lil Violet and her sisters though not in it had witnessed this hor ible herculean contest between armes of 80,000,000 on both sides in which both sides had lost almost equal numbers in killed and wounded alone which proved several weeks later to be only five million on both sides, though losses in prisoners totalled worse than predicted above for the Glandelinians alone.

It was found out that whole Glandelinian army numbered 100' I 00'000 100,000,000 and the Glandelinians had fully lost fourty one million nine hundred thousand in prisoners.

The battle field itself resembled the worlds end, or the world on fire , and horrible was the desolation exposed to view. And in the midst of all this horrible slaughter, the little girls hadspent their their time in soothing the fevered brows of the wounded, moisting inflamed lips, teaching the tongues of aven the wounded Glandelinians w which had reeked with insult and slander against christians and God, the wondrous language of devine love, carrying the frag rance and freshness of a spring morning to the heavy hearted, and the beauty of peace to the faces distorted with the last agony. From the dawn of that bloody memoral day untill the ruddy sun becam began to disappear behind the bat e smoke clouds from the appalling scenes of carnage t he little girls courageously plied their aids along the fringe of the str gle lines of battleand whispered their sublim sublime mes sage message from one cold ar of the wounded Glandelinians to another and nursed their wounds as well as tohse of the fallen purplocoats.....

As the battle had swept onhuman misery was left in mountainious heaps behind.As the little girls attended to the wounded they wished for one thousand lips and hands.

The first steps of the bloody evening pierced the gloaming like points of flame , when the little girls paused before an officer who lay limp on the shell burned turft. Blood issued thickly from a bullet hole in his neck while he writed feebly shadows concealing the upper parts of his face. His splendid gold fringed epaulettes begrimed with dust and blood of the field emphasized his wretchness. For all his rank he was now indeed as lowly as the least of them or of his fallen soldiers more f/ flotsam brown up by the great tide of battle. Jennie bent low to staunch the flow of blood from the wound and lightly brushed aside the dark mattered strands of hair from the damp forehead. A storm of shells and shrapnell whizzed by spattering its crimson glamour in every direction. In the meantime the uncertain wave of the mighty battle which had surged to the left of the place where the offic office had fallennow began mightily to roll ba back. The deafening medley of shots groans shrieks and wails be med nearer, Night was being rent with great flashes of fire and the flash of drawing sabres. The mad swath of battle was now almost upon the little girls ready to snatch them in its frightful d eddies. At last conscious of their extreme peril the little girls seeing that the man was dead fiercely threw themselves out of theway of the on coming battle but again it swi shifted and they were caught in its mad whirlpool.....

The artillery fire of the Glandelinians was so effective that the assulting columns of the Angelinians were compelled to recede, and every time thepurple waves debouched from their trenches they met with fierce machine gun fire from the enemys strongest position also being subjected to a murderous infilading salvos of Glandelinian field guns from Lilliand villages.

Angelinian prisoners and wounded agreed that the Glandelinian artillery fire had never been so deadly. Imagine scores of batteries ranging from the Glande /linian mountian guns to the monste howitzers , crousotte, centemeters and twelves inches all at once rending the air with a terrific hellish clamor raining thousands of shells upon every h yard of the christian advancing lines during the first day of the batle. During the action which began on the left wings of the foe on the first day when general Buchanan Stanlys men made the attack on Buchanan Stanleys christian columns many sections of the countercharging christian and Abyssinkilian armies recieved an average of three hundred thousand thousand shells in three hours of the series of the assaults in which the whole wooded regions of the battle line for scores of miles were completely leveled to the ground amid the seething storm of hells destruction.

From the frightful batle three brooks had disappearedhaving been damaged in half a dozen places while the crest of Killiano hills had been blown away to the depth of sixty nine feet. On the second day of the battle after an all nights furious furious bombardment the Abyssinkilian armies under Buchanan Stanely made fifteen tremendous assaults upon the the Masonic linesin heavy mass but the christian lines were smothered by a storm of steel for six hours and being repeuled met annihilation in repelling an attack Stanley being killed. A new right wing was formed by reinforcements and these repelled to the last man a storm of bloody assaults made by the Omarians who though they slaughtered this new wing and t ook the impregnable trenches south of Valeron they suffered sanguinary losses and even al could not hold them on reinforcements ten times their number literally hammered them o t with ten tre and un onslaughts after fighting for a whole day. When night fell the last of the Glandelinian columns were being thrown back th by the Abyssinkilians who fought with indomitable tenacity against an enemy twice their strength. At the same time at other points of theline the Abyssin kilians attacked the Masonic lines fronting illian with indomitable violence and despite the torrent of fire from the Glandelinians on the heights the Abyssinkilians fought their way to the second line of works this movement jeaorpdiix kn g the enemys extreme right grand division untill more Glandelinians came upon them led by Halefleur who after twelve hours sanguinary fightingdrove the Abyssinkilians out with awful losses. On the tthird day another formidable wing on the right of the Abbiecannian line of Abyssinkilians having been formed made a massive at ack on the Masonic lines but legions of the Abyssinkilians werecmassacred by the fire of the Glandelinian art illery and machine guns. Wave after wave of the Abyssinkilian infantry broke to pieces against the Mason ic lines and tim e after time were expelled by dashing counter attacks of Mc-Hollest inians who re duced the mighty attacking forces to mere skelatons, the christians having lost most of their officers and three quarters of their men. Three time during the fright wing almost met annihilation on this day alone on ly to be reinforced and to go to it again.

On the fourth day having made preparatio s during the night Cannonas launched a general assault which caused the batle to assume such a fury as to ruin nature itself. The battle had almost been won by the Abyssinkilian center being broken to pieces and the left out to pieces , when Cannonias fell severely wounded inside the very christian lines though he was rescued by his own men.

This caused a withdrawal of most of the Masonic lines the Glandelinians having again suffered a crushing defeat.

However a few days after this great battlewhen the crippled christain army though victorious in the battle was compelled to retreat news came in that Vivianiania being in apprehension of the many Glandelinian armies had receded into Glande northern Calverinia. Gushaum Manley had resigned his commission of these armies who had fought with the Abyssinkilian armies and also taken com command of armies in Calverinia and he wax now persuad by certain Abbiecannian or Calverinian and Abyssinkilian armies for a certain distance where o t to his surprise his flight i was intercepted by Angelinian armies marching from the nort and northeast. He was inclined to wage a battle against these Angelinians but hi s weary and famished army stood no chance against the fearful odds around them and to prevent further bloodshed, Gushaum again resigned his command and general Hamford was compelled to surrender his army. Bells were ringing triumphant salutes and boundless joy th throughout the Angelinian army hailing this event as one of the wars greatest accivements. Violet and her sisters who had been captured by the Glandelinians during the batle of Radcliffe had been retaken by the Abyssinkil ians when the Glandelinians surrendered. This indeed was a terrible blow to general Manleyas he had expected the Glandelinians to win, and who had taken up second command of armies after resigning twice this time taking com mand of the armies at Jule Calliz Calverinia.

But inspite of this great accivement of the war cucsan for the christ ians in the north seemed as yet uncertain. The battle of radcliffe was one of the most des de' decisive batt les of the war thevictory being so complete, that general Johnston Manley urged all the Glandelinian armies in Calverinia to fight with redoubled fury. The Angelinian pope had also urged Vivianiato abandon the campaign and to sue for peace, he declaring to even general Vivian that it was a hopeless struggle and to continue it would only bring on further bloodshed an d probably drag on fatal consequences. He also told general Vivian that the Glandelinian armies were inconceivably bigger, and a so were anger to repay Angelinia for starting thewar on her, and that the horrible storms of devastations already wrought was a great sign, and that the Glandelinians would probably lay waste to the wholesation to revenge their own terrible losses and that it was best for him to sue for peace before too late.

"Thechristin christian armies are badly weakened by to their losses while the strongGlandelinian nation aided by their neighboring states are more stronger and could sweep all before hem with overwhelming numbers."

Vivianis felt like taking the Popes advise wo but general Vivian would not hear od of it. He delared that the Pope must be geting cold feet, that Angelinia could yet be conquered and that to give up now would mean theend of them all . So the greatest of wars was to go on without any interminat ion.

CHAPTER ELEVEN... .".".".".//

ON THEIR WAY TO THE CHRISTIAN LINES.....

They had not walked far across the flower s trewn meadows when t hey came upon a fine broad road leading tward the southeast, and winding gracefully amon g the pret ty green hills.

"That way said a little girl whose name was Dorot hy Jane"Just be the direct ion of general Vivianias army who they said won a bat tle at Billian Radcliffe. We had better follow the road untill we meet some one or come t o a house.I hope t hough none of those Glandelinians are around.It was said t hey wasn't bec ause bec ause they had been defeated."

"It's good to be able to get into a friendly territory"remarked a nn who was with them"For when we saw the battle lines of the enemy only yes terday so c lose to this neighborhood they were so thick and their attacks so fierce I didn't b lieve the christians could win a single offensive again st t hem."He warbled a tune as merrily as any bird.

"You'll look more natural wi when you change your uniform in t he christian lines too"said Dorothy, happy in seeing her friends so happy. Polyanna another girl friend(these are not girlscouts) was dancing ahead in her usual sprightly manner, whirling gaily along the smooth , le level road untill s he passed from sight around the curve of one of the low foothills . Suddenly they heard her exclaim oh"as she appeared again, running tward them at full s~~peed~~ speed.

"What's the matter Polly?"asked Dorothy perplexed and also a lit tle afraid. However there was no need for the little girl to answer for quickly turning the bend in the road there came advancing tward them but on foot a uniformed boy and girl eadh each about the age of at least nine years.Dorot hy rec ognized them however for she though not a girlscout had lots of them as h r friends and ac quaintances.

"Oh Jane Melford, and Jack Saunders ."cried Dorothy runnin forward.When she came to him the boy embraced the little girl in this arms,cand kissed her cheek with his lips.

"Oh Billin a"cried Dorothy in anglad voic e, and t hey hugged eac h other.The others were curiously crowding around the group, and t he girl said to them,

"It's Jane Melfort, Billins and Jack Saunders, and Oh I am so glad to see them again for a third girlscout had come immediately after.

"Welcome to our army."said Jack.Dorothy sat right down in the road, t he t hree child scouts beside her.Said Jane;

"Dorot hy Dear,I've some wonderful news to tell you."

"Tell it quick Jane dear"said the girl.

Jane was go n going to start when suddenly Dorothy said;

"Wait a minute dear.I've got to in t roduce you all first .That 's manners girls.This"turning to her traveling c ompanions"is my boyscout friend Master Jack Saunders.He is a captian of a boyscout regiment."

"Can he command more than one regiment at one time!"asked her own companion.

"He can I suppose.But he works wit h the boy and girlscouts just lovely, and Jack was a good friend to me once, and saved my life--and his friends Jean Saunders life too."

"Is he really a boy scout capt ian."asked Henry Wright a little boy companion looking hrd at the boy and girlscout s as he never saw one before in is life.

"Surely he is.She turned to Jack and said politely."Master Jack,these are my new friends, a man who t helped escape from Glandelinians who besieged a plant y in was in, and Polly Anna his little daughter, and his little son."

The boyscout ca tian bowed low, removing his purple and red colored cap as he did so."

"I'm very glad to meet Dorothy's friends, who too must therefore be my friends." And these little girls are his friends Jane Melfort and Whilma Jrans"continued Dorot hy intrudicing the two little girlscouts, and they all bowed to them in turn.

"I've such wonderful news"said Jane.

"what is it dear!"asked the girl.

"I've added out ten uhundred of the lovliest girland boyscouts you ever saw.They are new recruits and will belong to the purroughe when they are trained well enough."

"Oh how nice.And where are they Jane!"

"I left them in the recruiting camp.But they are beauties I assure you, and all wonderfully clever.And their names are also Dorothy amongs t the girls."

"Which one !"asked the girl.

"Fourteen of them:"replied Jane.

"That's strange..But I am just dying to see them Jane"said Dorothy eagerly."But

"But tell me my friends, how did you happen to be here in t his territory and not riding your horses, and the first of all to meet us."

"I'll tell you"answered Jak Saunders"Princess Violet, saw you while out on one of her scouting t ours , and knew you were coming here, so she sent me and the two little girls to welcome you, as they or she at least c uld not come herself, and invites you to come straight for the Vivianite camp.They are too busy wit h t heir frequently going to their chool to come themselves as they don't want to waiste either their own time or their teachers, for they are preparin to learn a lot of things with which they can hope to frustrate the enemy in the future.They are shocked wit h the way affairs is turning out, and too do you know that t he big and magnificent dty of Big Girl Knool is in danger."

"Have heard of it "said Dorothy,"and I'm glad we have come to be there where we can see things right.I have wished I could become a girlscout but I've been told I would hav to be regorganized and that would take a lot of pull.Is it far from here to the christian encampments and the "vivanites."

"Far enough, but then not very far."answered Jack"and we have plenty of time as t here are no enemies in this territory."Too many of out our girl and boyscout patrols out and the Glandelinians are sore afraid of them.To night we will stop at the encampment of general Plain Nightlinger, and to morror we'll arive at the "Vivianite encampment."We c an't waiste much time however as the army has been on a retreat and only halted to day."

"Goody we can be there."cried Dorothy."I'd like to see general Nightlinger as I heard he is a great fighter.Is he on a retreat with Vivianna."

"No he has not been in no battle yet.The vivanites are wit h him now for the time being.The other child scouts are with Emperor vivian ."

"How is the general."

"He is fine"said Jane."He is waiting at his headquarters to welcoke welcome you Dorothy, but he couldn't come with us because he had to remain in camp."

"Well then"said Dorothy,"let's start on and we can talk more as we go."

They proceeded on their journey in a friendly group, for Polly had discovered that the boy and girlscouts were very good and therefore was no longer afraid of them.Little Jim was also reassured and took quite a fancy to the boy and girlscouts.He held fast to James hand as he trudged along the road, while Dorothy walked on t the ot her side of her old boyscout friend, and the ot her girlscouts followed on behind. olly once more joyiously danced ahead.The soldier friend was left towalk behind, but he didn't seem to mind that a bit and whistled merrily or looked curiously upon the pretty scenes as they passed and wished that such a thing as a war was only a dream.At last they came t o a long but slight rise of ground, from which the advanced encampments of general Plain Night Lingers army could be seen, its tents of purple red and yellow showing magnificently under the rays of a declining sun.

"How pretty."exclaimed Dorothy."I've never seen a christian encampment before."

"You can see it now."said Wilma."All those tent s you see ext end for many miles and see that flag fluttering on a pole in front of a large tent with the design of a flag t co.That is the headquarters of general Plain Night Linger."

"Is it a toy?"asked little Jim, softly.

"No dear"answered Dorothy."It's better than a hat.It's t he dwelling of a great general."

As they continued on suddenly from two sides of a road half a dozen boys couts quickly surrounded them with leveled rifles but looked ast on ished when they saw Jak, Jane and Whilma with them.

"Stop George Toto.Stop this minute!"commanded Jane."Can't you see that these are my friends ."

The boyscouts were taken aback by their mistake, and had only the t hree been together they would have done them a michief, for they st op all strangers on the road without having passes from entering the christian lines.

"What a scare I had"cried Dorothy, glaring at the surprised boyscouts.

"Who is that man, and the two littl e girls and the boy then?"asked Tot o."Have they a pass into the christian lines."

"Yes I have"said Dorothy.

"Then pardon my mistake"said the boyscout. "But we have to do t his you know. No strangers can enther ent er the christian lines without a pass signed by the Princesses."

"What terrifying boyscouts"said little Jim looking at t hem in fright for they did look fierce.

"They are not terrifying to good little boys."replied Jane,"but they have t o be t o the Glandelinians."Yes George I can prove these are my friends."she added, for they were invited to come here by the Princesses.They sent us t o bring t hem in, and here's our proof."and she showed him the invitation."

He only gave it a glance and nodded his head as if he unders tood.

"But how is it you are all on foot."said t he boy.

"We didn't n eed them for that short dis t ance."

"Nonsense"said George.

"It isn't nonsense at all. We don't want to use up our horses for a few miles."

"Well they can pass"said Toto smiling.But "But pardon my mistake."

The ground around general Night Lingers ten t was a large opensquare.The ten t was like a flag in strps stripes and colors on both sides.They reac hed t he grand entrance o to the huge tent, and the general himself came running out of the ge tent entrance t o embrace little Dorothy, and give her a very glad welcome for he knew her well and had not seen her for a long time..He welcomed her friends as well and the little girl Polly Anna he declared to be the loveliest vision his eyes had ever rested on .(he had never yetseen violet and her sisters).He patted Jims curly head tenderly for he was unusually fond of lit tle c hildren(good ones) and turned to their father and shook both his hands at t he same time.General Plain Night Linger, who was also known throughout the Christian country,(and greatly feared by the enemy) was c ertainly a remarkable person. He was well form and stout, tall and handsome looking with a great black beard and lon g bobbed hair.Inspre Instead of a lavander uniform he wore t he Abyssinkilien Scarlet. every one of his generals loved him, he loved every one of his followers and had said once"I'm really a great fighter, a greater and better fight er than my friends think I am but happy day that for a long period the vivienite girl and boy scouts have voluntgered to lend me aid for my benefit..Since c t hey were with him he was as happy therefore as the day was long.The general was proud of his great army, and showed his visitors through all the rooms of his head quarters.Every bit of furniture he told them however had been c aptured by the girlscouts and given to him as a present.

"I suppose"said he"there are no clever children in all the world so far t han the boy and girlscouts of the various commands.But it would be hard to match the Burrough Vivianit es, wouldn't it , little Jane?"to Jane Melfort.

"Very hard "replied the child gravely.""ot to my idea of it , far from it but to the enemy.Ten of them can see me alone and they'll run."

"It must have cost a lot of work to originate so many boy and girls int o scouts."remarked the man who had been moved with his children by Dorothy.

"There's no work to it."cried Jack."That a queer idea sir.Did you suppose us Abbiennian children are so vulgar as to take too much time to organize organize into companies of boy and girlscouts.We get our schooling while we work and fight .The Princesses get their schooling first by the best military t eachers t hey select themselves, and they in turn teach us."

"Why not?" asked the man."Children of that age usually have hard time t o learn don't they."

"If we would take so much time todo these things, t hen we should be no better than the children outside of Abbiennia."declared Jane Melfort ."Fortunat ely us Abbiennian children have a great gift of learning we like schoolin g where children outside our country hate school and go because they have t o.We have no dislike for school, and we go to school if we have to make up our own schools, for what one wishes the others all try to give him or her in order to help each ot her out, and n o one in all Abbiennia cares to go around wearing dunce caps like so many children in other countries do.A nation that does not like schooling cannot hope to man over other countries.We love t o go to school and work and fight the enemy at the same time."

"Good"c ried the man, greatly pleas ed to hear t his."I though a foriegner also despise laziness.The land of Abbiennia is surely the most favored land in all the world, and even despite the war ts its people are the happiest and only look on the war as something of a great game and wish to join in.I should like to live here always .Were it not for my extreme old age I would like to fight the enemy t oo.But they won't take me because of my age."

General Plain Night Linger listened with respectful attention.

"If you can prove to the Vivian Girl Princesses despite your age that you are able to fight and are honest and true, and worthy of our love and friendship,you may indeed not only live here all your days, and be as exciting in adventures and as happy as we are but they may let you join the army too.Indon't believe you are t oo old yet."

"I'll do my best to prove that."said the man earnestly.

"And now"continued the general, yo"You must all go to your rooms , and pre pare for dinner, which will presently be served in the grand dinning dining room.I am sorry my good man that I can not offer you a change of clothing, but everybody here wears only uniforms, and you couldn't put that on as no one not being a soldier is allowed to wear one without the most special permission, and I even cannot get the permission to give you one."

"I care little about dress."said the man indifferently.

"So I should imagine."replied the general with true politeness.They were shown to their rooms and permitted to make such toilets as they c ould, and soon they assembled again in the grand dining hall.Indeed they all had a very good dinner.Little Little Jimmie looked curiously at t he general,"for the general altough he had prepared so fine a feast for his guests, ate not a mouthful himself, sitting patiently in his place to see to it that they were well and plent ifully served."what pleased little Jimmie most about the dinner was the military orchestra or band that played sweet music while the company ate.They played so n i cely the "All Abbieannia Forever Marc h, that the children could not resist dancing to it.After meals the little girls danc ed gracefully to the music, and the general was so delighted that he clapped his hands a again and again.Altoget her it was a merry meal, and they spent the evening telling stories, and the next morning left the splendid tent and set out upon the road to t he chr stian army under general Vivianie.The soldiers all assembled in long lines on each side of the road and cheered the boy and girlscouts as they marched away, and it was easy to see that they all loved them dearly. General Blain Night linger, and general Vivianie were indeed good friends. Yet they were not so much alike as one would think.For general Blain Night Linger was more alive to everything that goes on, and usually moved his army anxif it was a a steam roller, while t he ot her general was tall and angular, the other short and stout.The enemy did not at all fear general Vivin Vivienie and would even gladly court him int o a fight for h e seemed nothing to be licked, but the "Machine man" as general Blainnight Linger was called the enemy dreaded to even meet , for to move against him with succ ess was as impossible as to try to cut down a hill wit h your hands. Yet bot h nevertheless were pu popular with all the christian generals in the various armies bec ause both were so trustwort hy, reliable and t rue, both were sure to do what they were expected to do whet hey they won a fight or not, at all times and in all circumstances.That early morning t he travelrs travelers reached a large field of pumpkins, but as c ould be seen most of the pumpkins wer were ruined ot or destroyed and t he plants pulled up.Just before they ent ered upon the field they saw many little mounds that looked like graves with a pretty headstone with a cross to each one of them.

"what is this?"asked susan in wonder.

"It's one of the graveyards of dead children."replied Jac k Saunders,

"But I thought girl and boyscouts were so careful that few of t hem were ever killed. "she said.

"Nor are there many killed."he answered.

Dorothy rav ran over to the little graves, and read the words engraved upon the , leading tombstone which had a crucifix surmounting it .It read as follows;

"Here lies the bodies of ninty child slaves who by the enemy two months ago were murdered in a fashion not fity fity fit to be seen."

"Poor child slaves"Sighed Dorothy."I'm sorr y so many of them are being killed, s for I hoped to see so many of them rescued and set free."

"So you shall"declared Jack Saunders"Since we childscout officers have been making up l plans to raid successfully every childslave plac e we find and rescue them at all costs.We won't give quarter to any holdin g slaves either.Tha t is the motion we seconded at the meetings.But come with me to general Nemo(s headquarters , for he is in command of this section of the army."

They walked to a monsterous bit rounded tent, the sides of it lookin g like a tri colored flag.There was a long stove pipe running t hrough the cen ter.They were admittedcby the sentry, and Dorothy before enterin g looked in.Seated on a bench was a man uniformed in lavander uniform except his vest was yellow.This general just now not busy was engaged in snapping slippery pumpkin seeds with his fingers, trying to hit a target on the o ther side of the tent room with t hem.By the appearance he had succeeded several times and did again as she looked in.He did not know he had visitors until dorothy exclaimed;

"Why its general Francis Nemo himself.

He turned and saw the,,, and at once ere forward to greet t he little C alvarinian girl, the boy and girlscouts, and to be introduc ed to t heir new friends. Little Jim Reed was at fire t noticed why with t his quaint looking Abyssinkilian general, but his face was so jolly and smilin g,that the boy gr ew grew to like him.

"I thought a while ao ago, that your big army was advn advancing tward Big Girl Knool in three parts"said Dorothy."But now I see t hat you are still in the same posit ion."

"Not quite the same my dear, for most of my army is on the marc h and I with this part and Blain Night Lingers moves to morrow.I've a new division of Abyssinkilians, and this is the fourthone that has arived since general Vivianana firs t reinforced me."

"What became of the other divisions!"ak asked Jack Saunders.

"They are advan c ing with Vivienie or to reinforce Vivianie to keep him from cont inuing his retreat .General Vivianana had sent me a number of new division s, and as I'm remaining here just now with t he larg st part of my army I am s till st rong enough to s top any foe army that dares t o go against me, no matter what their size may be and with Night Linger my assistant I have not hing to fear.Once we had a dr eadful time to stop the enemy near here so I was obliged to fight the enemy in t heir own chosen position a lit tle longer than was strictly safe.But after this and experience,I resolved to keep t he bigges t part of my army with me on all occassion s , so as never to be caught again without any s trong reinfor cement nearuby."

"Isn't it dangerous to advance tward Big Knool just now!"asked Dorothy.

"Not very.There isn't much left of the enemy who had opposed us you see, and it will be a long time before Manley comes up yet."

"I think you are a better fighter than you used to be even though in the past you was very excellent."said Jane Melfort ."The las t Glandelinian general who fought again st you was a sp stupid one."

"He knows me now."was the reply .

"Are you really going to advance a for Big Girl Knool!"asked Joan Saun ders.

"Yes "said he "I wouldn't miss the chanc e for anythin g."

"Why!"

"Big Girl Knool is my home town and my parents are there you know.I'll follow you to Emperor Vivians army to morrow, where we shall meet again.I can 't go to day, because I have to prepare my army for a rigorious advance.But give my love and respec t to the "Darlings of the Nation", and tell them I'll be there in time to reinforce the christian armies mobolizat ion there."

"We will"she promished, and t hen they allll left him, and resumed t heir journey. The n eat yellow red and lavander tents of the boy and girlscouts were now t o be seen at quite a distance away.Hedges of evergreen brodered the broad highway , and the distant frms showed the devastation caused by t he wildes t of wars ever thought of.The nearer the travelers c ame to the great city of encampments of g Emperor (general) Vivians army, the more t hicker the sc enery of desolation began to manifest itself, and they crossed many bridges over the once sparkling st reams and rivulets that watered the lands but which were now discolored and filled with floating debris and wreckage of every descript ion.As they walked slowly along t he man who was accompanied by his two c hildren said t o t he boyscout Jack;

"What sort of a general is general Blain Night Linger."?

"Nothing much is known of his history."was the answer"but he was placed in c ommand of t his army by Violet and her sisters.Violet and her sisters had then remained with the general for some months, for it was before she organized our regimen ts of child scout s, and while the enemy was transforming southern Angelin ia St ate in to a sc ne scene of desolation.Well while general N Blain Night Lin ger was gone to attend a con ference held by their fawther, Violet ad her sisters he t hen gave the command to general Vivianie and afterwards transfered general Night Linger to be Emperor Vivians second hand a good commision indeed.Then at that time violet and her sisters returned to their own city for a furlough."

"Where did the general go after that!"asked the man much interested in the story.

"No one knew.Afterwards violet and her sisters used their own organized ar i armies which they led in person to preven t the enemy moving on Mombi but as soon as the enemy disappeared from that territory, the armies were trans ferred t o the mobolization camps of Dorothy Gale c ity where they are yet ."

"It's too bad that the armies were moved away."remarked the man"It would be handy t o be at Agelinia Agathia in c ase the enemy would come there again."

"I am not so sure of that sir."answered Jac k."If Dorot hy Gale city cannot hold against an enemy army neither can Angelinia Agat hia.Some months ago t he christian commander in charge of the armies at Dorothy Gale was killed by enemy sharpshooters while out scouting.Dodo Dorothy Gale city had often often been menaced bh by the enemy,cand all the population have gone t o t he fortif iations for protection and brought away everything of value.It happened once that a Glandelinian army also menanced Mombi city and also Jessica, but one of the Glandelinian armies was routed without ewn a battle, but nevertheless the threatening s ituation down in that territory is a great trial t o violet and her sisters, and makes them a lot of trouble."

"I've seen in the papers of the Glandelinians also menac ing Polychrome t own"said t he man nodding,"But never heard of a battle raging there yet ."

"Well"continued Jack, any of the older wise owled Glandelinian generals have an idea that Angelinia Agathia is the many best situations for them t o menance but nothing has happened yet .But once t o t he horror of violet and her sisters a massacre of children occured near Angelinia Agat hia.Therefore t he situation down there for them is a great ttrial.That keeps them worried."

"why ?"sked asked the man.

"Well if the enemy ever capt ures Angelin ia Agathia t heir own o home t own then is in ihis possession.It's a very unusual affair alt oget her, and violet and Violet and her sisters are sorry they couldn't send big armies to either places.

They decide to send general Concentinian Aron burg when he can go.every day I have heard they se an news that they can get of Angelinia Agathie."
"I should think that something should be done about that."s aid Dorothy."
"Well nothing can be done just yet.Therefore I believe it is a good thing that a strong army is at Dorothy Gale as so far the enemy c annot so far cause any more t rouble in that ter territory."
"Perhaps you are right."said the man thoughtfully.At t en o c loc k in t he morning they stopped at a mess tent where it delighted t he Mess Sergeant to be able t o give t hem a good luncheon. any of the soldiers here knew Dorot hy, having seen her when she was in the army camp before, and they treated t he little girl with as much respec t as they did the boy and girlscouts, because she was a friend of the powerful Vivin Vivian Girl Princ ssses.They had not proc eeded far after leaving this mess hall before coming to a high bridge over a broad river.This river Jac k informed t hem was close to thet territory of Pir In the Girl Knool.The city its elf and the c hristian armies concentrating there was still a great way off.From t he top of the high bridge they could see far away, the magnificent magnificent encampments of the Vivinite purrough chiles child scout s.The man drew a deep breath of awe and amazement, for never had he dreamed that such a grand and awe in spiring encampment could exist, even in the war torn lands of Calverin ia.
Little Pollyanna was so very pleased, that her violet eyes sparkled like amethyst and she danc ed away from her companions ac ross the bridge and into a group of big high pine trees lining both the roadsides.These trees she stopped to look at with pleasure and surprise, for their leaves were bigger needles than observed on ordinary Christmas t rees.
"Sat her ought to see these best beaut iful big Christmas trees"she murmured"T hey are even much bigger than the Christmas trees in our own yard."
Then she gave a start of terror, for around the t urn of t he road came swiftly toward her on ehorseback a band of girlscouts.Thinking they were enemies as they were uniform d a little different than boy and girlscouts she had seen she was too frightened to scream or stir, and stood still with a wildly beatin g heart, untilll Dorot hy rushed past her and with a glad cry t hrew her arms around the neck of one of the girlscouts who had dismounted, hugging and kissin g her with evident joy.
"Oh I'm so glad to see you again."c ried the little girl."And Mildred Maxwell too."How fine you are both lookin g.Are you well and happy!"
"We certainly are"dorthy Dorothy."answered the first girlsc out in a voice that sounded pleasant and , kind."and we are great ly pleased to have you come to our encampments.It's going to be a grand affair this advanc e to Big Girl Knool I promise you."
"There will be lots of excitement at that plac I believe"remarked Mildred Maxwell."But of course we boy and girlscouts are going to be awfully busy. "
"Is the christian army there still in good ord order!"asked Dorothy anxiously.
"Yes, and it is getting bigger"answered Mildred."But I can imagine nothing more unpleasant than to see an enemy army there, as that city is my Home town."
"You are foolin g me"said Dorothy with a laugh."I don't believe the enemy c ould capture Big Girl Knool if the wicked world was to help.Come here Polly"she called"and be into introduced to myfriends."
"Polly advanc ed rather shyly as the girlscouts looked very formidable and fiere fierce.
"You have some queer friends, Dorot hy."she said.
"The queerness doesn't matter so long as they are friends."was t he answer."This is one of the highest leaders of the Burroughs Angeline Jennings."
The girlscout leader bowed with great dignity to little Polly.
"You are very lovely my dear"said she."It's too bad you are t oo young t o be a girlscout.I hope we shall be loving friends when we are better acquainted."
"And t his is Mildred Maxwell"conin ued Dorothy."Her home town is t he city that is in danger from the enemy."
"You are right."said Mildred"And I'll be ruining my reputation if I will let the enemy take yt t- u it.And come t o t hink of it I don't believe Miss Polly is too young to be a girlscout if she wanted to be one."
Re others now came up, and the refugee men greeted the new comers cordially. Little Jimmie Red Reed yelled with fear when Susan first took his hand, and led him tward the gr eat girl and boyscouts butwth alittle girl insist ed they were kind and good, and so the boy must cred up ourage en oubn, t o shake t heir han ds and pat the heads of some of their horses, after th-y had s poken to him gent ly and he had looked into their intelligent eyes his fear vanished en tirely and he was so delighred with the Burrough girl and boys couts t hat he wanted to keep close to them.As for the refugee man , he might have been afraid if he had met the squadron of boy and girls cout s alone, but so many were the marvels in the holy land of Calverinia, that he was no lon ger easi y easily s urprised, and Su Dorothys friends hip for the boy and girls couts was enough to assure him they were safe companions as long as he was no Glandelin ian.It is not nec essary to say that Jane Malfort and the others knew thes e child scouts well, so they were y merely bade them good day an d asked t heir healt hs, and inquired about violet, and her sisters. Now it was seen that the boy and girlscouts had with them two hors es, with what appeared to be golden blankets on t hem and golden saddles.The blan blankets on t he edges outside was dec orative decorated in s ded designs in clusters of sparkling diamonds while elsewhere on the inside in particular it was lined with a green and golden satin, and t he cushions of the saddles were of green plush embroidered in gold with a c rown underneath which was a monogram.

"Why they are two of the Vivian Girls special horses ."exclaimed Dorothy.
"Yes"said Angeline Jennings"They had recently been captured by the enemy these two magnificent horses but the Glandelinians "were glad to give t hem to me" espec ial y whether they wanted to or not.Besides violet and her sisters sent us to meet you here, for they feared you would be weary with your long ahy walk and they wished you to enter the child scout camp in a style becoming your exalted rank."
"What "cried Polly anna, looking at Dorothy Curiously."Do you belon g to t he Nobility.?"
"I sure do"said the child"Bec ause "she laughed"I'm one of the Princesses if you must know."y name is not really Dorothy.I assumed that name and met you on the return of my lone scouting tour.I'm Angeline Vivian, so you see I'm no girlscout.Do you like to be a girlscout Polly.If you do I'll try and get you in ."
"Yes Princess" answered Polly smiling.
"Well I'll see "Miss Jennie Turner for you."said Angeline."It 's kind of fun to be a Princ ess but I'm afraid not in these times.It would be better to be a Peace loving Princess and not a War Dog, don't you think so."
"Angeline, and Polly Anna, and little Jimmie are allyou ride on the ext ra horses we brought."said Angeline Jennings.
"Get on the hors es my dears."said Angeline and to the surpris e of all s he lift ed little Jimmie onto the golden blan atet one and leaped on behind. Lit tle Jimmie was delighted t o ride with no magnificent a olumn, and he told An e Angeline it made him feel like a little actor in a circus. As the faste strides of the hors es brought them nearer to the ity of child scout encampments every soldier bowed respectfully to the children soldiers, as well as t o An e Angeline and the rest with them(get yours hem)and the ot hers who were following behind. Jane Malfort who had secretly known Angeline all the time despite her disguise and assumed name rode alon gside her horse, and where she could tell Angeline more about her wonderful new numbersof recruits as they went on.So the grand column came finally to the outskirts of the encampment an d paused before the pickets while those in the foremost gave the counter sign and then were greeted as if they were the princesses themselves.Then there approachef approached them a cheerful looking boyscout, who wore large spectacles over his eyes not because he needed them(t here were no glasses to them) but just t o look dignified.Angeline in t roduc ed him t o her frinds as their aidecamp Mih Michael Henrt.The column passed then through the outer camps int into the main interior and into the streets of the great camp. Pollyanna exclaimed in rapture at the wonderous high colored beauty that met her on every side as they rode through this stately and imposing encampment, and viewed by thousands of gorgeiously uniformed boy and girlscouts of every size sizes though armed like brigands , the equal of which has never been discovered in reality, even in Oz,land Ozland or any Fairyland.Little Jimmie could only say "My " so amazing was the sight, but his eyes were wide open and he tried to look in every direction at t he same time so as not to miss anything. The refugee man was fairly astounded at what he saw, for the graceful and handsome tents every one of them were draped in many colored flags so splendid and valuable that in any part of the world any one of t he tents would have either been worth or made a fortune for its owner.There were countless numbers of boyscouts and girlscouts (off duty) in the Compan y streets, many of them buying milk and things at the Military Cant eens, all uniformed like those who were on the horses, the dresses being of yellow silk with purple strips and dots, the coats of those who were t hem of lavander satin or velvet and t heir heart shaped hats were the most curious sights of all for here the privates of the boys wore the hats in the same shape as the girls did.Their shoes were yellow, and the oats were embroidered in gilt designs and buttons.Better than even all this, all s eemed jolly, content ed and active, and full of freid freindliness and fun, t heir faces were smilin g and seemingly as free from care as if they were only dressed up for an occ asion and there was no war, and music and laughter might be heard on every side.
"Don't they work at all!"asked the man.

"To be sure they work and how."replied Angeline Vivian"This fair encampment of beautiful huge tents could be not erected or cared for without their own doing, nor could their uniforms and clothing look so clean if they didn't wash them.They go out scouting often, raid the enemys camps for food and vegetables and fight like tigers and tiger cubs .But no one can work more than half his or her time, and the children soldiers as these really are enjoy their labors as much as they do their play.They make look like as if they were only "dressed" for the occassion, but sir you and your little son and daughter could sure feel well protected here."Never in our knowledge has a boy or girlscout camp been attacked by the enemy. The enemy is afraid of them. Even if the whole christian line is attacked the enemy may attack these only by accident and Ha Heav n help the enemy if they do."

"It's wonderful"declared the man."I do hope the Prince cousin will let my little girl become a scout or girl soldier."

"We do not handle that as we haven't the time"said Angeline. "we leave that to Miss Angelinia Arabi Arenburg or Jennie turner to do the recruiting.I'll speak to either one of them on the first occasion.But of course if there are no vancancies here she couldn't be admitted in this camp.They'd have to transfer her somewhere else."

The column, winding through many broad company streets, the encampment growing the more large and imposing, paused before a building so vast and strong and elegant that even little Jennie guessed at once that it must be the headquarters of the Vivian Girls.The gates flew open as the column halted before it , and they urged their horses up a large yellow brick drive way to the front door of the building, and stopped short. Then they all dismounted.

"Here we are"said Ann Angeline, gaily and helped Jimmie from the horse. little Polly leaping down lightly after them for she knew how to ride a horse well, and they were greeted by an immense crowd of gorgeously dressed boy and girl scouts, who bowed low as the visitors mounted the steps.At their head was a pretty little girlscout of nine or so years, with golden hair, and violet eyes , dressed in a beautiful purple short coat and big rounded hat, with her yellow dress embroidered in green and violet and with silver dots.Angeline ran up to her with evident pleasure, and exclaimed;

"Oh Angeline Richee, I'm so glad to see you again.Where's my sisters?"

"In their room your Highness"replied the girlscout captian general demurely, for she was always the most favorite attendant of the Prince cousin next to Gertrude Analine."Your sisters wishes you to come to them as soon as you have rested and changed your disguise ,Prince cousin Angeline.And you and your friends and all the girl and boyscouts are to dine with them this evening in the widest company at rest ."

"When is the army going to advance for Big Girl Knoolf"asked Angeline Jennings herself.

"I decreed the day after to morrow myself"said Angeline."My sisters seconded the motion."

"And where's general Vivianne."

"He's gone gone into the Munchkin Territory to bring up the rest of his immense army and to give some aid to Vivianna so he won't retreat any more."replied Angeline Richee herself.""He returns to our army to night, at least he said he would try his best to make it sooner if possible."

By this time Jack Saunders, Jane Melfort and others, and the man refugee had arrived, and the boy and girlscouts horses had gone around to the back of the big wooden house.But little Polly stayed close beside Ann aline Angeline.

"Come in please"said Angeline Richees"It shall be our pleasant duty to escort all of you to the rooms prepared for your use."

The man refugee hesitated.Angeline had never known him him to be ashamed of his old country clothes before, but now that he was surrounded by so much magnificence and splendor the man felt sadly out of place.However Analine Angeline assured him, that all her friends were welcome at her own and her sisters headquarters, so he carefully started to dust his shoes with his handkerchief, but Analine Angeline and her friend Jane Melfort grabbed him under the arms and led him up the steps, and entered the grand shill hall after the others ..The highest of the girl and boyscout officers roomed at the headquarters of violet and her sisters whether it was a house or a tent, and

An geline Jennings in the houses always had the same room, whenever he visited violet,and her sisters, so these two went at one to remove the dust of the journey from their splendid uniforms and hats.Angeline had the same pretty suit of rooms that her sisters had but several boy and girlscouts walked ahead politely to show the way, although she could well find the room herself.She took little Jimmie with her because he seemed to small to be left alone in such a big house, but Angeline Richee herself ushered little Pollyanna to her apartments because it was easy to see that the little girl was also notiused to splendid houses , and was therefore nevertheless anyhow entitled to get it led to special attention.

The refugee man stood in the great hall, his hat in his hands, wondering what would bec ome of him.He had never been a guest in a fine building before; though in many other parts of the country he had been a guest so often that he could not remember how many times.And besides in the big, cold outside world far away from Holy Abbiecannie people did not invite poor men to their homes,and therefore he was very fortunate he had been in Abbiecannie.When the others left the great hall he eyed the splendidly dressed servant boyscouts and also girls couts of the Seven Princesses as if he expected to be ordered out, but one of them bowed before him as respectfully as if he had been a prince, and said ||

"Permit me sir to conduct you to your apartments."

The man drew a long breath and took more courage.

"Very well"he answered ."I'm ready.

Through the big hall they went, up the grand staircase, carpeted thick with velvet, and so along a wide corridor to a carved doorway.Here the girls coutsi paused, smiled sweetly and said with polite deference all

"Be good enough to enter sir, and make yourself at home in the rooms our Fair Princesses has ordered prepared for you.Whatever you see is for you to use enjoy and keep, for it willbe your own.The Seven Princesses dines at noon time and I shall be here in time to lead you to the drawing room, where you will be privileged to meet the lovely Vivian Girl Princesses just as they are and in no disguise whatever and in all their splendor.Is there any command in the meantime, with which you desire to honor me?"

"In one way there is if I had themnerve."said the man.

"What is that?"

"You and your kind are so good I'd give anything if I could embrace and hug you all."

"You may sir.She answered and threw her arms around his neck and he hugged her tightly saying at last "Such obliged.I wish I had many children of my own like you are."

He after releasing her, entered the room room and shut the door, and for a time stood in bewilderment, admiring the grandeur before him.He had been given one of the handsomest apartments in the most magnificent building and you can not wonder that his good fortune astonished and awed him untill he grew used to his surroundings.The furniture was upholstered in cloth of gold, with the royal crown embroidered upon it in scarlet yellow and purple.The rug upon the floor was so thick and soft that he could not hear the sound of his footsteps, and upon the walls war were splendid tapestries woven with such as as from the Holy Land.Books and ornaments were placed in decorative style and three pictures adorned one side of the wall, the Sacred Heart of Jesus and Mary, and of the Holy Family while on one end of the room stood a huge life sized crucifix, and the man thought he had never seen so many pretty things in one place and wondered how it was that the enemy never captured any of these for surely they were always in covered wagons when the army moved.but to try and capture the wagons containing these was suicide.In onecorner was a large Regenia music box, and in anot her was a table bearing a golden tray loaded with fresh ly gat herod fruit including lots of red cheeked apples. At the farther end of this charming room was an open doorway, and he crossed over to find himself in a bedroom containing more comfort s than he had ever before imagined.The headstead was of gold, and set with many brilliant diamonds and the coverlet had designs of per pearls and rubies sewed upon it. At the head and foot of the bed on the walls were two crucifixes and on the walls opposite were the same pictures as seen in the main room(the boom) And at one side of the bedroom was a dainty dressing room, with closets containing a large assortment of fresh clothing, and beyond this was the bath--a large room having a marble pool big enough for a hundred persons to swim in, with white marble steps leading down to the water.Around the edge of the pool were set rows of different diamonds as large as doorknobs while the water of the bath was clear as crystal.For a time the man gazed upon all this luxury with silent amazement .

Then he decided being wise in his way, to take advantage of his good fortune.He removed his shoes, and his old clothing, and bathed in the pool with rare enjoyment.After he had dried himself with the soft towels he went into the dressing room, and took fresh linen from the drawers, and put it on , finding that everything fitted him exactly.He examined the contents of the closets and selected an elegant suit of clothing.It was new and beautiful and he sighed with content ment to realized that for a time at least he could now be finely dressed.His coat was of rose de colored velvet, trimmed with gold with buttons of blood red rubies , and gold braid around the edges ..His vest was of satin, of a delicate cream color, and his knee breeches of rose velvet trimmed like the coat.Creamy stockings of silk, and slippers of rose color leat her with ruby buckles, completed his custom, and when he was thus attired he looked at himself in a long high mirro mirror with great admiration.

On a table he found a mother of pearl chest decorated with delicate silver vines and flowers of clustered rubies. The chest was not locked, so he opened it and was almost dazzled by the brilliance of the rich jewels it contained. After admiring the pretty things, he took out a fine golden watch hung with a big chain several handsome fingers rings, and an arm ornament of rubies to pin upon the breast of his shirt bosom. Having carefully brushed his hair and whiskers to make them look as neatly as possible, he breathed a deep sigh of joy and decided he was ready to meet the Vivian Girl Prince esses as soon as they sent for him. While he waited he returned to the beautiful sitting room and took several of the big red cherries to pass away the time and played the Music box. Meanwhile Angelina Vivian had dressed herself in her pretty yellow military inner gown of beautiful yellow silk embroidered with silver, but her lavender coat own and her crown, and put on blue and gold suit of satin upon little Jimmie Reed, who looked as sweet as a cherub in it. Followed by the boy, she hastened down to the splendid drawing room of the building, where seated in their best found chairs by a long beautiful table were her lovely sisters, waiting eagerly to welcome her return. After her cousinly sisterly greeting to them she occupied the heads one chair reserved for her. As voted by her sisters she was to rest to day as the head of them all. To morrow it would be Jennie's turn. They always did this.

The Royal and all the Historians of Abbiesandr, who if this story had been true are the finest and most intelligent writers in the world, and know all the big words in any language, have often tried to describe the rare dazzling beauty of the Vivian Girl Princesses but Girl Princesses and failed because no one could ever find words for it. No real writer in the whole world no matter who they are, and I'll put myself in the lead could describe their beauty if we saw them face to face, so of course I cannot hope to tell the readers how great was the charm of these little Princesses, when they had put all their dignities aside and appeared as their real selves, or how their loveliness can and did put to shame all the sparkling jewels the world ever seen and also magnificent luxury that the world ever possessed. What ever else was beautiful or dainty or delightful in itself faded to not hingness when contrast ed with the bewitching faces of the Vivian Girls, and it has often been said by those who know that no other ruler in all the world nor any children boys or girls or even women can ever hope to equal or ever will equal or even get go any where near to it the gracious charm of their manner lovelin ess and righteousness that equalled their features. Everything about violet and her sisters attracted one, even the more human ones to the enemy, and they inspired love, and the sweetest affection rather than awe or ordinary admiration. Angelina Vivian drew her arms around her little Sister Jennie and hugged and kissed her rapturiously, and little Jimmie smiled a happy smile and consented to sit on the soft cushioned chair close beside the prettiest of the princesses. This made the others smile.

"Why didn't you send me word you were going to have the army move for Big Girlknoll?" asked her sister, when the first greetings had been over.

"Didn't I!" asked Jennie, her pretty face dancing with merriment.

"Did you!" replied Angelina trying to think.

"Who do you imagine sister dear, send the scouts after you!" inquired Joie herself.

"Oh I never expected you to do that." cried Angelina.

"I and my sisters watched you from a high hill with the aid of our powerful field glasses all the way here" declared violet, "And thought and twice I thought we should have to come ourselves with a column of soldiers or girl and boy scouts to save you and transport you to our fair lines. Once when a party of Scoldiers caught you, and again when you reached the roaring Mic-hollester Run River. But the Refugee man was able to help you out both times, so I and my sisters did not interfere."

"Do you know who little Jimmie is!" asked Angelina.

"No I never saw him until you found him in the roads chased by the rascally Glandelinians, and then only through my field glasses."

"And did you send Jack Saunders to us!"

"No dear, he and his friends saw you and came to lead you into the camp."

"Well" said Angeline "I've promised a number of very good persons I know, that I would decide to have you invite them to the aid of our troop in our advance."

"We have already done that" retorted Catherine. "Because I thought it would please you to favor them."

"Did you invite general Kindernine!" asked one of the girls coutins.

"No he was too busy and I didn't want to interfere with his movements. When the enemy is threatening his territory the situation is not very good then, and it is better that he be able to remain where he is and watch all that the enemy generals do."

"I like the generals army." declared Jimmie gravely.

"But the enemy generals don'" Said Angelilie Vivian.

"Well there will be plenty to do at the most in g near Big Girl Knoll" promished Joie e Vivian "so I have an idea that the little boy will be good and scared when he sees even a small part of the battle."

Susan Farrol was in the place too and it was the first time she had seen Violet and her sisters in their natural selves. And indeed she believed she had never seen even prettier creatures together, than the two seven lovely little little Princesses maidians maidens, but the others of violets sisters knew at once that their own dainty beauty and charm could not match other of their little sister Jennie, yet were not a bit jealous because this was so. General Vivinnia was announced, and a tall man clothed in purple coat and gray trousers, entered the drawing room. His face was cheery, and his eyes twinkling twinkling with humor though too he had a war look on this face, so little Polly and Jim were not at all afraid of the wonderful person age whose fame as a great daredevil general had spread throughout the world, for though it was said he won a battle it was because he had to face such an even odds and had dangerous glandelinian generals against him, but my Heavens how the did and would fight. After greeting Violet and her sisters with much affection, he stood modestly behind their chairs, and listened to the lively prattle of the young princesses. Now the refugee man appeared, and so startling was his appearance, all glad in this new clothes, that his two adopted children cried "Oh" and clapped their hands impulsively as they examined their foster fat her with pleased eyes.

"He looks like a rich man all right." remarked the little boy, and violet and her sisters nodded brightly, because they had meant the refugee man to be clothed this way, when they selected his new clothes for him. Susan Farrol led him toward the table where the Princesses were seated as he was very shy in such fine dignified and yet holy and innocent company, and presented him gracefully to the Princesses saying;

"This is your highnesses, the Refugee man who adopted these two little children the boy and girl."

"You are welcome to the National Army camps." said Jennie in gracious accents.

"But tell me sir, where did you get the little children whom you say you adopted!"

The refugee man grew red and embrassed, as he answered in a good loud voice nevertheless;

"I got them in making a raid upon a child slave plantation near the enemy lines."

"Oh sir" cried Angelina. "How dreadful. No wonder I had to rescue you in that shack from the Glandelinians with my grenades and repeating pistols. You never told me anything about where you got the children."

He shuffled first one foot and then the other, much embrassed.

"I didn't have the time Princesses Angelina." he said "but now having made it known I must reveal it frankly. If I did save six of them from the enemy but in my flight the Glandelinians shot four of them down in trying to catch me."

"Why did you raid the camp and get the children for?" asked Jennie Vivian gently.

"Because they were hard hit by their slave drivers" said the Refugee man" "And I wanted to save them from those cruel beasts. The plantation is owned by a man called Henry Butterfielder, who has lots of them there working for the Glandelinian army. After I got away from the camp with the six children fourty Glandelinians chased me. And foolishly I didn't carry no weapons. I would have been harder hit myself if your little sister had not come to my rescue as the Glandelinians were breaking their way into the shed."

"Are you sorry you took such a big risk!" asked Violet.

"No your Highness!" I'm glad "he answered" For it has pleased me to save these two and if I had not got into that shed, Angeline would not have seen the attack and then too I could not accompany her to this beautiful beautiful encampment, or met its kind hearted hearted little Princesses companders. Now that I am here I hope to remain with the little children."

"But in the Christian armies we are loved for ourselves alone, and for our kindness to one another, and for our good deeds and love of God and His Blessed Mother." said Catherine .. "So you better retain the children now as your own."

Those assembled now went into dinner, which you may imagine was a grand affair and afterwards Violet, and her sisters stood up and Jennie said;

"Tomorrow our invited guests will arive, and you will find among them some interesting and curious personages I promise you. The next day will be the beginning of the advance for Big Girl Knool if possible, and before we go we will have some military festivities on the broadest of our great Company Streets just outside the gates of our headquarters, where all the child scouts and the generals and others can assemble wit hout being crowded."

"I hope general Nero won't be late."said Angelin e anxiously."We need his help at Big Girl Knool badly as he too is a splendid fighter."
"Oh he is sure to come to morrow."answered Hettie.
With t his the Princesses bade their guests good night, and went to their own room.
The next morning t he breakfast o f t he Prin cesses was served in their own prettybroom, and t hey sent to invite Pollyanna and little Jimmie and their foster father to join them at the meal.They came gladly."o soon er had they finished eatin g then t hey heard the distant blasts of many trumpet s , and the sound of a Brass band playing mo rtial music, so t hey all went out upon t he balcony. This was at the front of the palace or headquarters and over looked the Company Streets of the great encampment hain g higher than the highes t trees that shut in t he building gro grounds . They saw approachin g down the Co,pant Company Street a "ilitary Band, playing as hard as and as loud as they could, while the soldiers of the encampment crowded the two sides of t he road in long thick ranks, and cheered so lustily that they almost drowned the noise of the drums h and horns.Violet, and her sisters looked to see who t they were cheering at, and discovered that behind the band was t heir famous Guardian and highest commander of them all, Jack Evans riding proudly upon t he back of a splendid horse which pranced along the street very grac efully.The saddle strapped to the an imals body was richly embroidered and glittered with jewels .
As he reached the headquarters building, the great general lo looked u p and saw violet, and her sisters , and at once waved his great sloue hed purple and red and yellow hat at them in greeting.He and his s taff rode up to the front door and dismounted, and the band stopped its playing, and marched gallantly away, and the crowds of soldiers at the c ommand of t heir offic ers broke ranks and returned to their tents.By the time violet and her sisters had re entered their room, general Evans was there, and he gave the beaut iful little girls a kiss each and a hearty embrace, and shook the hands of many of the ot hers with his own, and they saw he wore white gloves.The Refugee man little Jim and little Pollyanna stared hard at this most celebrated person, more priviliged than any one else by the emperor an d the Princesses, and who was acknowledged t o to be the most popular and most beloved man in all the land of Calverin ia and Abbiesania, next to the emperor himself.
"why you have on a beautiful brand new uniform."exc laimed Angeline, when the first greetings were over, and her sisters odded.
""hy are you surprised!"he asked pleasantly."It was you and your sisters who gave it to me just two weeks ago.You said my old uniform had bec ome a it older and faded you know, and so you gave it to me in person.You must have forgot ten forgotten.Now I feel like myself again, and I may say wit hout immodesty that I am the handsomest dressed general in all Abbiesania."
"Yes"said Angeline"and my sisters like you to look fine."
Little Jimmie was wonderfully attracted by the great general and so was lit tle Pollyanna. The Refugee man treated him with great respec t ,,, bec ause he was the great guardian of the beautiful and brave litle Princesses .. Angeline Richee now came to say t o Susan Farrel,and allvof the girl and boyscout offic officers of high rank, should take care of their commands for something was wrong and all were excited, and that also they wished Princess Angeline t o recieve all christian generals who would come to hold a council wit h them, and to invite them in their throne room(the boom) as they arived.Violet and her other sisters themselves were busy ordering the preparations for the morrows advance, so they wished their sister to act in t heir plafe as she had as high rank as any of them. Angeline Vivian willin gly agreed, being the only ot her "rincess in the whole country, o so she went tothe t hrone room made in the building, and sat in her own seat, placing Angeline Richee and An elinia Angelinin Aronburg on each side of her as they were her highest leaders.Jennie Turner she had called for, and she also sat on the right id side with Angelinia Aronburg.General Evans s tood at the left of the t hrone, and one of the christian generals(Vivianna at the right, while general Blain Night Linger stood behind ..Generals Hindernine and Nero came in wit h bright new uniforms and after greeting Angeline and othe the others affect ionately, t hey stood on each side also.Whil e they waited, general Evans, who was near little Jimmie asked.
"How does it happen that you got here.You look like a lit tle hild slave."
"Don't kn ow."was the answer.
"Oh yes you do too dear."said AngelinevVivian."Tell the great general how you came here."
"A tall man took me from a big camp where there are lots of ot hers like me and little girls.My owner said I was as valuable as a rat, and was going to burn me alive to morrow."
"Good thing the man saved you.Where is your mamma!"asked the general...:..

"I do not know"said little Jimmie."
"Where isyour home?"
"I never had any."said the little boy.
"Do you want to find your mamma again!"asked the general.
"I don't know if I had any."said t he child calmly.
The general looked thoughtful.
"Your manfriend then had a right to adopt you."he observed."Don't you thin k so."
"Don't know"said the little boy.
General Nemo arived, wearing a pair of new white kid gloves, and he brought a f i friendship present for violet and her sisters consist ing of a necklac e of more large beads of glass.But in each glass bead was set a sparkl n sparklin g carolite, which is considered the rarestand most beaut iful gem that exists.The necklace was in a plush case, and Angeline Richee, out it on a t able with t he other things belonging to violet, and her sisters. Next came a tall beautiful woman clothed in a splendid trailin g gown, trimmed with exquisite lac e as fine as cobweb.This was an impo rtant general woman matron of the boy and girlscouts who had been of the greatest assistance to both the Princesses and the chief girl and boys cout leaders .There was no hu humbug about her work, you may be sure, and she was as kindcas she was powerful.She greet ed violet,and her sisters most lovingly, and kissed Angelin ia Aronburg, Jennie turner, An gelinia Richee and the others, after which Angeline Ric hee led the great lady t o one of the most magnificent rooms of the royal Headquarters, and ap ointed fifty girlscouts fifty girlscouts to wait upon e her.The next arival wasGeneral H.". Woggle Ton, a Foriegn Gentleman but a faithful serving man for the Abbi nnianns.He was also head Professor of the Royal "ilitary Training headquarters .Soon they heard the sound of marchin g feet, and a boys cout threw open the door to allow Angeline Jennings and her best official girl and boyscouts to enter t he throne Throne room. As Angeline Richee mare had proudly at the head of her "amily of leaders, An e Angeline Vivian cried;"Oh you lovely girls"and ran down from her seat to hug her darling friends.Angeline Jennings wore a pearl necklace and around the neck of each girlscout leader was a tiny gold chair holding a locker or locket with the Vivian Girls names engraved upon the outside.
"Open the lockets Princess."said Angeline Jennings.The girl ob y obeyed, and found a picture of herself an d her sisters in each locket ..Then another officer a general came in, and it was Fredrick Nance.
"All my army is well prepared and awaiting the orders for the advanc e."said the general to Angeline Vivian."
"You are quite the polished gentleman."said general Blain Night Linger."Stand up here beside me sir and help recieve the company. Then the"
Then the royal band on the outside announced the approac h of distinguished gus guests.Firs t walked in a tall stately man.He wore a silk military hat of three colorsx colors lavander, yellow and red, and and carried a huge cane prettily stripped striped with red yellow and blue.His shirt front and cuff were white as snow, and the buttons on i his lavander coat were of gilt or gold.Behind t he tall statdly man came a child scout with flaxen hair and merry blue eyes, dressed in purple yellow and red.The child looked around smiling and t rust its hands in to the pockets of the uniform coat.Close after it came an ot her offic er walking as erect as if he had been a King.The man had twinkling brown eyes . Following these curious visitors were two tall men then ,and two short st out men all four dressed in gorgeous uniforms. The high chamberlane of violet and her sisters now hurried forward to announce the names of the n ew arivals, x calling out in a loud foi voic e;
"his Gracious and most Excellency General Francis vivianenna, commander of the best of the armies.Also his little grand child, and his staff generals Frank Vivianis and general Aberdeena."
These great personages blo bowed low q as their n ames were called, and Angeline hastened to introduce them to the assembled company.They were the first of the highest arivals, and the friends of Violetvand her s ist ers were polit e to them and tried to make t hem feel that they wer e welcome.Gen eral viviannas little gran d child s hook hands wit h every one, in cluding Angeline Ric hee, and was so joyious an d frank and full of good s pirits tha general vivianannas gran dchild at once became a prime favot ire.
"Is it a boy or girl!"whispered Angeline vivian.
"I don't kn ow" answered one of the boy s couts.
"Goodness me what a queer lot of peops people you boy and girlscouts are." exc laimed one of the forigen ers looking at the assembled company of girl and boyscouts ."
"So are you"said one of the girls couts."Are you a foriegn er so ign orant that you don't know what we look like."
"He is good des pite his ignoranc e."laughed general viviannas grandchild.

"I hope none of you are fond of too many jokes."said An geline vivian rather anxiously."This is no time to joekjoke."

"we should never think of joking too muc h at this t ime if we wish t o perform our military duties"declared general Evans,"So pleas e do not do it, and besides if we wish to make g V Big Girlknool city perfec tly safe from the Glandelinian enemy we will have to work fas t. General Vivianna had brought for Violet and her sisters a lovely gingerbread.After t his had been rec ieved by An geline with proper t hanks, and placed on the t able with the ot her presents these generals were escorted to their rooms by the High chamber/a lain.They had no sooner departed than the band before the headquart ers began t o play again , announcing more arivals, and as these were doubtless ot her generals , t he High Chamberlain hurried back to recieve them in his most official manner.

First entered a band(get a band) of Ryls boy and girlscuts, all merry lit tle uniformed spi c pritas like fairy elves and uniformed very beautifully.Wit h t his group came a man so easy to recognize and so importan t an d dearly beloved through out the whole Abbiesannian country, that alll present ros e to their feet, and bowed their heads in respectful homage, even before the High chamberlain knelt t o announce his name.

"The mos t mighty and loyal friend of all Abbiesannia, His supreme Excellenc y General Concentinian Aronburg, "iss Angelinia Aronburgs Uncle."said t he Cyam Chamberlain in an awed voice ...!!!!""

"Well,well,well.Glad to see you-- glad to meet you all."Cired t he general, bris ly, as he trotted up thevlong room. He was v e very tall and stout, with a fre fresh rosy face, and a long horseshoe mustache as black as c oal. A Red cloak over his Sdddier Lavander uniform coat trimmed with beautiful ermine hung over his shoulders , and he wore a large slouched hat of a dark violet color with t hree f a feathers on the top red yellow and blue in color.

"Hello Angelinia Aronburg, still at your girlscut leadership and spy work?"he asked in i his jolly way, as he took his neices handb han ds in bot h his own drew her to his bosom and embraced and kissed her fondly.

"How did you know r was here?"she replied, feeling more shy in the presence of this great uncle of hers than she had ever before been in her young life.

"Why don't I see your doings in every military report, and bulliton, no matter where you are?"he rejoined pinc hing her blushing cheek(t he dook leak)

"Oh do you!"

"And here is Angelina Jennings,I declare."cried general Aronburg, holding up the girlscout to kiss her."That a long way from home you are dear me."

"Do you Eaknow Angelina Jennings too?"ques tioned Angelinia Arontutgtt Aron burg too.

"Indeed I do."I've visited her home quite often before she bec ame a girls cout ."

"And do you know her father?"asked the Princesses.

"C ertainly my dear Princesses.It is general Walter John Jennings .."

"Then where is the general now.We are just crazy to kn ow, becauseWe could use him and his army at Big Girl Kn ool as heis a tremendous fighter."she said.

General Concentinian Aronburg laughed, and laid his finger aside of his n ose as if thinking what to reply.He leaned over and whispered s omething in Jen nie Viviane ear, at which the little Darlin g og of the Nation smiled, and nodded as if she understood.Now general Concentinian Aron urg Aron burg spied Angeline Ric hee, and trotted over to where she stood.

"S eems to me t his famous little girls out is fart her away from her fathers army than any of you"he observed looking at the pretty little maidian maiden admirin ly admiringly."I'll have to tell your father where you are Angelinia and sen d him tovsee you.I guess we n eed his army toosnyway."

"Please do dear general,"implored the little maid beseechingly.

"but just now we must all have a good time at preparing for the advance upon the enemy menancing Big girlknool."said the great general, turning to hang his cloak and hat on the hall tree."It isn't often I find time to leave my own command as you know, but viol t violet,and her sisters send for me to help preserve Big Girlknool, and I just couldn't help coming to do my best to help their Father give the enemy a hearty reception."

"I'm so glad"exclaimed Angelinia Aronburg."

"These are my boy and girlscout leaddr leaders of the various bands called the Ryl Regiment"pointing to the little boy and girlscouts squating around him. "They are the newest organization formed by our fair Princesses. "

"I've organized a regiment of the same kind myself rir right in t his camp" said Angeline Vivian looking upon these little girlsc outs with interest.

General C oncentinian Aronburg turn ed to talk with his great friend and yet Superior General Evans, and plain Night Linger, and he also said a kind word to the Refugee man and afterwards went away to ride his own chorse to a part of the camp."For said he" I must see to it my own commands are well established."

"There are your artillery squadrons!"asked An geline Richee.

"They'revon the way They are on the way."he answered"Toward Big Girlknool and so is the cavarly."

In a flash he was gone, but they all could hear the hoofs of the horse thunderin g on on the company street outside, as he pranced away wit h his noble rider."Present ly the band played again, and the High Chamn Chamberlain announced;

"Her Gracious Excellency, "iss Mildred "axwell of the Vivienites."

Those who did not know her looked earnestly to discver whom t hisgirlscout might be, and saw advancing up the room, an exquisite girlscout , dressed in dainty f uffs and ruffles of various military colors and spangled gown of red yellow and blue.She was almost as big as Angelinia Aronburg.The expression upon her face was quite pleasant and decidedly winning but nevertheless she looked too as if she was full of dignified child scout power and ourthority and was somewhat froward froward in nature. With ildred Maxwell were four soldiers, t wo stalking ahead of her, with much dignity, and two following behind like a royal guard.The soldiers were uniforms of bright colors , and carried long rifles, and after them came another personage, who attracted attention at once alt hough he seemed modest and retiring. The High Chamberlain announced him as the fat her and fond parent of ildred Maxwell.The girlscout leader spoke prettily to all her girl and boy friends and embraced violet and her sisters as if they were her very own, and send her loving greeting to the other Princesses before she retired t o the room prepared for her.She had brought a plan which she had c apt ured from a Glandelinian courier wrapped in tissue paper, and tied with pink and blue ribbon and one of the soldiers placed it on the table.But Mildreds fat her didvnot at once go to his room becaus e he said he preferred to stay and talk wit h general Evans, Blain Night Linger and the ot hers.Little Jimmie was glad t hatht his man stayed in the throne room, because the boy thought he was the jolliest lookin g man he had ever seen. Another special friend of the Vivian Girls now entered the the room having been called by Violet and her sisters, and it was general Ned Perkins.The band then played a welcome to another set of arivals, and into the throne room swept the handsome and stately girlscout hief leader of the Vivienites Catherine Lee.Beside her was her young brother Evardo Lee, and following them came her sis ter Jane, an d her girl and boy scout officials.Angeline Vivian greeted these arivals cordially, and all the arivals were glad to meet the Prin cesses again.They nkn knew everybody here too, so there was a joyful reunion as you may well imagine and it was fully an hour before the chiefvleaders of the Vivisnites retired to their rooms.Perhaps they would not have gone then had not the band begun to play to announce new arivals, but before they left the great Throne room(the boom) Evardo Lee left a mysterious package in possession of Angelinia Aron burg.The next comer proved to be general Renard of t he Winkie Abyssinkilian Cavarly. He was magnificently dressed in a new uniorm and wore white kid gloves and a flower in his buttom hole, and had his hair parted in the middle.General Renard strutted around rather proudly, but no sooner was he gone than the blasts of bugles and clatter of drums and cymbals announced important arivals and the High Chamberlain assumed his most dignified tone as he t hrew open the door and said proudly proudly and as loudly as he could;

Her "Her Sumb Sublime and Resplendent Excellency Mary Stack of the Burroughs.His Serene and Tremendous Exellency, Marco Penrod.Her Excellenc y Jane Melfort."

That three such high mand mighty child scout leaders should arive at once was enough to make most of those who did not know them grow solemn and assume their best company manners, but when the exquisitte beauty of Mary Stanck met their eyes they thought they had never beheld anything so harming outside of the Princesses and Angelinia Aronburg.Little Polly decided that Mary Stanck must be about ten years old but general Evans whispered to her that this wonderful girlscout girlsdo girlscout was the hief head of the Burroughs.Penrod and his fair haired girlscout companion were the best friends of Mary Stanck.VAngeline Vivian and the rest loved Angelina or Mary Stank the moment they saw her, and despite his size and age Penrod was so frank and boyish that little Jim accept ed him as a chum and did not want him to go away.But it was after noon now, and the arival must prepare for what they all came for o so they all were shown t o their rooms.

"My wh what a big reception there will be"exclaimed little Pollyanna."I guess the headquarters will be chock full, Jimmie don't you think so."

"It looks that way."said the boy.

"But we must go to our rooms pretty soon, to dress for t he cassion."continues the Princess Angelina herself.So Angelinia Aronburg my dear I shall leave you to welcome any new arivals that come."For I must must look c my best."

"Who is still to come!"asked Angelinia Aronburg.

"I do not know exactly but who ever they are they'll arive."

"We will recieve them, and give them a proper welcome."promished the girlscout chief of all generals."So run along Angeline dear, and get yourself dressed in your best.

No one in the world could tell how fine and splen did the Company was that assembled that evening at the Royal Military Preparation banquet that had been prepared by Violet and her sisters or at their direct ions.Many long tables were spread in the center of the great and widest of all the Company St reets, and the splendor of the decorations on all sides of t he Company Street and the blaze of outside constructed electric lights of all sizes and ie jewels was ackn owledged to be the most magnificent sight t hat was ever witnessed.The Jolliest person present, as well as the most important, was of course Jack Ambrose Evans, so he was given the seat of honor at one end of t he table, while q at the othat end sat the Princesses, for the table was very wide.General Blain N ight Linger, and all the rest of the highest officials of every kind, and the best leaders of the boy and girlscouts had the best chairs to sit in, while ll the others too were supplied with the most beautiful chairs.At t he upper end of the Company Street were seperate tables for all other boy and girl scout officers.George roto sat at one end of this table.At other places all the lower christian general and other soldier officers sat and they made quite a company believe me.At still the lower end of the Company St reet was anot her table, at which sat all the Companies of boy and girlscouts.The splendid customs of t hose at the three long tables made a gorgeous and glittering display t hat no one present was ever likely to forget perhaps there has never been in any part f the of the world at any time or ever will be anot her assemblance of such wonder ful people as that which gathered this evening to honor the t ime the christian advance for Big girlknool should begin.When all the members of the huge companies were in their al places, an orchastra of five hundred pieces in an open square close to them began to play sweet and delightful music and surely it was loud.Then the front door of the building opened, and out came t he fair an d girlish Vivian Girl Princesses, who now greeted their guests in person for the firs t time.As they stood by their chairs atthe head of the ba banquet table every eye was tur ned eagerly upon the lovely Princesses who were as dignified as they were betwitching, and who smil smiled upon all their new and old friends in a way that touched their hearts and brought an answerin answerin g s mile to every face.Each guest had been s r served with a brass goblet filled with sw eet wine.General Evans now made a pretty speech, con gratulatnig con grat ulatin g Violet and her sisters on having such a good plan on anc han d and askin g every one present to drink to the healt h and happiness of t heir dearly beloved hostesses an d to the succ ess of their daring undert akin g.This was done with great enthusiasm by all who heard t he s each.All s eated themselves at the tables and the servants of the Princesses bogan ser ving the feat .I I am quite sure that only in Abbiannia and elsewhere in their stat es could such a delicious repas t be prepared within a christian lines prepared for a rigorious advance on the morrow.The dishes were of precious met als set with brilliant jewels an d the good t hings to eat which were placed upon t hem were countless in number and of the best flavors.Several present s uc h as general Blain Night Linger also made a speech, and general Fr Fredrick Nance read of his own plans to violet and her sisters which was written in very good hand and was well recieved by the c ompany.Then again general Jac k Evans added t o the intertainment by doing some good horse bak stunts before the c ompany while the orchestra played a merry tune.This amused the company very muc h, but they were even more pleas ed when Jennie Vivian whose hunger had been easily sat is fied rose from the table and performed a graceful and bewildering rainbow dance for them.when it was ended t he ad audience clapped their hands .General John Turmer the father of Jennie Turmer was present, and of course he r proved he could do wonders in the way of eatin g as well as everyt hing else he undert ook to do, general Blain Night Linger sang a great hymn, every one loudly joining in the chorus, and thr boy and girlscouts gave an exhibition of a lightning drill on chorseback.There was laughter als o and funny shows onevery side, and everybody was havin g a royal good time as if a t hing like war did not exist.Little Jimmie was so excited and interested t hat he paid little at tention to his fine dinner and a great deal of attention to all his strangely dressed companions and their acts and talks songs and speec hes, and perhaps hecwas wise to do this, bec ause he could eat at any other time. .The feating and merry making c ontinued untill it was nearly pas t midn ight midnight, when they seperated to meet again the n ext morning an d take part of the preparation movement to which this royal banquet was merely t he main introduction. A dark day dawned, but with a gentle breeze, and t his greeted Violetvand her sisters as they awakened next morning, the t ime of the advanc e of so ernrmous ernormous an army. hile it was yet early all t he vast encampments as far as eye could see was astir, and c rowds of boy and girls outs and soldiers came from all parts of the vast encampments to witn essed t he pre parat ions of the advance.The noted visitors from for3 foe foriegn sec tions of the camp were as much a how to thes e troops as were their own familiar 6IIealbrites, and the Company St reet leading from the Royal Headquarters, to the big arch way were t hrowned with s oldiers and child scouts to see t he proc ession as it passed out to the green fields , where the direction c eremony was to take place.And what a great proc ession it was.Firs t came IO!000 IO,000 young c hildren all girls---the prettiest of the girlscouts in t he various companies--not now in uniform but dressed in white muslin with green sashes and red yellow and purple hair ribbons and bands, hearing great baskets of red ros es.As they walked they scattered these flowers upon t he Company Street so that was way was carpeted thick with roses for the Procession to march upon.Then came the little Princ esses, the highest of the c hristian generals of these armies.Next marched the Abbiannian National Military Band clothed in Emerald green and gold uniforms, and playing the "All Abbiannia is Forever" Marc h.The Royal Army of Abbiannia followed, consisting of all the retainers an d Body Guards of the vivian Girls, in c ommand of t wenty seven seven officers from the Captian general down to the lieutenants.While t he people cheered and waved their military hats and rifles or sabres, there came walking slowly the Seven vivian Girl Princesses looking so pretty and sweet t hat it is no wonder that t he whole pow population of Abbiannia love them so dearly.They had decided they would not ride on their horses that day, as t hey preferred to walk in t he procession with her favorite subjects and their guns ta.Just in front of t hem marched t he chief of all the boyscouts Marco Penrod.Following the Princesses moved two columns of the purrough-vivianite boy and girlscout columns, and eve if the whole army had not been there thes e two columns would have been powerful enough to guard the Princesses from any harm.Next marc hed all t he invited generals who were loudly cheered by the soldiers along the road, and were t herefore obliged to bow to right and left almost every step of the way.First was general Jack Evans, who rode his wonderful horse.The great general had a large basket full of goodies with him and he tossed these one by one to the child scouts standing on both sides of the Company Street within e the proc ession.The child scouts of the Ryl division s marched close b hind him.Angeline Jen nings came after, then Jack Saunders and the girlscout called the " C hr C herub" t hen An e Angeline Riches escorted by her own body guard, t hen Jane Valfort and her brother, then Angelinia Aron urg Aronburg an d her own troop, and all the rest that we know so well.These wonderful personages who are such a terror to the enemy, were not more heartily cheered by the soldiers and others than t hose who followed after them in the procession .Angelinia Aronburg was a general favorite next as important as violet,and her sisters, and she walked arm in arm wit h Jennie vivian.Then came Jane Polychroma, and a boyscout called Hour y Buttonbright the lat ter as dangerous as a rattlesnake to the enemy and everybody loved t hese as soon as they saw them.All t he christian generals dressed in t heir best attracted much attention because they were regular novelti s .Wit h regular ste s tramped the highest of the boysc out leaders of various divis ions, and there was more cheering than ever when Penrod followed in the proc ession.General Charles Brown and Johnson Henderson wer next and behind them Jean ie Turmer.winally came her sister Mildred Turmer with her troop of Lagorian girl and boyscouts . Another band followed, this time the best band of them all, playing a beaut iful Marc h called"There's no place like Heaven."Then a came the highest order of the c hild scouts in a long thick column the purrough vivianites, and behind them all as many of the soldiers as they could joined the proc ession, and marched away through the big arch and out upon the broad green.Here had been erec t ed a huge and most splendid pavilion wit h a grand stand big en ough t o seat all the Royal party, and the huge numbers which had taken part in the proc ession. Over t he pavilion, which was of Lavander silk, and clot h of gold, countless gr bright colored banners waved in the breeze.Just in front of this and connect ed wit h it by a runway, had been built a broad platform, so that all the spec tators c ould plainly see the entertain ent r provided for them.

General Jac k Evans now became Master of all the Cermonies as Violet and her sisters had placed the conduct of the performanc e in his hands .After all in t he proc ession a had congregated about the plat fork platform and t he royal party and all the generals and c hild scout leaders were seated in t he gran d stand(lend me a hand in the en d), Evans s killfully firs t performed some feats of juggling glass balls, and lighted can dles.He tossed a dozen or cr so of them high in the air and caught them one by one as they c ame down wit hout missing any.Then he done some strength exhibition as of lift in g umusally he vy weights, pulling a good sized tree out by the roots, andcarrying a heavy wagon loaded with cement on ihis shoulders for a bloc k and bac k again wit hout letting it down, and when he did he took his time about it to the surprise of all exc ept violet and her sisters who knew his s trength and who knew that was only a mere t rifle of what they had seen him do.Then he took an ern ormous big but old rug and in two shakes had it in s hreds.That rung was so big it took four men to even lift one end off the ground when rolled. En ded with this he said jokingly through a magapo magaphone"If any one has a big rug that needs the dust shaken out hand it over to me."

Wen o showed his s kill at target practice, and at sword drills, and challen ged any one who was an expert swordsman to come out an d try it out with him but n oll knew no one could outdo him and declined the offer .Then after showing good horsemanship, he introduced general Blain Night ringer, who did lots of military acts and showed the best c avarly drill with the cavarly men he brought that made every body sit up and take notice.Then two christ ian c avarly squadrons one led by Evans and one by Blain Night Ringer had a sham battle wit h sabres but with the points covered to prevent injury.It was like a real cavarly battle, the shock was terrific, and when the time was up for it t o en d the Refere of it had to hold up both Blain Night Ringers and Evans hands and c all it a perfec t Draw."

"Thin k of a Glandelinian cavarly squadron that would have to face t hat c avarly" whispered Gertrud e.After that n t housand men gave an exhibit ion of swing ing the Axe, when they made to whirl ar ound them so rapidly that the eye could scarc ely follow the motion of the gleaming blade.Then the same t wo cavarly squadrons had a lance battle, and strayed to ray after half an hour of it both sides came out second best again.Then the cavarly had a s plendid ridin g drill.They charged at each ot her in straight lines as fast as the hors es could go, and when close enough splint and let each rider pas t them bak an d forth in the most splendid way ever wit nessed so t hat a terrific deafening roar of galloping clapping rose in the air.Angelinin Aronburg then stepped into the open ground, and with her followers girl and boyscouts gave t he most magnific ent child scout drill ever witnessed, and they two had sham battles with each other and showed they had even better skill than the cavarly on horseback and foot too.They repeated many drills, ad different motions in sham battles.Then though a little girl as she was, she t ook Evans on in a sham sword fight, and battered him easily to the surprise of all.After she had finished and bowed, she took Conrad on in a sword fight, and others two too and worst them.Then she amused the congregation, by havin g all her prettier prettiest girlscouts give a number of most pretty and modest dan c es while dressed in the prettiest dan cing cost ums any one ever laid eyes upon. Jack Evans then announced the last act of all, which was c on sidered really wonderful. An enormous one hundred foot tree lay on the ground torn out recent ly by a windstorm by the roots.He had a lot of men before this dig a deep hole a certain distanc e from where the tree lay, and though it took him some time to do it he alone stood that tree straight up into that hole and held it untill the men had replaced all the dirt so it c ouldn't fall down. Violet and her sisters were an t ounded at this feat and believed his stren gt h was a miracle.Then everybody who had gr at big colored balloons let them float away and they made a most pretty sight.The sight arou e aroused much wonder and delight, because a it was a new amuze amusement to every one present.

"This show was really fine"declared general Hindernine."I think Your Excellenc y general Evans a bullet couldn'tgo t hrough you."

The entertainment being now ended, all left the pava pavilion and formed their gay procession back to the main christian lines again. They later had a nice quiet dinner together and passed a pleasant evening with the best of the christian generals for company. Quite cont ent to have had so pleasant a day, and a little tired by all the days busy scenes, violet and her sisters lay down upon their pretty white beds and presently were sound asleepp.(Peep peep peep)

[redacted]

ANOTHER FIERY WAR OF THE WORLDS. ZIMM[redacted]'S EXPEDITION WITH THE VARIOUS CHRISTIAN FLEETS. [redacted] DESTRUCTION OF SHIPS. THE MURDER OF FIVE HUNDRED THOUSAND GUNS, AND THE FAILURE TO CARRY THE FORTIFICATIONS. TERRIBLE SLAUGHTER.

Zimmermann had finally got all the fleets of the nations together for the expedition to free the children of the Bay King islands and to open the ports of Mc-Whirther , Vivian Mickey, Calverinia.The first of the fleets had managed to enter the region without any engagement but when the bombardment started by the strongest fleets thatcould have been gathered and after four days of continued fighting the christian fleets had been replaced with thelos of over five hundred thousand k in killed and wounded and drowned and that five hundred and ninty six sh ships had ben been blown up or sunk and even blown out of the water by theGlandelinian guns, from fort Mc-Hollcester and Endernine.

It was reported to be one of the most terrific d cannounding battles ever heard during his part of th the war and even the cannounding of Eloi Calorinia only surpassed this one.

On the fifth day day Admiral Zimmermann commanding the christian fleets consisiting of Abbiennnian, Protestantinians dom Mondobian Concentinian, Abyssinian and Angelinian battle ships each seven hundred in number at asked the fortified ports of Vivian Mickey, while the rest attacked the fortifications of the Boyking islands in a fierce endeavor to crush Glandelinians mightiest Gibraltars and weaken her power. Atthe very beginning of the eq engagement the Abbiennnian flagship the Mc-Hollesarwan sunk by a single s shotfrom the Mc-Hollester fortifofortifications whose biggest guns roared, volleyed and thundered like a hundred thousand earthsplitting thunderroots follingthe air withflame an d smoke and a storming torrent of bursting shells.

The Asiatic fleet after bombarding hell n fire and damnating destruction for an hour upon the Boyking island fort ifications attap attempted to enter the bon harbor but a general fire broke loose form all the fort fortifications and this became so fierce that the fleets were compelled to fall back with heavy losses in ships.

Commodore Semple of the Trinoligon fleets swept around and around the Boyking islands in a fieryellipse of the hor ible cannon cannonading, the fleets bombarding the forts furiously demolishing little fort Mc-Hollester on island number ten ten but failing to silen silence her guns.

They even failed to take the forts by desperate land assault and so after a battle of all days duration returned to the other fleets signalling that theyhave could not be taken. The city city of Vivian Mickey the first time since all the series of at acks had been made on her sincethe war commenced was now in flames ten thousand of the inhabitants had been killed and the survivors fled fled for safty amid the rain of high explosives. During the rest of the bombardment the entire fleet continued to gather untill whole woods had been strewn on the ground by the shells and towns for thirty miles ar und were shaken down to their foundation from the terrible concussion which shook t the whole Calverinian and Angelinian coast continued. At the same time that the fourthday of the bombardment was going on the Abbiennnians under Philin determined to attack the Glandelinians bt by land but two hours later after the bombardment reached its worse the already crippled fleet of Abbiennnian ships landed every available fighting man at their di disposal, at Mc-Whirther about two miles north of Vivian Mickey but they themselves were attacked by general Dictatorans Glandelinians t here being one million two hundred and twenty thousand on both sides slain and wounded in two hours of furious land fighting. The batle ground had become like a something volcanic crater but for a time the Glandelinians had gotten the worse of it. However their shattered forces were rall rallieddand the batle was hotly resumed and the carnage became frightful neither side asking or receiving quarter. Themagazine rifles with which the Glandelinians were armed did wi wonders. The odds were against the Abbiennnianswhere whose armies were crushed mangled and demorlized. C Chilin saw that he was overwhelmed despite the can cannonading roar of his covering guns and that both his generals Jessie Wilkerson, and Fred Quinbie were killed while generals Fr Federal Bennie, Chillie, Omarin, Rattlinghbur and Climning were mortally wounded. Klass was severely wounded, Imes was slightly, wounded and the others wounded were Teen, St ern, Werndorf, Mac dinin donohue, Mcp Mc-Hollestertine,, Zoe Macinin, Permanship, Victory, and Sebastian.

The Glandelinian leader himself had eventually co committed suicide suicide from the crate of the bat le but the Omarians were victorious however and the Abbiennnians fled back to their ships under cover of their own guns. To take Vivian Mickey by sea or land was again a bloody failure . The next day the fleets and h forts again hammered their awful duel both sides firing storms of broadsides at the same instant.

In this engagement nine of the twenty inch guns of Fort Cedernine burst killing over twelve hundred men..... For half and day the fleets fought and manoevered against the forts. Solid shot and high explosives swet swept the decks of every ship like hail smashing gun turrents and bringing down masts of scores of ships simultaneously while both sides exchanged the fiercest storms of shells ever seen in an any bomb bombardment..... Several of the ships were on fire more were sinking while three fortifications of the enemy were in blazing wreckage and three fourths of their garrison, killed and three quarters wounded. The air was a mass of flames for miles, and the continuous thunder of so many guns from all the forts of the river and of the islands was heard within a radious of a score of hundred miles and cities all along the coasts of Calverinia were shaken to badly that it looked as if a tornado had swept over them. On the afternoon the bombardment was in full sway the guns of the fleets throwing 128 to 128,000 shells at the enemys forts within an hours time and the bombardment became so vigorious that the sea itself became like tempest tossed waves from the concussion. Even then time and again scores of huge fire rafts were sent against the Abbieannian fleets but the ships avoided them and they passed harmelessly by. Others were sent down, regular floating mountains of fire but some of the captians deliberately ran their ships into them to turned their hose on them and towed them out of the way.

For weeks this tremendous tremendous bombardment had been keep up before this general engage engagement commenced and the very air was blasted by thousands of the most terrific volcano of fmale flame and din ever seen in this regu region of the war before.

The roar of guns as to seem say some seemed to defy the Heavens and probably God himself and opposed to the fleets beside the forit ifications of Mc-Hollester Cedernine and Mc-whirther and the fortifications of the volcanic eruption like islands, were two more great and strongland forts forts St Phillip and Andrew mounting 58,288 of the biggest guns ever seen in any battle before, bigger guns than any of the American forts or fleets, while from one to the other ponderious iron chains barred the passage and beyond this was the biggest fleet of iron clad gunboats, submarining fire ships, and land batteries besides a stong fleet of Glandelinian battle ships. Indeed against these forts over 1,110,000 shells were thrown within four hours and then the chains were cut amid a sea of fire and hells damanation and the fleets started to run thothis fiery gauntlet of the forts and the battle became exceedingly frightful.

Glandelinian mortar boats opened a furious fire upon the fleets, while the Glandelinian fleets and fortifications and land batteries opened fire with every gun a perve perfect stream of shot shell and high explosives being poured forth, and all theships replied with full broadsides and now the din was terrific as more than six hundred thousand guns of every available size were thundering in titsl throas the din being heard as reported afterward for nearly five thousand miles.

A score of ships were disable, every mast going down by the board, the smokestacks being shot off, all the gun turrents were blown up and they were compelled to drop back but the rest swept on in a seething cloud of flame.

Fireships came down upon them by hundreds, and all the Glandelinian battle ships and iron clad gunboats and even the submarines attacked them but the fleets had formed a fiery ellipse which kept constantly revolving opposite the forts and constantly pouring in a murderous fire with all the guns.

The Arenburg, flag ship under Admiral Zimmermann the great plotter of this expedition was surrounded by seventen gun boats and fourty submarines and sank them all amid a terrible storm of flame and din. As thelast of them sank a battle ship shaped like a huge iron glad ram came rushing upon the Arenburg. Zimmermann saw that he could not escape it and so he turned the Arenburg so as to recieve the blow squarely amidships.

The ram shaped batle ship crushed the Arenburg like an eggshell and in a few minutes she sank. But her fearful broadsides at such close range riddled the ram and the two went down together the survivors and Zimmermann being picked off by the ships of the other fleets. In another hour and a half 11,111 gun boats submarines and fire ships of the enemy had been sent to the botgs, but the fleet however had other antegnists to meet besides the forts and other Glandelinian ships. The Glandelinian battle ship the Tracia hurried to the attack and after firing three broadsides at the Abbieann, crushed into the sides of the Tripoligonlian flag ship whose brave men fired broadside after broadside attheir assailant. An immense hole had been broken in the hull by the prow of the Glandelinian batle ship and in a very few minutes both flagships sank the last guns of either ship being fired when the water reached their muzzles and the whole gallant crew of both ships went to the bottom with their flags still flying from the mast head. It was or had been a death struggle between these two ships.

Another Glandelinian battle ship also called the Tracia turned on the Abbieann. It was compelled to flee from such ah hopeless struggle with the Glandelinian minemaur but the guns of fort Mc-Hollester raked her decks fore and aft and after a bloody fightof more than an hour the Abbieann struck her flag and was soon blown up by theexplosion of her magazine.

The Tracia now attacked the Mc-Whirther but to the amazement of the Glandelinian commander the Mc-Whirther ran fourmidable to its terrible broadsides and the Glandelinian ship was material materially worsted of after a frightful thunderous duel of one thousand guns and disabled beyond repairs. The Glandelinian fleets itself itself was now between two fires and a shell struck the sides of the Glandelinian dreadnaught Mc-Whirther penitrating its armour and prostrating half the fighting force of the vessel by the terrific ai concussivo concussion. The second shot struck the Mc-Whirtherand seriously damaged its plating, the third wounded both the pilpiolets and demolished the pilpoilet hourse and the fourth and final shot crashed through a port shutter. No stunning was the first shot recieved by the Mc-Whirt her that the Mc-Whirther never fired a gun as it became unmanageable and intirely at the mercy of its enemy. Thus in a very few minutes the Glandelinian ori in iron clad displaced its co, colors with the white flag and it was regarded as one of the greatest prizes of the war. Another Glandelinian batle ship a floating fortress or iron clad down upon the storming Abbieannian fleet and recieved two thunderous broadsides but payed no attention to it. Sheorushed the sides of two ships with a blow of her ram and rifling them with shells sent them to the bottom.

Next this fortress as called the Coe Tas attacked the Mc-Hollester andsought to ignore the floating fortress of aConcentinian ship which ran along side the Abbieannian ship, so that they almost torched and hurled fifty 1,160 pound shot at the iron monster as rapidly as the guns could be worked. These shots at such short range told. The armour of the great Glandelinian ship began to yeild but her h own firing had great effect upon her enemy. However it was seldon that she could hit the great war dog, the Concentinian ship but when shedid the shots commit ed terrible damage. Five times the Glandelinian ship tried to ram the Mc-Hollester and the Concentinian also but the Christian battle ships eluded her and only poured a storm of f fire.

A sixth time the Glandelinian ship tried it and the Concentinian ship stood still and let her come on. The great iron beak merely glanced on the Mco Mc-Hollesters armaurand glided upon her decks the Glandelinian ship being so lifted and tilted as to exposed the hulls bottom to the Concentinians deadly fire while the Mc-Hollester quickly dli si slid out from under her injured.

The main Abbieannian and other fleets still led by the sturdy Zimmmann continued to sweep around and around in a fiery ellipse. At the critical point of the battle the look out of one of the ships reported a storm of torpedoes ahead and a cry arose arose to stop the ships.

"Go ahead, damn the torpedoes." Roared the great admiral and the ships went on three score however being galled by the explosions of the torpedoes.

Another huge iron ship came forward to crush the ships but was ran down and sunk.

However seeing that it was futile to carry the fortifications the fleets were so compelled to withdraw abandoning theattack by sea for time for a me time to regain breath.

On the morning after a big Abbieannian force had ben landed and attacked fort Ann winning a technical victory. This victory was followed shortly afterward by a triumph at Mc-Whirther, followed by a series of gallant victories. Scout won at Cordes and again at Cherub taking the stronght stronghold and storming Fort Mc-Hollester but meeting annihilation. Other Abbieannian forces were sadly depleted by the Masonic fire sustained in charging upon the fortresses and in the most exhautive hand to hand fights, the Glandelinians stubbornly resistingthe Abbieannian force and ocapelling them to retire, even recapturing island number twevety five which had formely been taken by Angelinian forces as stated in the recent chapers chapters.

This known as the battle of Mc-Whirther, developed over a crescie semi-circular from front of fourty seven miles and soon narrowed down to a death grapple of more than 10,000,000 men on little more than seventeen seventeen bloody miles.

The An Abib Abbieannian hurled seventeen to twenty seven divisions simultaneously against the fortifications of Mc-Hollester and Cedernine but div division after division were either cr crushed mangled or wiped out by the fire of the fortifications and though corps replaced corps thet fared no better this the crucial struggle of the northern Calverinia's theartre of war.

The Abbieannians repeatedly pushed fresh divisions against fort Mc-Hollester and Cedernine in general at acks attacks but were repueled again and again whole battalions and armies being crushe-only a division of 10,000,000 Abbieannians nu had been reduced to one quae quarter all having been mowed down. In two hours two hundred and fifty thousand had been slain and the Abbieannians seeing their at acks of no avail retired back to their fle ts, and the Vivian Wickey expedition planned by Zimmermann had to be abandoned.

he Abyssinkilion army which had defeated the enemy at Radoli ffe had in the man timemade an advance to the northesty northeast intending to meets great force of Glandeliniens under glaing Nightlinger who was advancing southward. Violet and her sisters were with the Abyssinkilianstheugh general Mananda Anna the chief general in command had frequently advised them to go back to their fathers army as he did not want them to be involved in another battle in case it raised, he intending himself to try and capture the cities of Julo and Norma. Hannonia who had recovered from the wounds received a month before at Erminios creek had taken command of a newly formed army, while general Hindernine in temporal command of Vivianianias lineswas concentrating his armies north of Vandalia with the evident intention of giving battle to Federal in final furyshould his gray coated hordes come up. General Lannder commanded two armies in central Calverinia each being under Bernard and Gustor Powell both brothers, while Boeman with the other armies were watching the movements of Tribune and his christian forces, even Picknell Tam erline was concentrating in full force against Valde Calendar as all these Glandelinians knew what was coming/ in the line of the drives for Julo Callio.

THE STORY OF JULO CALLIO CONTINUES.

Violet and her sisters were in great fear now. Theyknow that even Raymond Richardson Federal was in command of all the Glandelinian armis in Calverinia now having ben sent there by Hanlov and feared now that the war was lostfor he was the man towin, andhave things his own way with his armies who ever dared to oppose him.

Their fear of this man did made them leave general Annas army of Abyssinkilians but they could not reach Angelinia again for a while and so t they were forced to turn back, but they soon came upon general Vivianias army, and to their sorrow learned that General Vivianias was still unable to command and that Hindernine was in command instead.

A They also learned that Hannonia was in the westof Calverinia watching Ambrose Fuller moving into Calverinia from the north who intended to strike him at Munneria and hold him back from advancing on Julo Callio.

They knew by this that the christian armies on account of the grave danger were manouvering hesitantly and that the war would be going to resume its aspect as it did before the Federaline Campaign ended/

Violet and her sisters however were bound to see that general Raymond Federal got worstedand so the litt legirls decided to go to work at Secret service work as soon as Federals armies appeared no matter what the peril.Abyssinkile had reinforced Hindernines army which had made it pretty strong again and his gave thelit le girls some hope. In the meantime Hindernines engineers were blowing up everything and forming strong mazes of abatis to impede the advance of Federal and to give him serious resistance shouldhe attack.

Railroad tracks were torn up, trains of cars were overturned and wrecked in theevident pathof the advancing enemy and all bridges found were blown up and all the stores in the towns burned, the goods being carried off . All the cattle hogs and all animals found on farms were driven into the christian lines and giantbonfires were made besides long streamers of fire to impede the enemy when they arived. Violet and her sisters watched and commanded some of this work and in a week the christian had evidently formed for themselves a strong unassailable position. But yet Federal did not appear.

CHAPTER ELEVEN..... THEDEADLY DILEMMA OF THE VIVIAN GIRLS DURING THE BATTLE OF RESURRECTION RUN.

T/iolet and her sisters had ben scouting in the dark for several hours watching The enemys movements duringa great battle going on at Resurrection Run betwee n Anna and Tamerline, when a sudden volley of shots rose sharp in the fields before them. Seeing their danger, for thousands of grayscoats were spiring approaching the littoe girls made a frenzied dash for safty for the other side of the rail way scores of Glandelinians pursuing and setting up a wild yell. To the little girlsthe yell came as an indefinite terror, magnified ten thousand fold by their excited feelings.

How many of thepersuers there were they knew not but there were, or may be any number with the fury of maddend bulls, drunken men or footpads. Oh how could they have been discovered so quick. As they rushed along wildly at the top of their sped, being really and frightened and terrified howhe foot of each litle girl caught in the first rail and before they knew what had happened the six little girls had simultaneously fallen with their bodies right across t he lines.

Faint and terrified already with a thousand vague alarms, the sudde n shock stunned and disabled one of them. Jennie alone was bruised or sk shaken and she had no thought left to rise, or to recover herself, and her eyes closed heavily. She lost consci ousness at once. It indeed was a terrible position for she had fainted on the line with the force of the situation, while her sisters were holding the assailants at bay with well aimed shots.

An Angelinian officer commanding a long line of intrenched men who were firing like blazes at the surging en e enemy five hundred yards further up saw this in cident and his heart came to his mouth at once at the sight. He saw thatone of the litle girls had fallen across therailway line still running, and that the enemy would soon engulf them.

In a frenzy of suspance he brought forward his other reserve forces and concentrated them upon this point to check the assailants attacking the little girls and then another and more pressing terror seized him.

Hark what was that? He listened and thrilled. Oh no. Too terrible. Yes. Yes it must be the railway. He knew it. He felt it, along the line on which Jennie was lying and where her sisters were also lying as they fired at the enemy. He heard behind him the unmistakable unthinkable, the fierce whirr of the ammunition express dashing madly down upon him.

Good heavens what could he do now! The train was coming almost this moment upon them. Before he could have time to rush wildly forward and snatch the poor little girls where they lay full in its path, it would haveswept past himresistlessly and borne down upon them like lightning and crush the little girls to pieces.

The soldier felt in a second that any atempt to reachthe endangered children before that devouring onlaughine had burst upon them full speed would be absolutely hopeless.

His one chance lay in stopping the ammunition train some how. How or where, of with what, he cared not,/ even his own body would do it if nothing else came. Only to ston it. At that moment he did not think on of it that t the train was real really a flaming passenger with a set of eleven carriages containing a precious freight of human lives, and all children, with five hundred soldiers guarding them and firing upon the Glandelinians who opened fire on all sides. He only thought of it as a cruel horrible devouring creature, rushing headway on at full speed to the childrens destruction.

To him it was a senseless wild beast, to be combated at al hazardous/, a ruthless hedious relentless thing, to be checked in its mad career no matter what fashion. Indeed all he knew was that the six little girls were helpless on the track, with one of them wounded, and the others with only their intention tward their enemies while that engine like some mad man madman puffing and snorting, with wild glee and savage exultation was hastening forward with fierce strides to crush and mangle the us unsuspecting children.

At any risk he might stop it, with anything, anyhow. The at acking Glandelinians the selves were being successfully held at by by his own men and their only chief danger now was the train.

As the Angelinian general gazed around him with blank inquiring gaze, and stricken with horror, his eyes happened to fall upon three stalwart Glandelinians who were stooping over a dismantled ti telegraph pole intending to lift it on the line and upset the train. He realized that they were going going to lay it across the rails to upset the train. As he watched in increased horror he saw the men with the wild energy of despair lift the small end of the ponderous post bodily up in their arms and twisting it on the big base, as on earth frst pivot,manage by main force and violent effort to lay it at last, full in front of the advancing locomotive without a single sound a out about it.

How even tree three men could do it he k never rightly knew himself for the wieght of the great bulk was simply enormous. They had lifted it in their arms as they would lift a child and straining in every limb had stretched it across both rails a formidable obstacle before the approaching engine. In a great crisis men work rapidly, their work being as quick as thought . This was horribleindeed for it would throw the train clear off the tratracks and cause a fearful catastrophe.

In anther moment a sharp curve brought the train around the corner close to where st ood the appalled general, great drops of sweat now q ose oozing clammily from every pore with his terror.

"Great heavens." He gasped;"A train load of children. Why this is murder."

There were two thousand children on this train,innocent children who would the next minute be wrecked, and mangled mangled corpses or writhing forms on the tracks before him. The landelinians called it war,| but they were nevertheless guilty of a horrible crime trying to produce a terrible ghastly railway accident.

He looked at the threatened danger languidly with some vague fear/ but then for an indivisible secodn second of time the generals soul was the thr theartre of a terrible and appalling struggle. What on earth was he to do? Which of the two was he to sacresacrifice? Should it be murder or treachery? Must he allow the Glandelinians to successfully wreck the trainn train or let it mangle the innocent vivian girls.?

In this wild flush of horror at the situation of thelittle Vivian girls he thought of nothing except oh how best to save them . He regarded the engine as a hateful cruel, destructive living thing. He forgot the passengers, the stoker and the official officials and soldiers, being conscious only of the little vivian girls and of that awful thing breathing fire and smoke and steam that was rushing on to destroy them. The sweat stood upon his browin great clammy drops, at the dread dilemma. It was indeed an awful question for any man to solve. He shrank agah aga aghast before that deadly dea decisiion decision. They were innocent children children,to be sure, that were in the train. They were unknon children n who had t he same right to their lives as the Vivian girls, but t but still he doubted. Jennie lay there helm l helpless on t' the line with he sisters unconscious of the approaching train, desparately holding the Glandelinians at bay. Cu ₀Cloud he leave them to be destroyed by that hedious, snorthing, puffing, thing! Had was not any man t he right to try and save the lives he loves best no matte at what risk of peril to others'

He asked himself the question too vaguely, instinctively , with the rapid haste of a life and death struggle, asked himself with horror, for he had no strength to do one thing or the other, to remove the obsc obstacle from the place where the Glandelinians had laid it, or to warn the driver. One second alone re mained and then all would be over. On came the train, flaring glaring with itsgreat bulls eye, now peering red around the corner, aterrible fiery dragon, resistless, unconscious, bearing down in mad glee, upon the pole----which of the two should it be!---- the pole or the innocent Vivian Girls,and amid t he rattling firing a he still w it waited he still temporized,

''What, what could he do!''

OH HEAVEN HE HESITATED.

As the engine swept puffing and snorting,, smoke sparks and stre steam round the corner, he doubted,-- ---yathe doubted------ and temporized. He even reasoned with his own conscious in the quick shotband of thought. So far as intent was concerned he indeed was guiltless. When he saw the Glandelinians lay that log in the way of the train he never believed, and never may, e ev even knew that it was a train with a l living freight of children, the graycoated devils was were tying to imperl. He felt it merely as a bad engine unattacked unatached, only realizing the press ing danger of Violet and her sisters. Was he bound now to undo what the wicked Glandelinians murderers had done, and leave Violet and her sisters to perish.! Must he take the post and be the murderer of the Vivian girls.!

It was a cruel dalimma for any man to have to face. If he had an hour to debate, and decide he might perhaps seen his way a little clearer. But with the hedious thing actually rushing red and wrathful on his right------why----he cla pped his hands to his ears. It was to much for him. Torm much for him.

CHAPT ER TWELVE. [illegible] AND SO ARE THE VIVIAN GIRLS.

And yet he much face it it and act or remain pas ive,------one way ot the other. As the engine turned the corner the driver looking ahead in the clear moonlight saw something in front that made him start with sudde n horror, and alarm. A telegraph o pole lay upon the tracks and a christian generalanguish on his face was battling with ter ific fury with three stalwart Glandelinian s. There was no time to stop now, no time to avery avert the threatened catastrophe , and al the driver could do in his haste was to put the brakes on hard and en deavor to lessen the force of the cuncussion.

Put even as he lo ked and wondered at the sight, h putting on the brakes meanwhile with all his mightand man, he saw the christian general pf perform to hi his surprise n heroic action. He had overpoer overpowered his three des perate assailants and rushing full upon the line, before thavery lights of the advancing train the sturdy Angelinian generals lifted the pole by main forces and brandishing its end at it was wildly, in the drivers face, hurled the huge bulk back with a terrific effort to the side of the railway. It fe l with a resound ing crash and the general fell with it. There was a seconds pause while the drivers heart stood stillwith terror. Then a jar, a deep thod, a deep scratch into the soil , a wheel was off the line and it seemed as if they had met withan accident For a moment or two the driver only knew that he was ska shaken and hurthut not severely or seriously. The engine had left the tracks and the carriages lay behind overturned and slightly shattered. He could see how it happened. Part of the pole in rebounding in falling had red rebounded onto the line the base of the timber havin having stuck thenear side wheel awheel and sent o it off the track in a vain effort to surmount it.P

But the brake had already slan slackened thepace and broken the force of the shock so the visible damage was inconsiderable. And also the very last thi thing the engine driver had seen of the Angelinian general, as the train stopped short ; was that the man who had flung the pole from the tracks before the advancing engine was knocked down by its approach while the train c to all appearance passed bodily over him. For Good or Evil the Angelinian general had made his decision at last even at the risk of his own life. As the train dashed on with its living freight on board his native instinct or preserving life got the btear of him; in spite of himself. He couldn't let those innocent children die, and so though he removed the pole and the Vivian girls were killed, he did not know himself how a he very ever veh venture it.

He prayed with all his might that t thetrain might kill him. T he guards and the driven ran hastily along the train. Nobody was hurt though many were shaken or slightly bruised. Even the car iages had escaped with a few small cracks. But the man with the pole. Their preserver. Where was he all this time! They looked alongthe line in vain. He had disappeared as if by magic, and indeed as a matter of fact the Angelinian general fell on the track before the advancing engin e and when he did so, he thought for a moment that it was all up with him. He was glad of that too for he believed that he had saved the train, which would dash on unresisted and crush the darling Vivin girls to death. It was better he should die. So he closed his eyes and w aited. But the engine pass ed on jarring and scrapp ing partly with the action of the brake, though partly too, with the wheel digging into the ground at the side. It passed on and went over him altogether, then came to a sudden standstill. As it stopped a fierce joy rose uppermost in his soul. Thank heaven , all was well. He breathed once more easily. He had fallen on his back across the sle-pers in the middle of the track. It was not really the ra train that had knocked him down but the recoil of the telegraph post. The engine and carriages had gone over him softly. He was only bruised and sprained and jarred and shaken. Rising up behind the train as it slackened he ran he stily along the offside tward where Vandia lay sti ll unaccious unconsciousnessand defended by her sisters against fearful odds. Every step painhim to be sure but with drawn revolvers he ran u on untill he came at last to where Vandia lay, snatched her up and ran for the thicket shouting f r the other little girls to follow.

Violet and her sisters in consternation slowly obeyed the Glandelinians floo fol following slowly.

Vandana Anna in the meantime had advanced upon plain Highlinger, and had defeated his most magn ive columns after har dible carnage but was compelled to hurl greater forces northward Eward Rawurrest ion and Midlights on Run, and here the struggle had become fierce but ended finally on a Glandelinian advantage. Hindernine heard of Vandanas failures and realizing thatnothing could be done to check Palinnightlingernant orders to Anna to retreat southeastward, but to lay waste to everything in i his path of retreat. Violet and her sisters had indeed succeeded in finding the ly of the enemys position before the batle occured and had reported it to Hindernine as soon as possible telling him that Federals armies werenot within sight butthat Palingnightlinern was almost unassailable more unassailable than the christian positions.

So the batle had raged but without success and Hindernine was perplexed not knowing what to do. The main leader of the christians, whom the Angelinians only rely on was lying wounded in a hospital in west Lwestern Angeli nia beinglaid up probably for several months. Angelinian danger was greater for her armies had been terribly reduced by their losses during the war up to this time and their money and ammunition in Calvarinia itself was almost exhausted. The The only substantialassistance left was the help of the Vivian girls or from the sister states Abbissinia, Tri ploigonia and Mondoni Mondolia who did not wish to throw in too strong an army to repell Vanley for fear of weaking ma weakening their own supplies at home and be endangered in case the Glandelinians would invade them.

Hindernine felt like abandoning Vandalia as he saw no chance for an successful victory ov Federal whose an army was much larger and who had more guns, better ground and larger qua quantities of ammunition. Callandar had previously been in action against Somerline at the battle of Hollong, but his aiding officers Bernard and Howell had been killed in the bloody action and the army almost annihilated. Tribune had surrendered to Hicknell after four days fighting at Crossing and the armines under Hindernine Vandana and Hansonia were the only ones left to p oppose the Glandelinian s, but Hanson Johnston had also been thrashed at the battle of Montellice Run, and then at Eastellice Run where he was wounded and the army put utterly out of com is commission, and so he was compelled to surrender.

When Hindernine learned of this he declared that at last in spite of his he was bound to win in the ''Name of God'' and not die in the batle battle either. But despite all he said he felt that he would lose for the other Glandelinian armies n ow utterly unopposed would hurriedly come to Federals aid and overpower him easily, so he begged Violet and her sisters for their safty's sake to leave the bloody region of Calvarinia and go north or su south. He told them that Federal would soon get t them o if they did not leave before the battle started.

Indeed over th the situation Violet and her sisters were broken hearted , and refused to go saying that they did not car care what happened to themnow.

Then Hindernine acted. He knew that if he allowed them to stay tound go to their deaths probably he would be responsible so he made them go by forceand under a strong escort of soldiers.

The soldiers had taken the ,little girls clean into Abyssinkilian by rail and placed in charge of an army commander there. One of the soldiers told the Abyssinkilian commander who they were and they were brought.

''It is too bad .''Said the Abyssinkilian commander;''That you had to be taken so far from home. But it is for your own safty. If you was with Hindernines army when Federal would win your destruction would ar surely follow.''

CHAPTER THIRTEEN. HINDERNINES GREAT DILEMA.

? A day had passed since the litt le girls had been brought into Abyssinkile and the soldiers noticing their celestial featuresand their beauty were filled with admiration. The soldiers knew how deep their sorrow was and knowing all the cruelties were indignant. TheAbyssinkilians had a great hatred for the Glandelinians and would be glad to help the little girls but what could they do when the others were failing, and indeed were they not in the batle of Erminies creek themselves.!

However However general "indernineswas very desperate. Heindeed was in a desperate dilemma but he decided to strike general Raymond Richardson, Federal a blowbefore the other Clandelinian armies would come up to reinforce him. But then he knew never theless to that Federal's position was equally strong and to strike a blow might prove fatal. He was also broken hearted over the departure of the Vivian girls whom he had ben compelled to sent away for their own safty. The world seemed very lonseo lonesome to him and he felt as if he had been driven out of heaven for some slight offense. For a l number of times he had felt like having them re called but remembered their danger. He indeed felt sad and sometimes would weep in his headquarters when alone.

When e ever his generals were withhim he would hold a debate over the situation and it would turn out that they decided it t wheat purpose to strike Federal a blow before theother armies would arive and then get away from Calverinia. They declared that if theenemy won the war the Vivian girls would be in greater danger for than Federal would demand that they be et given up and if refused would wage the war untill they were taken. If their destruction t ecome hen general Vivian would lay the blame on them. Hindernine indeed did not know what to dob It was not fear of the blame that made Hindernine sent them away, bit but it was his love for them, and they were very dear tohim. The more he thought of their threatening doom the more ear afrind he felt.He could almost see a vision of what would happen if he failed, for he seemed to see thelittle girls in general Federals possessionand being stripped so that he could cut them to pieces.

He seemed to see the sabres fall on their tender bodies to se them gasped and mangled, and writhe in mortal agony, and their very bodies torn asun. He almost shocked when he imagined his. He knew that it was either tthe sudden blow against Federal or the deaths of the Vivian girls who were literally heavenly flowers of Angelinia. But then yet, suppose he wo ld get worsted! And would the other armies come before he could prepare to strike the blow! Let he threatening fate of the Vivian girls and of thenato nation drove him mad. He remembered what they suffered all their lives, how meekly they bore it, and then gods command that they be protected at all costs.

Then he also thought og of God's wishes

Then he thought of God's wishes, and that if god wished them to be protected probably he surely wu would help him to prote ct them by smashing Federal. Neverthe less he dedi ded to do it . He went immediately to his headquarters and held another council. The council lasted fully an hour and finally it was decided that the best thing t o do was to crush Federal if possible and so the decision. was made.

CHAPTER FOURTEEN.

T HE BATTLE OF VANDALLA, CONCLUSION, AND HINDERNINES TRICKS OF FEDERAL...

At the first sign of dawnwithout Hindernines knowledge general T homas B Cooks army on Hindernines leftmade a change of position so close to the enemys lines already withhin sight that trouble began immediately. In a few hours what had ben mere trouble had chanced into a terrific action along the enemys entire right. Cooks army kept up great maneauvers, in order to keep the enemy from moving too much in an orderly direction and started concentrati-ion but could not produce anything rather than a murderous fire along t eenemys whole line. Three times he had even without making one charge almost forced the enemy out of his position amid stupendous slaugh ter an and fierce firing, but the enemy had been so constantly reinforced ta that maneauvers had to start all over again. Hindernine learning that his left wing was in action against overwhelming odds plied all his batteries upon Federals Cwnter and bombarded his lines like a regular hell storm of fire and death an d dr destruction. Unfortunately Federal did not have his own guns up and so he was not able to answer so his own infantry was compelled at last to cahrge charge whoih which soon made one of the most bloodiestparaellal of horrors in southern Calverinia ever seen in the war.

Five times Federals divisions of many millions of men surged forward in mighty waves in a desperate effort to silence those storming chains of cannon, an d five times they were mangled and broken and swept back with the loss ofone hundred thousand per minute in killed and wounded.

It seemed a slaughter too great to last long but nevertheless it so n became more general, and now other christian artillery concentratinghammered away with a l- loud heaven reinding roar and indeed the din semed to be lime all the planits inerut r eruption.

General Smugat onimon Federal 's left grand division was instanly killed during the bloody action along his lies and Iadonia was wounded, while five generals who had led those five waves of men against the chain batier of batteiresx were wounded being, Hindman, Quaffmannia, Jenninis ,Pellinianand Callinia. Hindernines main section of intrenchments stretching for fifty miles were in a hellish uproar from the dreadful cannonading.

And it was frightful to see how the frightened inhabitants were flee fleeing for their lives from thecity which recieved a perfect storm of shells and high explosives. Houses were blown into debris by scores and hundreds who did not escape were killed killed or injured. For a whole day the bloodiest contest he had ever fought in alone, raged with unabated furz. Ten times under nines armies strobe strove desperately to shatter the Clandelinian centerin furious fighting all along the line, but every time the Clandelinians dropped a deadly curtian of fire which destroyed the christian brigades and forced the surviving columns to recoil.

Hitlerline for a vhe while was [illegible] ful in the frightful/ [illegible] frightful batt le with Federal..... Twenty of the biggest divisions had ben riddled and general Browns armies having ben caught between two sho ts of artillery five were literally slaughtered. F Federals [illegible] army hil [illegible] who saw that there was nothing else to do but play a ruse surrender to ch or retreat so that he could escape..But it did not good. However it be pleased to be that SBig for es of Angelininns under general Federal Hindinburg was advancing and these managed t o strike general Hindernine chestons flank driving his Clandelinians into ter-ible confusion and crushing them so badly that he had to surrender his whole force of one ians.

Hindenburg recieved Hindernines surrender sending forces to recievthe surrender of the mighty Clandelinian general.It was one of the most magnificient su surrenders of the war . Two armies of Angelininns faced each other in splendid array while the beaten Clandelinian forde unarmed marched al gol slowly through. Also to the surprise to all and to the hu disgust to many of the captured Clandelinian generals there had been no condition to the surrender except that no man of this force was to take partin the war agin again, and that they were to remain prisoners untill the Angelinians seem fit t to let them go.

Hindenine suffered the humiliation of a formal surrenderof his army of seven million men, with 7,245, cannon, 2,228 regimental standards, and vast qa quantities of military wagons and provisions. Federals success was h bungled by this occurance and as also a great pat of his own right wing had ben ambushed with inexceedingly great slaughter he could do nothing. And to make mat ers wp worse Federal was opposed by a gigantic army of Abbiennian ians , Tripi p Tri poli gonlins and Abbiennian-Concentinians under the leadership of a general who was really believed to be the father of the murdered Aron Aronburg child, and n ot only that other large armies were moving into Calverinia from Abyssinkila, from the north andit s now se med as if Calverinia would be lost.

Simultaneously to all this Federal had severe frictions with the Abbiennian army under Lilliania Musseline but no general success had occured and badly beaten with his main am army smashed to atoms by the surrender of Hindernines Clandelinian forces Federal was compelled t o start a withdrawal. Even what a humiliated Federal all the more was that it wasnot only Hindernines Clandelinians that had been ambus caded alone, but that a big army under Caledonia and Pennintinia had been crushed to fragments with the survivors captured along with hundreds of abandoned guns and immense quantities of ammi ammunition.

The Clandelinians under cover of a heavy smoke fog had managed to slip away from Hindernines grasp but left a big horde of prisoners behind in their retreat general Franklin had having also been forced to surrender during the persue. All the Clandelinian soldiers were forced to serve in the christian armie s in order to prevent themselves from anihilation for the Angelininns would bother with no prisoners and if they refused to do so they were put to death. Ten other Clandelinian generals u by names of Hindie, Familia hinie j ohnton, Callahania Sacranina , Pohmaniaia, Abyssinkin, Wnodroe, Hendrsinia, and Hoothsadinaia, had also been forced to surrender.

Federal wasnow literaoe literally frightened and broken hearted over his shattering defeat and retreated with his crippled army with al the haste he could intending to joinsome of the Clandelinian armies in the north if he could. F The grave crisis of the christian nation was now wanning. Federal had also been out witted in the most cliverest manner by Hindernine, while Hanson in who alone had escaped Ambrose Fuller and who was only slightly wounded took command of another big Angelinian army which had for days marched hastily southward from the northern part of Calverinia. Even the Abyssinkilian army which Violet and her sisters had been placed to be cared for was hastily advancing to oppose Hoeman and Hickenell who recided s southward not wishing to fih fight with such a fierce savage army whenowhen when in so great a number.

Blian nightlinger though strong in force had ben several times gallantly outwitted by his own christian armi enemies without a single batle and hastily retreated northward. When Violet and her sisters had learned of the one change of the situation of the war they were overjoyed. The change had come unexpectedly for they had feared that Hindernine would be captured. They even wondered what made thisnudden change. Had that man called general Darger who had once told them that he lost the Aronburg picture, recovered it, or did he find the location of it or was it all a fable and only a change caused by the power of God himself! Nevertheless they decided to ask Darger as soon as they found him.

In their eagerness to join Hindernine who was with general

Aronburgs Abbisanniana violet and her sisters started on ahead leaving the Aby -sinkilian army far behind but go guarded by 25,555 a Abyssinkilian calvarly man. Violet and her sisters with the s l soldiers took the army train going south on the only railroad line not affected by the war in galverinia and reacjed Aronburgs advancong army moving tward Baimbridge a very few days afterleaving the Abyssinkilian army feeling as happy as ha ppyniss happiness could be felt. Hindernine was glad to see them and embraced them as if they were his own children. He told them how he had gotten out of the grasp of wedeal and how he managed to work the ruse.

''It took nearly two da s before the battle began to get the ruse into operation of or for preparation.''Said Hindernine;''The landelinian prisoners you know did not want to do it, but we threatened toput them do death if they refused. All of the landelinian prisoners under the point of our guns were compelled to don the purple uniform. Then to many we forced to take counterfiut flags of Angelinia and Calverinia n and had general Franklin who resembles me a good deal to act as me . I gave him full instructions of how to get away if discovered and he did escape with theother christian prisoners as well. It was the cleverest trick played in theentire war and had turned out better than I had expected and led most of Federals army into an ambuscade just before the Angelinian reinforcements came up and took him on the flank almost surrounding him as he did me. I had expected that he would launch a terrific onslaught in revenge but this he could not do on account of other armies crushing i him.

In my apparent retreat before the Angelinians came up I had left this big hord of landelinians prisoners behind in the uniform of Angelinians and in the command of general Franklin. The cheat as I heard was not discovered untill Franklin and the other Angelinian generals had gotten away. Of course no doubt s believed that these supposed Angelinians were put back into the service though I hard that five hundred men had been sent after the Angelinian generals who had gotten away but that they could not be taken.

The many had of course as I forgot to relate seized all these supposed Angelinian whom I had left behind in my a parent retreat, and so I had withdrawn out of the trap or circle of men and had thrown a shattering assault upon the enemy suddenly before they had recovered their formation and withthe assault on the flank happen ing simultaneously was unknown to me at that moem moment federal suffered a disasterous defeat.''

''I'm glad it came out allright.''Said Voice;''I bet the ruse made him angry. ''I don't think it did from the reports I've heard.''Said Hindernine;I had heard that he was frightened and broken hearted.''

''Where is Federal now ?''Said Jennie; ''Is hestill running, or making a stand?''''

''Heis encamped near Jennie -ry Tory about twenty miles north of here. Generla Aronburg is ax anxious to catch Federal if he only can and compell him to fight.''

''Federa l , he, he, he, he-e-e-e-een is too wise.''Said Vilit violet I mean ;''It will take more than Aronburg to catch him for he is a desperate man.''

''I feel that way myself.''Said Hindernine;'' Federal is even too serious a man to trifle with, and he will not b be baiked. I'm telling you little girls right now that it will take over three months now before we can get as far as Julo calllo or even Probably sooner but it will take a bloody campaign to take that city or Norma and maybe it will never fall ules unless W vivan Ickey does.AndI know it from the experiencein the other campaigns.''

After this interv interview with Hindernine violet and her sister learned that the main general of the Abbisannian army was the father of the murdered Aronburg child, and decided to go and have an interview with him..... Afther three hours riding they were directed to his headquarters, which to the surprise of the little girls was only a little old wooden building more like a misers shanty. They easily gained admitt ance being usherd ushered before the great general by the gua gurads..... The little girls saw t that he was a tall majestic looking man, not at a all good looking but at the same time there was a fierce expression on his fa e indeed looking more like KAISER WILLIAM than any other man.He t stood like some haughty giant, assuming a very important exexpression as they entered.

H ''H'm; so you are the daunge daughters of his excellency of the great general Robert Angelo vivian are ye not.''He asked in a sturdy voice and very buisness like;''I can tell by your exceeding beauty and spirut p spiritual manners and bearings. You wish to see me s on something important I presume eh?''

''We are indeed.''Said violet as she slauted to his courtesy;''We happened to learn that you are the father of the little Annie Aronburg who was murdered by a Glandelinian incold blood. If so we believe awe could tell you wh who the murder ering wretch was.''

''I am' her father;''Said general Aronburg with a start;''And I know who the mur derers are too. One os Tamerlinein and the other my old time enemy Raymond Richardson federal. If I ever succeed in laying my hands on Fedral I'll torture him.''Addded the Abbisan ian general.

''Was there anything strange about the little girl?'' ''Asked Voice;''We had rumors all ov over that her destruction has something to do with the situato situation of thewar. A certain christian general had lost a certain picture of her which he claims if he don't get it back or one just like it the Angelinians would be worsted in thewar. I or my sisters do not believe in such rot an as any one would call it but nevertheless therehas already been signs that hese bronts are coming to to trues through some of our rec recent disasterous defeats, of the late failures to take Julo gallio, Norma, Dullaway, Crowley, and even the seaports of Vivian wicket Wickey and the Boyking Islands. We come to you to askif you know of any way to frustrate this curse hurled upon Angelinia.'' ''

For a moment general Aronburg was silent and then he said slowly.;

''Yes ---indeed ---I never believe --it --is so. I have noticed before her -er-er death that ---there was an a ----something strange about her---so strange that I have wondered and wondered--and --at times was a litt le scared of her spiritual ways. But what it was I cannot under obligations of Sacraleglous sin to tell not even to you little girls, though I would be willing otherwise. As to her death having something to do with the situation of the war is simple to describe.

Duringthe Child labor revolution she had been one of the main leaders and advisers of the rebel children and tried to gain their freedom by kindness to her masters and was succeeding when the governors murdered her in cold blo blood even pursued me for miles and rendered me homeless. As this war in not generally fought over the chid slave question but over the mas more at Crowley is not her death having the cause of this situation is really all rot. But Angelinia cannot under any conditions conquer their foes unless Calverinia is wrested out of the hands of the Glandelinians but it is best just the same that Aronburgs murderers are brought o to justice. The reason is the same about that picture general Darger wanted to use, the blood besmeared picture as a strong evidence but he lost it. It is for a fact that he will never recover that picture though he may secure one just like it if he captures one of the Glandelinian cup public librarian in this country.

To frustrate this curse which you say no man to be on Angelinia there is but one way and that is to crush Federal in some battle and I'm he one who is going to try it. It may make a serious slaughter to do t it but if the curse is broken by Federals utter down fall Angelinia will surely win right in this country at that and general Darger get his picutre back. But not before.''

''But can it be done''Asked Angeline.''Federal is not a bla bodied man a desperate fighter and can outmanuever us in many battles. We are brave little girls but many times his near pres presence would fill us with a strange terror . We attempted to take him prisoner once, but he ignored our weapons which he aimed at him and tried to ride us down with his horse.''

''I can be done but it will take time. 'Said general Arch Aronburg;

''I know the character of Federal well , because I knew him for years even when he and I were little ki kids . At that ime we ar were friends. He was once anon a time a good man and even was studying for the priest hood, but his mother and little children had been killed in the great Abbisan; Abbisan ian typohhn which deap destroyed your uncles wife and dau daughter and since then Federal has changed and seemed to be the wickedist man in all Glandelinia. He is a man who when he sets his mind to do a thing, he will without dismitting. Hindernine was able to worse him because wederal had been unprepared but had Federal known what was coming Hindernine would have met his death for even attempting it. I myself wil I will have to be careful for he is a dugerous man, and very insedious in his ways. But here comes some prisoners.''

Violet's hand ble nched and her pretty face turned a few shades paler as she an and her sisters observed the little gru group gro group which now approached.

She drew her sisters back a few steps until' they were almost against the walls of the room.....

''Sisters.''She whispered;''You had bette stad a little farther to one side. If anybing should ha ppen, you know it might''------

''Never mind.''Said Jennie;''If theprisoners starts anything Ill plug them.''''

Between two heavily armed soldiersmarced two Glandelinian officers who approached the Abbisannian general withvindictive glances at the litl little girls. One of the Glandelinian officers seemed familiar to themand to her dismay it semed to be Draggard though he was not as tall tall as the regular Draggard who had one once so fa falsely accused them at Cedernine. Scarcely acknowledging the questions f of thegreat Abbian Abbisannian she chief t he Glandelinian at once launched into into a long stro storyin low tonesand violet and her sisters could not hearo hear what was being said though they judged from the gestures and glances in their dired directions t that the rascal was accusing them of some misdemor.

''You may speak louder.''Directed general Aronburg sterl sternly.

''You have just understood what Ihave just told you.''Sulked the prisoner.

''Your statement will not be accepted, for it is worthless .''Was the fierce reply. ''Just now we areon ourselves inquring with special regard to your pren presence here. It has been stated during the batt le that Hindernine won that you two came from general federals army in an airship, that you landed near our lines, and that you have certain ducoments of your person of great interest to this country. All i this if true go would indicate that you are here as a spyin the interest of Glandelinia;;;;;; and also if that is true, there is but one course for me to persue. Can yourefute the charge?''''

Overcome with rage at the evident reversal of his evil plans, the rascal shocked a moment while he glared at the christian general..... Then shaking his fist at Violet and her sisters he burst out in a torrent of abuse.

''Those Vivian girls are the spies he ''He cried;'' I can even prove to you that they came from Glandelinia to inlist in your armies, and have thatother little girls called Gertrude Angeline help them gather information, which they will sell to your enemies.''

''Startling if true.''Answered the Abbieanian general apparently not in the least disturbed by the statement;''But concerning yourself yourself; I have heard and seen enough to justify me on holding you for further examanation, on the origonal chagre of being a spy. Have you anything further to say on this subject?''He questioned.

''Yes just this.''Shouted the Glandelinian making a swift movement toward his coat pocket.''You will never try me as a spy.''

Withdrawing his hand quickly he swung his arm launched toward Violet and her sisters a deadly stick of dynamite. Instantly he and his companion sprangout of the window and raced across the lawnlawn their path separating as they went. With wonderful dexterity Violet leaped forward and caught the stick of dynamite in midair.

Whirling about as she seized the dangerous missile she regained regained her feet, holding at arms length the object meant destruction if the Glandelinian had carried out his intention. Involuntarily the little group about the general had dodged, realizing that the explosive thrown against the hard wall would bring about a terrible catastrophe in which they did not wish to share. As Violet with a smile on her face turned to disposit the missile on the table general Aronburg gave a quick order to the two guards who had accompanied the two prisoners;

''Shoot the man with the plans.''

Rifles were swung to shoulders and the two shots rang out as one. Astonished beyond measure the little group heard a deafening explosion and saw a large cloud of smoke appear where the rascal had but a moment before run ing runin running a slow smile spreading over the face of one of the marksmen.

The other Glandelinian tripped and fell at full length and lay as he had fallen. Running forward the two soldiersexamined the spot where the main Glandelinian of officer had last been seen by the little group. Shaking their heads the two men returned where the prostrate Glandelinian lay.....

He was helpled to rise and then supported between the pair he was conducted back to the little house.

''You are a good marksman.''Commented general Aronburg as the soldiers came to a halt and saluted;'' But you were never furnished bullets such as that one you just fired. Where did you get it?''

''I fired a bullet from my regular supply.''Answered the soldier, still smiling as he lifted his hand in salute.''

''There is something peculiar about this matter then.''Declared general Aronburg;;'' When I order you to shoot a man , why should he explode!'' !

I'' ''I think Ican perhaps explain the matter.''Volunteered Joice stepping forward.

Then as general Aronburg turned attentively toward the little girls she said;

''When the man started to run, he threw as you know this stick of dynamite at me and my sisters. I believe he had more dynamite on his person somewhere and the soldiers bullet accidently struck it.''

''Quite reasonable.''Agreed general Aronburh Aronburg;''I believe you.''

''But not by accident sir.''Interrupted the soldier;''When I saw him start away I also noticed his pool pocket still bulging. I suspected that the landelinian had more dynamite in hee there and I aimed at the object inside his coat---and hit it also.''He co continued or concluded somewhat proudly.

''Most excellant marksmanship.''Was Aronu Aronburgs co mmmt;''But will you tell me why you aimed at the dynamite?''

''Because Isuspected from your statement that the man had plans of a fortification in his pocket. I thought that he would carry the document in a bat about his body and that if the dynamite exploded it would destroy tthe plans and prevent our secrets from falling into the hands of the enemy. I did not intend to disobey your excelleys orders.''

''You were very considerate.'Spoke Violet;''And we appreciate your kni kindness very much indeed. But you made a mistake.''

''A mitake!''Questiojned the soldier;''No; I shot straight.''

''You made a slight mistake nevertheless.''Violet replied;'' The plans are on that man betwen you two. He has them on his back.''

''It 's a lie .''Yelled the soldierlooking about as if speculating on his chances at making another attempt at escape''

''That man had has the packet of plans that his coma conpanion h gave him not more than two hours ago. I saw theexchange made.''

''It's a lie .''Again declared he Landelinian;''She is a down right black handed liar. He had the plans all the time, and they are blown to bits now and you will never see them.''

''How do you know this '''Questioned general Aronburg turning to Violet with a wink of his eye.

Omitting details Violet described an incident leading up to the time she and her sisters while intering his lines to meet Hindernine saw an exchange of something from the man looking much like Barrard to his companion in the guardhouse near Hindernines center.

''I indeed must admit it your excellency that it seemed very strange to us and we were going to say somet ing about it to you when we first intered to have the interview with with you, but forgot all about it.''

Turning to the soldiers Aronburg said;

''Search this man and se if he has the pa packet.''

A hand was thrust down the prisoners collar and the packet brought forth. With a inconsiderable jerk the a liar broke the string and handed the parcel to general Aronburg.

The prisoners consternation was co complete.

''Pardon me little girls.'' The general Apologized to Violet and her sisters as he sat down on his chair;'' I think I shall have to examine the contents right away.''

It was the plans of a fortification all right and the prisoner was led off under a strong guard to serve a twenty years term in the penitentiary.

''You have it very lucky.''Smiled general Aronburg;''We cannot accuse you as the main spy as the other man had only passed it onto you, so you ought to be thankful that we do not use severe measures. Had your companion failed to escape and get killed as he did he would have ben crucified as we do that to all regular spies. But nevert eless we will have to chatize you and so you may as well serve the term patiently.''

During all this time Federals army had made no move to retreat, Federal having relieved considerable reinforcements, but not from he other northern armies for these had failed to advance on account of Hangonine maneuvers upon them with equal armies under thrustworthy generals. General Aronburg was anxious to advance to advance yet he could not because Federal and Faulbarred his way.

Aronburg was puzzled.. Nevertheless in desperation he decided to make a fierce demonstration and ordered Hindernine to threaten ni Federals wings crossing the sidelights run. It took a full day for Hindernine to get ready for this maneuver and when this was accomplished he found that the Glandelinians crossing the Sidelights run had withdrawn from the region w and was maneuvering eastward and northward simultaneously.

Hindernine fearing that a battle was bro brewing withdrew a greatpart of his army and slowly gone concentrated the rest on Tenpin Hory. Hindernine was reconnoitring on Warinton Hill when he saw large bodies of the enemy moving across the stream in giant columns one headed for his left. He did notknow what to m make of this strange discovery nevertheless he kept on the watch, noted in h what direction they were mo moving and then dashed madly for his headquarters. When his general officers saw Him coming at such a breakneck speed they knew that some thing was up and went out to meet him.

''The enemy is advancing upon our left wing.''Said Hindernine;''I believe that Federal intends to give battle. Send the warning to the commanders of the left right away so they won't n be taken by surprise.''

While his orders werebeing carried out hindernine went into his telegraph office and telegraphed to Aronburg;

''I'm about to be attacked. Heavy forces of the enemy are moving upon my left . Big battle impending bt between the enemy and mi my forces.

Your assistant. Gene General

Richard Hindernine.''

General Bryant was the first to reach Hindernin es left wing and as he dashed on he saw something strange occuring. The first line of Angelinian pick pickets fired a resounding volleyat something like a moving gray ribbon and then turned and retreated, only now and then to stop and fire again. Shouts curses and cries floated ly while of all of a sudden a fierceclattering roar filled the air.

He continued to dash on s shouting to all the mass of troops he came to to prepare as the enemy were advancig. Soon he reached general Doolan who was in chief command of the left wing and told him in plain words that big columns of the enemy were advancing. This news caused a great commotion among the Christians but nevertheless the trenches were being rapidly filled and the artillery run for ward to meet the Landelinians.

Instead of coming on headon tward Doolan s lines the gray columns veered gradually to the eastbut continued their advance quickening theit s their step.

''What was up! Doolan could not guess but nevertheless he sent Violet and her sisters to see. It was a dangerous mission for the little girls for even at the moment they would be seen it would be their last.

As they started off general Flanagnan rock up to them;

"Looke here my little goils." He began; "I'm advising you, begorra for O'I hate's to see thaloiks of ye taking such a chance. It's a billion to one against you coming out of the dangerous mission alive. D'ye hear me."

Violet and her sisters stood quivering and anxious but with asudden shake Violet pulled herself togetherand looked up.

"Thank you general Flannagan. She said simply; "But we were sent to do it and must take the chance," And they went their way, most of the soldiers reciev ing the little girls with a dead silence, and to the little girls it semed as if these men were already preparing to attend their funeral. The thought brought a cold chill but the little gr girls set their teeth and went resolutely onward.

The morning beingstill dry was dark dismal and gloomy from smoke curtians cor crossingthe skies from the distan forest fires the distant trees with their leafless and broken branches looking like gaunt skeletons. As they mounted a high rise, the desire to be off with this job grew upon the lit le girls as general Flannagan had a said it was a toss up with death and theodds immeasurably against them, and now brought face to face with the danger, life looked sweet.

Violet was the first to glance down the not seven hundred fe t incline of the hill and then wistfully at the sky above. Then behind a tre she began to examine the movements of the enemy.

Eight columns of them were coming two of them rushing up the sides of the hill they were hdi hiding on. They had as n many such columns of men before and believ ing that the L Glandelinians intended to flank the left of the christian line Violet and her sisters wtole hastily away. They felt that they must be cautious for nothing could stem the tide of fury that might rush upon them, and they would be murdered like a rat in a trap. If theydid not escape theenemy, well t then the Angelinians would fish them cut from the sea of dead and wounded graycoats mangled and bleeding sometime later. For they knew perfectly that the slightest mistake or the slightest expose to the eye of the advancing army would let loose a hurricanic storm of bullets upon them from where there could be no escape whatever.

Not even t in the least possibility. They would then also probably be submered by the graycoated fiends engulfed and slashed to pieces. Suddenly however the Glandelinians did spy them and a furious rage took hold of them. Many of them fired volley after volley, cosning fire in a fury, shouting at the top i of their voices and raving alod. A glancing ball struck Violet's forshead the shock dashing her against a tree. In another moment as they rached on dragging their wounded sister with them the Glandelinians cursed and swore and opened fire in a rage, the bullets p spattering about the littlegirls like hail, and Jennie was hit in her leg her foot being covered with blood and from the w wound she was powerless. Jennie sobbed as she fell, a great despair seizing the little girls.

Then all of a sudden the whole world seemed to give way, there was a blindingflash as if lightning at the outbreak of a typhoon while there were stunning earsplitting crashes seming loud enough to split the earr earth the little girls being struck down by a storm of flying sticks, the air seemed again filled with a sheet of flame, while a horrible deafening roar filled their ears, a terrible fury of sound a din that almost paralized them with its pressure.

Recovering from the shock as the din lulled the little girls saw the cause of it. One thousand of the big cat christian guns had opened upon the Glandelinians hundreds of high explosives having struck the first line ofmen fairly scraping them off the ground. The series of explosions had latt eried thousands of tres from side to side, splintered them, shattered them and rought them down by hundreds. And at this moment the little girls saw immense columns of the Angelinian s come rushing down tward the confused Glandelinians and in a few minutes while others were rescuing them the christians began a scathing counter atack on the retiring Masonic lines. Pounded by the terrible Abbieannian guns and compelled to sustain the massive pressure of the christian co n counter attack part ot of the main Glandelinian column gave way but the main line held firm and gave the chrétians a fierce reception. As Jennies wound was being attended to terrific firing broke out along the enemy's lines but the Abbieannians and Angelin ians in their fear of the fate of theVivian girls, despite their gal ing losses fairly drove in wedges at the solid gray lines. Violet and her sisters helpee helpl helped Jennie out of harms way and took he tward Aronburgs headquarters which they reached in thr ee hours.....

PART TWO CHAPTER FOURTEEN.

THE DOIN GS OF A SEC RET CHILD SPY WITHIN THE CHRIS TIAN BOY AND GIRLSCOUT COLUMNS.

Jane Loviadove, young as she was only fifteen, was a Glandelinian girlscout who had had a lengthy and good training as a character actress under t he help of her ace omplished friend and fellow artist of the Glandelinian boy spies well known to the Vivian Girls, Gerald Starring. Gerald Starrin had served as one of the best Glandelinian boy spies as we all know for the Glandelinian armies. Now as he could o not go himself into the one ampments of general ..ivianne and as he knew that the leaders of the girl and boyscouts needed "watching", and as it was feared that Penrod intended to lead his reckless lavender jacket ed girl and boyscout riders upon the glandelinian encampments on a devastting raid to sec ur e secure the freedom of the child s aves slaves, he had asked Manley if he might send Jane Loviadovy to spy on these child scouts. General Hannonia Loveles s head of the Glandelinian sec ret servic e, and his aide colonel Stonemann seeing the younger girl impersonate a christian girlscout to a perfect letter T were convinc ed of her ability to fool the "Little Christian Dogs". They said she might go, a and assigned to her as an agent of the secret service the Number 13, which had been borne by another Glandelinian soldier spy, rec ently doing a lot of damage to the christian armies, but who later on t ook down wit h Rabies having been bitta bitten by a mad dog and died. A few days later while the christian armies were were hing on tward Jennie Tory, little Jane Loviadovy assuming the name of Mable Jean had the good luck to be assigned t o the head quarters of violet and her sisters themselves. And there while she als o was in the big celebration just previously mentioned, c ame Jack Saunders foremost of Angelinia Aronburgs boy spies, to be slightly suspicious of her. shortly after wards one of the other girls couts was arrested as a Glandelinian spy. Jane slashed a prison tent with a sabre, set her free, an d she esc aped. Then she was loaned to Angelinia Aronburg, who completely dec ieved, told suspicious Penrod that the girl was harmless. Penrod was somewhat relieved, but his c olle auge Jean Saunders remained suspicious and had her shadowed. He h said he had a s trange instinct in such matters, and justified his instincts, by finding some tell tale evidenc es in the child spys room. The girl on the discovery stole violet vivians best horse with her blue sage riding coat, and two pistols. Violet tried to stop her, but the girl s py struck the Princ ess in the fac e wit h the pistol, and rode headlong into the darkness and escaped. Boldy she changed her disguise and boldly joined the child scout column as it started southward. riding with it across the Obscutir Obsurity C reek, s he t old George Zimmermann, Angelin ia Aron urns Angelinia Aronburgs Aidecamp that she had come along to be with him. But in some co motion she lost one of her boots.

"What am I going to do Master George!" s he gasped as they rode out into a large war torn field. "I have lost my left boot in the water."

George surily turned in his saddle for he was exas perated and looked down at her slim little foot in its soaked black cotton stocking.

"The devil is in everything around here this confounded morning" he shouted. "What did you c ome with us for if you can't take care of your things. You're some girlscout. I don't believe you were trained to take care of everything."

"Because I have to come along. Oh George can't you len d me a left boot."?

They were riding forward ac ross the field now in t he near of the Ninth Vivianite Regiment of purroughs, pouring through a gap nin a large country fence.

"I don't see why I should be lending you my extra boot." he grunted glowering at her, for in the first time in his life he had a dislike for girlscout scouts and that was in her only.

"Yes you can." she insisted.

The boy and girlscout troop ahead halted, they could see offic ers arms upflung in signal, a red guidon bobbing forward alon si alongs ide of the motionless column.

"Where are you going to find a extra boot Jane!" George demanded fretfully. "What is that yellow boot top sticking out of your saddle box Master George!"

"That is my only pair of extra jockey army boots what I am going to give to Miss Angelinia Aronburg. You can't have them and so don't ask for them." He gave her a most hostile look, but wavered when her lovely distressed dark fringed wyes met his. "I,m sorry" he continued. "They're not mine to give."

She rode up c loser, put aside his hand, and unbuckled his saddle bag peering and rummagin g through it.

"How come you are carrying all these things!" she demanded. But he answered solemnly;

"They are the property of Miss Angelinia Aronburg Jane."

"Are you going to sit beside me wit h one boot and half naked!" she wailed.

"For the love of Heaven kick off that other boot!" he advised sternly"and ride barefooted then."

The girl prop promptly kicked off her remainin g boot, st ripped off the black whet wet stockings, and rested her bare toes in the stirrips.Here indeed was a far safer aid to disguise than a single spurred boot, which in her suddenly extemporized rle of girlscout might have been notic ed--boots belonging only to officers and far beyond a privates reach.Far ahead several sabres shot up high in the watery light of dayhreak, waved in circles, slantin g forward, and the purple column moved on, so did George zimmermon, and little Jane on Violets horse.It was ten miles of steady ridding northward to cros the right territ o ry tward the enemy lines.As soon as the boy and girlscout columns were across, t heir flanking foraging wings spread out widly gathering in many horses and cattles, and rescueing child slaves from plantations, shooting down the owned owners and overseers who resisted, burned the farm houses and destroyed or captured all the workin g tools, wagons and set the hay stacks on fire.All the morning George zimmermon t had been heidn bending every effoort to overtake Angelinia Aronburg and headquarters, but great regiments obstructed him and apparently nobody had instruct ions to forward a aided-camp of importance, followed by a barefooted girlscout, and two led horses.All kn w know him and loved him of course, however they couldn't let him through, and he and his led horses and little Jane, whom the girlscout troopers took for one of their own kind who forgot her boots or shoes found themselves at noon outside of St Petersburg Village amid swarms of mounted child scouts driving in herd after herd of frightened Glandelinian captured cavarly horses, sending in happy to go free child slaves, and bring a stron g long wagon train loaded with all materials and provisions from the raided and flame swept Glandelinian child slave plantations. Here on a road on the top of a slight rise of ground, George Zimmermon left the girl to hold the halters of the three horses in the shade of some t all pine trees near a large deserted barn and galloped off to make his way into the village below, which was full of boy and girlscouts still on horse. Sitting on the doorless sill of the barn, was a bare legged country girl in ragged dress and wait waist, staring down at the purple clad child riders in t he vill age.Now in bright, pitiless daylight, the Glandelinian girlscout spy was becoming frighten ed.It seemed certain that some boyscout or girlscout would recognize her presently.Certainly too by this time, The Vivian Girl Princesses or Penrod must have informed military headquarters of her detec tion in the main camp and of her daring esc ape."Where was Marco Penrod?.Where was her assistant with his red rose?Had he man aged to carry news of the raid to the Glandelinian headquarters?The girl shivered in her lavander coat where she stood barefooted in the grass, holdin g the three halters.If Penrod or even Jack saunders had joined the raiders, and if either one of them encountered her, they would know her despite her disguise.she could not hop w hope to escape the eyes of these scouts.That also meant a drumhead hang ing wit hout any doubt at all.And too this was no real disguise she had on--this lavander coat, slouch hat and white dress.And under the lavander coat she wore her starched white dress and had with utmost difficulty kept it lifted above her waist lest it should show.In imagine she imagination she could see Marc Penrod narrow gaze fastened upon her, and hear his loud sharp voice bidding her unbuttom her coat.She looked around desperately with a sudden wild desire to fling herself int into the saddle and ride for life.And saw in the fields on every side countless little lavander un f uniformed boy and girlscouts riding.Then her scared eyes fell upon t he little girl sitting on the floor in the barn near the doorway..Instantly she led the three horses twrd the gaping barn .The strange little farm girl rose as though alarmed and frightened when she came c lose to her.she spoke smilingly but the sc ared child was ready to bolt as she collared her.

"Listen to me girl"she said breathlessly."I odo not intend to hurt you."

However shestruggled wildly in e her clutches,vbut Jane being older was stronger and she shoved her into the dim barn, dragging her three horses after her.

"Now"she panted"Give me your yellow rim dotted dress.That is all I want.I'll give you mine."

The little girl however was too terrified to obey.So Jane flung three bridles around an upright staple, seized the little girl and c almly stripped her.

"If you yell"she said"I'll do terrible things to you.Now go up into that hayloft and lie down on the floor or hide yourse'f in the hay.If you yell remember I'll set fire to the barn and lock you in."

She went up the ladder like a panic stricken monkey.Then the spy girl flung off her purple coat, tore her white starched dress from her, pulled on the childs yellow dotted dress, and gathering together her own telltale clothing shoved t hem into a hole she found beneath the floor and replaced the board.Then she fast ened the halters of violets horse and the other and led An Angelinia Aron urgs horse out into the r ar yard, which was thik with weeds grown t aller than her head.Here under the saggin g wrek of an ancient shed of some sort, she fast ened the horse, c onfident that no boy or girlscout would come foraging into so strange an abandoned spot.Certain also that when the c hild scout t roop had gon e gone on tward Jennie Tory the horse would make enough noise when uhungry and would be discovered.Now then she ran back into the barn, and darted up the ladder and saw the little country girl, stark naked lying flat in the loft , rolling terrified blue eyes at her.

"Don't you dare move from here untill it is dark."she warned hi her."And if you obey me, and are good as they say you are,I'll send you a nice warm coat.Do you here me?"

"Yees, yeess ma'm."the boy stammered or the girl stammered t hrough chatt ering teeth.

"Very well.And maybe I'll ask your God to send you a bea t beaut iful horse too. When the moon is up to night tell your parents to look around here with a lantren and maybe they will find a beautiful horse."she placed a lifted finger to her lips then shook it warningly at her."You promise?"

"Yees'm."she whispered.

So Jane descended the rickety ladder, and removed it, lowering it to the gap ing plans of the floor.Now she went to the horses, untied t hey mounted the bare back of one of them, rode slowly out onto the grass, halted under the pin es and looked down into the turmoil of the captured town of St Peters .The town swar ed swarmed with boy and girlscouts.She could see Angeline Jennings girl and boyscouts riding it with a drove of child slaves on the horses with t hem, with herds of horses, and cattle and some wagons, and with other c hild slaves , and a tange strange to the girl spy she saw they had no prisoners and wondered why.It was n oon by this time, bugles wd were blowing, and all t hose who had been ob off t heir horses remounted finishing their meal in their saddles, Annie Rooneys flankin g child scout column spread wide predatory wings and tarlons to s weep up every child slave plantation close to the enemy lines on their southward journey.Headquar ters waited watching the cavarly of Calamity Jane Melfort mounting alon g the Big Girl Knool Rod Road, and curious to learn what her Angelinia Aronburg really was going to raid as far as Jennie Tory.Jane Lovedovy from her i little hill could see the girl general and her headquarters staff a litt le way below her in a small meadow.They were so near that she could recognize officials, Jack Saunders, Jean Saunders his friend, Timothy Groveton, Annie Roonie, Joan Guard, "Orphan Annie" Button Bright, and others.Down there too was George Zimmermon bustling about with camp plates and a sizzling frying pan.The brigadier and staff offic ers were eating in their saddles, but Angelinia Aron urg ate not hing stand ing apart from the others, deep in c onsultation with a shabby looking boyscout on a gangling racker.And sudden y to her terror the girl recognized the one known as George Rado liffe,"called by the Glandelinians "The Rattlesnake boy." A pang of purest fright pierced her very soul.And there was nothing she c ould do a'out about it.The horses top most speed of which she had with her could not carry her through that outer ring of flanking boys and girlscouts on horse. Angelinia Aronburg looked over her gold and red embriov embroidered shoulder, and catchin g her under generals eye, nodded laughingly.The next moment Timothy Groveton called out something to George zimmermon and made a jerky gesture northward . The girl saw the boyscout aided-camp mount his horse and c ome gallopin g up t he hill tward the clump of pines, where she sat Violets horse.The halt er in her strained hand quivered wit h fright for she realized she should have gotten rid of the horse and kept the two others, and which she hastily made exc hange of before t he boy reac hed the spot or saw what she did.Up the hill galloped George Zimmermon, but when he saw Jane sitting on the christian generals on ly horse the shock staggered him.

"For the Love of God girl."he roared."what are you sitting on general Vivianmas on y on ly o horse for.Have you went plumb crazy or did you st eal it."

"No Master George"said the little girl tranquilly."I am no more c razy than you are and you know it.I have got to ride something havevI not?"

"where in the world is your horse gil girl?"

"That is what I was going to ask you?"she answered."Who was it who sneaked up this hill and steal my only little horse while I was walking and colling t he t wo horses here."

"The devil is here with the whole business."snarled George zimmermon."If your horse is stolen you got to go back to camp.The general will be mad if he sees you on his horse and Miss Angelinia Aronburg will scold about it ."

"How am I going to get home Master George to the camp.You reckon I'm going to hoof it on foot more than twenty five miles with a million Glandelin ian soldiers chasing me because I have no disguise to put on ?Ain't you got no sense?Oh Master George you don't seem to love us girlscouts any more."

"I do too but what in the world am I going to tell the general or Angelinia Aronburg"He demanded."Andthe horse you lost belonged to one of the Princesses. Heavenly days but she'll take it out of you for t hat loss."

"If you tell the general or Miss Angelinia Aronburg that you let me come along I suspects too he'll go up mighty high and she too."she said calmly.

"I'm not fixed to tell them anything."retorted George, rolling anxious eyes.

"Yes you are"said the little girl spy cooly."If t he general goes and asks you how it c omes a girlscout is riding his own ohorse, you are going to say I am t he best girlscout you know who helps you take care of the generals horses."
"Where did you get that ragged yellow dress you are wearing."
The girl laughed.
"Some one stole my overcoat and the horse.Do I look like Jane George!"she asked giggling.
"You look like you was a nasty little saucy girls c out who don't ac t like an Abbieannian child scout."he replied exasperated.
"If you t ell anybody that I am riding with you the provost will discharge you."said the girl still giggling.
"I'm not going to tell any one anything."retorted George sullenly."And how are you going to ride the horse when he has not even a saddle or a bridle on.I have never knowed you could ride a horse bare back, Jane.That's Glandelinian style."
"I can ride better than any of you an."she jeered.
"Where in the world did you g et so horse wise and birgity!"he growled you don't act an d talk like one of us."It appearss to be you know a big lot too much about everything.We are all suspicious of you.Better look out."
"Jane Lee rode up the hill.
"George "she shouted."Follow headquarters guidon"and trotted off tward the girls cout girlscout general and the staff,, whose horses were now moving off at the head of the coou c olumn.Beside Angelinia Aron urg Aronburg rode the stranger Radcliffe on his strange racker, and as George zimmermon l oding one of the hors es followed by the girl followed just in behind Je Jane Lee, the girl spy heard Radcliffes strange f voice continue;
"Here is wht I believe is our situation near Jennie Tory, Angelin is"Glandelin ian infantry in uhuge olumns marching eas t of us at three t his morning, the enemy cavarly under some un nown unknown genera l, and near this villiage but ten miles away is an Infernal Region of glandelinian soldiers;"
"I am not going to Jennie Tory"said Angelinia Aronburg."But con t inue Rad"
"Yes dear.Well Angelinia I reckon general Turner is keeping general Ouchie busy, the main Glandelinian army still remains near Radcliffe, general Stone mand riders are in full force also near out own spot .Then there is general Braggards big cavarly force under general Hendro Baldwin."
"General Baldwins cavarly!"Angelinia Aronburg inquired with bright interest concerning the most dangerous of the foe cavarly.
"Yes Angelinia "
"I hope even our on y child soldier troopers will meet t hem."laughed the girl spy leader."Well go on wit h your report."
"That is all Angelinia.Only I mistrust all these st range Glandelinian scouts and spies and fugitives and so called refugees amon g some foriegners that is skeddadling to the Glandelinian armies to spread the news of this raid, dear."
"You think that new girlscout of mine Jane Loviedovy got clean away to the foe lines?"inquired Angelinia Aron burg.
"None of my spies ould find neither hair or hide of her, and Cat herline Lees pickets fired at somebody who rode a horse like the one she stole from Princess Violet."
"Well"said Angelinia Aron u Angelinia Aronburg"We can't help it now.I have sent spies into the enemys lines to see if they can find her or the horse.Is that all the news ou have?"
"No dear.A boyscout trooper about fifteen years of age and dark hair of the Lagerian Troopers of boyscouts deserted whe we rish rushed the enemy signal station.I mistrust he too was a Glandelinian boyscout spy in our own uniform and t hat he is gone back to the foe lines."
After a grim silence, Angelinia's tan face cleared her blue eies sparkled.
"No use worrying over spilled milk"she said."We're going to rue Turmerville, God willing."she turned."Oh Joe Greene"she called to a boyscout"Give us a little music if you please."
"Radcliffe too looked around and his gaze swept George Zimmermon and Jane Loviedovy in charge of the two horses.George Zimm rmons feau German Features were familiar to the chris tian child chief of sp e spies, his keen eyes lingered on Jane Loviedovy, glanced at the horses, reverted to the girl, wit h the uncon scious inst inct of a suspicious watchful hound.Then Joe Green unslung his banjo, tuned it deftly, raised his voice in a song which the girlscout general took up and the entire staff began to sing to the enc a enc hant ing staccato of of the ban o ban jo.They all t herefore rode on to the twang of a banjo an d one of the well known Catholc Hyms of "Oh Mother Dear pray for me.Eastward west ward and southward the bird of prey wings of the southward marching lavandar brigades of boy and girlscouts swept the countryside c lean of Glandelinian horses , and saw no hos tile horsemen.In fact they were afraid go to come out as Glandelinians were afraid of these little deadly boy and girlscout soldiers who in a conflict even took no prisoners and gave no quarter for the child slaughter they had seen.

The olumn proceeded by brigades of Camp Fire Scouts boys and girls.In the c enter of each brigade traveled a plat oon of rescue child slaves, and captured led horses and baggage and provisions and also munition wagons.On ce Angelinia Aronburg looked around at her led horses and said bantaringly to George Zimmermon;
"I supnose you were clever enough to ride one horse an d lead two.Where did you find that little stranger girlscout.!"
"She came with me without my asking but she seems allright."said he.
Yet Radcliffe turned twic e to look wit h that strang strange unconscious in stinc t of his at the little girl riding one of the horses .A few minutes later smoke from fires come over them as the column bord bore to the east .But it was a little after nine oclock in the morning when the lavender clad mounted child scouts entered defenseless Turnerville, where a group of prominent citizens who were glad their town was liberated from the enemy awaited in evident joy the event of the child scout raiders.Angelinia Aronburg was recieved by them joyfully and she spoke to them as if they were always her best friends, suggestin g that allthe citizens s hould aid abandon their town and come away quiet for after they would leave the enemy would revenge this blow by massacing everybody they could lay hands on. Officers also polotely aided them in securing what helon igings they had, and gave food to the t ownspeople, while while staying there tempor rily regiments camped along the streets to prevent a counter attack of Glandellinians from taking the town by surprise.George Zimmermon, his horses and t he girl found a large ricket y house to shelter them from the smoke of burning haystacks and fields of grass.The girl sat in the dark doorway, eating cold cornf cornbread and bacon and a little piece of pie she had secured, and watching boy and girlscout details riding out to scour the region for more horses and child slave plantations.A ring of alert boy and girlscouts all mounted on fast horses and very dangerously armed surrounded Turnerville to watch out for advancin g foes who may try to retake the town.So for her there was no possible chance of her getting out.George Zimmermon mortified genera by Angelinia Aron u Aronburgs good humored jest, had little to say t o Jane.He was acafraid of her and suspicious and kept his eyes on her when she did not know it.When the horses were watered, fed, rubbed down, and bedded, George still s ulky and suspidous lay down in the straw beside his own mount but in a position to watch every movement of the girl.He was suspicious bec ause she didn't act and talk like an Abbieann Abbieannian, and was more like some of the girls of his own country and others whom he had known.Abbieannian child when they speak n don't jeer, act snooty, and be like a "brat"and she was every inc h t hat way an and very sarcastic.so he was suspicious.However Jane walked to the doorway and looked out at the smoke.
"Goodness me"she said"All the regiments have got new child slaves George.And they all have on brand new clothes and are not naked as they were when rescued.Where did the troopers get all them pretty clothes for them hay?"
"They are our own old uniforms."growled George"We got to dress them somehow.Don't think we are going td have them follow us to camp with out nothing on do you?"
"George would you go out and get me a new blue overcoat."She headed."It's chilly this November Morn."
"For the love of mo mike why don't you go to the quarter master sergeant and get one."The mute muttered."We all have to get our own.You ought to know he won't give me one for somebody else."
"It's chilly out and I don't like to go."she whined.
"I can't get you one"he said earnes tly.
"BGeorge don't you love little Abbieannian girls!"
"You are not an Abbieannian girl."
"How do you know?"
"You don't act it."
"You dare to say I am a Glandelinian!"
"I'm not saying.Drop the matter.We don't want to quarrel."
"I'm going out"she said.
"Where are you going?"
"Going to find me a new lavander coat."
"Huh."He grunted."You just try it.We boy and girlscouts got to buy our uniforms if we want them new.You'll not get a coat for not hing."
"How much does a coat like that girl scout over there cost?"
"Fifteen Pesoes."
"I'll buy it."
"Where did you get the money.?"
"Never you mind. "
"She went out and succeeded in buying a beautiful shining Sat in Lavander coat for a first class privats..Now in real fact this little girl was not a real Glandelinian girlscout. Never in the war did a real Glandelinian girlscout ever have the nerve to spy on the child s couts of Abbieannia.She really was a more famous girlscout for the Christian side N than any of these ever present butat any cost even death she had to go as if s he was one in order to t rac k down a Glandelinian man spy who was within the boy and girlscout c amp hidden somewhere with the purpose to attempt to assassinate the Vivian Girls in c old blood.To get to the desired spot she must get out of these t roop, and yet there was no way to get out of thisdark smoke stenc ed town already in flames.No way to get news to general vivianna, or to Radcliffe who instead of being afraid of she wanted to see for he really knew her.Yet somehow she had to do something or ot her wise the enemy she was searchin g for would escape.She knew the man was aware that for him death awaited discovery, and even for her discovery was inevitable by her own friends if for her action they discovered she was what t hey t hought a real foe spy, and therefore in this crazy disguise s he couldn't continue withthe c avarly of the child scouts on their return march.And her knocking down Violet was only a bluff and to take the horse too.The horse didn't belong to violet.That was a sham hoping that the spy would see the action, and think she was a friend so that she could trap him.Violet knew the plot and did the ac tion do t o decieve the foe and purposely recieved the make believe pistol blow.She brooded over the danger that poor violet and her sisters were in untill she was scared cold, then resol utely forced t he horror from her mind.On e her way back to the barn she not ic ed a candle burning in an outhose behind it, and saw a fat citizen in i his shirt sleeves lowering something into a well as if for the purpose of concealment. he got suspicious of him right away, and her sist suspicion was still more aroused when a datter of boy and girlscout patrol sent the stranger scurri surrying so fast that he forgot to blowout his candle.Therefore she rept into the latticed well house, and searc hed around.

"George"she called softly."With al with all this pretenses aside, did you see that action of that man."

George had before this seen it too and had sat up quickly.

"Is he still in the well house."

"No George."

He made his way to the place, and taking advantage of the lighted candle looked around.

"Heavenly days Jane"he chuckled."There's certainly a smell in this place.It is like guts .Did you see him have anything with him."

"she told him she had seen i him lowering somethin g down the well.Then when some of the scouts appeared she had seen him climb up into t he hay loft and felt sure that he was lying there silent, tryin g to see his way to s ome c lear safe end before a christian militry court ended his and saved him all t rouble of furt her thinking.She had decided to climb up the hay loft ladder but George seeing her start was getting n nervous and sc ared.

"Jane, Jane Lovvdovy"he shouted with all his might."Don't go up there you fool.If he is there he'll shoot at your head as soon as it appears ."

His loud voice alarmed her and she thought it bet ter to descend.Indeed the man was up there and he peered down through a crack in the planks, where he lay flat on his stomach in the hay listening to the two scouts, but unable to see them in the s moke fog.Suddenly a form showed at the door way, and he saw a terrifying s ight t two child scouts.One was Radcliffe, and with him was Shofield Penrod.George and Jane were with them for they had gone for Radcliffe and encount ered Penrod in c onversation with him.

"George"said Radcliffe whowas the c hief of c hild cpies"Where did you say that man had gone."

"A sudden pang of fear for them sobered the boy scout to comprehension of their owj cwn danger if they tried to climb to the hayloft.

"Who do you mean!That man we told you about ."

"I mean i him"said Radcliffe."Where did you say he is?I want to take a look at him."

"But if you go up there and he is armed he'll shoot the moment your head appears said George."

"When did h e go up the loft."

"Been up there just three minutes."

"Are you sure he didn't get away while you came for me."

"Don't know Rad."But the main thing is he lowered something down into a well there(indicatin g with his finger)and it m smelled "gutty.I feared it may be the body of some murdered child whose front may have been utvaway."

"who was the man!"demanded Racd Radcliffe.

"I don't know ."said he"but I can describe him to you.He was sort of fat, an d takk and dressed like a jokey. "

"How long has he been around here.?I don't rekon seeing him."

"Come on"said Penrod to Radcliffe."We can't go up to the hayloft.He would s hoot us for c ertain.We'll set fire to the barn and rout him out .It 's the only way."

"put that will start a conflagration."

"Never mind the conflagration.If the town is burned the enemy would be able to use it ..I think I'll take chances and step up there."

"Oh come on don't risk it."said Penrod detaining him by one arm."If it is so nec essary necessary we'll fire the barn now.But don'r risk a shot from the spy."

Radcliffe hesitated, his instinct working.Then for a half minute the two were gone, the girl and boy remaining now armed with rifles and bayonet .The spy lay like one dead, for now he had sent one glance through the crack in the boards and saw the barn being set on fire.Now stiff and chill wit h t error, he lay listen ing to the crackling flames and the hours of sickenin g fear seemed to st retch in years.But there was another exit of which the others didn't know.And now in t he thick mist the old barn began to shake and tremble wit h terrifif series terrific series of ernormous explosions where boy and girlscout troops were blowing up storehouses, arsenals and depots of supplies for the wic ked enemy army and trying to blow up two huge iron bridges two hundred yards long one h everywhere the bugles of the c hild scout troopers w ere blowing, troopers saddling, moun tin g clat tering away out of t he burning, bearing to the southward. Guidons done ed by, captured caissons, limbers, and guns jolted brickly through the streets in the mist and now also happy free child slaves also passed by wit h troopers.The terrified man rose from the hay as the fire c ame tward the loft opened the door on the side of t he wall crept to the roof an of an adjoining house, andcept crept down the drain pip to where a horse was seen standin g with some others.First he saddled Jan e's horse, then led out Georges into the rank bushes behind the well house..///.....

"Comechere"said a little girl scout to a little refugee girl.

At sight of the lavander uniform and ragged yellow dress the child was scared for hearing about glandelinians she feared any one in uniform believeing all were Glandelinians.But she had a very bad injured foot and couldn't run even walk fast.she was stricken with fright an d would have shrieked but c couldn't ut ter a sound.

"Come here you poor little girl"she called softly."I am a good little girl soldier and won't hurt you."

The child knowing Glandelinians shoot if she would try to get away came slink ing still more fear stricken.

"Are you a little refugee girl!"she asked.

The child seemed incapable of speech but finally nodded.

"Are you a Christian.A Catholic!"she demanded.

The child knowning it was a sin under any conditions to deny her faith nodded.

Then she feared now she would be murdered.But the girl in uniform said;

"Listen, you have no reason then t o be afraid of me.I'm Jane Loviedovy a Girlscout.Is there any way a man could have rode out of here wit h three horses and escape to the north.One of t hose horses rode gone was mine."

"That wood road leading up a hill."The little t imid girl pointed with tremb ling finger.She sat her horse which she had loaned from Jan e Melfort in silence for a while.Lavander troopers were still visible fi riding flan to ridin g flank to the moving column, beyond them c hild scout vedettes vedettes were galloping in from the eastward.The child sc oule scout column was leaving Turmerville and riding on ,Heaven only knows where.Now t hrough the smoke mist of burning fires an explosion of great force sk shook the ground, and a sheet of fire burst out beyond the high road, n and a great column of smoke elsewhere rose like that of a volcanic eruption with a terrible thunderous roar.Then came a rock racking shock and roar and a vast flame as a Glandelinian depot of quarter master stores ex exploded.Then a terrible silenc e cut by clear gay Abbicannian bugle calls.Far away to the eastward the girl caught the faint twang of a ban o banno banjo.without another word Jane urged the horse in motion and she raced alone down the dusty woodland road.she had been gone on ten minutes perhaps, when Radclffie rode up.

"Hey little girl"he c alled out to the refugee who was sitting on the ground.

T he child still jellified by fear, and seein gno e now a boyscout clad in gray this time stammered out that she was not a "Hey you little girl but a refugee."

"where's that fat man and them horses!"asked Radc liffe gently.

"They, they went that----that---that--- way."stammered the little girl and lifted a shaky arm tward the wood road.

"you are sc ared of me."said Radcliffe softly."I reckon you believe I'm going t o kill you."

"They did go that way"screamed the lit tle girl."A tall fat man and three horses.He said he was a Christ ian and that he was bring in g the horse home."

"The dirty liar."he said."But if you want to be safe too from Glandelinians you better not stay here.Come and before she could do anything he pulled her on to his horse and then spurred after Jane at full gallop t prevent her from attacking the man alone or to help her if she was in trouble...!!!

Through some cause or other word of Angelin ia Aronburgs daring and des t ruc tive raid so close to the fo lines he had gone forth by a Glandelinin Glandelinian Scout patrol, also by courier, spies, and by "Grave Grape Vine", by flag and fire.Also Mounted troopers from general Frenc is gmit hes Twelve Omarian (Sc[illegible]er (S c oodlier) horsemen warned general Ta/ismann, Talisman as excited troopers of Zimmermannian Dragooms relayed the information t o general Pack or plack Brooks with flm flaming tr t orches, telegraphing from hill to hill(get your fill) General Black Brooks out of magnitic telegraphic communication, read the blazing news and started his signal flags flapping under smoke lowering skies(smoke from t he Southeastern Calvarinian forces fores t fires raging now ten t imes worse) unt ill his last relay station eletricif general Federals signal offic ers ingo into horrified compfr comprehension.At Jennie Tory t own Glandelinian Federal Mil itary Secret service Operator IO, made contact with Operator Eighteen hundred, who instantly mounted his swift vh charger and started ward the main Glandelinian army c arrying to the Glandelinian chief general the news of the raid also.

Federal Operat or Sixteen disguised under the uniform of a privat e of Abyssinkilian c avarly des erted the christian lines n ear Jennie Tory in the fog of smoke, galloped tward the Glandelinian armies and thence south alon g t he Yellow Brick or Big Girl Knool road, and spurring tward Glandelininn army headquarters at Chancellor Villiage was scout in scout ing by or spot ted by a patrol of Lagorian Calvarinian girlscouts who at the time was only on a lark by they but they gave chase an d killed him.

Jane Loviedovy in ragged shirt and breeches having changed disguise, her face and body stained as brown as a colored boys, her hair flowing in th the wind kicked t he nervous high strung horse she rode into a deadly run wit h her naked heels, while she hung desperately t othe halters of t wo other capt ured Glandelinian horses--favorite mounts of the great Glandelinian gen eral Raymond Ric hardson Federal, persued by scores of glandelinians who fired wildly and steadily at her in a modt desperate and determined effort to either kill her or t he horses but miraciously not a shot struc k anything but the leaves of trees, while she had killed four Glandelinians already.And yet always on her heels thundered death in the human shape of one of the glan delinian leaders , a Glandelinian chief of spies the dangerous "Hutt "fellow Nero Fanic determined t o do t his dangerous little girl scout s py to dest h before dy before she c ould acc om plis h the defeat or destruction of general Federal and many millions of his soldiers , who were defiantly c ircling a christian army of IOO!OOO!OOO men whih to get at him and tear his army t to piec es.The wood road was softy and frightfully dusty, the forest seemed very still except when a stran ge hot s outheast wind stirred the Autum forest leaves.Through it with the rus h of a great wind tore three galloppin g horses urged on to frant ic flight by a ligt little girls out secret service operator of the main c hristian army who now rode for her life, and who alternately shivered with fear and giggled hysterically when she realized she had taken from the enmy the generals best horses indeed the most prized and beaut iful horses ever seen anywhere. Persued hard by the equally frant ic Glandelinians she galloped due east tward the main christian lines.And she c ould not help that , alt hough Jack Saun ders the night before had bragged that the Glandelinian c avarly were going t o Jennie T urner and then southward an d that she better wat ch her step.Yet t he dim woodroad seemed to parallel the Big Girl Kn ool Yellow Brick Road.She hoped it might turn tward the christian lines but it did not.But fort unately for i her it remained a forest road where at intervals rows of walnut and oak and other s ort of logs were piled alon g the trail awaiting trans portation t o some army to be made int o abatis.The smoky close hot air was sat urated with t he s tron g pungent odor of burning pine and needles, and now and then the little girl had a swift glimpse of persuers and then saw t hem not.For a t ime though she heard the persuing hors es she saw no body, but her deadly fear was that she might gallop headlong into n an advanc ing column of Glandelinian c avarly be seized alon g with her horses, and then the awful death that the Glandelinians do the c hristian c hildren by.Un der her ragged shirt, strapped to her naked body she carried her long sharp girlscut sheath knife in its velvet sheat h.She carried also a rifle slung over her shoulder, and in the holst ers she also had two heavy autmoautomatic dragoon repeating revolvers, c apped and ,loaded.she had had little to eat for a long lon time and her slim s tomach seemed t o slap against her spine at every stride of her hors e and jerk of the lead hors es halters.Jane Lovydovy in all her dramatic career as a member of Angelinia Aron burgs Company of famous girl spies never in her life had played so excit ing a role in anyh girlscut work as she was playin g now, and never had she experienc ed s uch thrillin g and strangely alta l altern ately shocks of fear and delight as h this headlong gallop and the persuers were givin -g her.To decieve and flot that glan delinian capt ian, and to fool an entire glandelinian army anand vanish the Glandelinian generals famous two horses and a great plan in her possession and Federals twogreat pist ols, sabre, and rifle.To warn general vivianana and s t art a great army of IOO,000,000 men men in motion.As she rode these delicious and triumphant thro thoughts streamed through her mind while the warm hot dry wind rushed past her ears intoxicating her.And there was that c razy Mutt spy too with his handsome fac e.Was he also a subjec t for t hrillin g fear and mirth!As she gallopped on her flushed cheeks aglo, she though t hought of her desperate swining blow an d of the heavy revolver butt smashing down into his wicked fac e as he tried to stop her.No that was nait her funny n or thrillin g. It had been absolutely nec essar,y he was a dangerous man, indeed she would have been happy to kill this fool who was the highest chief of all Glandelin ian Sec ret Servic e spies--so close had she beheld dest h grinnin g at her in the st arlight.Galloppping onward now, but with no glow of vic t ory in her pale brown c heeks she began to remember also that some young Glandelinian boyscout had seen her riding off from the Glandelinian camp and had let her go.Because he mus t have seen her, she was sure he had, by the expression in his eyes .Why. Was it in sheer pity knowing what her fate migh might have been .But spies do not pity each ot her to that extent and then too Glandelin ians hate all christian children like the devil hates Hell.Yet he had said no word of his disc overy to the c hief of all Glandelin ian spies ,,,,as he saw the girl ride away on the horses and leading two others.Why.?The color c ame back int o her own pallid brown dyed face."Maybe he was not a Glandelin ian. Why Why t oo was this foriegner this "Hutt"fellow serving the Glandelinians .Just for Money. Well then all the worse for this wic ked young man--if he could not command his baser passions .If he must s uccumb first to his lust for money and riches and surrender his passion to such a wicked Glandelinian c ause for the sake of same.Her heart had begun to beat as fast as the thudding of her horses feet. A mise i miserable young foriegner to let that kind of passion or lo ve for Money or whatever he dared call it, interfere with his ost h and dut y to his own God and home to join as chief of spies a wic ked Glandelinian count rys cause. She despised him and his fellow man worse than all the Glandelinians.Let t his man or his "Jess or Jeff"fellow beware of her if ever again they interfered.he was breathless a moment then then rigid under a wellin g rush of anger.Never before had a man arcused suc h wantom such indescribable in or emot icn in her little virgim virgin mind and bl body.Ever had she imagined herself capable of letting such a man persue her and get away w ith it before.Scarcely conscious of what she was about, she checked her horse.God only knows how far s he had gallopped t hrough the woods in the dim Autumn twilight.She walked her mount for a while to ease and give him wind, patting his hot wet w sweating neck, and drawing the other two up beside her and caressing the beaut iful c reatures - always with a scared nervous glance flung back over her shoulder lest he dangerous persuers already be closin g in at her heel.Lest she should be caught and die the horrified death other children had at the hands of these heartless devilish Glandelin ian soldiery who knew no merc y.Suddenly not far to the northward, a military bugle which she knew by sound was Glandelin ian rang out.White with terror the little girl beat her horse wit h fist and heel into a gallop once more and rode for her very life, while the Glandelinian bugle repeated again and again and vibrated in echoes in e her st artled ears. Ten minut es distanc ed behind her galloped the Glandelinian c hief of spies and his followers "Agustus "Hutt"as he seemed to be determined to destroy her at all costs horse and mad rushin g onward like some huge winged t hing s woopin g through the trees . His lean face had the dark dignity of an eagle ben t on bloodcurdling murder of children, his long gray black buttoned and rimmed coat flew flappin g behind him as he crouched forward in ihis saddle striving to penetrate the wood and gloom and smoke fog ahead with fiercely pierc ing eyeyes and givin g commands to his followers now an d then. An d half a mile ahead of him now the poor brave little girl in ragged shirt and breeches kicked frantically at the horse she rode driving him into a dead run, as she hung on desperately to t he halters of the two others galloppping gallently beside her.It was getting deeper dusk in the woods but the smoke fog was growin g t hinner.Yet spect ral high trees streamed away on either side like speeding phantoms in a dream, a hot wind drove the t hin smoke fog into her face, blurring vison vision.Then soon ahead a sort of pale ruddy light flic kered through the forest, the road led into a clearing, where it forked, and the little girl pulled in her panting horse and looked desperately around, bewildered in the sickly light of some forest fire many miles away.One branh of the road curved out southward, tward someunknown dest ination, and she knew it must be crowded with gray ka Jacked men whose wide winged flan ing advanc ing columns were sweepin g the whole region to t he very base of the foot hills ahead.She mi must not ride through to the Yellow Bric k Big Girl Knool Road, she realized the peril of that.Must not even turn south at all if she valued her life.The worse kind of death on record lay that way.The right hand road was rocky and thick with bushes and led upward alon g a broad swiftly moving river--the hea dwat ers of one of the big rivers , tward aban doned lumber camps and scattered shacks of mounteers near the turn.Here lay her road to safty--by the Grace of Our Blessed Lord--if indeed there w ere any way out of this Valley of horrible death for her.For another minute she sat on her hard breathing steed listening fearfully in the forest silence, and heard very far away t he south and northward moving of wagons, a vast andmuffled tramping n oise of trotting hoofs where through the dusk countless numbers of Glandelinian soldiery and cavarly and artillery and long wagon trains were passing through t he territory down the Big Girl Knool road.She gave one last desperate glanc e behind her in terror, heard nothing, then swung her horse up the rocky road anlong the st ream leading the other two horses knee deep t hrough dus t and out between cliffs and came at las t into a win wide wood road once more where freshly felled trees lay fragrant in the ferns.Two big shoulders of roc k also almost closed t his great road and she was obliged to dmo dismount and lead the three horses through single file.

As she s tood for a minute to let them drink briefl t y at the edge of the stream, she c aught the faint c link of a horseshoe on a rock, and t urning around saw the dangerous "International Professional spy ride up to the forks of the road below, rein in, bend low in ihis saddle, and peer right and left for fur t her trace of her horses foot prints.It was evident he had left his followers some distance behind.It was rashness indeed.With the cu c hill of death itself in e her veins she tremblingly unbuckled the holster flap on the saddle, pulled from it the heavy cavarly revolver, recapped and reloaded it;tied the t hree horses , and stooping c rept back to where the hills massive shoulders narrowed the pass and therefore wand e of it s rocky gateay thic k with ferns and scrub and laurel and other woods.Into this green ambush she c rawled.

Then she cnut iously cocked the heavy weapon in her hand and leveled it through the laurel knowning it was no s in whatever to kill these dirty Glandelin ian scoundrels.In fact in some conditions it was a mortal i sin not to. The chief of Glandelinian s pies had slowed the gait of his pant ing horse a little way along the southern branch of the wood road, still leaning low in his saddle and scanning the soft dusty soil.Evidently discoverin g no imprint of horses hoofs he straightened up, turned his horse, and looked up at t he roc ky train above, and saw the dangerous girlscut close to him, aiming her pist ol. He instantly drew his, and at the same instant there came two loud explosions, but his aim was short of the mark, and his own horse rolled and fell shot d a dead through the head carrying his rider crashing down mon g the bus hes into a little no account stream below.And here where the big horse had rolled and lay stone dead, sprawled grotesquely, damming th e bloody waters, t he little girl found Nero Fannia, the "butt spy" one leg pinned under his horse,, gropin g desperately about to free himself, and all covered with the horses blood, and with mud. When he had s managed to disengage his leg and rise to his knees ;

"You just sit down on that dead horse"she said very harshly"And don't dare move a finger or I will kill you like the dirty skunk you are."

He seemed dazed and shaken but presently he sat down on his dead horse, and closed both his eyes.Then after a moment looked up at her in silenc e.

"W ho told the likes of you I had come this way from the Glandelinian camp?" she demanded, cocking her pistol again.

"No one you little brat.I saw you leave?"

"Who else is following me?"

"My troopers brat.I rekon they'll come here in time and make you give me my free don and surrender too you little fool."

"I am no little fool, nor a brant no more than you are a devil.You are a scoundrel, you a foriegner and a Spainard to side with such a nation for a beasty sum of money which is your god.Remain motionless"she added in a fierc e little voic e, and coming up behind him s a searc hed him for weapons. She took two pistols and his sabre and keepin g the pistols flung the sabre into the water of the river.Then she cautiously backed away from him clutching in her left hand a bunch of papers she had discov r discovered in ihis coat poc ket.

"If your followers c ome here, and if you call out to then"she said vfiercely"I'll kill you, and fight them untill they kill me.I hate skunks like you. "

"I understand you little brat."he said softly.she managed to keep one eye on himand one on the big map whic h she had disc overed in ihis pod pocket and which she now unfolded.she made plenty of it.

"Where is general Federal in position?"she demanded coldly.

"Brat "he said mildly"I do not regret to say that I must decline to an swer questions.You may shoot me if you want to. "

"You won't tal?2she insisted.

"No you brat, I can't n and won't ."

"you tried to cause me to be captured and destroyed like they do ot her child dren didn't you."

"Yes brat.It was my duty."

10? 319

"Well"she said regretfully and also wit h curtness in her voice;

""I slightly dec lined my duty then." .

"In what way you brat?"

"We girlscouts don't give Glandelinians u quarter bec aus e what we s een them do so often to poor little uninnocent children.such dreadful murders of c hildren. Sinc e you ar the chief of spies I ought to kill you instead of making you a prisoner."

"Pray do you brat."he said quietly."I reckon I'd like t it better t hat way tya than I would like hanging."

"But as he was a very important capture she knew she didn't wish to shoot him. Not that she didn't care t o.she was perfec tly justified.and nobody c ould guess what such a dangerous girls cout would do in a panic, a girl who had oft en risked her life as a spy within the glandelinian camps, who had neatly g killed general Federal the chief gen eral of all the Glandelinians and had ridden off on ihis horse, who had often faced severe rifle fire, shell explosions the horrors of fores t fires, persuers who nearly caught her and other dreadful perils and had forded a river in the midst of fifteen thousand glandelinian cavarly of the Garroylian curdes, who had tricked general Federal, st olen his horse, and who now had shot down the chief of spies best horse and was flour flourishing a loaded pistol and threatening him.

"Mr Nero Fanin "she said"I don't want to shoot you.I am not obligat ed to do so so under pain of sin becaus e you are a foriegner.But not only t hat.I wouldn't shoot so importan t a capture.I'll take you to the christian lines as a prisoner without treating you like a maddog if you will tell me ho to keep clear of the Glandelinian c avarly."

"N o you brat I won't tell you."

"Do you hope they will cat ch me and kill me like they do other children!"she demanded angrily.

"I c ercertainly do you brat."

"Be a christian girlscout!"s he asked infuriated.

"You and all your girl and boyscout comrades are a deat hly danger t o my government and you may yet ruin the whole of general Federals army, and a whole division of our b very b st cavarly.You brats surely ought to dis any horrible death because the safty of my govern eny government is in danger as long as the many divisions of your girl and boysout troopers remain alive and safe. Now you brat you may shoot if it has got to be that way wit h you and me."

But to shoot him and bring him back a dead man to the christian lines would make the capture to no account at all.She knew glandelinian spies would s uc ide to escape hangin g if possible.At the point of her pistol she sternly made him get up, drove him a little way into the laurel, and bade him stand there.Then she removed the bridle from his dead horse, and with this, pistol in han d and her long knife dutched between her teeth, she secured his elbows and wrists behind his back .Then she forced him to precede her up through the rock guarded portal to where the three horses were tied.Her saddle and bridge she transferred to the generals horse,then she tried to get the spy ont o t he horse, but with his hand fastened behind his back he couldn't mount the an imal.

"If you give me your parole"sh e said breathlessly"I'll trust you being a foriegner.Will you!"

"Why should I you brat.If you don't shoot me the christian dogs will hang me."

"You are a fool the biggest fool on earth"she cried with a sob in her voice.

"I can't get you onto a horse with your wris ts tied up.As you are dangerous I'm afraid to untie you.I'm afraid of you anyway.I'll tie you t o a horse and make you run alon g with him.See how you will like that then."

She went to him instant ly un u unbuckled the bridge from anot her horse and made it longer by tying to it a piece of stour stout rope and t hence t hat to his wrist behind a horse to the reins.At this moment a horseman wit h a bandaged face trotted up, c aught sight of t hem or of him first, called to him, scrambled out of his saddle and came running up the road leading a stumbling horse.And indeed------found himself with his nose almost t ouching a levelec leveled pistol clutched in the steady fist of a ragged "vagabound lad"

"You Glandelin ian our you drop that bridle an d put up your hands"she c ried excitedly and angrily"Or I'll s hoot you like I wound a raving mad dog."

The soldiers reckless eyes gave her one as tonished look, then s uddenly became painfully cross eyed as they c oncentrated on that blac k smoke rimmed revolver muzzle close to his nose.

"For the love of neptune yo u Angel Possessed brat"he gasped in an amazement abs olutely c omical"non't do a shooting act to me.I'll b be in hell you brat."

"Will you give yourself up then as a prisoner."?

"Give my self up?I would have to whether I'm willing or not.Please be careful wit h that hand cannon."

"Do you surrender!"she stammered fiercely.
"I'll admit I'll have to acknowledge myself your prisoner"he answered "but I'll die or kill myself before I'll surren der."
There was than a moments silenc e.The soldiers battered features reddened above the bandage and his swollen eyes sought that of the "Butt"fellow.
"what kind of strange and dirty business is all t his N ero!"he demanded hoars ly hoarsely.
"Nero's eyes narrowed. "I reckon s ir you don't need to c as t any suspicions of treason on my hands when you ask that question."
"But for the love of----"
"Yes sir that is my on ly prayer too"May Neptune be good to us now in t his hour private Iz Ix."Very slowly he took from his pocket a section of c hewing tobaco, bit off a portion a savoured it reflectively and continued"Yes sir I reckon both us of us belong to this lit tle brat now.If you even jump at the sight or from a bee sting she'll kill you.If you give yourself up you can expec t t o be handed as spies .All depends on o how you want t hings fixed."
There was an intense silence.The little girl always held her pistol muzzle alwayaxsteady, the soldiers fascinated eyes on it, then on t he little girl who owned it .Then he sighed these words;
"Very well girlscout, you may say I'm your prisoner."
"But do you surrender and give me your parole also"she insist ed.
"I'm your prisoner.That is enough. "He looked miserably at the spy, who shrugged.
"I didn't give my parole"he said pleasantly."But I surren dered."
"All right"exclaimed the young soldier."I surrender then."
His voic e was harsh with choked an ger and fury, he flung his bridle from him, rudely and roughly pushed past her into the roc ky pass and st rode up t o the c hief of spies .
"Hell on it"he said."Do you unders tand this means a double hanging at the hands of these christian dogs."
"I do sir."
The young man flun hed under the spys intsh intent gaze and t urning away, covered his face with both quivering hands.
"I reckon"said the spy soft ly"We both aim to face the danger calmly sir."
The young mans hands fell to his sides, he turned slowly t o the chief of spies.A moment they gazed at each other, then t he young mans eyes flashed with t ears and his hands sought the chief of spies.
"I don't know ho w she got you"he said"But I don't doubt you."
"There is no need of doubting me sir.The lit tle guttersnipe ambushed me like the little rat she is and shot down my horse.And I lay on my back in the small brook that runs into this river with my leg under the horse.I got loose an d she was going to s hoot me even then if Indidn't go to sit on the horse."
The young soldier made a invuluntarly movement at the re u repulsive suggest ion,he had grown grown very pale.
"Do you think there is even the slightest chan ce?"he asked."We Glandelin ian cavarly are at Turnerville near Marie Cornmann own where the biggiest army in the world is just now encampment."
"By Nept une no"said the chief of spies quietly."What would fet h them up here where so many boy and girls cout patrols of t hse christ ian dogs are scattered around.They're only little brats but our c avarly are dead sc ared scared of them."
The lit tle girl who had been watching them, revolver in hand spoke now;
"As you call us brats I have the right to c all you devils .Now devils I have two prisoners not on parole, and four captured horses to care for.And I should be on my way.Now in fact I shouldn't take Glandelinian prisoners alive.You will die an yway and one of you not at hanging as you think but burnin g at the stake. I c ould save you from that horrible fate but as you never even had t he slightest mercy on little children massacred at your hands.You the young man I'm meaning.You I s hould't give n o uw quarter at all.The worlegner should n ot deserve an y either for siding with your wic ked cause.I believe I s hould kill you both but I'd rather res r reserve you for a worst fate as you won't give your parole nor surrender.There is even treachery in your eyes.I can see it."
Th y They looked at her in s ilence. She c ontinued" You t he Young soldier I see you have recovered your own horse.You will mount him if you please, and lead one of the ot her horses .I've got your weapons too and t his mans here and am well armed and you are not.I got a trust rifle and grenades and also my long knife.If you wish sucide try any tricks."She turned to the spy."Be kind enough to take the saddle from your dead horse a ir and place it on t his ot her one standing near by.I told you to do that before and you didn't .Here is your bridle.I am good enough to give you this."

The young spys face had becme a sullen ugly red again, as hecwalked over t o his hors e, mountse mounted, and riding up to the black horse, grouped for t he sagging halter.He did not look at the little girl again ;but her blue eyes reverted to him now and then,while the Professional Internat ional spy stripped his dead horse of its t rappings, and came striding up to saddle the handsome brown horse.When all was ready he stood to horse await ing furt her orc e orders expecting h she would tie him to run wit h the horse again.But she didn't.
"ount "she said"I'll show you that t hough you are not bound by your hands you'll not escape me if I can help it."Not while you are on hors e anyway."and she was on the back of her own horse before the words died on her lips.she gat hered c urb and snaffle and put the horse in motion. The Professional spy had ridden many a breakneck race with death.so had the young spy.But never before now had t hey ridden so terrific a course hurling their hors es blindly over an unknown lumber road in the smoke haze and obscurity of a dark November aft ernoon.suddenly through the woods far to the west a red shaft of flic kering firelight slanted across the trail, the m s t ghas l ghastly omen of it all for these two men who were riding headlong to their deaths.what if the fore est fire would overtake t hem and her.but they galloped out int o a brushy clearin g overlooking a flat valley of fores ts below, and all that forest though an enormous distanc e away was a mere mere dazzlin g furnac e capped here and there wit h coal blac k smoke.The little girl flung up one hand in s ignal to draw bridle.It was very hot and still in the clearing hotter than an African Jungle and hee ause of that huge conflagrat ion, whichhh w however was not advan c ing their way.The clearin g outside of the cry of panic stricken forest birds was as at ill as death ringed by fores t depths where the leaves were as thick as clouds and glistened crimson and gold and even black and purple in the glare which apparently was as bright as the sun.The little girl listened to the cries of the birds and t hen for somethin g else more intently searc him f the thickets with restless gaze.Not hing stirred there save a sobb somber butterfly sailing on dark ermine bordered wings."Not a sound.Again and again her weary gaze sought the flamin g valley far distant of the knoll where they had halted.
"Your "swell comrades are respons ible for these forest fires"she faltered.
She cont inued lookin g wistfully at the open flame swept countryside but had no mind whether the wind would shift and turn the flames their way or not .she was ve very tired and hungry, but no longer frightened.She had captured two enemies and outwitted the persuers .Stiftly she freed one bare foot from t he str st irrup, dismounted, unbuckled the saddle bag and groped in it for food. She found a bottle of Strawberry brandy, a loaf of rye bread, a large cold German like Sausage, three very strong(cry baby) onions and a big piee of ham.T ese she c arried to the space of empty ground.The brandy she left in t he bag.Then she c ame back.
"Prisoners"sh e aid curtly;"Let us care of our horses--and then eat and res t ."
"Are we to off saddle girlscout brat!"asked the chief of spies in ihis s t range calm pleasant voice.
"s he looked at him saucily and nodded.The young spy also leaped off of his horse, and he and the spy and the girlscout gathered dead grass with whic j t o rub down the weary horses.There was enough browsing in the bushes, so the spy cut stakes ,t he girl drove them with her pistol butt, and wit h halter, bridle and picket rope, the four horses were teth ered along the tiny litt le brook.The lit tle girl glanc ed furtively from time to time at the young prisoners sullen face, but it was to the Professional spy she addressed hers elf, r inally invit in invit ing them both to share hertéottt food.
"Thank you kindly girlscout"said t he spy wit h a bow as curt ly as any ob obi politely as any one can make. But the young spy gave her a sulky look, and continued to pull grass and weeds for his horse.
"Will you please c ome over here and eat with us sir"she s aid firmly t he very inflec t ion of her voie making the question a c ommand.
"I don't eat with Christian dogs ."
"Come over here and eat"she commanded as sharply as possible leveling her pist ol.
"Very well"he growled."Your a stra g strange one t o even want to shoot me because I won't eat."
They sat down on the carpet of grass made for the purpose.The little girl c arved bread, beef, ham and sl ied the sausage and onions wit h her long knife.
There was only one c up among them,vfor water.The little girl sat in such a position that she could see the progress of the forest fire far in the distanc e below her, and also watc h the road over which they had arived which ran away straight to the southwestward for nearly a quarter of a mile.Her loaded pist ol lay beside her on the ground.
It was warm in the shoot ing rays of t he sun glare c onflagrat ion , t he Professional spy facing it, remained undazzled as a bird of prey, but the younf s young s py shaded his eyes wit h one hand, while he ate with th e ot her. And after a while the little girl was aware, that in the shadow of his hand t he young man was steadily but stealthily watching her.wh n she realized it to her con sternation, she felt a faint glow invade her face and t herefore almos t without thinking fumbled at a gp in her ragged shirt .Then she said to the Professional spy- "Pray sir, even though we are enemies I being a christian have at least s ome sort of mercy in my heart nevertheless even though you and your young compan ion does n ot des erve it.Pray therefore s ir let me offer you some of t his st rawberry brandy.I know you Glandelinians drink it, and both of you n eed a little I believe."

The grave lanky chief of spies, thanked her, poured out a cupfull, and offered it t o her with a most profound and polite bow.The little girl declined, sayin g that she would probably take a cupfull after she had eaten.So he silent ly empt ied the cup, rinsed and refilled it, and handed it brimming to the young spy saying "Drink non."

The young man took the t hin cup, and looking the little girl full in the face asked almost smili ngly;

"May I offer a sentiment sir?"

"If---if---you wish sir. "she replied startled.

"Then to her --the lit tle girl spy,---who ever she is, or may be, who hold my life in my hands and also hold s my heart---whatever she may do with it."

He empt ied the tin ci cup, still smiling, set it slowly aside, and resumed his meal as tranquilly as though a life time remain ed ahead of him inst ead of a few tw nty four hours.The rofessional spys long dark oblivus eyes rested on ihim in quiet approval rested on him in quiet approval.Then soft ly addressing the little girl captor;

"Little girl spy, your life and ours is the kind of life that one lives to the full in a single short day I think.All that the human heart s an experienc e of weal and woe, of pleasure and of dread, of hope and of despair, we some times experience between the ris ing and the setting sun."

"You may be right"she answered in a low voice

"Well girl spy, you girlscouts are more fortunate I reckon even in the misfortunes of war.you fear no death little girl spy no more than we do even if our c ause is wic ked and yours good, therefore we have lived completely--n o matter how brieft ly before we take that darkened path to which we are all dest ined who c operate as spies .I do my spying though for t he money that comes for t h for it as I love the adventure of it.I have homes t oo that sonet hing may t urn up as I have escaped tighter fixes than I am in now.I myself am not a true Glandelinian and know lit tle of their ways of fighting as I do only these im port ant spying work for them and am most of the time within different chris tian camps and not within theirs.Of course they say the enemy cause is a wicked thin g.They say the mind cure ed wit h Glandelinia's doing has looked on hell. That Glandelinian armies are cruel to c hild slaves and massacre them when there is danger of them being t aken off by victorious christian armies . But as I seek adventure, and became a Glandelin ian citizen have I not as much right to do spying on the F C hristian side as you have to spy on our own side."

"Probably yes."

He s miled at her."Well there you are.The thought of the God you worship an d whom we believe in, and whom all the Glandelinians also believe in but hat e and despise awes but does not frighten such as we are, who have lived the spys life as we have lived, and tried to do our best.you know that girl spy?"

"Yes."she whispered.

The o young Glandelinian spy had finished his meal, and was l i lying on i his st omah in the ferns, listening to him and watching her.Also he t he chief of spies had finished his meal."Well little girl spy"he conc luded"you surely fooled us all this time.I reckon it would be mighty nice for you t o feel that you a you have done your duty for your Christian government."

"I have tried, and I am trying------"her voice died out , she looked out t ward the distant forest blaze.

"worest fires if they didn't burn beautiful country would be a magnificen t sight."said the Mutt spy."I never saw a bigger fire though girl."

"You Glandelinians did it."said the girl.

"Yes and a nice fiery country for us to be han e hanged in ."said the young spy. Then there was a painful silence.The k girl knew what was the penalty for a spy of any size or kind taken out of uniform in enemy territory.And she had capt ured hem n n-a near the Marie vormann territory.And was on e her way t o deliver them to the nearest Christian pickets.

"Well sir captian Patern"drawled the tall man"We surely know what we were about when we followed this lit tle girl spy.And we knew what our followers would do to her if we had succeeded in catching her.And s he knew t oo did you not girl?"

"Yes, and also what all the girlscouts and boys t oo would do t o you and your followers."she returned.

"But why should they.You were a spy.?"

"Makes no difference.Woe to thavGlandelinian army that kills one of us no matt er how many times we s py on you.And we could do it too if we wanted to and you know it.We raided your outer sect ion of your army and got away with everything we desired and none of your "brave"powerful c avarly came out to save even a horse.They were afraid and you know it.We are dangerous."

"Well"said the Professional spy"or my part I believe the execution of spies novart heless is a barbarous cust om.It always seems to me that it would be both merciful and safe to put in prison all spies untill the war is over and t hen release them.But military law is military law, and hanging or facin g a firing squad is the verdict.n And burning at the stake too for those of us who are caught murdering children."

"N o "said the little girl"The verdict of a military court is either guilt y or not guilty.The Court Marshall of our side do not sentence.And capt ured spies who did not succeed in their mission, and had not killed any one in their att empt doe not face a death penalty on our side."

"Quite true little girlscout."agreed the Professional spy."You know your laws child.but on Glande inia's side spies die whether they're sucessful, or not , and children spies oh God, I cann ot tell you what happens t o t hem.It 's horrible."

"I know that too."she answered."None of you Glan delinians could capture one of uschild scouts alive."

The young spy t hen said to him-

"Is there any doubt in your mind sir that they will exeute us."

"I don't know about you my son, but for me plent y of danger of that.I've been very s uccessful a hundred times. Then turning to the little girl he asked politely if he might find a quiet place to write a letter.

"There won't be nothing harmful writen in it little girl.It is just t o say a pleasant word to those I am leaving.You may read it if you don't trust me."

"I'm sorry but our military law doesn't allow that"she answered."You Glandelinians don't allow us spies to do that ."

"That is tue true little girl."

She finally turned to the small man.

"Did you see me in the small hous e within t he l Glandelin ian camps.!" s he asked coldly.

He gave her a most surprised look but did not answer a word.

"Did you!"she repeated.Under his bandages his sunburned skin reddened."You did see me"she concluded.

"How do you know!"he demanded.

"I s aw you look in the window at me.Why did you at that t ime let me go when you could have captured me easily."!

There was no answer.

"If you are a true Glandelinian you disregarded your duty"she said coldly."Why!"

But if she had expected a pass ionate avowal she was great ly disappoin ted for the young man merely s hrugged his shoulder and said curtly;

"I'll admit I did see you but how can you prove I recognized you."

"Is that the reason !"she asked.

"One of the reasons!"

"Was there another.?"

"Yes."

"What was that!"

"I wanted to take you alone by mys elf to show these soldier friends of mine that though you are a dangerous Abbisennian girlscout I could take you a prisoner by myself."Then he folded his arms and laid his head on t hem.As s he s at in the ferns staring down at the dar distant c onflagrat ion and wavin waving woods below out of the gold and scarlet fcliage far t o the west rodeca lancer his lon g lance garnished with a red pennon the metal on chorse uniform and saddle striking fire in the glare of the conflegration.A little way behind him t wo more lanc ers walked their horses cut acrosss the grass,, t hen in columns of four led by their officers a squadron of lanc ers moved out int o t he forest meadow forming a long s in gle line facing a long at ret ch of tall t[illegible] tress.In e her happy relief and exitement, the lit tle girl began to quiver all over, was on the point of springing to her feet, when she noticed they wore the Ocarian gray, then an ominous sound came from the depths of t he gorgeous grove beyond, the low wail of fifes and the thudding of muffled drums.The young Glandelinian spy lifted his head, sat up and looked at the same sc one.The t all spy too had heard the mournful s ound.He arose a nd came over to kneel down bes ide the man.Nobody spoke.Nearer and nearer sounded the whine of t he fifes and the d ndened rhythem of the drums, still dist ant among the glaring maples /

S uddenly an en tire regiment of c avarly in sky blue overcoats over t heir gray jackets trotted out of the woods maneuvered smartly and halt ed in single rank forming wih the lancers the t hree remaining sides of a square with the big row of trees in the center.After them rattled a number of wgons driven by two Glandelinian on each seat.The fac and hands of several of t he men were blac e blac kened and one of them wore a mask.The wagons at opped beside the tallest t ree, all of the men got u out and climbed to the branh of the t allest tree as a lookout, while the ghas t ly thumpin g and squealin g of the death march filled the silence, now an a bat talion of infantry marc hed out of the brush behind the fifers and drummers, followed by a long farm wagon guarded by dragoons. On the flat top of the long wagon sat tied with hands behind their backs wwere fourty children.Now in the red blaze of the fire glare, t he wagon halted at the big trees, the children were pulled off the wagon an d by a number of infatry man tied to the trees.Then a far tenor command rang out alon g the ranks of t he horsemen;

"Draw sabres."

n The thin whistling swish of s teel whipped the silence like a wind. It looked like a massacre coming on but the jolly drums and fifes in t he meadow were playing some sort of a Glandelinian march and the long line of lanc ers, lanc es aglitter, pennons flickering like tongues of flame were moving off at a canter. Gray contad dra goons formed fours and followed.About half of the Infant ry soldiers followed after but t he rest remained behind in a long line before the c hildren. It looked as if t hey were going to form a long firing line and riddle the children with bullets.But it was not so.They t oo went away untill not a single soldier remained.

"Get onto yojr your horse"she said in a strangled voic e to the Chief of spies.Got in to your saddle the both of you.I'm going t o rescue t hem at all cos t and ride away."

"What say you!"

"Don't you understand!"she sobbed"I know what they intend t o do.It doesn't look like it but by Heaven I s ee it now.That forest fire is advanding t his way and they left the children to perish here in it.I'm going to r rescue them and you are going to help me or I'll shoot thos two of you like dogs ."

The girl was blinded wit h tears as they mounted their horses, and s he st ood swayin , swayig swaying, sickened faint.Inher throbbing ears sounded t he merry rattle of drums and s,i s kirling of fifes, and in the distane there was a noise as of hammering.

"Have you gone made you little fool"said the chief of s pies .

"I an going t o rescue them"she said determinedly.

It was some tim e later and the fire was still a great distanc e off when the little girl, and her prisoners riding the horses rode into a larger clearing close to an al abandoned viloiage near a railroad t rack wit h a small crowd of s till frightened and whimpering children and seein g a man there asked the way to the location of Jennie Tory city.

Ge General Angelinia Mary Aron burg"s t roopers of t he S ixt h Vivianit e Ran ger lancers galloped into the town of Mary Kormmann which was and defended or goin g to be defended by the gi biggest christian army ever organized and menanc ed by another army which was the foes but who for fear of what may also trans pire at Big Girlknool was really afraid to advance, and because of the child scouts keepin keeping watch like so many eagles and cout ious c ats everywhere and who like ,i little tornadoes fell upon any scouting Glandelinian c avarly there was and destroyed or scattered them.In dead they were little girls and boys but there was something unusal about t hem for even strong armed soldiers could not contend against them or even in close dangerous conflict even give them a sin le single loss while their own loss would be frightful.TThese little lanc ers looking fierce and savage had galo f galloped into the town riding out through t he distant fores t fire glow along a dry dusty road c urving southwestward.The beaut iful town had somewhat changed since the passing of a hundred years , had grown more in size and beauty.The child scout troopers that now rode into it bringing with it plenty of wwagons and provions and Heaven knowns only how many res c ued child slaves(they t ook no prisoners and gave no quarter), were also looking for Glandelinian c avarly, report ed near Marie Korn a mann and riding s out h on ret reat . Every christian in habitant who had nerve to stay in Marie Kormann Kormmann had felt the streets and earth jarring with the t hunderous c oming of the column of c hild scouts, and had run to doors and windows , or out s ide t o wate h them pas s --a torrent of whistling snappin g tricolored pennant s an d splunging horses and beautifully tri colored uniformed children.Among t hese good brave holy folks (old men women and happy innocent c hildren) was the beautiful an d celebrated girlscout Angelina Richee, who s tood wit h whit e han ds clenched white hands an d stared excitedly at the avalanc avalanc he of of slant ing lanc es driving eastward through Main Street, and wishing irres tibly t hat she was amon g them.Further out on the Big Girl Knool Road anot her little person heard and then saw the lancers--a shabby young child horse back rider in a funny old hat belongin g once to a man and much t oo large for him, and blak s hirt, whose small gray eyes were wet with tears, and who emerged from the roads side buh bushes as s oon as the lan cers had pas sed, looked down a moment at their hoof prints in the dry road, and then spurred his ' horse furiously tward the town, urging him to a head lon g run.Another pers on also heard but did not see the passin passing x child scouty cavarly(for they are all cavarly) did note on know what her the galloping horses people were christian so ldiers or Glandelin inn.This pers on looked like a vq vagabound gir (though none are in such a c hristian country) hatless andbare legged.she was Jane Loviedovy of the Christian child Scout spy servis belonged t o no regimen t particular but operated independent of any..she rode one horse and led three ot hers, with two prisoners sit ting on each each, and seemed to be very tired as she jogged along the beautiful brick road through coming darkness and inc reasing forest fire glare tward the Marie Kormann pike road.The young Loyscout in the black shirt arrived in the t own before she did..As he passed one of the largest of houses he saw Angeline Ric hee stand ing on the veranda talking to s ome funny dressed boys and d at ill more funnier dress ed girls who despite their dress looked to be dan e dangerously armed.He looked at her but she was so busy she did not notic e.Of course a little girl like her was worth lookin g at worth lovin g.At that in stant a sound of distant galloping again broke the glaring stillness of t he street , the young boy turned his pan ting horse into a narrow shady lane and dis mo unted.There was a hors e trough there.He let his hors e drink to its content, then bathed his head an d legs wit h a handful of dam p hed gras s pausing to wat c h another s mall patrol of child scouts(n t not lancers) canter up main street .Angeline Ric hee wit h a smile also watched them.Her eyes s eemed to brighten as the child scout hors emen or horse hildren passed.She looked after them--unt illl they were out of sight, then turned an d entered the open doorway behind her.Somebody presently drew the window curtains.Another little girl in the shadowy back parolor sat before an open window but was singing s ome beautiful song very s oftly.When Jan e Loviedovy rode wearily past St Marys Op Orphan Asylum int o Marie Kormmann she hoped to find the city occupied by christian child scouts and already under martial law.Indeed shecwas not disappointed.She saw more vedettes, pickers than she expec ted to but there were now no child scout cavarly in t he town but plen t y were on foot walked walking the streets or buying s omethin g from stores. Outs ide of this there seemed to be no body else in the s t reets t hrough whic h poured the rays of thefar distant conflagration glar e tingling water in horse toughs topure gold.The horrors of what would have happened to the c hildren had she not rescued them and turned them to proper hands was s till raw in her mind and she longed for forgetfulness and sleep.Too she had turned the prisoners over to the proper aurthorities, but later she had learned that the "Butt "fellow had again esc aped as he often had before.Once once ins ide of a pris on nothing could keep him as his arms had the strength of a lc lions front legs and he could bend or break any bar, and overcome in a single hand fight over a hundred men if he surprised them.Hiscfellow man the Jeff fellow was stronger t hanc e he.The poor little girl was deathly tired, scarce able to kep her saddle on the hors e she rode, and lead the two others..he sure found sid here however and get the long needed sleep and rest. But of all boy and girlscouts within t he t own there were a number who though they looked as good as any of them were spies in the enemy secret service.One was the dangerous and famous Gerald St arrir ,g and another Fredrick Lowdwn or Lowden.Lowden betrayed Jan e t o St arring, and at pistol point he captured Jan e but in the confusion oc c assioned by t he ris ing of a sudden shot windstorm the little girl knocked him down an d es c aped. Finding her horses hiden in a s table, she got her own back, and determined t get some loyal boy scouts and arrest Gerald Starring she wit h t hem besieging it tried to break into the house but failed and four child s c outs were wounded by his shots and Jane narrowly escaped a bullet in the head.she recieved however a bad scalp wound and needed to be treated.But despit e her wound she returned to t he attack, and got inside the house through a back window, and she and St arring encount ered eah other and they fought savagely with fists, c lawing fingers and teeth on a shadowy s tair landing.Pre present ly they fell t ogether half way down the stairs but Starring was vic torious though he was slightly hurt and had a bleeding nose, and a cut lip and a swollen blac k eye and several loosened teeth, an d his disguise uniform torn in shreds.Jane lay quivering against t he bannisters her discolored or disordered black hair do covering her bloody face.The ot her half naked made his way to the fruit front door, s hut and locked it, and grouped about for his fallen pistol and kn ife. But when he crept panting back to where Jane lay crumpled up against the ban n isters half way down t he stairs, he could not arouse her.Shakin ,g gaspin , S haking, almos t gaspin g Gerald c n contrived to gather up the fragments of his uniform that lay near her and redressed himself, for in the desperate struggle she had almost tore the v'othes dot hes from him.He was also aware n w now of a horrid screamin g noise from somewhere but whether it was some girlscout or not at s i window he could not tell He looked down at Jane, battered, bruised, befouled with blood, and st ill beautiful.He was aware now of a horrid se reaming.Horror seized the Glandelinian boyscout for the little girls lovely neck seemed to have been broken and if he had killed her even Angela ould not aid his escape from the enraged hild sc outs though he would flee to a foriegn country in his endeavor to hide.But as he bent low over t he huddled girlscout the violent violet eyes opened.It was hopeless s to attempt to c arry her to the horses and too there was nothing more to be done ere unless he meant to fin ish her.And though he hated girlscouts he would not dare do it for he knew the von e vengeance of the girlscouts.They could get you anywhere if they wanted to no matter where you go or hide.And besides the glare of distant fires made it as light as broad daylight outside.Fragment s of Janes clothing also lay on the stairs and she was almost half naked.They had literally torn the lothes from each other in that fierce struggle.Wit h these orn into strips the boy tied the lovely little feet at the ankles, drew the resisting arms back and fastened the wrists.Then he picked up his girdle, sheated his knife replac ed his revolver buckled the belt in place , and holding to the st air rail retreated slowly to the front door, opened it, and locked it from the outside so in case she did recover she couldn't not bring help and c ause his c apture.He had tied her up too to prevent her from getting up to any window so she c ould scream for help.He was bound to escape if possible at all cots.Then he looked around caut iously cautiously cautiously but no one saw him.A lone boyscout down the st reet, was ridin g a horse toward the open ground beyond.Nobody else was in the st reet , except near a store a group of girlscouts looking in the window trying to make up their minds what to buy.They glanc ed at him and looked surprised at his ragged coat torn hair and sleeves and battered trousers but paind no further attent ion, though on e of them could not for her life supress a giggle at such a ridiculous unusual sight.When that lone child scout ha had disappeared, Star Starrin g walked cautiously cautiously ac ross the veranda, and int the street, where t wo of t he girl scout fast horses were tearing at some leaves von branches wit h impatien t t eet h.Still all a quiver though he had seriously in jured her, he had seen she was a more dangerous adversary than even Angelinia Aronburg, but n erviously keyed up to what lay before him, the Glandelinian boyscout in ihis ragged garment s moun ted mounted one of the hors es, and then went down a dark alley guidin g t he hors e as carefully as possible.Then he rode our ac ross main s treet int o a large shady lane, skirting the spot wh re he might encounter squadrons of soldiers or child ade scouts and continuing alon g it between groves untill a sunken road cut her or his course.Along this same road were some small en campments and many boy an d girlscouts res ting.Thes e turned t o s tare at a ragged boy ast ride a big girlscout horse but not suspecting anythin g no one moved to quest ion or try t o stop him, and he urged the horse int o a gallop.

About ten minutes later a little girl with golden hair all rumbpled an d very roughly out of shape, and her uniform and hors e covered heavily with dust and both out of breath and covered with sweat galloped int o view of t he boy and girls couts, and as she passed them she went on a little more and suddenly c ame upon a heart rending sight, a regiment of hollow eyed Lagorian c hild scout t roopers limping along on exhaus ted horses .E e Even as she caught sight of them she saw hors es stumb e stumble and fall and lie enert.Some of the scouts s aw her coming and an offic er turned and c ame toward her at a st iff t rot trot halting herwith uplifted arm.When he unders tood she was an agent of t he Abbiannian C hild Scout Secret Service and had listened to her s ad s tory and examined the letter he looked at her sadly and hopelessly then bac k at the wtr wrete hed boy and girlscout riders, then again gazed wearily at her.

"This is Babaras command"He said."Wecare dead in our saddles .The Glandelin ian c avarly is making for the Turner Fords , we are following.There is nobody t o s end back to the little town or nobody here to persue the wretch who almost killed Jane Lovidovy, no boy or girl nor hir horse yonder could last.You look sick and t ired yourself little girl."

"Where are the girlscout or boy sout sixth Lancers!"she asked."Can't they go."?

"I don't know where they are"said the boyscout offic er drearily."If they're at C onstanc e they'll have to go on to the mouth of t he Gump Creek.Your horse seems fresh.You had better ride on ahead of us."

"Take me through then"sh 3 said desperately.He gave her back her let ter and attempt ed to keep up with her,but finally begged her to ride no faster than a slow trot.Even at that pace they soon overt ook the ot her boy scout cavarly ahead.A pallid girlscout colonel listened to her, and the capt ian who es ort ed her waved her on, and she spurred forward on her horse.A mile and a half outside of Constanc e she rode in t o the camp of the Viv9an Vivianite s x sixt sent h lancers .The main camp was full of troops but for all t here because of so much of so much scout duty needed to be fo befored to be performed there was no one who could be spared to ride after the Glandelinian boyscout in persuit .There was however a Glandelinian F Abbiannian Federal man detective named Hans on at Federal Headu Headquarters, and to him she onfided her horse.From him also she learned that the Glandelinian main division of cavarly had passed far around Constance headed for the main Glandelinian army entrenched in st ron g columns c lose t o the north of Marie Kornmann.

"It was a terrible thing little girl for poor Jane t o meet and fight with that boys cout, but it would be far worse for us if the Glandelinian horsemen came t hat way an d any of you were in persuit of the foolish lad."

She showed e showed him the letter that she had secured from a killed enemy spy.He studied them sowling.

"This code telegram is correct."h said"We did hang thos e fourteen s ucc essful Glandelinian spies.I ought to know I and a trooper with me caught them myself.And I'd like to nab thin boyscout who inmures little girlscuts like t hat t oo, and he's a dangerous enemy to the Vivian Girl Princess es and to me too/ but I have orders from emperor Vivian to watch the Glandelinian movements tward Marie Korn a Kornmann who are e extending everywhere, and t o watch the t ownspeople in this villiage also and arrest anybody who tries t o get to the enemy lines."

"Are there any secret service boy or girlscout agen agents in t his town!"she demanded.

"No but there is acipher man at Gertrude An e Angelines headquarters.You had better telegraph Miss Angelinia Aronburg for orders.."

"Can I communicate with Jennie Tory then!"

"C ertainly.Come on in with me little girl.Have you t ime to clean up a little first.!"

"No "she answered."I wish I had.But that boyscout must be c aught .He nearly killed Jane."

The provost guard were housed in a larfe abandoned fac tory building near the railroad s tation, and here the little girl dismounted, observed wit h no pretended as tonishment and curiousity by sentry, military p olice, n and lots of Camp Fire girls at work at various duties .A captian of the Camp Fire Girls direc ted her into an adjoining room where a hands ome young girl sat before a telegraph ins trument, eating a ham sandwitch and drinkin g a quart bottle of milk.she had a lively eye, and when the little girl threw back her cowl and was revealed to him or her rather, she laughed in sheer surp rise."Why it 's Jane Melfort."she cried"What brings you here."!

Shevt old her and she hastened to call up Sec ret service in Jen nie Tory.

And in a few minutes Jennie Francis Turner was on the other en d of the wire.

"Jane Melfort reportin g from Vivianite girlscout t roop headquarters "she said an d the young girl transmitted it with a lightning rattle of her instrument and waited.Back came from Jennie Turner"Where is the Glandelinian army mainly sit uated."!

Then reply, question and reply sped back and forth over the t elegraph; Glandelinian armies are concentrating for Marie Korn ann Kornmann and are conc entrating a secor on Jennie ory."

"Is that the latest."!

The young Camp Fire Girl nodded to her and telegraphed back "Yes Miss Turner

"Attention Jane Melffort"came clickety click over the wire, and the camp fire girl read it aloud by ear as it rattled in."What els e have you t o report .!"

"Boyscout named Gerals Franc is Starring almost killed girlscout by name of Lovidovy one of out Secret Agents spies.I could catch him if I had a number of troopers of any kind to go with me in persuit.He's too dangerous t o t ackle along .He can lick ten his size."

Jennie Turner replied."Ask One of the Princ esses, Violet Vivian to det ail a platoon of s trong Abyssinkilian soldiers.Your report s t hrough Operat ors 101 and 100 have also been chec ked up and are correct.Jennie Tory is in danger and big battle threatening at Marie Kornmann.Where is general John Manley."!

"He's in command they say wit h four hundred million Glan delinians ar Marie Korn mann.His line of probable battle is fourty miles lon g."

"Where is Hans on B Baldwin!"

"Who is Hanson B Baldwin!"she asked the Camp Fire Girl.

"A boyscout spy trailer and chief boyscout detective for the middle department , for the Princ esses.He's somewhere in town."And she telegraphed""He is on duty somewhere in town."

Back came Jennie Turner"Tried to locate Angelinia Aron burg.Can't find her and heard she is leading a big raid near Jennie Tory.See what her H.B Baldwin can help you out.Understand from Jane Saunders that the las t of the Lagorian and Burrough girl and boyscouts are chai chasin g that Glandelinian c avarly.Tell Baldwin for God's sake to catc h that boyscout .Do you know whether he will be able t o ride through t the lines or not if I send Operator 110 and a full line of troopers after him from Jennie Tory."

"He has fled down the Big Girl Knool Yellow Brick Road."

"Is that certain.?"

"Yes.I followed a short dictance.He killed one horse under h me by a well direc ted shot."

"turn in the latter you captured to H.B.Baldwin.Tell him I am sendin g a good squadron of Abyssinkilian c avarly.I want you to lead the persuit yourself and try and capture that young rascal before he can get back to his own ran s and raise cain there.This is a deadly important matter.You are to draw any supplies and money and ammunition you require from H.B.Baldwin.This telegram is your persuit warrent..... You can to intercept him down that road go by way of the Constance road to Turner Crossroads.Don 't lose a moment.I want t hat little Glandelinian boyscout brat either taken or destroyed.He had made en ough trouble for me Gertrude Angeline and the Princesses already."

"Your orders shall be obeyed Miss Jennie Turner"telegraphed t he girlscout of the Camp Fire Troops..

"Then sign off"came the dicking signal, and the scene was concluded .

"Og good night for such scenes."said the Camp Fire Girl"I hate t his war anyhow and Glandelinin too."

Jane began to weep forlornly.

"I'm so deathly tire"she snivled."But I can't let that boy get away.Jan e is lying in hospital and we only hope despairingly for her life.We'll get that boy if we have to search the world for him."

Then the Camp Fire Girlscout rose to the ocassion..He took a big pot of scalding hot water from a big hot stove, went into her own room, which was walled off from her own telegraph offic e and filled a good sized bathtub wit h hot wat r water.Then he led the girl t thiter, and sho showed her soap and towels a girlsc outs nightshirt, and her own camp bel.

"That is what you want and need is it not?"she said.

"Yes "she sobbed"and something to eat."

"I'll draw all the rations possible for you Jane dear.Shall I sec ure you a new uniform"

"No I'll do that."she replied laughing through her tears."If I had some alcolhol I could r get rid of some of this itnc hing rash that I've got on my arms."

"I'll find you a bottle Jane dear.Now take your bath and lie down.I'll ask t he guard to see that no one disturbs you no matter who is it is."

He wa She walked out, looked around, saw a sergeant comin , c omin g an d tl talked to him for several minutes, and he presently detailed two more sentries to protect the privacy of the place and warn off all in t ruders.Anot her soldier armed with aurthority draw rations and fetched the a q alcolhol, and the Camp Fire Girl cooked the bacon and liver hers elf in a frying pan on the st ove, and boiled a pot of milk. Ad as she progressed with her work s he could hear the girl discreetly wallowing in the old big bathtub as if she was trying to s wim in it.She set a camp table with her own service, dih dished up the liver ans bacon.She also lifted a bread pan and beat a gay tat oo on it wit h a fork.

"First call for dinner Jane dear"she s houted."Fall in ."

"Coming"she replied.And after a few minutes she appeared, swat hed t o the chin in her army blan et blanket.

"Thank you for the alchol"s he said it"It took off every bit of stain remain in g.She saw her seated, then retired to a small rear room, where there was another telegraph instrument beyond anybodys hearing or sight(bite) when t he door had been closed. From her su s outh window she could look out on a curtyard where Con stance Jabine was sitting on a banc h in front of the hose talkin g t o a number of boyscouts.

"Oh Constance dear"she called"There's a girlscout in here wit hout any clothes--"

"My God"said she suddenly arising in consternation"what 's this you are t elling me Henrietta?"

"no suitable clothing Immean but mere rags.She is your height and slimness.Go vo over to the quartermaster sergeant like a good little girl friend of mine and buy her something to travel in.And tell them to send the bill to the main quarter master that is me, and make it out to major general T urmer of t he Girlscout Secret service."

"Make it out to Jennie Turmer you mean ?"

"No, no, to major general Turmer.He's a general not a girl."

Before Jane Melfort had awakened from a good nap on Operat or Henriet tas narrow bunk(not skunk) the other girlsout Constance returned wit h her bundle and a small valise, and a duplicate bill that scared Henriet ta.However she reflec ted it was no worry of hers, and she n knocked at the door, had a sleepy answer, opened it, and shoved in the parcels. he was scarcely prepared however for the vision in beautiful lavander uniform coat, yellow silken purple bordered an d dotted dress , and saucy large heart shaped soldier hat of girlscouts, and purple shawl that ermerged demurely fromhhis quar from her quarters.

"For the Love of Heaven"Henriatta said."You are too pretty Jane to go gunning for such dangerous glandelinian spies Jane."

"They laughed like the two children they were, and she inquired about a wagon t rain and a good revolver and rifle, and some provisions for her journey. A messenger from the proves t marshall had already brought the provisions--inspired no doubt by a telegram from Miss Jennie Turmer.Two revolvers, a long riding cavarly rifle, two cartridge belts for each, she buckled on in t he privacy of t he sleep ing quarters.

She had everything in rw readiness for Jane when she ermerged.

"There are three loaded wagon troop trains up on a side road where the Big Girl Knool road crosses the Turmer Creek"Henrietta explained ."Eas tward bet ween Marie Kornmann and Henrietta towns, there is a real railroad train headed the ot her way.Being a girlsout you will be able t o ride the train free if you produce this pass (which she handed to Jane) and tell where you wish t o go.I have a elegant carriage ready at the door for you."

"You are a wonderful girl Hene Henrietta"she said warmly.she was radient .All trae of fatigue and privation had vanished--so resilent is younges t youn yout h in healt h when tonicttttttttttttt is excellent. At the door a soldier stowed her valase or valise aboa aboard the carriage and Henriet ta handed her in.

"Than k you and good bye"said Jane, and retained her hand for a moment.Hen riet ta looked passionate volumes at her.The carried soon rolled off t hrough Marie Kornmann.The girl slept aboard the carriage all the way t o Henriett a t own.

Aboard the river raft boat she continued to sleep like the blessed Abbieannian girl she was that knows no guile.When after half an hour, she ermerged on dec k at t he Turmer River Dock two tall men came forward to greet the little girl scout.They They were George Stanck, the father of the little girlsout Mary Stanck, and Hanson Stanck her uncle of the Abbieannian military Sec ret Service.A carriage driven by two armed christian soldiers, and drawn by two splendid horses was waiting for them, and in another moment Jane Melfort and t he t wo Sec ret Service men were ratt ling through the streets of Henriet ta t own at a brisk trot.When Jane Melfort had f n finished her story, regarding the plight in which Gerald Starring had left little Loviedovy, Stanck said;

"That little girls cout has l nine lives Jane or she would have been dead already lon g ago.The boyscout Starrling left the town of Mary Kornmann an hour after you didbinstead of before as you thought."

"The trouble"said Hans on Stanck bitterly"Is wit h Emperor vivian and t he Princesses.They won't hang a spy unless they are only succ essful ones.And Gerald Starring is their most dangerousenemy too."

"an d as for that boy sout phanter"continued George"If we interc ept and cat ch him all he will get will be a nice rockin g chair, and t hree meals a day in the fortifications of the Mobolisation camps at Angelinia Agathia unill the end of t he war."

"No child scout or spy ought to be made to hang."said Jane."There ought to be no hanging anyway.They're as great heroes and heroines as we are too even though far less in numbers.Why can't they shoot us decently."

"I reckon it is too stylish for christian spies for Glandelinians to s hoot them." replied Hanson Stanck grimply."It seems the Glandelinians like to see what is inside of bodies of christian children.Well Jane if we have got to love our worst murdering enemies and give em rocking chairs in go vernment forts when t hey are not succ essful spies, while the enemy take t he insides out of our own while they are even yet alive, I hope to Heave Heavens name that that Gerald Starring devils son sets and roc ks his darn head off on carpet tacks before we see the en ed of this frightful world devastating war."

"Poor fool boy"said Jane gently."But I believe I c an hate him any way because I know what trouble he brought Violet and her sisterc in t o and how he once cut up Gertrude Angeline Jennie Turmer and ot hers once in t hat fight fight in t he barn.If you had seen poor Loviedovy lying there as though her beaut iful litt le neck were broken and the s kunk of a boys out done it."

"Yes and I have it by ode "said George that that Starring boy after t hat was stepping out high in Henrietta town.she was as a doctor said very serious ly in mured and her life is despaired of.We missed the boyscout brat at t he hotel and the wharf.He's as hrd t o cath as an ell.The Glandelinians can capt ure the Prin c esses eas ier than we an can catch him and t hey're hard and dangerous to catch too.And the brat of a Glandelinian boyscout had the impudenc e t o go on a river troop boat as an officers boy or son.We found out t oo late about itto head off the boat.All that I hope is we find t hat boat near t he t own of Topsy or Chamberlane.

"If he gets aboard that big Glan delinian ship and goes t o Manleys army"added Hanson"He will do a vast amount of mischief to all t he Christian armies close here, and con verge upon us so that we'll be in a big hell s torm of bat tle either at Marie Kommann r or Big Girl Knool."

So with gossip and surmise an d jest and irony, they passed the t edious miles over a prat ty good road running t o the Big Girl Knool Road line.A basket of good tas ty lunch and bottls of milk(not silk) helped them to while about t he hot smoky hours . They mat scarcely a soul along that wildern ess of pine.The distant glare of forest fires hung low and ruddy, when they first s malled the fres h freshness of the big Mic-Hollester Run s ea like expanse of t he river waters at t his sector.Millions and millions of River water fowl were flyin g ac ross the sky from the s out heast and t heir clamor filled t he reddenin g heavens. The soldiers who had been drivin t driving them drew up beside a small but beautiful tavern, George and Hanson , and Jane got out st ifft ly, and George went into the tavern.

"Wewill have to leave our baggage here."said George starin g out oc ross the wavy water."He added"I sore y sorely mistrust we've missed your Gerald Starrin g fugit ive."

George then went into the Tavern and in a few minutes came out hastily, followed by two sullen looking fellows (their looks were not their nat ures however) in river boats, c arrying no oars, who led the way down t o a s trong firm river wharf where a big sail river boat rocked in the river swell from the crimson tinted curve.

"Is she here"inquired George Stanck.

"Her skiff left this wharf twenty minutes ago"said Hanson.He called t o the t wo cavarly men ;

"Put up your horses get s upper, and wait for us."Then he and the ot her man helped Jane into the rockin g sailboat, where one of the s ullen lookin g men held t he tiller, while the other stowed the oars, and hoist ed sail. All the vast stret ch of the great Mic-Holles ter Run River to the eas tward of it was a dazzling glare of fiery reflections from the glare of t he forest fires .The wind on the southeast was strong enough, and a lively sea on, s pray clouded t he bows and little Jane Melfort crouched in the cockpit.After a long time she heard George St anck say quietly;

"There they are Hanson."

"I see them"said Hanson.

S ome time finally passed and George then said;

"I can notic e that we are overhauling them.Then one of t h m will see us t oo T s up ose."

Jane then heard one of the sullen looking men say;

"Our boat is sailing right smart now."

"But the ot her boat is sailing somewhat faster."said the second man .

"C an you hois t more sail!"demanded Hanson.

"N s ir N o sir.We are I reckon carrying more sail than we got a right t o for our safty in this wind."

It was true.The wind from the southeast was rising badly, and the s t arboard gunwhale was deeply awash!.

"Reckon some of you had better bail her unless we want t o go down."Remarked t he man at t he tiller.They rushed on fas t er.Hanson an d his brot her, bailed t he de drenched s heet strained and bellied, the jib bulged t o burst in g.

"We are mos t there sir."said the man at the tiller t o Goegre George Stanck. "Yon der is the road tward the enemy lines .Be careful.We don't want to t o ncountery encounter Glandelinian patrols."

The The ot her ship was no longer visible.For a small river island called Half Hors hoe hid it.Then a few minutes later the helmsman brought their boat up under t he lee of a great long river levee wharf, his comrade st e pped overboard in his sea boots and pulled the bow thishore, and the two secret service men and Jan e sora spran g ashore and clambored up to the wharf.As soon as t hey were on its level flooring they saw far offin t he distanc e t ward the nort h of Marie Kormmann city the vast s trete hes of the encampments of t he t hreat en ing Glandelinian armies, and heard as noise of can nons far away as at eady as a t hunder t hundering oc ean surf.They saw too a large black tent in t he center of one of the outskirts of the camp, and then noticed a distance down to the right a lon g great gray boat pulling shor eward.Then they saw Gerald Starrin g standing all alone on the same wharf but quite a dist an c e down.An d at t hat same mom ent he looked over his right shoulder and saw them.He wore a boyscout traveling cloak, the wind had blown away his cap, and loos loosened his long black bobbed hat which was t ossing about him like a black banner.The longboat was not far out.George Stanc k began to run tward him.The boyscout seemed not to notic e for a moment, but suddenly turned with a pist ol glit terin g in his gloved han d leveled it and fired.A bullet passed dan gerously close t o George.Five t imes he fired at George, then at Hanson, and finally more often at Jane, all running tward her. Gerald St arring usually was a perfect sharp shooter, a crackshot, and could shoot a dime tossed in t he air, and t herefore it was a wonder that he didn't hit the t hree of them.Probably the s tron g wind spoiled his aim.The two men had their pist ols cocked and also answered fire, and the little girl had drawn her pistol, and also fired and knocked t he pistol out of the boys han d and woun ded him in the shoulder wit h another shot .They were near en ough to hear Gerald Starring call to the men in the boat ;

"Drive them Christian dogs off.I am goin g to swim out to you."

Two of the me men in the boat were armed wit h repeat ing rifles but because of the wild rocking of the boat their perfect fussilade didn 't even come near the three.And yet their fire was so desperate that t he rifle smoke in s pit e of the fierce wind hid the boat from view . The officer in t he stern s heets shouted somet hing which the wind and the noise of firing rippled to an in coh eren t cry. George was very near to the fleeing boy, when he suddenly t urned made a wind sudden swing of his right hand t hree t imes and then let go a black objec t which came sailin g tward him and his followers.There was a t errific explosion but they had thrown themselves flat and t hey were on ly showered by fragments of flying boards and cloded wit h mud, and s mot hered by dust and smoke.At this time the boy had waded into t he river surf.A wave broke over the desperate boys cout and he stumbled under t he impac t of it, but t he boat reached him and the men were standing up wit h oars and boat h hooks and t heir shotu s houting came ac ross the river water like the cryin g of gulls as they pulled the boy in to the boat.InJane at t his disaster st ood weeping in t he red glare of distant forest fires.Gerald Starring indeed was as desperately hard to catch for the Christ ians as it was for the Vivian Girls to be caught by the Glandelinians. None of t he c hrist ian boys s couts girlscouts, s pies, nor the Vivian girls even was as c raft y and as dangerous as he was and he was also un believably cruel and merciless.He yearned for the destruct ion of the Vivian Girls t oo for he was afraid of t hem. The days too of darkes t confusion, and the unspeakable and inmeas urable horrors of the record breakin g war drifted by through smoke thickening October and bloody N ovember mists.The so southeastern Galverinian forest fires were far wors e n ow than even thw wti writer or the reader can imagine, and in t hem t he pal ing star of success for the Glandelinian general at Randall was blotted out.Then General Manleys planet glimmered brieft ly above Maryes heights at Marie Kormmann, fded in the fiery fog of general Baldwins christian guns, sank lower an d lower in the frightful battle of Tailan dier and was was hidout in the las t wave of blood which s trew the strand and fields and plains ten miles off from Marie Korn a Kormmann with eighteen million Glandelinian dead and fift y s even million wounded and that too in a one days contest marking high t ide along the fatal Big Girl Knool River and fort un ately prevent ing a far more frightful batt le at Marie Kormmann which however was s t ill t hreatening.Every t ime the Vivianite boy or girls c outs and even the vivian Girls meddled wit h the enemys intentions, movements and planethey produced pr paralysis or s uc idal frenzy in the Glandelinian generals .Manley had said that t he Vivian Girls had not yet learned to leave him alone for all that they hd had gon e through for t heir work of meddling . And with the downfall of his under leaders , and t heir armies an d the menacing of ernormous c hristian armies again st the bigger ones at Marie Kormmann and the disaster at Taillandier the Glandelinian Sec ret Service freu frustrated bh by the millions of child scouts, andt he vivian Girls went utterly to pieces .

Callan Stoner Hearted--the great Glandelinian c hief of detec tive for direc t ing of Glandelinian men and child spies resigned as c hief of t he Sec ret Servi S ervice, because he was afraid of the Vivian Girl Prin c esses and the c hiefvleaders of the child scouts ..His agents untrained in t he art bof war invariably had over es t imated the numbers of t he christian enemy. His beloved general unable to check up on milit ary misinformation urged an d badgered by the Glandelinian govern ent government and its authorities ignorant of all military art, moved like a man bewildered in a night mare, while t he w ole whole ,a lan d ran g with his repeated demands for more an d more men t o help him out, to have only detectives and so forth as child scout s could not cope wit h the christian child soldiers spies, and the Vivian Girls.Now under a new c ommandin g general, about many of the child scouts and even the Vivian Girls and even Angeline Richee, and Angelin is Aronburg and Jennie urmer had dalready written suncy s ongs about , the shat tered sec ret s ervi e servic e of the Glandelin ian armies was being revived and reorganized.General George Cohen in, Colonel gen eral of the 120 A Glandelin ian Infantry hd had been made chief general in general John Clancy's place the latter takin command of the mobolized army n ear Big Girls cout Town fifteen miles north of Big Girlkn ool.And the Beaurea or Bureau of military informat ion was born out of chaos .

General C ohenia, tall hands ome, full lipped, under his c urling c avarly mustache beautifully uniformed in i his light blue gray and yellow t rappin g s and big high blak hat botted and spurred listened c ourteously t o everything gen era general Black Brooks had to say.General Black Brooks was even handsomer than even general C ohenin.It was a pleasant picture of m harmonicusly milit ary life as it ought to be but seldom is.Then came into the big tri colored striped wall tent thirty feet high of general C on C ohenia, General Hans onia St onehart who was not quite so pict uresque to gaze upon.General of the main army but somewhat lower followed general Tommy Hawkins, nobie in appearanc e, in thought and deed an about how many child slaves he ould "take the insides out of".These three controlled about twelve million free sabres.vor at las t (maybe) the wicked Glajdelinian cavarly had come into its(Christian possessions) own. General Braggard c hief commander of the Glandelinian cavarly divisions had shown (thought he did) them how it was done. Presently general Black Brooks spoke again an d harshly.

"I'm deathly s ick and tired of being duped and hustled by the chris t ian boy and girls cout cavarly and other divisions; general Stoneman"he said."We all believe that our troopers, s abre for sabre, and spur for spur, are as good as Angelinia Aronhurgs rangy lavander ya jackets and yellow dresses and trous ers and that the fault of their gettin g the bes t of us all the time wit hout hardly any loss lies mostly with your department which so far had furnished us dreadfully erroneous information or none at all."

Harmony shivered for a moment in that big tent.Then George C ohenia s py chief courteous saive;

"All errors made by my department are probly probably my fault of ours e.T hey are all mere children on shorseback those little christian soldier brats, but if you think you can like them go ahead."

"Maybe maybe its your fault , maybe it is mine, maybe it is general St one Heart o or general Hansonias.Or we can go hither if we like.But to what purpose.Because t his kind of discussion gets us no where.You say if I t hin k I can lick these christian child scouts then go ahead.I know more about them t han you do.We have got to believe in you, you have got to believe in us.That's the whole nine dua n on .Well go on from there general."

"I really do believe in you and your gray jackets."said general Cohen in quietly."If that is what you wish to hear.But as for the girls out columns , un der Angelinia Aronburg, and other leaders and as for the Vivian Girls I---"

"All right t hen.Hansonia, I and the others do b lieve in you, and in your agents, couriers, spies det ectives , military spy police and so forth. So now we can work it out to gether can't we."!

"Wit h pleasure"said general Cohenia quietly.

"C Very well"Continued gen eral Black Brooks"The weat her is forec t fire weather all over it seems, there are plenty of signs of t he world burn ing up if t hese forest fires made by us continues.Ad t hey do not no good now eit her.

Instead of burning up the chris tian dogs they're burning dsup.I am goin g to give to general "Boobhead"here t hree million sabres, and a few horse batteries and send him ac ross St Johns Ford to s mash general Hansonia vivian in north of Marie Kormann and prevent in g him from making a junc t ion with Emperor Vivian at Big Girl Knool, will help us wonders if of ours e t hose lit tle lavan der k jaketed demons don't interfere again.They seem t o be where they were not before.Yesterday IHad about 10,000 child slaves d condemned to die becaus e t hey were too sick and ill and we weak to do any more work from underh our&ument and over work.They were led out into an i open field by the soldiers t o cut those lit tle no account brats to pieces, and what ha pened.The soldiers were cut to pieces themselves and those who were captured by t hese lit tle soldier brats under Catherline Lee burned at the stake before a huge crowd and the c hild slave brats carried safe and sound into the christian lines.N ow un der such dreadful diffic ulties do you think you c an help! "

After a silence that looked like worry on general Cohenias face the chief of Glandelinian Secret Saf Service nodded.

"I understnd you and the situation."he said."Secrecy is yo to be your main element in t his operation.You want me to send a country or counter spy to muzzle the girlsc out spies who has continually reported your movements t o general vivian anna and who brought that horde of Vivianites down upon the soldiers who were t o kill those little child slave brats."

"But first of all"s aid general Black Brooks dryly"To dis c over who in main one of those most dangerous persons are.I tell you I am sick of having every movement of my infantry and cavarly forestalled, massacres of no accoun t child slaves interrupted with, those soldiers burned at the stake, and of coun tering always at point of contact a much heavier force than I have sent out.It wore than damnation General Cohenia. I've had enough.It's eit her got t o s t op or I'll go and hand in my resignation to the Govern ent if they can't send me hel per help."

General C ohen ia was extremely sympathic ..

"General"he said"Our service has been in some unusal confusion, as you know, an d was were a yet with the foolish resignation of o ne of our first hief leaders . I t hink everybody will find serious improvement in it from now on if on ly we can outwit those christian dog s oldier brats specially superintended by t hose Vivian Girl Guttersnipes and that little she devil An e Angelin in Aron burg or what ever her last name is."

"Very well then, her name is Angelinia Aronburg."growled Black Brooks""erhaps too you c ould tell us who in the name of Nept une is this main c hristian dog Secret Servic e agent who c ontinues to torment an d bedevil me t went y four hours every day."

"Yes"said General Cohenia I"tcertain y could tell you general."

Blackbrooks and the others waited, but the chief of the Glandelin ian Secret Service said nothing further jus t then to en light en t hem.

""Of course"grunted General Black Brooks(why don't he grunt he is a hog)"you will handle this devilish matter in your own way.I am not t rying to penet rate any of your s ecret mysteries for that my might hoodwink our work.All I ask is that general Hansonia here be permitted to cross St Johns Ford and dest roy gen eral Vivianin ot prevent his advance wit hout finding the ent ir e main christian army lined up, grinning, awaiting him at the wat ers edge, and a whole "Flood"of those hild devil possessed christian dog soldiers rushing on his rear to dest roy his wagon t rains and capture hors es and so forth and provis ions ."

His rough army did not seem ad really did not annoy general C ohenia.

"I s hall do the b cheat I can general"he said in this always agreeable voic e.

"And really I have no desire to make a mystery of the situat ion to you or t o any officer in i high command.It wouldn't do no good to hi de t he fact if one of you happened to be a christian dog in disguise because he would know it anyway. Here is the matter in a nut shell, a nutshell mighty damn hard t o c rack with even a s ledge hammer with a nail in it, a very c lever chist ian dog agent sec ret service boy scout and sec ret service agent, general of boyscouts ; Marco Schofield Penrod, succeeded in alis enlisted as a private in your boyscout troop disguised as only the devil knows who---"

"Whoh"demanded general black Brooks angrily .

"After Tallandior.He kept general vivianin informed.One of our dotect ives s us spected that information to the christian dogs was coming from the c amp of that sec t ion of boy and girlscouts of your troop.But before we could identify and catch and hang the little spy, he not only skeddaddled but got away with fifteen u hundred child slaves t o his credit, and four or t heir overseers , and their mas ters to his credit, and plenty of spoils t oo; and general Man ays overcoat and pistols and a 700 hundred dollar uniform hat ."

"Where!"demanded general Black Brooks incensed.

"To the c hristian lines probably.His usefulness here was not greatly ended. But recently one of our agents discovered the person with whom t hat Penrod brat had been in daily touch."

"who growled Black Brooks"Not a girlscout spy again ,I hope."

"It certainly was ."

"By Neptune"exclaimed blac k Brooks disgusted"You've hunted t hat lit tl e brt brat Constance Greenbaum to her death, and chased one called Henriette May t o Angelinia Agathia, and locked up Nancy Gump on ly to s ee her escape with fifteen hundred child slaves and more information that the c hristian generals could think s he would accomplish.How many more of those girl spies are spying on us?

Are we cursed by that plague I wonder!"

"Quite a great number general.This one in part icular, is a young girlscout of excellency excellency exc ellent rank, clever resolute child hardiness, and blindly devoted t o the christian cause.She's the most experien c e and most successful and dangerous of all the christian child s pies.She is the person al spy of Emperor Vivian, and the deadly Vivian Girl Gui gutters Hipes and has the highes t c ommission from him next to those vivian Girl Daughters of his."

"You know who she is sir !!!!!!"

"We always w knew who she is, general, and we have always known where she is, and where she is all the time, but the very Angels of Heaven couldn't c at ch or st op her.We have always tried to capture her, but we cannot Never cat ch her within our lines, as even the Vivian Girls cannot disguise as cleverly as she does. And she fires her pistols both of them at the same t ime so rapidly as to make them go off like machine fire.we had never hoped to catch her.Our on ly hope would be to render her harmless."

"Can't you destroy her!"asked general Black Brooks.

"I thin k we can if we could only detect her."replied general Cohenia gravely.

"Since e my former chief resigned and I had to take his at and, I have been planning to c atch her, and d have my men study on her lunides aft er lookin g her up in Fort Turner.

"Better get rid of her completely and quickly n and not want o that sort of thing" growled general Hink Brooks"And is her life worth more than three million of general Hamm ontas cavalry.Or are you r people only t hose kind who want to waste t ime gettin g children spies when even to catch them is so difficult."
"You don't mean that sir."retorted general Hannonia Cohen in sharply.
"yc I don't.sorry general.Only n ray is n spy whether male or female--and I'm sure all over.If they keep on as tively like that they'll get us int o n Hell of a conflict at Big Girlscout which we don't want as it is not a ground to fight a battle on."
"go am I sure all over general.I have no mawish mind mentioned on the mat ter of this young chief of girlscouts.I give orders to g kill what her it is has country or not.I observe the law consequent to the finding as of military courts and you n w kn ow general the Court Marshall has t o or line the spy of what dee ree of punishments comes to christian dog spies and not wo.If they are t o be gutted when caught we can't avoid any n o."Personally I happen not t o believe in any such exec ution of a plan, because all enemies of Clandalinia are far more valuable to us alive than dead.And hanging, burning, tort Uring, t earing or cutting their insides out alive, or opening their bodies alive and leaving them die that way has n never yet deterred any of her christian dog spy, what her man woman or child from practicing his or her profession.But that is neither here nor there.In t his case sir Miss Angelinia Aronburg, alive may within ly willingly or unwillingly furnish us information leading to the detectio detect ion and ar e arrest of christian spies within our lines.But dead of what use to the Clandalinian govern ent government would this young girls e gut lunder her"
General Hinck Brooks grunt ed, and even snorted, very unconvinced.He was t ire about it t oo, for he knew Angelinia Aronburg hat ter than an y clandalin ian general or soldier living.
"Well you understan d your own business, I have no doubt"he finally said.Sinc e you claim that cuttersnips of an Angelinia Aron burg is at t he bottom of all this t his will you mind tell me plainly and correctly how you int end t o pull this f deadly fan a fangs of t his female gut tarantula."
"I'll tell you gal--hhtt general.I have placed n ear C uit on Corrat on inside the C hristian lines one of our clevernst men ret n rvis e Operators.I'd rather not give his name.He is known only as operator 110."
Throwing to his destruction another of our own boy s pies."Outraged general Hinck Brooks scowling. "What in the matter with your men a pies !"
"Whoa Greek meet Greek"smiled general Hannonian Turner."I see.Eat eat chipmunks in herbs, and all that."
"Well if you choose."Like Miss An n Angelinia Aronburg, the boy is young very attractive, and well educated.He can easily disguis e as one of her girlscouts .
Socially he is fitted to be where he is now.There still exist general as you may perhapsknow very delightful christian society s linging wit him all t he various regiment s of child scouts there, and also clinging t o the small towns scattered along their over shifting line of advanc e..Paris Kommune was everythin g most delightfully Abbissinian in its Christian Soc ial life.It is in an isolated level within the c hristian child t oscut compa t hat I have placed operator 110 with orders to render harmless or to arrest or t o assassinat e Miss A nge linia Aronburg.Stab her in the back if nec essary but get rid of her..And I have every reason to believe and to expec t that my orders will be c arried out."
In this mind general Hinck Brooks thought--"They'll ha e carrying him out "
"Then"said general Kindin, with his engaging s mile"General Hannonia here may hope to ride through St johns Wood without finding any of the Vivian Poor Supporters line of battle in front of him."
"We'll do our best sir."
The three celebrated Clandolin ian cavalry generals, rose, shook hands wit h general Hannonia Cohenin, pulled on their kin k gaunt lets, got int o their gay saddles at the tent door and galloped away with t heir escort of Omarian o Horsemen to talk it all over again with general Raymond Rio hardson Federal, about whom general Vivian knew and Joe Harper had already made a great Comic s ong about his long black hair an d beard, and why he was n ick named General "Big Pughose."and another song about"The man who swallows his nose."

At that very moment not far away across the river, a girls coat was seated at a piano playing and singing one of those funny songs , and the impudent rollickin g air with its doggerel verses floated through open win dows so roune the lawn where two girlscout offic ers were playing croquet . The great yellow painted house(not mouse) was the Vivian Girls ' Headquarters; the lit tle girl at the piano was one of them(Jennie), the little girls e outs playing croquet were Angelin ia Aronburg and Violet vivian.It was n g the dappled shadows s ong by smoke s louds across the sun they saw also the s wy sweeping pat tern of t he bumble bees, it did not seem t o disturb her...

It was Angelinia Aronburgs shot.She steadied her mallet , t ook aim at her very beautiful little opponent, and hit the red yellow and blue st ripedover at n tripod ball n solid s rock.
"Oh dear me"said Violet Vivian as her gray striped ball bounded side of the wicket or wicket, where it had lain in perfect t ranition:
"How remarked Gertrude An n Angelina with antisfact ion"if n ball would you no far away where you will do no more mischief to me or to the whole world in general."she placed the balls side by side, sent her foot upon harvard ball and hit it.The impact sent her adversaryes ball half way ac ross the lawn , Angelin a Vivian, leaning from an upper window called down"How cruel you are Abbissinnia
.You t reat my sister like she was Clandalinia."
"Wat is wat"remarked Gertrude Angelina."you just an k Prime man Jem nies."
The lit tlein vivian girl at the upper window laughed"To day wit hout her discipline and make u she looked t oo lovely for probably even an angel to look upon.And her golden haired sister, also the o idol of the Abbissinnians had looked rather deeply at the scen e, as n d was impat ient to look again.Now from the lower floor a thousand defiant song sounds through the open windows th-swards emitted hers.Or at applause from most of those who heard itsenvironsthe Harding Vivian s sank down stairs and into the music room:
"Now you sing Catharine dear" cried Jennie jumping up from t he piano s tools
And Catharine seated he herself and sang in excellent t asts one of t he most frui Catholi cathelin Hymns and then started in with:

"Up with the Red Yellow and Blue Hat ional Flag;
Hat every Christian standard and every colored person fly;
Our million stands are stampin g fiercely;
They hear Abbissinnia's great battle c ry;
The burs t bursting bomb, the bugles s o sound;
Proclaim the clandalinian pussy cats are near;
Strike, strike, strike, strike for God and Abbissinnia;
and all we hold most dear/."

On the croquet ground it was Angelinia Aronburgs inst e hat for her battle again st Violet, and s oon after n few more took pl on her side it came the shot for Violet.A very long and almost hopeless shot.She swung her mallet with deadly intent; her ball flew straight.Crack.She hit Angelinia Aron burgs tri colored ball at the final wicket and stake, and victory was within of Her grasp.
"Oh Violet"exclaimed Gertrude Angelina"what are you going to do to me!"
"Ask s all and of you my dear"said Violet gently, and she did wit hout re morse, and ended the game with a simpping s hot (didn't get hot) t hrough the last two wickets , hitting the stake with a crash.They strolled back t o the veranda trailing their mallets behind them.
"Did you s ee Hettie Vivian think what I recently mentioned Penrod"said Gertrude.
"But wait t o Jennie and you don't she the sweetest.And I do believe Penrod love her and every one of you better than he loves himself."
"We all care for him dearly"said Violet.
"Of course.Any little girl would."Penrod our best and most successful spy for boys.The gallon t boyscout generalA major of spies, and the Abbissinn ian n ation is in love with him.I'd eat her die though than see him ever meet wit h any harm."
They mounted the veranda and laid aside their gayly paint ed mallet s..Jennie Vivian, the greatest of all the Vivian Girl [illegible]prime cause had wearied of her war and of her games, and now she and her other sisters e ame out to the veranda, and Violet and Gertrude were already s eated at n table lookin g over an old torn geography .// Conversation concerned the review of the boy and girl scout cavalry brigade stationed Hentyturnerville and which were to arrive t hat very m rning .
Jennie finally said :
"Things is going to be a pretty pass lately. Radcliffe sent a telegram last night .
There is going to be a courtmarshall held within the left wing of our camp to morrow morning.Fifteen Clandalinians are prisoners and charged with t he cold blooded murder of two hundred little girls .The cruel horrid slaughter I am d my sis ters and you Gertrude often seen. I wired him if they are guilty, t o do so. He soon fit.He knows the penalty for that sort of crime."
"Whom in it going to be!"asked Violet excitedly.
"To morrow morning p.Penrod is coming up by wagon train t o lend the eyes ut ion willed."

There was with excitement and horror at that n ew , horror over the murder of the children.

"Child slaves murdered as usually"declared Angelinia Aronburgs.

"Of courses.They wouldn't dare lay hands on our own kind of children.They're all armed whether they civilians or not."

"Perhaps Penrod will bring our own boat acquaintances wit h him" suggested Violet to Jennie, and the child slightly blushed.

"In Penrod bringin g any more troops!"an ked Angelin ia Aronburg.

"We don't need troops for that"said Angelina Vivian proudly. As she spoke t he distant strains of a child scout cavalry ma band came t o their ears.

"Here come Timothy Grovston, and his reviews"said Jennie."I do hope t hey've got t up new uniforms from Angelinia Agathia."

N earer and nearer came the gay music of the hild scout ban d.Very soon t he brave good little girls could see horses heads tossin g and brass instruments s hining through the trees.

"P here's Timothy Grovston i himself."said C arthering."He looks like a little Mars o Gods"

Lawn and verande were shakin g now under the thread of t wenty two thousand boy and girlscout and horsemens'Through the threes their beaut iful red battle flags came into view, the brigade band rode out into the open s un sunshin e with a dazzling flash of instruments, and a gay roll of kettle and other drums.

"Great goodness"said Angelinia Aronburg"They certainly are fitted out splendidly."

They were.Their lavender cavarly jakets were of the bright st purple color their hats were of the newest k kind and t heir dresses and for the boys t heir trous ers of the brightest yellow silk, and they rode jauntily, gayly, imputently alert.Timothy Grovston rode nobly in new lavender and gold wit h his freshly uniformed staff under the scarlet flash of the bat tle flags . There followed an Abyssinkilian soldier cavarly squadron led by a colonel.Then c ame t he second Vivianite purrough horse, very newly uniformed also, followed in order by the Third to the Sixteenth.Then guns clanked and chains and harness rattled an d the great here s artillery battery appeared with its burnin g guidons bobbing.

An Violet was mentally aunt ing every little trooper every horse and every polished gun that jolted by, s he hoped all were present and they were.After the review Timothy Grovston brought back s ome officers for breakfast ,dinners always went gayly in the beautiful old dinin g room wit h its ancient silver glass and mahogany and it was like being in heaven to be wit h violet and her sis ters for an y of the boy and girlscouts.Grovston who had given his arm t o Violet Vivian, seated her and then took the table head.Jennie Vivian the G An Angel among hers sisters took the other ends.....

There was indeed a vast and happy confusion of voic es as the beaut iful lit tle holy ladies were seated by their boy s cout cavaliers .In the gay t umult violet, notic ed by her side an empty chair and turned to see who had been allocated to her at table.A boyscout officer in blue grey and gold, wit h a beautiful purple hat was just coming in, had already surrounded the empt y chair, stood and said the Grace before meals, and then bowed to her.And she looked up into the han dsome face of the famous of all christian 'boy's pier, George Fat er Radcliffe, in fact no other than Angelinia Aronburgs sister in perfec t disguise.The smile of greeting s he gave him remained stamped on violet s face ut ter, her heart seem ed to stop with the feeling of ad i admiration and excitement, and every vein grew warmer.

"My dear sister Violet"said Jennie Vivian ceremoniously"Allow me my dearest sister to present our young friend still disguised as a "handsome Glandelin ian boyscout" offic er Captain general George Radcliffe, who is fortunate to be your cavalier.

Radcliffe dear our dears sister Violet, who is our honored host in t his particular time."

Her feint breat h drawn painfully, was almost a sob.And yet it was evidently evident that he had recognized her.It was the first time in "his "life "he had been a guest of Violet,and her sisters.Her white skin fashionably dressed hair pretty white beautiful modest clothes, beaut iful features, devoid of all disguise as well as her sisters dumbfounded "him"as it was the first time "he"could remember Violet and her sisters had appeared in all t heir prime ly finery and without disguise to "him".Nor did Radcliffe even hear in her charmin gly fresh and modulated voice any faint echo of the mono y drawl of her disguise d voic e she often used.There had also never appeared to him or had never been to the beautiful Princess of her sisters to recall him of any harsh, frightened tones as some thought they somet imes showed.Through the merry c hatter of silver and chime and charming voice this young beautiful childs voic e came to him not only with splendid c larity but as if it came from a little celestial girl just dropped down from Heaven to speak to him.How we how embarrassed and shy "he" was."We wit nessed the splendid review of your c hild scout cavarly brigade t his morning, Radcliffe Dear, which we ll ed very muc h.Which is your own regiment if you have any."

"I am sorry to say I am a special spy selected for the work by your Good and Gracious Father and therefore have y no Regiment dear Prin cess."he explained politely.

"No!"

"No Prince ess dear.I am on special duty under Gingerore in the Glandelinian army. A lowscout spy was sent over here to interfere with Angelinia Aronburgs work.I am the one sent."

"You!"

"Yes".

"Do you mean to say."))..

"Indeed I can fool those Glandelinian generals every time. General Blac k Brooks fears somethin g wrong with his armies bec ause of my friend Gertrude An galine and he sen t m d me over t o int erfere.I int erfered all right.General Vivianenna knows everything now, and I have wit him your lines fourty beautiful littlslavgirl and boy child slaves who I brought over wit h me. The child slave master had a little argument with me about them, and he's lying wounded in s ome Glandelinian hospit al if not captured."

"How romantic"she murmured"I'm sure you could if you chose o tell me more wonderful stories than ever Othel'lo told t o little Des demona. "

"No"he said I could not."I could only tell what I did."

"Have you not had an y adventures friend Radcliffe!"asked Jennie.

Her velvet blue eyes were very wide.

"None worth mentioning, Princess Jennie.It is you and your s isters who had the great est adventures, and from what I heard you did to a Glandelinian general yest erday I couldn't s leep last night."

"Why!"

"I almost died laughing."

Sudden y however Radcliffe was blus hing.And the reason for his mout hing color or mounting color rather was that something in her eyes lovely as beaut iful beautiful blueblells had reminded him of a love of the Prin c esses of what no one could even describe.Radcliffe wished that Violet and her sisters were "His"own. Violet ,and her sisters had often knew it, inst in c t and intut intuition made them c ertain, and instant ly in spite of it all, all t he delicate loveliness in Jennie was aroused.Then she turned to Penrod who was next t o Radcliffe and believed me he did certainly blush.

"Captian general Penrod"she said innocently"I have often wondered how a nice boyscout like you are c ould also interest such litt le good girls as we are and all the girls coute and boys too as you do."

"Penrods face became fiery. He was awful bashful in the presence of such pretty little girls and apparently Jennie.

"Of course she said"and she smiled her sweetest an d leaned clos er to him"You and I couldn't understand such a thing if we were not aAbbiennians," this great love we all have for each ot her.No he had boys to tease an d hate little girls like they do in Foreign countries.But I know you.I overheard you and you did n ot know it.You told Emperor Vivian our fat her you'd give anything if you had sisters like I and my own."she laughed innocently."As though for inst ance a nice boyscout like yourself could even be so loving like that . You deserve it, and som girlscouts who are as near as pretty as we are said t hey'd be your s step sisters if only you'll ask them, as they're orphans ."

Penrods face was surging with embrassment but als o wit h a feeling of pleasure he couldn't describe.She became sunpris ed at the work she had wrought and kept her eyes on her plate untill his "Guilty" t emptation t hat she kn ew he had to sudden my hug her had cooled to some thing like self poss session.

"but she simply could not let him alone.

"Are you not going to entertain me!"she inquired smilingly.

"How Princess!"

"By telling me childish s tories of your adventures.Did you ever encount er any ot her beautiful little angels like us in your exc iting and perilous c areer!"

"You surely are trying to tease me Princess."

"No. Why should not not like to have a beautiful little Abbiean nian girl for your sister.Everybody has heard about general Jebbard Staurts pret ty little daughter who turned everybodys head, and proved to be a good little spy as well as oursalves,she orphaned now as the general was killed in battle.Did you ever see her.She'd be willing to take you as a nice brot her.You are wort h of her too."

Joice Vivian leaned over he tward her.

"You little cherub."she called across the tal table."What are you tormenting poor Penrod about.He'll hug you in a minute."

"I want him to tell me a strange brave story and he won't "said Jen nie pout in g pretan dingly.

"I'll surely tell you one"and the badgered young boyscout general in sudden desperat ion."If I once met a whole big squadron of girlsc outs and fell in love with every one of them the moment I saw them.But especially seven of eight of them attract ed me more.Do you like that kind of a story Princess?"

"Goodness grac ious faltered"Jennie Vivian"Was they as beaut iful as that.?And what happened then Penrod.?"

"I more I looked at them the more madly I loved them.Their presenc e was Heaven to me."

"And?"----

"That's the story you wanted to hear Princess.

"But how in the world did it end?"

"It never has ended."

"You mean that you still love them dearly."

"I do."

"What are you going to do about it Penrod?"

"C ontinue to lovethem Princ esse."

"Do es they know?"cried Angelina Vivian herself in surprise.

"Probably they do and probably they don't"

"Are you going to tell them if they come here?"

"Yes I am but they ain't c oming here."

"When are you going to tell them.?"

He deliberately pulled out his watch, olsulted it ,an d said;

"In about three or four minutes."

"u surely you don't mean it.You can't now.You wouldn't be rude enough I know yo abandon us now when you are present as our gur guests.Let them come in Any way it would be rude of you Penrod dear who are Violet 's or my cavalier to tell me you love some other little girls bet ter than us after all when you tole mperor Vivian you'd give anything if you were our brot her."

"There ain't any other little girls."

At that a swift color flooded the face of violet, and her s isters .There was q a tremulous little laugh from them together.

"How gallen t daring and good you are, you really are, Penod dear.But s uppose I and my sisters should take your declaration very serious ly, how could you flouder out of it.We could hold you tighter than impossible to get out of quic ksand."

"I am in deadly P earnes t Princesses.You are worthy of the love of everybody even your bitterest enemies."

Jennie affec ted to laugh.

"Well I'm in d eadly earnest too"she said gaily,"When I command you,t o tell me an y and my dearest sisterean d everybody present here the most excit ing adventure in your military career."

"Indeed.Well I'm having it now."

"How silly.We are beautiful and good Penrod but surely are not even worthy of you.Please, please Penrod rear or dear tell me about the mon st exciting, romantic and dangerous moment of your life."

"This very moment is the most dangerous if you call it that ."he repttdttt repeated boldly."I believe for this moment I must be in Heaven."

"Oh indeed"she said in almost consternat ion.

"Are we really in danger here in our own christ ian lines with so many gallent boy and girlscouts around us?"

"I am if I was to carry out the purpose with Radc liffe Princ ess."And he looked with pretended fear at Angelinia Aronburg sitting just across from him.

At that Gertrude laughed.

"Yes"she herself said.Penrod and Radcliffe are "Det ermined to pay his complements recklessly ain't that right Friend Penrod.?You and Radcliffe are to capture or dewtroy me for interfering with the enemys plans.General Blac k Brooks sent them over here to do it.But of which of the weapons of our dear darling Princess es are you afraid of most ?"

"Of their beautiful faces and ey es Gertrude.That preven ts me from c arrying out my plans.You look like one of them."

"Are you a burned boy Pen rod!"asked Angeline Rihee.

"What say you?"

"Have ot her eyes resembling the eyes of the Princesses t aughtyou fear?"

"Again the color stained his face.

"You have not yet told me and my sisters the really most dangerous moment of your life Penrod dear."Jennie renine reminded him.

"This is the moment of my taking Angelinia Aronburg a pris oner and bring her to the enemys lines."he insisted.I tell you Princ esses that general Blac k Brooks insisted I should destroy her, and in select ing me to do it he made the bigges t blunder in this life.Also in select ing Radcliffe.I c ould give you and every one here information that would make you jump up from your c hairs t hough I think it is needn needless since we gave it t o general Vivianana and also Princesses to your father.But no armed Glandelinian soldier or their shellfire and bullets could scare me as the beauty of the great litt,e Princesses does.They are bristling with strange deadly weapons, their eyes , their lips, their holiness, their hair, t heir features, and the terrifying loveliness of everything about them.I've heard they're an e angel poss essed."

107 329

"Pleas e Penrod dear."Jen nie protest ed. she and her s isters had n ot bargain ed for this.And now striving to laugh at him, she and her sisters now saw that the boy was terribly in earnest and y t good as they are even up t oo t oo complete perfec tion, the perfection of angels believed almost in their hearts they were not wort hy of his love for them.They too liked t o have him as their brother as they intended to make little Jannie Gertrude Angeline and Radcliffe and take Angeline Richee into their s isterhood but they loved ot hers more than themselves and believed in their own unwort hiness when in fac t they were worthy of all.Everybody in Abbieannia loved God beyond sinning and they loved God so much that sad days for them c ame when the Holy Wekk approach ed.And yet they thought themselves unwort hy.Once they were so deeply offended because a foriegn man blasphemed God in En l English before them t hatbthey took seriously ill, though on e of them Jen nie tore his face badly by slashing him with her ridin g whip.He des r deserved wors e.

"In these days"Penrod said"We even you Princesses live a whole life time in an c hour.I --I--I--hope I'm not offendin g you and your sisters whenI say--

""Don't n eed to say it"Jennie exclaimed."You believe we are poss essed by holy angels because we escaped n so many perils.Well often we were resc ued. That is only natural means but as angels possessin g us what do you say the sympt ons are.We don't know any."

Then Joice Vivian was on her feet n w now, amid cheering and the flut ter of clapping hands --the first sentiment with brimming glasses of Nec tarp-

"Our Blessed Dear Lord, Country--The Confederate States of Abbieannia.With His Blessed Help let us be successful in our work and bring Glandelin ia t her reason."

When the fierce gay din had s ubsided a little, the other Princesses followed, then Emperor vivian, then all good christian generals in parricular and everybody in general.Amid the cheerin g the doors of the great room were flung open and general Vivianna and his brother Francis came in, red sashed, gold lac ed and clanking.Then the tumult grew to a whirlwind of cheering, boy and girlscouts sprang to their feet, first with lifted glasses, and then a wild flut terin g of all kinds of beautiful little flags and standards.

The two gen erals then saluted Violet an d her sisters , and Violet and her sisters and all the girls couts present made their curt sies t o t he generals and then were embraced by the golden beared general.And t hen threading the happy confusion, Violet, and her sisters made their way to the sti staircase, and to their chamber.One of the little girl(Catherine) dropped upon a chair t o rest and try to think, while her sisters lay on their beds to get a little rest and sleep for they had not slept way into the night so busy they had been .From the window shade partly lowered the looped cord dangled and the dim sun shadowed it upon the carpet turning it to a perfect hang mans noos e, swayin g gently as the breeze stirred the shade.Then one of those terrible moments of slight fear which all spies of bot h sides know had suddenly c hilled her for she remembered the horrors she and her sisters hasd gone through in the past.Perhaps it had been Penrods words that had awak ned her and her sisters to the perpet ual e peril always avfaing them.Heavens what a rashnes s had been hers and her sisters so often .The craze for turnin g the enemys plans, for ac t ing the part as themost greatest chief of spies --she feared t hese would s ome day destroy her and her sisters unless she could learn self control and work better sc hemes.S he watched the shadow of the window cord wit h its hang mans loop s way beback and forth on the green carpet.she thought of the intense blue of Penrods eyes , and shivered to realize he had braved greater perils than she or her sisters had .She thougb thought of his eyes afire with sudden pas sion, and trembled at the consequences if he the best boy friends of her and her s isters should face the penalty meted out to christian child spies if c aught by the Glandelinians"Their bodies torn open while alive." For a lit tle yet, the c old fright of her and his perilous situation and t hat of her sisters chilled her.Then as a,w always her young blood sudden y suddenly flowed warmly once more.And once more the very charm of the danger tc her and her sisters and her boy scout s pies gripped and held her in its all embraing fascinat ion.She rose lightly lowered lowered the window shade..Then she bolt ed her door as was h r her cust om, drew something out of her inside waist pocket a long t hin knife, and unscrewed the han dle, which was hollow.Here was a crow pittt pen as thin as a hairpin, and a th tiny phial full of strange colorless liquid, and a few sheets of jewlelers tissue.No writing appeared as her pen flew tracing in visible characters almost microscopic in dimensions.She detailed the event of the 4days the n umbers and onditions of Black Brooks army as told her by Penrod in c ode words, t he strength of the Glande'n i Glandelinian army and pos ition.She reported the arival of Viviannana and his brot her to the assist anc e assistance of emperor Vivian, and wrote down t oo that t he c court mars hall duty should be hurried through.She wrot e that Radcliffe and Penrod mistaken by Black Brooks within ihis lines as Glandelinian boyscouts had been s en t t o do away with Gertrude Angeline, and yet fooled the general by bring great and important information from his lines , and that Angelinia Aronburg had not yet att empted to communicate wit h an.y make believe Glandelinian spies, but that she would surely do s o because Penrod had arived.No more boy or girlscout cavarly had come, she reported s o s he or her sisters could not spare an y more for other divisions , and only Fritze Loos brigade of boyscouts occuped ocupied Cullen ton, and she ass ured general Vivin Vivian that news from t hem was reliable.So she contin ued to write "Push on therefore for Big Girl Knool s o we can prevent Man oy from Menacing the town.Than s to these c hild scouts we can make a fool of the enemy."

When she fin is hed she replaced the pen and t issue in her daggers hilt, and slipped the blade into its velvet sheath once more.The sheet of t issue she rolled int o a tiny cylinder, took a s mall tortoise shell side comb from her long golden hair unsc rewed one tine, which was hollow, plac ed t he cylinder in it, replac ed the tine, and then the comb in e her hair.A faint aromatic citrus or odor remained in the room.s e let the window shade slide up, an d the breeze s oon got rid of it.Now she was ready to go downs tairs and mingle with the others who had scattered about the grounds t o eo en o enjoy the pale suns ine s unshine.On the veranda steps a pict uresque group of young beaut iful girlscouts and junior boyscout officers in beaut iful lavander uniforms g s gossiped and laughed.S he could see n umberless c avarly horses pu pitched along the low lon g stone wall west of the s tables, and t roopers of the escort lounging there.In the house Francis Joseph XSween ey picked dreamily on his string harp in sentimental accompaniment to the inevitable "O Mot her Dear Pray for me" sung in a low voice by a number of Lagorian girlscouts .On a wrought iron settee Angelinia Aronburg was being held lovinglu lovingly in general Viviannanas embrace, and while he ontinually held her t hus she was in low voic ed c onversation.she held a cluster of yellow crocuses in her hand and was plading one in the generals coat button.Catherine looking like a Fairy from the little Female beauties of the most Beaut iful of children from Heaven lingered a little while to listen to and join with t he speakers on the veranda steps.she did not see Penrod there, nor was Radc liffe vissible.Angeline Ric hee als o was missin g.The singing girlscouts were now singing "Great St Johs eph Throned In Gloryvat the top of their voices and it s ounded fas cinating as they sure had splendid lit tle singing voic es and made to wish to listen to t hem for ever for ever.Catherine had wis hed to see the general but there he still s at over yonder whispering sec ret into a little ivory ear while he s till held the little girls out in that loving embrace.And Catherine c ould only look at him ac ross the roquet ground, and wondering what he was whis pering to Angelinia Aronburg.And wonder unqio uj unquietly where Penrod had gone and what he might be doing.And wonder also how soon she might venture t o saunt er tward t he garden an d see how things were going there.She had a fear t hat general Blac k brooks soon s uspecting he had been outwinked and fooled by t he t wo boyscout s might at las t sent either Darger, Lowden or S tarring to do away wit h Angelinia Aron burg.As C atherine Vivian strolling at hazard skrited t he ancient hedge ,she cau ght a glimpse of three children in the desert ed garden.And she saw t he young faired hard haired boy scout "Button Bright his face shin in g like a young and golden angels holding tightly by his t wo arms t wo lit tle happy girls and kissing them in the faces every now and t hen.They were his two loving loving darlin g sisters whom he had not s een for days .

"Thank God"s he whispered to herself"That children like us are that way instead of quarrelin g with each ot her as they do in Glandelinia and foriegn nations ."

She s tole onward, walking on the grass to avoid the dry leaves on t he path lest their c rackling disturb these gentle loving little girls and their good brother.Beyond the garden there was a grassy pond fed by a s tream which run through the oak wood, and which she mean t to follow for a certain dist anc e.Here she got a sudden shock part of delight and part of amazement .Here to her surprise sat Penrod on the ponds odge, hotted and spurred in ihis best uniform while his saddled nag straying at will munc hed t he tender gras s .And what really surprised her was this.Two her her sisters Jennie and Daisy were in the same sit uation as she had seen the two little girls with the boy, while her other s isters sat close by him.And she had left them in their beds.

It wax was too late to draw back; he on t urning had seen her.Here was a sc ene ripe wit h or a situation ripe for dramtic development.As she saunt ered on sweet ly smiling as he let Jen nie and Dais y Free and c ame tward her s he had no slightest doubt that he was here to relay to christian spies inside of t he Glandelinian armies what information he wished to know.But too she had intended t o see to it that her own business should be transated first .

"What a young loving little gentleman and angel friend to my sisters."she said amiably as he c ame striding across the meadow to confront herwith a boyand followed by her sis ters.The scene made a picture like a Heaven indeed."I thought perhaps Penrod dear you might be waiting for me on the veranda.

"I shallwait for you all my life Catherine dear"he burs t out impetuously."but somebody told me you came here." Then he suddenly flopped down on ihis kn ees rus hing into a stammering and fiery declaration ending for a request most pleadingly and he was alarmin gly in earn est.

"Catherine and your dearest sisters no human bein g could l help loving you and your sisters at firs t sight,band I couldn't help it either.You are so good so lovely.So are as good and as lovely as you are good.So when I overheard s ome thing I grew afraid."

"Please Penrod what is the matter."

"For God's s ake Catherine and your sis ters don't do it.I saw what you wrot e in that room.Catheine Catherine.Don't take it yourself its too dangerous .Let me go.Let me go on and br brin g it Prin c esses."

"Wqit ."

He looked up at her dumbly. Then she said;"I hear that you are c elebray c elebrated for your great spying affairs .Penrod.And n ow I am inc lined t o believe that you really are the gay reckless boyscout that people say you are.Please rise and defend yours elf."

He got up, red inart iulate, his hurt eyes fixed on her an d her sisters .

"They say you are a very head long boysc out with a record for which the enemy plac es a greater rward for your capture than for ours"she said."I don't believe you know what it is t o be scared to s py on the en emy.And yet you for out our sake want to risk the danger to carry this message I wrot e t o Emperor vivian at Big Girlkn ool. Whyn I was not going mys elf.I wouldn't send any one where I wouldn't go mys elf.I was going to telegraph it ."

"Dear Prin cess C atherine"he said huskily"I do know n ow, what it means t o love all good little girls like you and your sisters an d all ot hers and boys too.I know I should have asked permission to embrace your sisters but couldn't resis t the temptation they are so lovely and good.But to t hink you and your sis t ers always risk these dreadful dangers .In these days Princ ess es love for one another comes in the morning, and death in the aftern oon.I know I s hould have wqited to address your Holy Parents Prin c esses but t hey are too far away.But I do not know how long God means to let me or even any of you beautiful little girls live.Maybe we'll s ee the war to the last and live long to tell about it or maybe we'll die even at any minute.Any one wh oleads our lives could tell some one else very hoo honestly that it is n t n ot worth one penny's insurance."

"Why!We were always successful spies .You are the c hief of all boy scout leaders because I and my sisters made you so.Are you anything else Penrod dear."

"For the work I have and what you too are and your s ist ers neither of us have even the c hances of spies Princess."he said simply.

"Do you mean that your business even is far more dangerous than that of a spy!"

"Perhaps so.We all do the best we can for our country.It is true the boy and girls couts have all made the enemy dreadfully fearful f of us but that does not slac k our danger.But would you let me go away with a lit tle mite of hope?"

"You mean Penrod dear will I or my sisters consent to add anot her t riumph t o your long list of daring experiences.I hate to do it Penrod and I say n.o.I can't send you or let you go where I or my sisters won't dare go ourselves .Maybe you wouldn't do so many things if you knew how really dan gerous it is ."

The passionate avowal that burst from the good boyscout silenc ed and frightened her a little, and to her hot consternation, he caught her to an embrave of s teal as he had done to her sisters and many other girlscout s s o dear to him.

"There are hundreds of thous ands of little girls ann boys whom I love dearly" he s t uttered."I reckon I'm plumb crazy but there is something in you an d your sisters that is irrestible even when you were so disguised and I didn't know you and they were so beautiful.And yet its all a lifetime in a day--love and death within an hour.I know you and your sisters love me and I loved you and t hey better than a lover.Some day I hope I'm adopted as your brother."

Their lips clung a moment , then when she was free she covered her fac e with trembling hands.She wept silently, because she loved him as well as her sist ers did and knew it, and was deathly afraid for him in that darkly devious maze to whib she knew he was address ed.She dared not tell him s o, she dared not

v even warn him as it would not do any good..He, she herself, an d her poor s ist ers must go on in their appointed tasks unt ill at last the Thing happened t o them which would end it all or liberate them forever from this mad hell house we where countless millions on both sides swirled in the maelstrome which was known as a "Big war."

"He finally said;

"My orders are coming.I will ha ve to go."

In tearfulsilenc e, Violet and her sisters came to him.

"For God's sake, be c areful Violet whispered.

"There will be little danger danger I thin k."

"This is an awful thing that wic ked Glan delinia causes to us."Jen n ie whimpered.

"Ask your paren ts if I may be your brother before the end of us comes if it ever does."he said excitedly."Write and tell me Princ esses.A let ter to gen eral Meldonin Great Hearts head headquarters will al ways find me there.But where s hould a letter to go to you Princesses if you are at Big Girl Knool?To mperor Vivians headquarters."

"Yes.Write to me in care of the Princesses Post Office, General Imperial delivery"she sobbed."But, where-- where are you go n going now?Please t ell me?"

"I can't I may be overheard as you know even the air has ears t hey say.Good by."

He looked at his watch, then gathered j her close, and kissed her and did the same to her sisters each in turn.

"T hey will be here in fiv e minutes.Good by Princ esses dear.Darlin g darlin g lit tle sisters, fairest Roses of Abbieannia."

When she and her sisters had walked a little wa y on into the oak woods alon g the s t ream she turned around to s ee what he was about.And s ay indeed what she had expec ted to see---Angelinia Aronburg his great assistant on horseback talking eagerly to the boyscout to whom she and her sisters had just pledged herself and themselves.Then with fear in their hearts t hey saw him t ake some t hin g from Angelinia Aronburg, vault gayly to his sadele; saw them ride away together and disappeared.Oh how they prayed with all their hearts that he would make this dangerous mission in safty.Violet and her sisters wit h Pen rods kisses warm upon their lips and still fancying of feeling his embrac es looked after him with an ache in t heir hearts as he rode away.What happin es s c an come to these beautiful brave children and their loving boy scout comrades and friends drawn irrestibly by their holy love, yet inexorably torn apart by the dreadful duties they must and do perform for their holy country t hat must for the Sake of God and the safty of the world and for childrens safty c rus h such a Devilish War God as Glandelinia.Each must do their duty, and each in doing it may meet frightful deaths at the hands of their wic ked and dreadful foes.

At the same time this trans pired, by the stream along these big oak trees but quite a greater distanc e up, a stran ge looking man , bare headed, sat uponthe ban k fis hing for green bass and other fish.Anot her one who appeared t o be a boysc u boy scout in Lan Lavander uniform but who Had never been seen an y where in a child scouts camp before in the christian lines , drew near him, and he peered upward sideways.

"How do you do laddie boy?"he said with a stran ge smile.

"Good after noon sir."replied the boy."Do grapevines an d black berries grown along this creek."?

"Yes, all kinds of berries my lad." he chuckled. "Beaut iful blac k berries ."

The boyscout waited.

"Are you looking for somebody, little boy."inquired the strange young man wit h a sly look. He removed the cover of a large old wicker basket and apparently held it up for him to see the mass of big glis tening fis h.As he leaned over to look, he apparently dropped something peculiar into the basket, and the old or young man rather after looking around c autiously, reached for it, and s lipped it down the throat of one of the best of the fishes.

"That old big fish went and swallowed your little package boy."he whispered, c huck ling.What am I to do now lad?"

"Sell your fish to general John Jacken Man ey at Big Girl Knool Tavern ."

"Yes .How much will he pay for them l ady."

The general will offer you one dollar and s eventy five c ents for your fis h.Sell t hem to him and no one else.He'll understan d when you come to him."

"Yes my lad."

He drew in ihis line, examined the bait, cast it out again tward a submerged long whore a t urtle sat.The t urtle slid overboard.The boy and t hen even the man had disappeared as if they had vanished into thin air.

There was a merrme merry dan c e after dinner, and a grand c averly d ban d for t he dancers.But four of the gayest among the guests were mis sing.

66I.Also the general Court Mars hall had been for some reason or other postpon ed and general vivianamna and others had gone back by r il.And Schfield Penrod also had gone away, nobody asked where, and Angelinia Aronburg it was said had gone offwith her column of girls cout troopers .They danc ed only for about one hour wit h the lively boyscout younge ters from Penrod's special regiments.Jennie Vivian had left a proposal of s ome work only half spoken on the stairs an d retired t o the safty of her chamber to get some res t for good.Through the early afternoon she sle t badly, for the for s he listened even in her res tless dreams for the s tartling voice she dreaded and expected.But it did not come but a real un expected joyful news.It sounded at about two oclock outs ide her door t he joy ful voic e of a little girlscout Eliz abeth Spen c er.

"Princ ess Jennie.Princess Jennie. Timothy Groveton and Penrod and Radcliffe rode into the Glandelinian plantations early this afternoon with Angelinia Aronburgs troopers of girl and boyscouts and a lot of c avarly soldiers, brought off to camp thousands of c hild slaves, and captured a high ran k Glandelinian general, and gallopped off with him, and An gelinia Aronburg reported captured at Hazal C reek rode in to our camp with a lot of c hild slaves ins tead. Oh Heavens what a boy that Penrod is.The devil is sc ared of him I believe and Angelinia Aronburg.I'm afraid she is wors e to the one y enemy than ever.She and her followers burned fifteen Glandelinian offic ers at the s take bec ause t hey were caught in the ac t of commanding a massac re of c hildre d children t hat yet didn't getstarted.God be praised."

Jennie Vivian, got out of bed trembling, and opened the door to litle Miss Spencer, dressed in riding uniform, all a tremble with joy and excitement .

"Will the boyscout Penrod hang the general!"gasped the girl."His ran k don't count when they say he is a chief of butc hers does it.He and his wic ked followers c an do sucha horrid thing as tearin g litle girls bodies open alive and not han g for it ."

"They don't hang for that."said a boy scout within hearin g."Hanging is too good. They'd burn at the stake."

Another little girlscout appeared at the door way in e her field uniform fiery wit h wrath and scorn for the "Glandelinian Sum Sc um."

Major Burnahm says they have sent the capt ured Glandelinian general t o the Barrac ks prison untill evidenc e a can be proved against him."s he said."Our scouts have just ridden into our boy and girlscout camps wit h the news . Heavens but according to the report Pen rod certainly did some damage.There are terrible fires raging as his followers didn't spare anything.It was caused that orvby the fat that some lit tle children were in danger of being captured by the enemy and a little girl ran to him to summon res cue.In the ac t she was killed by Glandelinians before his very eyes .He lost his reason they say and didn't stop at not hing.Oh I hope they'll han g that Glandelinian general or burn him at the stake if he's guilty of child massacres as it is s aid."

Rosalie Jones came to the door, wide eyed ex cit ed.

"Hans on Turner one of our scouts says the christian girls couts of Jane Melfort s have captured also a Glandelinian s py.It just can't be the one t hey call Francis Gania one of the chief helpers of that "Hut t fellow.OhnI hope it is he is very dangerous."

"Amid exciting patriotic execration against the Glandelinian s and feminene joyful exclamanations, Jennie Vivian managed to bathe and dress, but her limbs and body continued to shake in s pite of her, so terrible the joy and excitement that was growing in her excited heart.Penrod had grown as dangerous as a demon to the Glandelinians and this was his fiercest raid yet .And when at length s he appeared at the early supper table, every one there hailed her in ojoyful t rui triumph and exultation saying that Penrod it was found for sure had led An gelinia Aronburg, and all her many girl and boyscout rangers and many soldiers into t he very heart of the Glandelinian encampments, s et everyt hing ablz ablaze ran out of camps near nearly fifty thousand c hild slaves, c arted or c arried away every thin g of value in the plantation, burn ed everything, blowed up magazine st ores an d c aptured the Glandelin ian general. Fortunately "s he added or one of t he girlscouts added the Glandelinian spy was within our lin es when arrested. If he is not a successful one and has no killing on his record they may sen d the s py to a fortress as a prisoner for the spy is almost on ly a child an d we don't han g c hildren s pies no matter what they do to our own c hildren s pies ."

Indeed it was hard to understand the s ituation as it really was, but Pen rod was a lad whohad a very strong uncontrollable pass ion for Abbieannian children, and helpless child slaves.The killing of the lit tle child slave who had ran to him for help to gain rescue of children that the Glandelin ians were going to hand made him lose his temper.Because of this t ragedy that Glandelinian gen eral during the frightful raid was captured.Penrod had led his girl andchoy scouts accompanied by an ormormous body of winkie Abyss inkilian cavarly into the most tremendous and bloody raid of the war, and had started his hold an d det ermined rush across the stream at St Johns Ford."Major general Pelhamm gallent Glandelinian general, just engaged to marry his own sweet heart in his own o home town rode out with his column to stop the rush of the christian caf c avarly and boy scouts but a shell from a c hristian gun t ore the general out of his saddle and ripped his big blac k mare and his body t o bloody shreds an d killed fourty other men some distance apart from him and wounded a hundred.

There was the most frightful rus h of hors es, guns and yelling men in lavander uniforms and a hof horde of savage fury boy and girlscouts an Penrods c oluman led also by Angelinin Aronburg churned the waters of St Johns Ford into a mass of foam.The Glandelinian c avarly under general Stanclinburg mat the on rush with the most gallan t bravery but they were borne down sabred and overwhelmed, and their supporting mounted brigade s cattered and chased tward their own lines.The c rash of gun fire at the Ford had risen to a suctained uproar..Lit tle Annis Roonie and other girlscouts out scouting had been near the sc ene at the t ime and past them thundered general Braggards artillery horse artillery.Then general Hate Good rode by with general Hate child, the Third Glandelinian c avarly corps t hundering on their heels followed by general Henry Andros c ommand.For t wo long hours the lavander jacketed hors emen and crowds of boy and girlscouts had been crossing St Johns Ford an d now the T hird Gray Jackets at ruck t hem a mile inland followed by the yelling fifth division.Into these galloped two Vagorian boy and girlscout brigades tearing a most bloody way tward t heir fight in g Vivianite comrades and the Abyssinkilian soldiers who were hard press ed.There came a dazzle of flashing sabres and a deafening burst of carbine fire, but strange to say fierce as the c lose quarters fight was the loss of life and in wounded was all on the enemy side. Not a boy girl scout or an Abyssinkul Abyssinkilian soldier even recieved the slichhs t scratch.C olonel Han s on Birchmann reveling in the uproar turned to call out reassuringly to the T hird Omarian Scoodlier cavarly which was in bad confusion and hard pressed by the savagely fighting c hild xs scouts themselv s.Then a gun in a boy scout horse battery flashed, and a shell bursting in the road, also t orn t his general out of his saddle, and like the disaster to the general before also tore his horse to bloody s hreds and t ore the colonels body apart so his ent rails lay scattered in the road.All day long the glandelinian c avarly had bat tled along the road to St johns Ford with sabres and spittin g carbines fir ed at suc h close range and so vigoriously that the muzzle flames set the t roopers jackets on fire.Again and again the Glandelinian gray jac kets gallopped yelling, blasphemin g and curst cursing n into the boy and girlscout and Abyssinkilian squadrons that sosavagely fought back shot for shot, and blow for blow that probably the very angels in Heaven couldn't s t op t heir progress.

Wit hout a single loss to the c hristian side, they finally swept all before them, and indeed Violet and her sisters really only heard a very sma ll percentage of what occured.Fourteen Glandelinian child slave plantations were ruined, all their buildings, and child slave tents were in flames , a wu quarter of the number of ten ts of the Glandelinian main army camp were in flames , general Black Brooks escaped by flying through a rear door of his headquarters with his staff offic ers killed or wounded and his building in flames.100,000 c hild slaves saw immediate release from their recent horros en route to the christian lines, the ceverly captured fourteen hundred provision wagons, a whole brigade of prisoners in luding the general mentioned and his staff, and general John Man a Manley had to flee in ihis night gown as he had lain ill in bed with a c old, all his uniform pistols, and whatever he had in his headquarters taken and the building a mass of flames .At dusk the massive formations of the c hristian troopers and boy and girlscouts now nearly two miles inland on the Big Girl Kn ool road were able to even advance the christian position as half of the hrist ian army in that locality were able to come over and bare further approac h tward Big Girl Kn ol Knool in that direc t ion.In fact violet and her sisters t hat time had been terribly tired during the cause of their efforts of the day before and therefore had slept so soundly after dinner that they had not even heard a sound.

Suddenly a little la later a man dress ed all in black, searc hing for Violet and her s isters, discovered pretty little Jennie, weeping with joy over Penrods great achievement on a bench in the box garden.

"Princ ess"Quavered the black clothed man"There's a strange lookin g man at the back door who says you owe him s ixteen dollars for some fish you bought of him this early morning."

" A stab of fright, pierced the little girl.No man want ed to buy or had brought fis h of her or her sisters and she knew it.That was a dis guised signal that she and her sisters were in some secret danger and t hat was his way of want ing to warn her.She knew the strange christian any signals..She rose nevert heless and followed the man to the kitchen door, where a tall shadowy figure st ood.It to her surprise and dismay was the Gemini Leader of s pies gen eral Hendro Darger.

"Good afternoon my little Darling of the Nation, and Rose of Abbiesnnia"Quavered the spy."I have come for the fish money that you owe men me"and he said that wit h a s t range ges ture of his hand.Jennie sent a signal to her sisters and when they came she lookedcs tsathily about her.

"what is the message that you mean?"she whispered."We can't be in danger here in our lines?"

"Youn g boyscout or girl in disguise with t seven feat hors es at t he fish ing hole asks you kindly hurry quick, because many secretly disguised Glande linian spies are within this spo t of the camp, and they'll sit her assassinate you and your sisters or stab you in the back if they have the chance.T his was discovered but who they are we cann ot tell.They're too cleverly disguised."

The little girls gave a last frightened look around t hem, then sped away among the beautiful fruit trees, where in the med mead meadow, the little pond lay glittering in the sunlight.Schofield Penrod returned from his disasterous raid; ("You know what I mean, disasterous to the enemy) and being an Abbiesnnian chief of Secret Abbiesnnian secret agents, led his mud splashed horse, Jan e intobheadquarters.With him were Gertrude Angeline, and a number of boy and girl scout lancers armed like brigands.You know christian lanc ers or lances are mysteric s mysteriously unbreakable, could not be broken with an ax.

Astride seven horses, sat seven most beautiful little girls apparent ly from Heaven it seemed..But now they were dressed in rags.Ruffled shreds of dress hung in flowery tatters above their bare beautiful little kn es, revealing a pair for each of beautiful little legs bare and somewhat briar torn.One s had on only one torn stockin g.On Jennie's feet prunenalle pumps dripped swamp ozz and quick sand dope.Jennie had lost her smallround hat trimmed with pink roses, cat briers had cratched the white skin above her stocking tops.Each Eac h little girl Autc had in their right hand a revolver, but with chilled and stiffened fingers.The Christian boy scout Cavarly sentry at Colonel Sharpes headquarters halt ed them demandin g at first the country Pass, and then the Count er sign and recievin g both let them pass.Chilled to the bone for they had gone through too much cold water despite how much cold they can stand the seven of the poor brave little girls were scarcely able to unclose their cramped fingers and push the revolvers back into their saddle holster.The way they were surrounded by the child scouts who accompanied them, had not not carried the pistols in t heir hands they would have appeared as little ragged beautiful child prisoners.Then Jennie alone could hear somebodys voice announcing;

"The Vivian Girl Princesses coming to our main strong camp. Persued heavily by Glandelinian Scoodlier cavarly. Hard pressed for ten miles .Recieve t hem immediately and send soldier squardron to destroy pursuers .Hurry."

A platoon of girlscout cavarly rode up leading seven fresh hor ses.The troopers stared kindly and with solemn faces at the seven little Princesses.They were enflamed also at their plight.(You know boy and girls out s for good reasons do not take prisoners).Presently three good looking boy scout officials of the fifty fifth and One hundred and fourty sixth Vivianite Mcuntrd Regiments, in t heir best uniforms and in gold coverings and golden caps, a captian of the Sixteent h Lancers, and a Blue Squad Dragoon major of boyscouts, came clanking out of general Vivianannas big striped wall tent, and mounted their hors es, and rode up graciously to give assistance to the seven girls.First they made them each take a litt le sip of brandy.Then colonel sharpe of the boy scouts a strong good looking boys cout also followed them.He was tall for his age, and when he caught s ight of the little girls on chorsback with Penrod he came forward e very cautiously.

"I hope posit ively that none of you dear litl little Princesses are hurt ."He said, and there was terrible anxiety and fear in his pleasant voice.Eac h of the beautiful little girls tried to speak.Then as the boy and girlscouts had helped the Princesses to dismount, Colonel Sharpe passed one gold embroidered arm around the waiste of Jennie and Catherine, while the others lifted Joice out of the wet saddle of her horse an d sat her on her feet.But neit her of the poor little brave girls could stand, s o the boy scouts, carried them into t he warm lit quarters of their boy colonel, an d placed them on a long padded bench close by the stove fire.An orderly brought for each of them a cup of somet hing aromatic and steaming hot.They held it to t heir lips wit h scarred and tremb ling hands.

"Colonel sha Sharpe whispered to "Penrod"Your Excellenc y are they wounded?"

"No sir thanks be to God and His Blessed Mother.The Glandelinian devils s hot Jennie's hat off when we were urging our hors es ac ross the Erminie Run.Poor Princesses, they are just tired and cold.They'll be all right soon."

The unusally beautiful tas ting spiced eggnog laced with brandy and neat ar sent a reviving flame through the chilled bodies of the beaut iful brave children. On account of the distant forest fires the weather was hot but then the waters of the ornormously wide Erminie River are always for someunknown reason icy cold..

Colonel sharpe wrapped them in traveling rugs, while Penrod and some of the ot hers pulled off their soaked pumps and lifted their feet to a large hassock in the glow of the big camp stove.The lips of the lit tle girls were blue an d quivering, and tears began to steal down their dirty cheeks.Colonel Sharpe seated himself on a camp chair, an d motioned his superior and yat hes t of boy friends to do the same.To the orderly he said gently;"Look after the hors es at once."Then to Penrod he added quietly."what's your story Penrod dear!"

"Well Frank Frankie Sharpe my friend"said Penrod"I've remained often in touch with these brave little girls as you directed.Youngs Emperor Vivian has had t heir reports from their secret sources, through me and Angelinia Aron burg.Then the unexpected happened as usual.sometime late t his afternoon, "onbys Girl scout Rangers of the "scot division of which you put little Janie slipped through general Stonemans pickets near St Childs C reek and nabbed a great n umber of child slaves from their masters and destroyed the plantation.That was a second raid opposite mine unknown to me untill mine, and a little more devast at in g than mine was"

Colonel sharpe nodded pleasantly.He even laughed."Well Violet,and her sisters "continued Penrod and now there was some anger in i his voice"Sent me a warning that miss Angelinia Aronburg had ridden out of the christian lines wit h a Christian Secret Service offiar, and that something unusall was brewin g alon g the river.. But the Glandelinian pickets noticed not hing, and as for me and Angelinia Aronburg we were in and out of the main foe lines and had dest royed everything in our path before any of the chief generals knew what had happened. We almost captured general Manley and Black Brooks.Then sir it was helter skelter everywhere, with our boy and girlscouts and the soldiers riding acros the river with our child slaves we rescued..Angelinia Aronburg was doubecrossed by some one and t kept after that party, and his assistant Cantian Johns on.Well sir a Federal Secret Service detective of the Gemini spies finally located t he double crossers, and arrested them, and telegraphed for me and Angelinia Aronburg. But the spy had already managed to send a telegraph grav grapevine message t o some hun c of bi bunch of Glandelinian spies within the camp forme formerly occoccupied by the poor Princesses, warning them that the christians had been victorious in the raids, and that the Vivian Girls must be murdered at all costs and that not to try and strangle or shoot them, but to sneak up and stab them to night in their beds."

"How did the spy guess that!"interrupted Colonel Sharp"

"Through a long lanky spy.You see a picket of t he Second Virgin Girlscout c avarly down at Rose Station captured a strange man with a bas ket of fish in his possession.They discovered a strange small s omething inside of a big green river fis h of some sort we know not the name of.There was a roll of t issue with no writing on it.But we girl and boy scouts had heard of s// all sorts of Glandelinian t ricks and were used to them.They sent the bottle and tissue paper to Angeline Richeos expert boyscout code tracer who sent it to a military chemist."e took the tissue and treated it and read it , and t hen he sent the grape wine message to me to look for the dangerous spies who were to plan the murd rous assassination of these beautiful frien ds of mine.All the spy had to admit ot be burned at the stake.Therefore I notified general Bargar of the s tuation and he got the Princesses to c ome with me to this s ect ion of the camp.He and his followers are in that portion of the camp now lookin g for the culprits!And I had many scouts ontinually shadow us to make sure no strangers followed us.We were followed by Glandelinian cavarly but we drove them off wit h great loss.That is all . Now I brought her to you my dear friend to take good care of them untill they got a littlebatter.They can stand plent y of cold Frank but that river water was too much for them."

"I and my scouts willdie for their sa t safty."said Colonel Sharpe.""And you and your scouts put t hem on your horses and led them all the way from that part of the camp into this section so far away."

"Yes sir"said Penrod I had to."

Colonel Sharpe leaned over and shook his superiors hand very warmly.

"The honor of allthe highest order of the Gemini of which I am a member is very safe in your keeping, Penrod dear."he said.

The eggnog and the warmpth of the stove were making several of the Vivian Girls drowsy again.For very little sleep had they had for three or four days or nights. Colonel Sharpe turned to Jennie and said;

""ou sent us out to catch the spies who were operating for your arch enemy Gerald Starrin f Starring.They have been caught, but Glandelinians in a boat rescued the widked wicked little brat.General Vivianna acted upon your further information, and why general Aberdennia didn't go on to his object ive and destroy general Braggard God and His Blessed Mother only knows .You my dear Princesses, did your part, where soldiers and spies should do the work for you.Your friend Penrod is growing worse against the enemy every day.I have als o done mine.If the enemy don't fear us it ain't my or our fault .Our records are clean.But you little Princesses are as brave as you are beaut iful and good."

He arose, picie picked up Violets hat, and holding her c radled in ihis muscular arms had the others to help brin g her sisters alon g, and walked through the tented corridor into a house, where a girlscout was filling several bathtubs full of water.

"Haidi "said he"Here are tired and very beautiful but cold and chilled lit tle Princesses who would enjoy a hot sa soaping, some arnica, some clean blankets 665, a hot supper and warm beds.Because they must be well rested and wish t o be ready to do some very important business for their c ause to morrow somet ime they must be fit and ready.Let them sleep late to morrow morning if possible."

"Yes sir my dear brother"answered Haidi with a smile and kissing him."I will do anything for the good little dears."

T'm glad to hear you say so sis.Haidi you are the best girlscout doctor and the best nurse in camp even though you are only only nine years old.I therefore leave the darlings of the Nation to you."

Still smiling he and his friends helped the Princesses to beautiful arm chairs, bade them sleep well,and walked back to his own quarters..Penrod rose stiftly as the chief of the Local Secret Service entered his tented quarters.

"My dear friend Frank"said Penrod"At last we've got the spies whowanted to assassinate the Princesses,and which made me take them here to safty.I just recieved this telegrach note from a courier. They were dangerous spies too.But in this message there is bigger news yet and great news for the dear Princesses. Their mother our blessed queen is coming here and will be here by late to morrow afternoon.She's the "other to the good Princesses but to the enemy she is a dangerous women even though she does ot do any saying.But she hires spies.she wrot e to me that there is a far more dangerous Glandelinian spy loose than the Vivian Girls are dangerous to the enemy. We must catch him, and believe me we must catch him quickly."

"You mean that!little rascally Glandelinian brat Gerald Starring."?

"I do.And I do indeed ."

"Very well friend Penrod.I'm quite ready to do so and---and---"

"No.We have nothing to say in the matter as she wishes to keep it secret.She is going to send another operator and only one.I don't know who it is though."

"Colonel Sharpe boy betrayed both worry and chagrinwby his silenc e.

"And also I'll tell you something g you or I didn't know."continued Penrod quietly. Even though he got away and was pursued by the boy an d girlscouts that li tle son of Satan is now again inside our lines and is traveling on his way south for a destination which I only know now through Empress's Vivian note to me."

"Therefore you know who why he is traveling south sir.!"

"That is right.And I have very secret service agent and all child scout patrols from various distant christian armies, and detectives from every near by christian Calvarinian city and town and military police and the Gemini watching for him.

I The trouble is I have no description of him but Angelinia Aronburg warned me he is very dangerous as he was once trapped by her and half a dozen others in a barn and fought it out with them to such a success that she and others were in a hospital with knife wounds for a lon g time.But M Empress Vivian says she knows who is well acquainted with the spy,and she is going to s en d her alone after him."

" A woman or a girlscout?"

"She didn't exactly write wi which.But I have a dreadful fear sir, that she will be compelled s to select one of her daughters Colonel.Only Violet and her sisters know him and despite her battle with him Angelinia Aronburg does not remember him very well well to trail him..But I am surely afraid she is going to send one of her daughters after him.And only one."

"But only one"said Colonel Sharpe. "She will be killed."

"That is what I am afraid of.I don't care how or who gets that Gerald Starrin g but I have positive orders from some Headquarters to shadow her if she goes alone.She therefore surely would ne ed protection, and I believe I know how to do it."He laid a kindly hand on the young boy scouts arm."Now Frankie go to your quarters and eat and get some sleep.I count on you more than anything if Empress Vivian sends one of her daughters.It'll be a big sacrifice on her part but the Vivian Girls only know the brat.There is serious trouble brewing for our armies near Big Girl Knool, and God knows we're having lot of trouble here.It is feared a battle will crash soon near Jennie Rory."

"That cold swift river yonder has been a ghastly River Styx for many scores of thouse thousands of glan delinians fortunately for them"said the Colonel.And thousands and thousands more are doomed to cross it.Because general Manley and his Confederates is takin g the field towin or lose everything as soon as ours and the Glandelinian cavarly have foug t it out along this tragic river."

"you have nevertheless one well"said Penrod."You always do well.You have very gallantly upheld every tradition of these corps.A sound and refreshing sleep to you Frankie.I may need you for a companion to morrow or the day after."

Violet,and her sisters s e slept all night long and all the following day untill n early three in the afternoon.No body had even awakened them.When Violet first awoke she saw her camp trunk and valises standing beside her cot and those too belonging to her sisters, and hers and their own fresh under wear laid out beside their pretty little traveling gowns. Late Fall sunshine filled the room..

Sparrows chirped and chirked outside.

"Heidi"Violet called gently, sitting up in her blankets to free her eyes of her own thick curly golden hair.

"Yes dear Princess.Yes Dear Princess."replied the girlscout coming in quickly from somewhere in the outer sunshine.Violet yawned, and looked up sleepily at the merry nice looking blak haired girl her countenance aflash with joy and glee that she had the honor to wait upon the Princesses for the first time in her life.

"Please give me and my sisters anot her bath and a rub."she begged."Never mind them.I'll awaken them."

"Yes Princess.I'm going to curry you and your dear sisters and rub you like you was the prize actors of a great fair.I'm going to put you into good warm perfumed soapy water and scrub you and soap you and shine you and twist you and your sisters in two untillyou'll be fit to lick every Devil of a glandelinian t hat get's in your way."

"You can do everything to us but drown us."said Violet gayly.

"Drown you.No boddy could do that.It was tried often and you are still here."

"Oh dear."yawned Violet."I'm sore all over.Jennie."she called but her sister didn't answer.After some difficulty she managed to arouse them all, and they first said their morning prayers.Then when they each one by one stepped into the big steaming washtubs and sank down with a contented sigh, their stifness and soreness left them like magic under Heidi's massage and youth and health and the excitement of impending new adventure did the rest.Dressed at last in their best, and not at all disguised, the beautiful happy little girls were quite ready to dance thettttttttttttk Cake Walk or to follow the devious and most secret"Grapevine from the root to the uttermost convolution of its mysterious tendrills.They wore light traveling dresses and waists full but without flunces or dots and latched with turquoise at the waist, their soft young throats and parts of their arms being free.Their rakish little pork pie hats were edged with different sort of blossoms.Heidi beaming with pride at her handiwork, cooked bacn and eggs and made bekon busuit, and brough hot milk and to the Seven little NHeroines ate with appetite far unimpaired by their experiences of th the day before.They to day were seemin ly more than usally lovely to look upon, and they left Heidi mem r merized standing in admiring gaze, as an army wagon drove up for the luggage of the Princesses.

Colonel Sharpe was very busy in his quarters, but not too busy to welcome Violet,and her sisters,and he had his big wall tent c leared to recieve t hem. At first glimpse of the radiant young girls he became c ertain t hat he was entertaining angels unawares and was somewhat bashful in their presence.He bowed respectfully to them and offered Jennie his own chair.He said;

"Do you know Princesses your mother is here."

"Yes"answered Violet gleefully."I'm afraid we kept her wait ing though. Why didn't some one wake us earlier!"

"Your Mother wished you to have a good sleep: She is coming here in t en minutes.She wih wishes to see you on very imporant business."

The loving reception that ensued between Mother and daughters cannot be described here as it would take too many words, but the Reader can imagine.

"You my dear Empress look very charmin g"The boy scout colonel said rising and placing a rocking chair for her by a table."Now since they are here I'll leave the tent free to you and come back when you send for me."

"Very well my dear lad"said the Empress."I sure admire you and love you for all you and other boy scout leaders have done for them.Where's Penrod.General Jak Evans is in camp now and wishes to see the little boyscout he loves so much.?"

"I,ll send him to the general."said the Colonel:

After he was gone Empress Vivian remained silent for some minutes.she looked very grave and troubled and as if she was afraid of some impending dis aster.

"My dear daughters"she began.I suppose you may be surprised to know I came here allthe way to you from Angelinia Agathia, running the risk too of such a trip for the purpose."

"Yes but we were sure glad Mother"said violet."It looks like as if our past happy days are here again.But you look worried.what is the matter!"

"My dear daughters "she said."Did you ever here of the Sons of Luc ifer! "

"The what!"

"The sons of Lucifer!"

Violet and her sisters looked at each other with a puzzled expression.Then Joice made answer;

"No Mother dear I don't believe we had."

"Then dears you are going to hear about them k now and it will be a shock to you I'm afraid.The league called the Sons of Lucifer is a military and sec ret organiz ation formed near Big Girl Knool in some abandoned town by Glandelinian spies.It's object is to attack and destroy our cause by hiring bombers to ass assinate me and you."

And first and last and always paramount was her minds loyal c ry;"God Save Glorious Abbiennia, and Humble Glandelinia, though s he and hundreds of millions her sisters and father went down to stormy deaths amid the final catacylsm.Little did she dream however of how successful her mission was going to be.Starring feared her and her sisters dreadfully.

"Oh Dear Blessed Lord, "she whimpered to herself"What a role and what a death--with the whole world applauding through its tears."

Then admit the chaotic excitement dislocating her mind she began to realize that her mother and her sisters with her had returned and was speakin g to her again.

"A telegram has just arived from two of my operators Violet dear---Hendro Darger Operator I69, and Gingigore, Operator I78.They have contrived to join the Sons of Lucifer in some of its territory to se ecretly get their plans.They will make contact with you at the St Johns Hotel.I have telegraphed t hem to expect you t here by to morrow night. She handed her little daughter the memorandum, she folded it as in a dream and placed it inside the scented glove of her right hand.Her mother had the railroad tickets, and baggage checks, and after a most sad parting with her sisters, in which they promished most heartfully to have Hasses said for her safe return a wagon came to drive her to the s tation.However her mot her and sisters followed her to the station and only they.No one else was allowed to go because it must be kept a secret.

Her mother offered hervher arm and also to Jennie, and t hey alled walked on either side of their darling mot her.

"don't forget that our new passwords "Are H eaven be wit h us"She warned her little daughter."Heaven be with us"she murmured,"The way to heaven leads t hrough the grave."

Her mother and her sisters looked at her gravely with tears in t heir eyes."Her ownvgaze seemed to see things far beyond all.

"Oh God help me in this dangerous enterprize."she sighed."But I have watched the stars too long to fear the danger.Heaven will be open for me if I die at the hands of the enemy."

The words were spontaneous, and set her sisters to c rying bitterly.Yet it was only afterwards that the realized the theatrical value of these words as a final exit.Some day if she survived, she would have a Number of Mas ses said for Than s Thanksgiving and have the Blessed Virgins Statues wreat hed in the most beautiful flowers. she embraed her mot her and sisters farewell and they set to weeping anew and oh they wis hed they could go along.They dreaded most dreadfully that they would never, never see her again.Her mot her feared the same and though duty called, and she must sent Violet as Violet alone knew the dangerous boy, yet inwardly she had hoped that Violet would refuse the dangerous mission.But nevertheless she didn't.Both sides had made a sad pathetic sacrifice.As at last Her mother handed her into the headquarters Princess wagon, and drawn by six frisky horses, the One hundred and Fourteen t h Division of Abyssinkilians were passing, their ban d leading wit h a deafening tumult of cymbals, brass and drums.Through their tears Violet and her sisters waved their handkerchief.There was on ly a battalion of thes left .The remainder lay dead before Mayres Heights near Marie normann.It was indeed a real sad parting, and all the way back to the camp Violet's sisters continued to weep.That very evening while still continuing to cry they had o asked a Priest to say as many Masses as possible for her safe return, and he promished willin ly and said two the very n ext morning early, and all the boy and girlscouts who attended these Masses offiered offered their Holy Cumunions for her safe return.

Over Little Girl Knool town, when she arived at sunset sad at heart from the parting of her sisters and mother, and after an irksome journey of over six hours were symbols of the mighty forest fire clouds piling up over to the southeastward---formed like slow storm shaped gathering, spreading over the city a vast and foreboding gloom.Before she went to bed a glare was s een.But she was so sad at heart, and so frightened as to what the outcome of her journey would be that she could not sleep.From her bed room in the St Johns Hotel, when she arose the next morning, she first after saying her morning prayers with diffulty difficult y wept bitterly because of the sorrow and dread of her sisters, and then with all her heart begged God to have her successful offering her Heart more freely to him and her countrys cause, but ending "If it is not Thine will, and I have to die as a spy, pleasewhen I go recieve me in thy Bosom Amen."

After that she could hear the roar of traffic below her lace curtained windows where iron shod o hoof and iron rimmed wheel and the suffle of passing feet never ceased by day, and merely grew less noisy through the sombre gealit shadows of the night. The racket of drums of passing regiments, the weary clank and screech of horse cars, clatter of stages, trucks and drays up and down St Gertrudes Street combined into a sort of perpetual dissonance t o which after a while her hearing adjusted itself, and her tired mind submitted.It was early in the morning, and she was slow in dressing herself. She breakfasted in the Cafateria downstairs, and now was back in s her corner suit again.Someone had made up her bedroom, her sitting room had been dusted.She had a small picture of her sisters in o her valise and she took it out and as she looked longingly she cried again.But her duty must be performed and she wouldn't back out .She'd die any death first before she would let that rascally brat succeed.She went tearfully to the window, and looked out through the laced curt ains.Across St Peters Street was a large marble building full of dry and other goods.Opposite on the other side of Center Street where that great and wide street h n ben ds northward, rose the beautiful Abbiennian style of twoer of St Marys Church amid its trees.Here along these Blocks was the cen ter ot of the itys Hotel .Poor Violet felt so forlorn that shecwent tward the Churh t o go to Mass as is always her ustom though she had of course been there before Breakfas t and had Recieved Our Blessed Lord.But as Masses continued and it was a Sunday s he went and stayed long after the Twelve O Clock was over and therefore had been t o seven Masses.And for every Mass she said the Rosary for her sisters sake and not her own. Good little girl she was.Yet her worry and her sisters were void. But how should they know.On her return she reached Fifth Avenue, and here big stages moved s, slowly as ships in a heavy sea, through the perpetual traffic jam of carriages, haks, delivery wagons, and cos town cars."Here she saw righteous commerce and fashion crowded and strolled, news boys yelled, stage drivers and teamsters told each other the news of the war, taunted the enemy. She waited untill traffic slacked up somewhat than ran acros the street. In e her excitement she dropped her small purse.

"Hey there little girl of Heaven"cried the driver of wa wagon.You dropped your purse."

She retraced her purse and wanted to give him a rea reward but he said;

"I don't want to take money from a.little girl.You need it more than I do. And besides I've got two lovely little girls and a boy at home."When she insisted for he had dismounted he took her in his arms for he saw t ears in her arms and hugging her asked what was the matter but she couldn't t ell him.As he did so, a strange lookin g boy st opped for a moment, stared and t hen disappeared with a curse.He had rec ognized violet, and it was Starrin g.

"I'll kill that little Princess."he hissed.I know she is trailing me."

When she still insisted that sh he should take some money the man said;

"I've got my reard reward.I8ve had you in my arms ten minutes .Now as you are a good little girl go home and to your dearling mother.If you are in trouble and can't tell me what it is, tell her and she'll help you."

About three oclok in the afternoon a page brought a card t o her little sitting room.Violet read the names on the card------Henry Darger written in ink.Under it in in k also was another name "Whilliam Schloeder with the words Gingigore will come later."

"Ask the gentlemen to come up."she said, wiping her eyes so she would not appear as if she was crying.She rose to getvher pistol, and to close her bed room door.Then she returned to the sofa in her sitting room and pretended t o read a astory book.Present presently t there came a cautious knock, and obeying her summons two strangely dus disguised wicked faced men came in. She however was not afraid and said something in a low voice, and they both replied in the same way but almost inaudibly.Again she spoke and their reply was a whisper.Then she said quietly;

"Where is the cat?"

"And they replied in unison"Meow .Meow.

"Your Numbers?"she demanded.

They told their numbers.

"Operator I07 I am."replied the little girl."Won't you be s eated gentlemamen. You don't have to stand for me because I'm a Princesses.You are as equal in the eyes of God as I am."

"We don't deserve to be"they answered."But when they were seated and t he door had been locked and the window shades drawn, Henry Darger displayed their re credentials. Whilolam Schloeder then said;

"Why undertake this dangerous mission Princess.You could change your mind if you wish to."

"But I can't whimpered the little girl.I only know him by fac.I cannot even give a description of him.It's an awful sacrifice sirs but we'll all be doomed if we don't do it.I can't ta back out, even if I died a thousan d dreadful deaths and my sisters suffered a thouw thousand such heart aches.But what is your information.?"

"We don't know for certain"Said Darger whether Gerald Starring is here or not but we believe he may be the young boy who registered at this hotel late last night, and has not left his room since he arived."

Violet and her sisters again looked at each other then placed their full attention to what their mother had further t say.

"There are in the small towns near Big Girl Knool nearly five hundred thousan d or more members of this secret military society plotting to ruin the whole caus e and kill me and you my daughters by assassination by bombing. One more smashing Glandelinian victory will be als o their signal to start another terrible battle at Marie Kornmann or at Big Girl Knool.Their supreme leader, known as Grand Coteu is a well known Glandelinian spy name Nero Fanin.What they plot to do is t o mobolize a new army under Glandelinian experienc ed offic ers, and to rise simultaneously, led by thes othese selected leaders, and to bomb every chrisian leader besides us they can do.If they succeed in their plan the christian armies at Big Girl Knool would not survive a Glandelinian attack.The Glandelinian army would eventually whip us out of our boots, and Glandelinia would then dictte her own terms to us.Dear darling daughters, we must end this man ac e or it will put a final end to us and cause us to die some horrible death."

Violet and her sisters were scarcely breathing now, so inten t were they upon wh what their good mother was sayin g. The Empress wate hed them thoughtfully for a while.Then sinking her voice to almost a whisper;"I have told nobody so far somet hing else that I am going to admit to you.General Yanley is a better e xperienced general than even your dear Father the Emperor.He knows it too, but your poor father doesn't.But I think your dear Uncle guesses it and is advan c ing for Big Girl Knool with his army to take a hand.Nobody can lick your uncle and you dear daughters know it yourself.Crazy Han ay in c ertain that he is going to force your father into a disasterous battle and ruin ihim. He doesn't know of course of your uncles intentions, but no utterly convinced is general Johnston Jacken Han ay or Yanley of your fathers impending destruction that the Glandelinian Confederate Commissioners, and General Chloe have already sent northward tward Big Girl Knool, a little devil of a Glandelinian sec ret service agent to the "Grand Commander of the Sons of Lucifer, with orders to get the Glandelinian armies to move off from Marie vormann before it is too late and concentrate at Big Girl Knool immediately seize the positions, and burn the towns and villiages near by, destroy all railroad c ommunications and force your father into battle before any other help can come to him.This agent"she continued calmly"Who has started north to give these orders--is a boy spy general in the Glandelinian Secret Service.I kn w you and your sisters violet, know him well, that is the reason I came to tell you. His name is Gerald John Starring.And I don't care, and I know you don't either whether he is killed or c aptured or driven out of the country as long as he is unsuccessful.But he carrys on ihis person detailed plans for this purpose of concentration at Big Girl Knool an d for God's sake he must never deliver them."She looked her daughrter daughter Violet straight in the eyes.

"Even if your sisters may not, you Violet dear know Gerald Starring, I believ."

"Shock left her inarticulate, for of all Glandelinians t his lad was the worst most interferin g and dangerous of their enemies and she would be glad to get him before it is too late.She managed to nod.

"Then Violet dear"she continued, and now tears were in the Empress's eyes"Bec ause I believe you are the only one who c an recognize this boy on s ight I will and s o will my Husband and your poor sisters make a most tremendous sac rific e."

Again the little girl inclined her head.Her little beautiful face had become s o white that her mother regarded her n arrowly, and with a look of fear and worry on er her own face.

"I hate more than anything to make the sacrifice, for I am told t hat this brat Gerald Starring does not hesitate to shoot, and what he done t o twelve girls couts recentlyand to Angelinia Aronburg he is far better with a knife or dagger than the seven of you together.Therefore in any e ermergency I do n ot expec t you to hesitate either.But I'll have to make the sacrifice and so will my dsling daughters, your sisters, and ask you to trail him, and alone."

"Alone!"

"Yes.Of ourse you can refuse my dear if you will for I or your pap a won't force this task on you, and really would be glad if you refused.But as you only know him you can be more successful than an y one.For your safty you can have some reliable person s ecretly shadow you, but your sisters must stay here.If they accompany you even on the sly, it will be your las t ."

"Where am I to find the little rascal Mother dear!"

"I don't know, and no one els e does dear.Our spy agents who have their Operating Center in Angelinia Ag athis will make constant contact with you.Superintendent Darger of the main Metropolitan Gemini Spy Centers will also help you.All railroad stations of towns and cities in our territory vis from Big Girl Knool, northward, and southward, an east and west, doc ks, ferries, and hotels are being watched and every section of coutry are scoured by pat rols for any suspicious person that is in any boys .The trouble is we have no des cription of Gerald John Starring.That is where you will be helpful if you kn ow him.And violet my darlin don't forget as you surely know well from the experien ce you and your sisters have had with him that he is not only the most dangerous spy in the Glandelinian service, but that he is an enemy of you whom you cannot trifle with.It is of no use to go in any disguise as he will know you any way.Just try and surprise him or get him captured by identifying him, but for "eaven s sake don't try it yourself.Only shadow him and lur hime into a trap.Take no chanc es with such a boy fiend."

"My mission is to identify him then!"

"Yes.But don't try and take him prisoner yourself.It will be suidd tt suicide. .I want his papers and you dotoo.And we want him dead or alive.If he can be captured, run i him so far off from a Glandelinian army that he cannot get bac k to one for a long lon g time."

She nodded.

"I don't know which of our operators wit will make contact with you.You know how to recognize the Gemini of course?"

"Yes "other dear."

"Very well darlin Violet.And please for your sake and my sake and the sake of your sisters and the nation in general that trapped Glandelinian spies shoot to kill.Don't let him even dis cover you are following him if you do discover him.He will only you sure."

"Will Starring have others with him.I and my sisters fear and know his two great Confederates Dargar and Lowden.Darger is more t dangerous than Starring."

"I don't know.Probably.Anyway. our agents are instructed to make a complete job of it."

"If G Gerald Starring should be captured, would he be court marshalled and hanged as a spy?"she inquired calmly.

"No doubt at all Darlin."

"But "other I thought you and I were to be opposed to the exec ution of Glandelinian child spies."

"We are.But in this case of Gerald Starring and his two Con federates for what they have done to you and your sisters, I'm afraid we have nothing to say for once in that matter."

"I don't seewhy we should oppose it now mother dear"said Jennie very bit terly and with tears in her eyes."What did we suffer aththe n hands of the enemy. What did we see in massacres of children.How often were we stran gled at the ends of ropes only to be saved by miracles.They don't care for children no more than we do for snakes.I for one withdraw my opposit ion to the hangin g of Glande linian child spies.The enemy en even t ear the bodies of children open alive. You know how much we saw of that mother dear."

Violet herself was thin in thin king very swiftly now trying to find some way to find the wicked dare devil boy spy and capture him without ris king sucidal dangor to herself.Her mother rose and walked away through the tent ed corridor tward a boy scout telegraphic operator, who appeared with a sheaf of telegrams. The terrifying drtttttttttttttt drama of it all was overwhelming the little girl.Yet amid the chaoes of clashing empt emotions, her ruling pas sion s persit ed.And she became agonizing aware that never before had she, n ay any little girl or women in an any worlds history of wars and other adventures been offered so stupendous a role to play before so vast an audienc e.Her stage, the huge devastation theater of a World Record Breaking war, Glandelinia and Hole God Loving Abbieannia her audienc e, all the world lookin g on from the seats and Balconies of the Grand Theatre, and all Kings and queens.she gigled hysterically.Fascinated, yet terrified, bewildered instin c t urged her to seize the opportunity and accept everything it offered---every peril, every pang, every great sacrifice, sorrow of parting with hercsisters, maybe forever, even the bony Embrace of Death itself.And if it really happened after all t hat she would swing to death at a hang mans noose or have her entrails drawn out . Heaven and all its happiness and G ,o Glories would be awaiting her.Her face was hotly flushed now; her eyes sparkled.And yet what if s he was was wa what Penrod said "Angel Possessed.Wouldn't those angels protect her through every peril.Why not for the sake of God, and Couty and for the sake of gaining the Glories of Heaven see it through at no matter what the cost.Comedy, melodrama, or tragedy, or tagedy, what did it matter if she for the first time alone were t o play the role, the supreme role of the Worlds History--the greatest of all heroines, the little heroine of heroines, beset by half a million secret en emies, enemies, and enemies without and within, and fighting to save her holy and Glorious God Loving Country where every child is like little angels and good beyond belief, beyond seeming possibilities and people all of them too, and at the same time, to capture or destroy righteously for that Holy God lovin g Country the one dangerous little foe who had ever mattered serious ly to her of the dangers of his fury in all her light hearted life . She saw herself in dire world shoc king tragedy, dying by hin bullet.Or she saw herself a tranglin g to d a death at the ropes end, or Glandelinian executioners ripping her body apart or she saw her self triumphantly possessed of hin fatal papers.

"What room is hevin!"asked thevlittle girl startled.

"Across the hall from your own room Princess.Room I88."

"Under what name is he registered.!"

"Fred Harpy of New Girl Kn cll."

Her heart was beating so violently that she could not articulate for a moment or two..Then she managed to ask Whilliam Shloeder, whether anybody was watching the door of I88.The spy motioned her to open her own door and look out.She arose looked our autiously and peered into the corridor.And saw a tall foreboding shadowy figure standing at the farther end of the hall.Violet with a sigh closed and locked her door again, and turned to Dargar.Her pale lips formed a voiceless inquiry; and the spy replied;

"He's Operator I3.George Galtingburg.I have the house keepers pass key.The reason he is standing there in the dark, is I'm sorry to say a bad cause. I seen you embraced by that good hearted wagon driver this morning, and I saw something else.That brat knows you are here and in your room across th e ot her from him.He means to sneak into your room to night and kill you.He's watchin g and God hel you if the Operator is hoodwinked.But here's t he key.""

He showed it to her.

"We can enter the room at once."

The brave little girl took the key from Dargar.She had become frightfulypale but her manner and voice were composed.

"Now look here"said Darhar.Can you lis listen to reason.Don't go on with t his dangerous drama.He sure means to kill you.Think of your poor weeping sisters at home.Detail somebody else to capture him."

"That is what I am"she said seriously."You do not think Mr Darger that I'm going to commit sucide do you.He's a deadshot, and to night I want seventy men if you can get them to guard me and my room.Remember too I am a Princess and my word now is law.I am in charge of this investigation and I must carry it through even at the cost of being torn open alive as these Glandelin ians do it. I wouldn't want to go back now.My sisters would think I was a coward for their n behalf.I'm sure God and His Blessed Mother, and the angels wh o poss ess me will protect me."

"Yes Princess, we understand that."

"Please remember it.You f ar for me more than it is necessary.I'm sure I'll come out of it all right, and recieve their embrace on a glad return.Even then if I knew my future and knew to night I'd die a terrible death in my bed I couldn't back out n w.Our Countrys cause is in grave danger."

She began to pace the rose flowered carpet as though considering the sit uat ion. When her hard beating heart beat more quietly and her voice was onc e more under control;

"Has anybody a sure descript ion of this boy in room I88!"she in quired.

Galtein burg gave his description.He got it from the hotel night clerk."

said Darger respectfully.

"Very well"she said."Let us ask Mr Galterinburg."

She cautiously opened the door again.Darger and Shloeder started to follow her tward the shadowy figure, but she motioned them to remain in her room keepin g her hand on her pistol in her pocket in case the boy would try to surprise her.And she went on alone.He was also a burly rough lookin g man wit h a whiskered face and appeared like one of those ruffians you see in the Movies.That was his disguise.He kept his hands in ihis overcoat pockets and his hat on ihis head as she approached him.When she was still a little distance away he stepped in front of her.

"One moment little girl"he said not recognize ing her in the dark hall;

"do you know the Counter Sign."

"Yes, and she made it very carefully saying the words too.Then she gave the first phrase again of the Abbieannian Secret Service challenge, and she ans wered as prescribed;

"There is only one Counter sign,"and she carefully made it again and t old her number and then revealed she was Princess Violet. He told his number and what he was and withdrew his right hand from his overcoat pocket, but it still bulged with a heavy weapoj weapon. She said calmly;

"Tell me about this strange boy in room I98."

"Registered at three oclock or earlier as Fred Something.He carried one valise but had no trunk, and the clerk said t he valise too was not one bit heavy.That seems suspicious.The night clerk who notifies us described him as a smart but very mean and sneaking young boy, dariksh eyes, and intense blac k hair, stout figure very strong, about your height, cautious as a cat or owl wit h a roughis h and most impolite manner, and the voice and manner of speech of the southern Glandelinian country."

"That sure is Gerald Starring i wit hout the slightest doubt"she said.Any other information!"she inquired.

"Yes Princess but I'll give it to you in your room a little later on when we're sure no one o erhears us."

"Have you a warrn warrant for the boys arrest."?

"Yes ,Princess."

"Have you also a search warrant?"

"No .I couldn't get one."

"Well"she said, and she looked around cautiously"I am only here t o identify Gerald Starring.Unless an easy chan ce is for me I'll not try to take him my self as it would be sucide.I wouldn't cause my sisters grief over my death if I can help it, even if I do go to Heaven.It wouldn't be right, they need me too much.Also I have my own plan of procedure which if you follow it out clean me will make the world gasp with our success.You understand I being Princ ess Violet am in full charge of this matter, Mr Galtingburg and if you obey to a perfect ion I and my sisters will reward you in the way you like best.There was no man yet who wouldn't give anything to have me in their loving embrac e and if you do itvfor me that will be your reward.You love us dearly don't you as I can s ee it in your eyes and would rather I didn't take t his c hance."

"Yes Princess I do."

"Very well"sai she said kissing him on the cheek as he had ben t down his head and plac ing one arm around his neck.This is a part of my devotion to you then.

"Go down to the lobby and wait there untill I send for you.Then you can tell me what you know as what you wishto say I see there's terrible worry in your fac fac e."

The Gemini Det ective seemed surprised.He looked sharply for a moment and in great fear for her safty, then touched his hat with a polite salute and bowed and walked off tward the broad railed stairway leading to the wide lobby Belo w. When the little girl returned to her room, the two chief of t he Gemini Secret Servie agents were peering through the crack of the door, their eyes fixed on t he door of room 1886.

"How many entrances are there to t his big hotel!"she asked.

"Two Princesses"replied Schloeder"One on Broadway, the other on St Peters Street."

"Then you will please stand watch outside the broadway entrance, and Mr Dargar will you please take your station outside the St Peters Street door.Let no boy the age of Starring if any are here get out untill he can give the Christian Counter sign.The Glandelinians hatevour Blessed Lord so terribly they would'nt make it if their life depended on it so you can arrest assured t hat the one who refuses the counter sign is he.And remain there untill further orde rs."

They walked away together down the long dim corridor.The little girl wat c hed them unt ill they had disappeared.She trembled slightly at moments.And there was unutterable anguish in her colorless face.From the s treet outi outside her windows came an increasin g roar of vehicles and voices.Newsboys were shout ing that a great battle was expected to begin at Jennie Tory.The drums of a marching brigade redoubled the din of the streets---"Fire Brigade as it was called a blaze of scarlet as far as the eye could reach.They were recruits on their way to a number of trains.The brazen racket of their drums cymbals and all band instruments made her head swim.The noise seemed worse to her than that of a battle. And all the while her tortured heart and blinded brain were s t ruggling, throbbing wit h her problem.She c ertainly was afraid brave as she was bec ause she knew she was in the grav st danger for Starring alone was not to be on t en ded wit h. She knew many secret agents of the Glandelinians would protect the spy boy at any cost.When the man Mr Galt ingburg came up he said;

"I'm an agent also in secret for the "Sons of Lucifer.I have learned all t heir details when I spied on them and they through some cause knew that you Violet would be detailed by your Mother to c ome after him, and I have feared that at any minute you might be murdered.The news of your intent ion which your Mother notified us shocked us to almost sickness , it certainly was a surprise that you would undertake such a dangerous mission becaus e you were absolutely signing your death warrent when you volunte ered for this fatal appoint ment .I have been able to prove to you and can prove to you that in this short t ime three hundred and fifty christian spies in less t ime that it took you to get here had been assassinated in this hot bed of Glandelin ian sedit ion and hatred.Why you would select such a dangerous mission I cannot understand.For God's sake give us a description of that boy and let us take the c hanc es and get while you are safe.If n t for us do it for God and your sisters."

"I can't said Violet tearfully and almost weeping."I'd gladly do d o but the words of description of him won't do no good for I got a let ter from or a feat n ote brought by some little girl whose father hugged me for wishin g to pay him for his honesty in telling me I lost my pocket book.That brat knows I'm hea here.He saw me in the street when the good man hugged me an d he saw the spy too.He found out who I am and sent his little girl to warn me.The rascal had cleverly disguised himself and so now I'm afraid I can't ident ify me him to save my life."

The man stared in horror and wonder, as well he might, at this poor little girl , still so young only nine years of age or even less, who at the ris k of all came to certain de death and probably the most horrible kind.Many of the people in the dty who learned of her presnece there through that wagon driver also wondered and were apprehensive.soldiers who kept the cit y of mart ial order took up duty to preven t assassins from getting into the hotel.The hot el was guarc guarded as if she was a real bigcriminal of the most dangerous character.But of course Violet was no mad girl, who would t hrow her life away rashly, even if her sacrifice would get her into a any special beautiful part of heaven for if that was her idea maybe she might have been selfis h thinking or not thin ing of her poor sisters who wept for her so far away, and where all boy and girlscouts said Ra Rosary after Rosary for her and pit c hed in t o have as man y Masses for her safty as was in their power.And made all sorts of sacrific es for her, fas ting from all good things to eat, and taking things t o eat they didn't like the taste of.The spy and his two c hiefs wondered why in the world would Empress Vivian be so"nutty" to send her darling to leave the safty of the chris tian armies to go into a hotel in a dangerous enemy spy infested territory, knowing that sh eshe wouldn't now dare to step out of her closely guarded hotel or even go to the window without getting a bullet t hrough the head or chest.Or that some spy dressed as a Gemini might get in, c ome in t o her room and butcher her frightfully alive without her being able t o defend hers elf.

The reason is poor Violet had to do it.

Worse of all all Glandelinia's seething millions of most dan gerous but so far most unsuccessful spies were watching the result of the con centration of opposing armies at Marie Kornmann and Big Girlknool..To abandon work against these wicked spies would be to abandon that section to murder of children wom n women and general Glandelinian war lawless lawlessness.If these can triumph in this section through Gerald Starrings desperate and wicked effort they can do it in all parts and Abbiesania would be ruined.It was not wit h bayonets but by moral and mental and crafty superiorty that a little handful of about sixty thousand christian spies are able to prevent 300,000,000 swart hy fighting Glandelinian soldiers fiercer t han men of India to capture these two import ant sectors.Violet know even should she be struck down it would be disastrous to the country too for there was no one who could take her place.Her sisters couldn 't for despite their experience too on several occasions wit h the brat they really couldn't remember him.Too poor Violet seemed and did for a while have less protection than ever before in her life, for for the first time in her young li tle life she had left her daring sisters behind.An d Penrod too was left behind, and Evans also both of them the most wary, dangerous and efficient body guards she ever had.God help the Glandelin ians trying somet hing on her or her sisters when they were even in sight.If the bullets of the Glande linian thugs finally found their mark, it would be that so far no protector was with her.But darling daughter of Emperor Vivian she knew the Glandelinians and their ways as few w women or girls do, even her sisters.Generally she was even their safty.When she was now alone a man called to s ee her, and as she could not know who they may be either she could not trust even the judgement of her ordinary guards and helpers for as Dargar and Sholeder or the ot her man said there was no telling whether one of the guards would be an assassin or not.and as Galtsringburg was wit h her, this man before he could interview violet had to look him in the eye, and answer hisquestions and give the counter sign and if he didn't he was committing sucide for comeing there.And even then the Counter Sign was not enough.Maybe in desperation a glandelinian might really give it.Though seemin ly his judgement and intuition told him that probably after all the visitor was all right, he slickly followed him into the reception room, and while he saluted and tak talked with violet, Mr Galtingburg stood in the door behindvthe caller, a cocked machine gun pistol in each hand.Besides being able to watch him from the rear, there was a mirror through which he could study the persons face to see if it changed to a sinister expression, when Violet averted her eyes t o examine some papers.One suspicious move of the slightest kind, change of expression, a tensing of the muscles, and the visitor would have heard his gruff severe voice telling him if he i wishes to commit sucide he'll refuse to put up his hands.Turn ing he would have found himself covered by two pistols in steady hands.But t hough there was a slight trace of sinisternessn in ihis face the man was absolutely all right, he was an unknown member of the Gemini of Sec tion number IIO.He was telling her perso ns had been arrested who had tried to get into the hotel t o assassinate her, and that these callers were searc hed for weapons by the guards and that in all cases the search revealed small weapons, such as needle thin daggers, Glandelinian deadly "Strun le Strangle bands", safty razor blades with which the heart could be reached or the juglar vein severed.But the guards though they looked somewhat untrustworthy in some of them proved to be more far more royal than it seemed, and before Violet came the Gemini had made it their business to talk with every one of them so constantly that they were absolutely familiar with their ways and knew to not trust them would make themselves absolutely unworthy of them.

At the night before when violet had first come and not tired, these Gemini Detectives had went over the whole hotel examining every window and seeing to the posting of the guards. If one went to sleep or wandered away for a moment the uncanny intuition of the Gemini would arouse the Gemini from their uneasy sleep and either one would appear, and believe me some who way or other Dargar though tall and handsome sometimes almost put you in mind of an accusing phantom and he surely can terrify one. The hotel an ancient building once occupied by the famous relatives of the Princesses, was supposed to be haunted as it is called by spirits of children who had been cured murdered by Glandelinians in the past, and if this was so instead of these inspiring terror they should too be a whole sale guardian of poor little brave Violet. Glandelinians could'nt harm any one them sleeping in such a happy hap happily possessed house.

Dargar didn't fear these little spirits, it was only the deadly murderers he feared who might try something in spite of the condition of the hotel. When not thinking of peril of for from that couche Violet had looked out of the window Dargar was at another window in another room with his two pistols laying on the window sill and his eyes flitting from window to window of other houses across from the hotel, and every street corner or other place of vantage from which an assassins face might emerge. should that be seen his guns certainly would lose their "respect for that party" Indeed. Nobody will ever know how many plots through her whole career and her sisters too this watchfulness of all her other good shadowers frustrated, but just the same he feared that some one would get yet get her. Yet no matter how dangerous Glandelinian assassin spies may be a thing had occured that night before she had seen her friends that proved the watchfulness of the Gemini Detectives. One glandelinian feared that if he didn't succeed in getting Violet out of the way it would have a bad moral effect upon the other Glandelinian spies. Violet must be frustrated at all cost. Once in a while he must appear fearlessly in public without any precautions except perhaps an orderly or two. He had been a great footballer in many nations and decided to get himself on a team of Abbiennian foot ball players in the morning where the game was to be in the open square of the Hotel ground. His comrades objected saying his plan was dangerous, but he overruled them. That morning when Violet was alone in the room Mr Gathingiburg having gone again to guard once of the entrances was the time of the match. Every person in the district attended. The plans for his arival to get at some spot where he could detect the window of the Princess and hurl in a hand grenade seemed safe enough because he would be with a large number of other persons, all well guarded, so that it would be hard indeed for any christian spies to single him out even after he had flung the grenade. and he surely knew how to fling far and never miss his aim. The assassin got safely through the throng and dressed in his football suit walked out on to the field to greet the members of the opposing team. Conversing with that team were several Gemini detectives. They had discovered his plan to assassinate Violet. In the football was the grenade. All was needed was to pretend to fling the football the wrong direction and it would have entered the window. That one moment and she would have been a mangled mass of blood in the frightful wreckage of her room. On being discovered with the foot ball opened and the grenade drawn forth he and his cronies had tried to escape but the three detectives suddenly drew pistols and as he wouldn't obey their command to halt and drew themselves as they ran, they fired six bullets into the body of the would be assassin, who died instantly. They had planned well. for once he was without that bullet proof vest and away from the watchful eyes of his wicked comrades. Yet wicked as he was he had proved he was not afraid, and he paid for it with his life. The other man was wounded in the leg even though he returned the fire killing one of the detectives and fatally wounding a second. But he was caught, while the third finally got away and into the crowd of people on the side lines. Here he got off gradually to soon be among his own wicked followers a but such now is the awe and even veneration of that thin "line of christian detectives protecting Violet, and even her sisters--Which even holds haughty Glandelinia in dire dread, that they were afraid for a time to attempt to do anything to her but only to try and hustle Starring away before violet would succeed in identify him or catch him herself. It is therefore to preserve that magnificent tradition of the christian spi spys most indomitable will courage and general mental and moral superiority that a number of christian Gemini have often sacrificed their lives for the protection of not only Violet and her sisters but all the child scouts as well and must be followed by as many more as it is necessary to show these dasterdly Glandelin inn spy assassins that no amount of murder will affect Abbiennian justice. These spies who wish to make away with violet try their best to prevent capture if possible as their attempt to assassinate Violet brings the penalty penalty of burning at the stake if caught alive.

Violet was sad had been forced to ll leave her sisters and she not her and loving Father behind, safe within the powerful protection of the christian army, and of the child scout indomitable regiments, but poor violet and her sisters that night didn't sleep a wink. That morning she could not even or they could not even dare open the morning paper or hear the telegraph go off or hear a telephone ring without dreading that it is the news they know is certain to come some day. But Shakespear had said in one of his poems;

"Cowq Cowards die many times before their deaths;
The valiant never tas te of death but once."

With Violet, she is in heaven if she dies. And she is as brave a little girl as could be found, and trying to steel herself against fear does her work no matter how terrified she is. But his poor sisters nearly a hundred miles away, who are equally as brave as she is, must die a thousand deaths because of worry for her safty. Yet though they could have they and their mother made no effort to keep her back. That was their sacrifice according to Abbiennia's holy trait tradation. They only pleaded and looked to God and His Blessed Mother and all the Masses said for Her to be her protector. And not knowing his intention Jennie had called Penrod to her headquarters just as he and Shapre had packed up to vamouse from the enemy camp and said as he entered most pleasingly as she looked wistfully at him her little hand in his hand;

"Penrod dear will you do us a good favor?" He had answered "There is not a thing I wouldn't do for you dear tell me what it is."

"shadow poor Violet. You can protect her. Please do."

Penrod laughed and said;

"I've packed up to go for that very purpose. We're leaving right away."

She and her sisters hugged him long and covered his face with kisses until he blushed. It is boys and girls like these that make it possible for good old Abbiennia no matter how dark things look to muddle "Through this seething hell". Probably ninty nine out of every hundred Glandelinians of the whole population would like to see Violet and her sisters die the most frightful death that can be ever thought of. what angers the Glandelinians most of all is that even Violet and her sisters through the help of cavarly patrols and the boy and girlscouts have most savagely put a stop to some of its most barbarous customs and that in the dreadful massacres of children recently mentioned. They still continued but not so often and all soldiers captured in the act were burned at the stake. They hate the Vivian Girls and fear them too for abolishing and preventing sub things as these gutty massacres, the custom of burning women on big funeral pyres for bein g christians, of utting childrens bodies u open alive, and even more they resented resented interference with child slavery within the forbidden lines, in whih so many good little girl and boy slaves of eight years and even younger or older were captured by christians in dreadful bloody and devastating raids and either made free children, or if older joyfully becoming girl and boyscouts too with the Abbiennian kind to get even for their sufferings at the hands of their wicked foes. And who were these meddling little girl spies to stop wicked Glandelinian customs This activity so far ruined the enemys hope of child slaughter as far as child murder was concerned, and though it continued it was only once in a long while and then it was interfered with. Emperor Vivian through the efforts of his brave brave little daughters had set his face sternly to stamp out these massacres. At his command the man called "Count De Biff" proceeded so vigorously that in a few years he and his followers had hanged or burned at the stake 392 Glandelinian officers and one hundred thousand men for even the attempt to massacre children and caused nine hundred and sixty eight thousand to be imprisoned on the Island prisoners for life or deported. It is all this success too that placed Violet and her sisters in danger. It was the fear of them that made the Glandelinians so desperate. But Violet and her sisters continue living, and Glandelinia would go down into ruin and bloody wreck forever and her wicked plots will be crushed and the Christian world safe. Yet to kill Violet and her sisters seemed an impossible for even without their knowing it they were what is called "Happily Angel Possessed."

As she stood there trembling in an agony of fear and indecision, she heard the sound of a key turning, the door of Room 24 opened a boy stepped out across the threshold, and caught sight of her at the same instant.

"Why Violet" he said astonished.

Her horrified amazement was genuine for she never had expected or hoped that Penrod would even take the terrible chances too of shadowing her for her protection. She had not expected even from him such devotion as this. "Violet Violet" he repeated incredulously "It is you isn't it."

He came swiftly to her took both her little hands and kissed them joyously and also the tense drawn mouth.

"What are you doing in Little Girl "most" she faltered turning her surprised but tear stained face to his and not at all avoiding the embrace he wanted to give her.

He laughed mischieviously and drew her into his arms.He t hen pulled her into her room an d locked the door.Her white face and frightened eyes checked and sobered him.He knew the danger she was in more than she did and that is why he came.

"Why do you look at me so strangely!"he insisted."I'm here to protect you."

Her restless eyes swept the dimcorridor before he had pushed her in but no body was in sight.she had leaned against the door trying to clear her mind of terror.

"What the devil"he began and he f elt she felt his arms imprisoning her again "Listen here Violet.I didn't come here on no Monkey business."Looking out into the corridor after opening the door, he went to his own room, motioned her to en ter then locked the door.He possessed himself of her dainty hand again and said;

"For God's sake Violet we'll have to get out of here.Gerald Starring sus pected you being here and has flown the coop but he has agents here with your desc iption description to come and destroy you.Here ."He tore open a satchel."Put this one thing on."

"What is it "she whimpered, sinking down upon the sofa.

"It is a disguise.I know what is the matter and what is frighten ing you.You undertook a very dangerous mission.I'll tell you what to do in a moment.Only put this disguise on.I'll cover you as we go out with my machine gun revolver."

"But --but--Penrod do I have to r tak . take off my clothes all together to p put that on and--and--"

"No, no, just your white dress, you can't wear that.Hurry we have no time t o waste.I won't look."

He stood with his face tward the door flushed and troubled, then as she was almost ready he looked at her out of perplexed eyes, while the dear brave little girl her pale face rigid, sat looking at the locked door.H e said again as he was disguising himself;

"what troubles you dearest?You look like death.Does the enemy know more than I discovered."?

"Death!" she repeated dully.She lifted her frightened eyes t o his without any hope at all.And suddenly as he finished his dressing hope glimmered out through mental chaos--as though somewhere a door had opened out of t hick darkness showing her the way out.Why in the world feel so when Penrod was here.He never failed to protect any one of his friends, why should he fail to protec t her.Instantly she felt once more that odd thrill of pleasureable exe citement in deadly peril.A vivid color suffused her beautiful childish face.

""Allright Violet dearest!Are you ready.I am."

She arose from the sofa but she was still trembling l slightly.Very lovely little child to look at now even despitevher disguise.Lovelier still as he again took her in i his arms and embraced her saying;

"Calm yourself Violet and you'll feel better.We will get out of this hotel. I've sent the chief decatives away to trail that rascal.We are go ngoing now.I'll bring you where we will e be safe.Disguised as you are you'll find the brat easier than when you came as you were."

For a time the terrifying reality of life had frightened her out of her wit. Now she was mistress of her mind once more, and again the beautiful little princess just as c harming convincing to the tips of her exquisite lit tle fingers so cool against his lips.And she was all tremulous happiness and youthful shyness and little f eminine fragrance in this loving brotherly like arms glad in her heart that God had caused Penrod to secretly shadow and cover her.Little did she know it was he that had caused the detectives t o discover the plot to hurl a bomb into her window and bring them to disaster for the plot.He of c ourse did not comprehend her at first.

"I couldn't understand your being here in Little Girl Knool"she explained."Your coming scared me badly."

"Did you suppose I could resist the pl eading of your dear sisters to refuse to protect you!"he demanded."Jennie cried bitterly as she asked me to do it and to refuse was impossible.I had not the heart to see you fce this peril and not share it.I can protect you and you know it.You'll succeed if I'm with you too, and believe me Violet we'll do things here that will make the world look and gasp."

She hid her little face against his shoulders for he had her still in his arms holding close to him while he laughed and kissed her face and neck and the decliate curve of one flushed cheek for he loved her and her sisters dearly.

"Darling"he said"It seems do wonderful indeed that I should encount er you here as I came to cover you.With whom are you traveling besides yourself Violet."?

"I was traveling alone."y "other said it would be safer."

"Wonderful"he repeated."I arrived late last night, and because I was worried for your safty I couldn't sleep and stayed up.Some more friends of mine are coming where I really abide to see me later on military business.But we must get out of here quick.

"But what about the spy Starring?"

"We'll get him as I'm determined to help you.I'm passing as a rapid Sons of Satan myself.I have du e clues and we'll probably have the brat to morrow in our hands.Come we must start before it is too lat e."

Violet feeling better now giggled..

"Shall I have to put on this ridiculous funny looking hat and shawl on!"she asked naively."

"Yes."

His mischievious delighted eyes answered her.She adjusted the strange small flowered broken hat, pinned on the dirty ragged ne shawl which still left her arms full bare which was her disguise, seized her purse from t he table and asked;

"Do I have to go alone again!"

"No indeed.I must accompany you.Dargar says I must as I'm responsible now for your safty."

He went out first to see that the corridor was clear, then she slipped out of her door and locked it.Then both stood in the corridor for a moment rigid and mirthless, desperate. The deeply carpeted corridor was silent and dim.Both she and Penrod could see nobody in it.In e her purse was the house keepers pass key, which she had to e taken from the Gemini Gail inghurg.she looked up and down the corridor again, then begging Penrod to stand on guard she crossed swiftly toroomI'ing fitted the pass key to the lock and opened the door.On a bed lay a lck locked but small va lois of black color.From a leather belt under her dress she drew a long keen edged knife and hac ked and slashed a long slit in the leather.Through this she pulled out shirts, collars of a boy underclotti under clothing, and then a paket of papers, taped and sealed.From this she ripped tape and wax and tore open every envelope.Here was the commission of Gerald Starring.Here ward lists of mens names and address es in spy h eadquarters in Manleys armies.Here too was a letter from Nero Fania and his "Jeff"faced crony.It had to do with a depot of hidden war material in a captured Calverindon city, and a plan for seizing little Girlknool town first and drive the christian armies from it tward Big Girl Knool.Here also was another letter to Nero Fania signed by general John Manley, another to some mysterious spy from general Raymond Richardson Federal.These latter concerned a plot which she couldn't comprehend an d sicked her with unspeakable horror.There was a letter from general Rlak Brooks to general Tomas Federal concerning seventeen ot her Glandelinian generals who had disguised themselves and made their way into christian cities to find secret headquarters of the Sons of Lucifer with t he purpose to disorganize Allied-Latin Federal Finances, rob all rich people of their money and withdraw silver from circulation which backed Abbieannian money inst ad of gold, and to cause every important bank in the whole world that supported Abbieannia to crash.There was one more letter in cipher directed to general Johnat on Jackson(Jackass) Manley no doubt the formal order to begin operations by striking a blow at Marie Korrmann destroy the christian armies at Jennie Tory and to send secret spies into the christian lines to assassinate her an d her sisters."

Gathering all these papers into a bundle, she left the room, threw the small atn satchel she brought out into a locker in the hall, closed and locked the door, and she and Penrod sped tward the stairway.She met Gemini Operator Gathering way in the street some distance away from the hotel smoking a cigar.When he caught sight of her and Penrod coming and recognizing her because she was with Penrod he looked cautiously to the l ft and right and then went to meet her.

"The brat is really gone"she whispered."but I have got his papers."

"Was it Gerald Starring Violet ?"He looked at her very sharply.

"Yes.Find Dargar and bring him here."

"I will.But if that brat finds out you took those papers Violet, God help you. I wanted to do that myself to save you.You are sure reckless Princess.I'm brave but I wish I had your courage."

She and Penrod went on a nod she found Whilling Shloeder at his post. Almost immediately Gatlingburg and Dargar came hurrying down.

"Gerald Starring was not in his room"she said"But I found these papers in his small e valise.Gentlemen you will be good enough t o carry these papers t o the office of the provist marshal examine them, telegraph their cont ents to any general you can get communication with and wait further orders from him."

here in the world did Gerald Starring go?"asked Galtingburg bewildered.
"I do not know where he went but I think I do know where he is going"said Violet.
"And I and Penrod are going to follow him."
"It's too dangerous.You'd better take one of us"began Dargar, but she interrupted with a slight g iggle;
"You are afraid that I'm in more danger than I am.I have my dear b trusty brother and friend here Penrod,and as I'm a Princess and am in charge here I can do it.If you follow me you'll blunder it all.If I am not safe now Mr Dargar I wouldn't attempt to follow the rascal.But he must be caught.I and my sisters would like to see him badly.He has made enough trouble for us already."
The c hief of spies reddened.
"I can't understand how he got out of the hotel"he muttered.
"Then look at this letter a good and friendly teamister sent me by telegraph.
He read;

"Mr My dear friend, I was deeply embrassed when I discovered this early morning that I had embraced lovingly one of the dearest and most good and beautiful of our Abbicannian children, a nice friendly little Princess.
But I'm n t writing to tell you of my surprise or embrassment but I was dumbfounded when while kissing and hugging so beautiful a little girl like you I saw a bad looking boy give you a murderous lookfrom across the street and beat it.I learned he was the deadly Glandelinian s y Gerald Starring, that he knew you were in the same hotel with you.For God's sake get before it is too late.He'll get men t o bomb the hotel to night.He won't come back, and I'm hoping he forgot in his excitement his belongings as he has important papers with him.If you have time to get them do so.Your country is at stake.

Your friend the Temister.

My wife and c hildren prays they'll be able to see you some time."

Gaultingburg, deeply chagrined said to Dargar ;
"Well I guess we had better hurry along to the provistand start our telegraphin g.We have been double crossed or that little devil would not have known poor Violet was here.Violet for God's sake now clear from this neighborhood and you too Penrod."
"Dargar said to her admirin l admiringly ;
"This is a fine bit of work you have done Princess.Will you keep in t ouch wit h us!"
"Yes"she said quietly."But for my sake andGods be very careful of those papers.I hold you three gentlemen responsible for them.Do as I say an d I'll let you hold me in your arms for a long time, the three of you.I love those who love us so dearly as you men do."And she threw her arms around each man and kissed him and allowed then eac h to embrace her for a moment."
(These papers were the undoing of the Sons of Lucifer for they were in the hands of Emperor vivian the next morning)
Then they touched their hates to her.Dargar himself arried the papers.Whillian Schleeder an d Galtingburg walked on either side of him like a pair of grim watchful he hounds.

In the meantime Penrod was on his way to the new hotel where Violet had gone.
As he was passing two little girls and a boy he overheard one of them say;
"Why John look at that boy will you.See he's face. Any little girl would sure find protection in him."
"...but do you mean?"
"I can't say what I mean.But I canxsee it in his face."
Penrod suddenly stopped in front of them grinning.
"Especially you and others I know willreceive protection not even from me but others."he said.I overheard your remarks and am surprised that you do n t know who I am.But never mind"he added as he saw her bashful but yet dumbounded look."You'll hear of me some day."
"They were sure to hear of him that evening and in big black headlolines in the Little Girl Knool Newspapers.
"A key rattled in the door where Poor Violet sait await ing the return of her adopted brother and sure enough protector.As he entered the little girl rose from the big chair, breathless, said radiant and excited.
"I'm free just now"he said.What shall we do darling.!"
A swift embrace, passionate clinging for a moment, then a happy laughing escape and a further adjustment of her hat before her mirror.
"I'm expecting some friends. "he said."They won't keep me long.I'll step across to my room for a moment to see how t it is.But kee yourself locked in Violet, and for Heaven sake keep away from window."

"Are you really going to risk all these dangers with me!"she asked dolefully.!
"Yes I sure am violet dear.I was intending to do so i at first anyhow, and your dear sisters piteously begged me to shadow you."
"When!"
"Not long after you left.My heart ached Darling when I heard of it.Everyone is remembering you in their prayers."and he suddenly looked around wit h a start ubut only a cat was walkin g across the hall."enrods ears we so peculiar he could hear a cat walking where others couldn't.
."Are you going to be with me alone!"
"With a friend.Colonel Sharpe, and his two lieutenan ts.If you may not see them for too many close to us is more suspicious .But if you are Wise Violet you will appreciate this protection.You can't accomplis h your mission without being shadowed by protectors."
"Couldn't my poor dear sisters stand it that I had to go and do thisf"she asked wistfully.
"I'm sorry b t they couldn't.Neither could I.I couldn't stand their grief.I held Jennie and Catherine axlong time in my arms untill my embrace put them to sleep.I promished them I'd return with you, and if possible also with Starring.I've nots to settle with him too."
"Oh dear)" her voice broke dh childishly yet it sounded like the s igh of an angel.He looked at her face in the mo mirror, saw her mouth quiver, came up behind the brave little Princess and touched the nape of her neck wit h his lips.
"In doing my duty to you is serviving my count ry in the best manner."he said tenderly."I must keep my promise to your darling sisters.I swore to kill who ever even lays a hostile hand on you.My pistols are good quic k firers too."
She turned from the glass, caught him by the shoulders, and whispered excit edly in his ears ;
"Is your friend a boyscout officer spy."?
"No.He's a boy spy only and he's the son of general Sharpe."
"Do I know him.!"
" You never even heard of him I'm afraid Princess dear.He's your fathers chief boy spy though and is my best helper."
"Oh but Penrod dear be areful.I'm as afraid for your safty as you are of mine."
"You need not worry on that score lit tle angel.I left a secret code word at the offic e of this new hotel to send the boy up stairs to knoc k at my door. So I'll juststep across to my room and knock or call at the office."
"There's a speaking tube near the door.You can use that "said Violet."
So he went over and set his smiling sinister lips to the rim of the wall tube blew into it awhistling blast, and when the desk clerk answered;;
"This is John Schofield Penrod, Room 6 speaking.I'm expecting a Master George Sharpe from Jennie Tory.Has he arived."?
"Colonel S harpe is waiting in your room sir."
Penrod turn ed to Violet who was now all smiles.
"He's here.I won't be long.Wait for me Hony Sweet like a good little child of the Heavens and we'll have the rest of the day together.We'll have some good times ."

Starring realizing he had forgotten ihis things had gone back to the hotel he had left, paid the clerk his dues and went up to his room.He just fitted his kep key to his door lock and as he did s o the door opened in ihis face and a tall wicked looking man came out in a hurry colliding wit h him in the darkness of the hallway.Both, the boy and the man peprang ba back, their pistols half drawn.A silence of recognition, and Starring whispered exit edly;
"Was my door open .?"
"Yes confound it they've got your papers.It was that little brat Violet who is after you.You betterget her and get her right now."
"Yes I'll get her "Rep rotorted Starring."I'll get myself while the getting is good.We'd even better get out of the city.What she attempts to do she does ."
Through thepartly opened door Gerald Starring could see the slashed valise and the tumbled bed littered with underwear.He turned a white desperate fac e to the other, who nodded back gri grimly.
"Yes sir.If you are afraid to tackle that lit tle she devil I'll do so myself and get five men to help me."He patted the sheat where he had a dangerous sharp knife."You believe you can make Big Girl Knool."?
"I've got to try.And you!"
"I'll kill that little brat first.Then Big Girl Knool or the han g mans jig for me boy.And I'll reken I'll be m on my way.I know where she is despite my disguise and as she may be armed I'll kat get six to help me or five.We'll use knif ki knives as guns will make too much noise."

He pulled his heavy pistol free of his coat pocket, cocked it, nd and still itching it, thrust his hand into his coat pocket.Then he passed like a shadow along the corridor and disappeared around the distant turn where the st aircase descended to the lobby.

PENROD THE DANGEROUS RATTLESNAKE"

Poor little Violet ocquettichly hatted and gloved, stood by her desk looking down at some writing of which a letter she was going to telegraph to her sisters.The door opened suddenly behind her and stealthly footsteps approached her noiseless ly.She certainly was terrified.Six men e had entered her room, ach armed with frightfully looking knives. One of them rushed at her as she tried to run for the open window grabbed her and at that moment she shrieked; Penrod Penrod for God's sake help me."

But his strange condition of his ears, and his inst inct had told him s he was in peril.He had not even yet turned the key in his door and he was hidden in the dark passage way when he had heard soft footfalls that no one els e had heard.He had whooled with drawn revolver in a flash.Before s he had even called half the word Penrod, or had time to give a secondary strugglevto save herself the man who had her and was about to drive the knife into her heart dropped dead without a cry two bullets in his head.The explos ions of Penrods gun was terrible and.The other Glandelinians could not so much as even move or draw a gun before they also were killed.The sixth leaped for the window with a curse stopped there for a moment as Penrod ran for the room.His and Penrods pistol barked simultaneous ly but he dropped out of the window a bullet in i his heart, while the bullet aimed for Penrod went wide of its mark and embedded itself in the wall of the Hall.Violet stood in terror and amazement for she had never believed that Penrod could have saved her as six was against her and him.

"I do regret"he said sort of Sarcastically as allgusts at the dreadful sound came rushing out into the hall"That I had to commit a massacre in your room Violet dear but it was necess necessary."He kicked aside one of the fallen men as he walked up to her and placed an arm around her.He not ic ed her wildly trobbin heart as he had his arm around her chest.

"He looked her over but there was not a sc vatch.

The sound of the shooting brought the clerk and down lobby guests and even the Gemini detdetectives up in a hurry.The excitement was intense.Besides recovering the knives Penrod searched the clothing of the fallen men, while the Clerck and others went down and out side to see what happened to the man who had fallen six feet out of the window.He had a bullet in ihis breast and his nec k andarm was broken.

.So terrifying was the sight fthat for fifteen minutes poor Violet was sic k and didn't dare turn her head.The guests knew who the two were, and Penrod sure get the praise of every one of them.

"You sure do deserve and need the love and consideration of these beautiful little Angels"said the Chief Clerck.Clerk."But in your room Penrod how did you kn w they came in here."

"I didn't go in my room."said Penrod."I was fitting my key to my door when I heard soft foot falls, and a key turning in her lock.Nobody had a keynto it except she, you and I, and I qu quickly turned at firs t thinking it was you sir. When I saw what I seen I didn't hesitate to blaze away."

"But those six men in a few seconds.My Heavens lad.Where did you learn s uc h shooting."

"In the west of the United States when my friend and guardian General Greatheart took me there.The best gunmen against criminals in the world are those West ern cob cowboys.They learned me so many arts at the gun I can pr t protec t the hot el full."

Everybody looked upon the boy with wonder and amazement. The employes were called to remove the bodies of the dead men and on the person of one was found important papers.Guns and other weapons were removed from t heir pocket s .

"I'm sure proud of you Penrod dear"she said sinking her head against his breast.Oh I than k God you did come.You loved me and my sisters that is why." and she wept on ihis breast. Finally regaining her courage and composure she smiled sweetly at him through her tears and said;

"Really because of this excitement and peril there isn't much of the afternoon left for us darling Penrod."

"He said quietly;"There is no time left for us at all.We got to beat it .Your danger is far great greater than I supposed it to be.We must get ."

His clever boyish face was sunken and colorless.He had recieved a great er scare and sick spell at her peril than she had."Matters have gone wrong with us.

"We must stay good bye to you in this city.You secured the [illegible] while you s an and leave the boat alone for a while."

"Shall I really go."she repeated.

"We must for your sake.These ain't thr only ones will try to kill you.They may succeed .I'm afraid too Violet."

"To Jennie Tory.!"

"Yes."

"Is your friend waiting.!"

"No I and you go alone.He'll shadow us.I'll give him the warning.But you come into my room with me.I won't trust a shadow."

She still rested her beautif l little head against his breast . and again smiled at him though tears were still in e her eyes and her heart was still beating fast.

"Do you believe that we are really in any danger especially me when you around!"she whispered.

"I don't know.I fear nothing for my self.But Glandelinian agents are crafty crafty and God knows might even put something over on me.But do as I say and you are not to worry Darling.While preparations are being made keep your mind on your Rosar ry.That is the best prayer and people often were protect ed that way."

She took his arm with pretty decision.

"If you are going to the railroad station"she said"I'll accompany you th re there in my best clothes then.They'll recognize me any way way.These men did."

"It's better that you do for I believe your very best appearanc e will cause others to help or protect you.But darling do not be too close to my company as you go though as it won't be safe.I wantto cover you.Both us of us will keep our eyes open all the way."

"Do you think we may even be arrested by Glandelinian s pies!"

"In that event they can just try it."

"Tell me"she int errupted fingering his button on his coat childishly"Have you paid your hotel bill."

"The clerk refused to take itHe said I and you were free as he knew you on sight.He's awfully upset over this indd nt and is afraid for you now."

"Very well then we'll get aboard a train and go back with you t o Jennie Tory.I'm glad we got the papers and that's enough.In this situation it would be suicide for me t o try and capture the Glandelinian boy spy now.We can have all that time together, and when we get back I'm going t tell my darling sister how good you were to me.And papa too."

"But Darling remember for your safty you better keep a little c lear of me. I don't want the spies you know you have a protect or.I'll go some dist ances off and you too.But don't fear.I've got you covered and if anything is seen I'll do some of that kind of shooting again."

"All right Penrod dear.Give mevyour friends tickets.There's no danger as you say in doing that.Your plans to me and my sisters always worked out to our good luck."

He yeilded the extra ticked to her, and she tucked it gayly in her glove.Her fright from trying experiences don't lst long and she was her gay self once more. He had her in the room with him, and he put up a screen by his bed so she c ould change her cloths lothes while he spoke in some sort of mysterious code and sign lan u language to his friend who had witnessed all the shoot ing for he too had come out at the sound.After a while he salut ed and saying to Princ es s Violet"God be with you little Abbiannian Rose."and went out.Then Violet soon was partly dressed but in her excitement she culdn't get all on quick enough and Penrod for his hurry was forced to help her.He laced her shoes, and put on her elegant hat and then they w ware ready.Then she took his arm and marc hedvhim outinto the corridor which terminated in a narrow flight of stairs at the Sixteenth Street door of the hotel.Colonel Sharpe had not gone out however. While Penrod was t go off he was to shadow her and he had two derringers in his pocket and also a knee keen knife in his own sheat.There were at the door a couple of hacks waiting.Penrod signalled to one of the drivers gave a good look at his face saw he was all right.When he had rattled away in ihis ricksty old hack, the little girl instead of returning to her rooms, walked back to the hotel lobby, tried to get the clerk to recieve her bill, but he wouldn't take her money on any conditions, then she displayed her railroad ticket to t he head porter and told him to come for her baggage in a quarter of an hour.Then she went up to Penrods room, opened it with her master key.The contents of her friends va i valise s were lay neatly piled on the bed and the valise stood on a chair.She poked everything in and lugged it acrosss the hall to her own quarters . To make it seem nothing out of the ordinary Penrod let it be she could take care of his belongings.Over one of her valises there was a brown alpaca cover.This she removed and fited over his valise after putting her own belon ings on top and buttoned and strapped it tightly.Then she saw to it she was properly armed and with knees keen knives to o.She had just finis hed her own packing when the porter came for her own lug g baggage.

he She placed the duplicate checks in her small pocket book along with the railroad ticket, and looking around cautiously to see that no dangerous enemies were following her went lightly out and down to the waiting hack back.As she set her foot on the carriage step, a Gemini spy Detective lounging near gave her a secret signal of recognition, and she beckoned to him.

"Is there any news?"she whispered.

"Yes Princess.We are raiding these here Sons of L Saten.We have nabbed better than five hundred of them already.Are you leaving us Princess?"

"Yes.I'm in such danger that Penrod insist I better return since I vaccured those papers.Six fellows tried to stab me already and he saved me.I'm going to Jennie tory with him."

"Good enough Princess.I hope you succeed in catching that Gerald Starring. Heaven knows he has made enough trouble for you and your sisters already.I hear he has changed his mind and skedaddled that way too."

"I'll do my best "she smiled."Keep an eye on your hotels.There are Glande linian spies waiting to trail me if possible or waiting for an opportunity to set them on fire."

She gave him a friendly warning nd nod and stepped into the battered old carriage which rattled away over the stones .

The little girl who had spoken so well over Penrod was eating her supper that evening.There was outside an unusual outcry from Newspaper boys of how a boyscout shot six Glandelinian soldiers or spies almost at once before the little girl she called to for help could even finish the word Penrod. Surprised by such strange news her father send her brother out to get a copy.

"Well for the love of"he ejaculated as he glanced over the papers.Michaellena he said"turning to the litle girl of his"Is this the boy you spoke to me of who overheard your conversation and said he would kill to protect good little girls like you and others?"

Little nine year old Michaellena received the paper in almost embrassment and looked at the great big headlongs, or headlines and then at the picture of the boy.She fairly gasped as she read the headlo l headlinns and recognized the boy as Marc-John Schfield Penrod head of all the boy and girls outs and th the highest leader of all dhild scout spies and Secret Service agents. She read well into the story her face turning first white and then red, of how Princess Violet was attacked by six ruffian spies who attempted to run long knives into her h a heart and how Penrod having heard their very softest foot falls for the spies had otton over their shoes, had shot the six before they could even draw guns to defend themselves, or even before the little girl had finished Penrods name in calling for help.

She had to admit it was,

"Yes papa"she said "that was the boy.Sh"She was so excited she couldn't hardly eat her supper.

"You certainly were right in what you said to Jane a little while ago."said her brot her."But Heavens."Who thought he was Penrod we heard so much about."

"The Glandelinians are dreadfully afraid of him and his followers "said her Father."Often the news papers have been full about him."

"Yes I know pa"said Michaellena smiling through her tears."But I never knew it was he when he spoke to me that way."

"Well you know now about him for sure."laughed her mother.

"It serves them devils right."said her father."But I can't underst and how so quickly in a few seconds time he could have saved her from those six devils. He must have learned some trick shooting somewhere or maybe had a strange machine gun like pistol."

"No"pa the paper says he had only an ordinary army revolver, and he fired only that.Even it says his friend and loving companion the little Princess girl didn't even know he could do that.She had just finished the words of her cry for "help me"and it was all over, and the last man fell out the window shot through the heart."

"He sure was some gunner"said her brother."I'm sure glad I was not one of those assassins."I'll bet the other Glandelinian spies when they hear of that will be afraid to come around now.If they know he is in this town instead of molesting her now they'll keep far away from both.And the paper says Penrod secretly has many of his "Confederates"covering her too so it is sealing their death warrantto meddle with him or her."

"But how did they come to be in town"wondered her father.

"The paper says they were here to destroy the work of the strange wicked organization called the "Son's of Saten"said the boy."And they're after that Gerald s by too.He's here in town.I know he is dangerous but I'll bet heds he is afraid of them."

So it was the little girl found out that her saying was correct.....

In the immense throng of people filling the station military policemen were numerous,busily watching the arival and the departing crowds.In fact the whole place swarmed with metropplitan military police and Gemini War Detectives and also municipal military and military Federal detectives all on the watch for the dangerous persons known as the Sons of Saten .Soldiers too were standing with fixed bayonets besides all entrances and exits of train platforms .The little heroine had secured a porter to carry her step brothers valise, and her own as they were too heavy for her.She had fourty minutes to wait before the gates to the Jennie tory Express were opened, and she took up a position where she could see all ariving passengers.Near the gate she noticed Hendro Dargar, and Whilliam Schloeder, hatting with three soldiers on guard, and when she caught Schloeders eyes she summoned him with a slight movement of her pretty head.

"Any news Prin cess?"he asked respectfully, touching his hat as he came up.

"Yes I'm going to Jennie Tory and the Christian lines with my brother Penrod whom I believe you don't know.He will be here in a few minutes.He saved my life just not a few minutes ago, and he believes since you have the papers now its best that I get back where its safe untill all this blows over.To avoid suspicion in case spies of the enemy are here you are not to not ie not ice me or him when we go through the gates.Tell that also to Dargar.Then follow us and over us ch on the sly. We will try to capture Starring as we heard he may take this same train.And see that those good soldiers on guard don't stop us ."

"Very well Dear Princess.I hope with Gods willand help you catch that fellow Starring short of the christian lines .But watch out what you do.He's evenn better gunner than you are."

"Better than my brother?"she asked almost mishiveiously."

"Well,that's hard to say since by the papers I observed what he done.Leave it to him to catch the brat for you."

"As he is too dangerous and meddlesome for me and my sisters it is the duty duty of us before our Blessed Lord to put anend to that Gerald Starrin gs mischievious activities."she said smilingly."If I or my own sisters never capture him some one else will some day.And they may not be so easy as we sit her."

A moment later she caught sight of her adopted brot her in the crowd and made her way to him and gayly took his arm.

"The gates are just opening"she said."Don't notice those soldiers when we show our tickets.I know when I am a Princess I should not need to have to pay train fare, but if I don't at leaast show a tiket and enemy spies are near they'll recognize me by that even if they don't know me on sight des pite my prettiness.Here Penrod dear take mine too, and let us look as if we were not hing as importan t as we are.And when we are on the train to prevent any one from grabbing me off from you in case you lost attention for a moment handcuff me to you. Here it is."and she handed him a pair of brass handcuffs ."You may keep the key. If you do lose it all the better.All handcuffs are alike in the army and we can secure keys easy."

"You shouldn't have taken all this risk.Violet dearest"He said to her under his breath."But I get to say one thing.You and your sisters are the bravest little girls on earth and ---and---"

"I'll be safer with you on your arm. To disguise yourself try to look like an Idiot, Penod dear."

She was laughing now as they reached the gates..He displayed the two tickets with amiable carelessness, their porter followed them, whistling as he walked along at their heels.Their sleeping car already glimmered feebly with electric light s..As they climbed aboard followed by their willing and musical porter, Penrod noticed the two valises, and when they were seated together, he asked the girl why she had brought them.

"I put all my clothes in yours with yours"she said.In mine is our rations for the trip."And I took your valise from your room and repacked your things into it.But I was worried at first and searched to make sure that nonthing was missing.I couldn't make the thing lock so I put an alpaca cover on it so your and mine couldn't spill out.Who left your valise open, darling?"she inquired innocently.

"The Hotel maid did.She was cleaning in there.I suppose she didn't know I was leaving"

"You sure and your dearest sisters are the most wonderful little girls on earth, and through you I almost believe I could fancy God's presence right here, do you know it."

"I don't know whether I am---my sisters are wonderful,.But I'm tired and sleepy I know that much, "and as she finished apparently she was Penrods prisoner for she was handcuffed to him.In case anything happened it was a wise plan for if any one or two would have thought Penrod was off his guard and tried to snatch her from the seat, they'd pull Penrod too and seal their own death warrent. She lay bak in her seat and closed her eyes and remained so even after the train started even though of course fearing she would fall asleep she said her evening prayers aid and very carefully.

After a little while however feeling Penrods arm around her she opened her eyes and looked at her fellow travlers.There were not many of them.They feared the war, and feared the train would be wrecked.Penrod embraced her closer closer.
"Big Girl Knool is not very far away."he said.
"I know. Suppose I try to stop there and find Gerald Starring if possible."
He forced a smile at that------s troubled one.
Besides our food, my valise is fully poked."she remarked.His smile faded and he looked at her uneasily; and she looked back at him out of level eyes.She saw he was really afraid of her safty and she was only saying that to test him.
"Surely you couldn't venture to do that."hesaid pleadingly.
"Why!Would you be afraid something would happen to me."she inquired naively.
"Darling, what are you talking about---"!
"Peril.You don't want me to risk anything!You'd rather have others do it!"
"He said grimly;
"If we ever get out of this hot hole I'll tell you why, and if I lay hands on Gerald Starring who is the cause of all this he'll---"Penrod didn't finish.
"Are you afraid that we'll get arrested by a big number of spies on t his train!"
"I have no means of knowing.PHenrod is a danger to you more than you think.You raided his valise and slitted it open and he knows it.Instead of fleeing he may shadow and try to get you himself, and that makes our situation very serious.And if he has his two more dangerous companions Fredrick, Bowden and Darger we're in greater peril, especially you.You don't the most daring stunt in your lifet ime on this occasion.And thath is why I didn't want you to go and do this.Not that I want to say anything wrong, but what was your poor foolish mot her thin in thinking of to send only you.And that is why I shall feel happy and relieved when we go through all the way and get back to the christian army at Jennie Tory andback to your wirried worried sisters.At your peril two of them have taken sick."For ten minutes he talked to her very plainly, explaining that she an d he would have to be strictly on their guard, and begging her t o continue with him all the way to Jennie Tory.
"After all"said the little girl lightly."Love is love.I am capable of two kinds .You are one kind."she smiled at him."The other she said is "love of country."
"Yes"he said, and Our Blessed Lord First and last."
"You are right Penrod dear.I don't intend to worry you by sying I'll st op at Big Girl Knool, but if I really intended to I wouldn't be foolish and do it alone.I'd keep you with me.You proved you are my protector and I have now not the slightest fear.But we are staying on the train."
After two hours of fast riding their train whistled the warning that they were reaching the station of the big dty soon to become one of the wars first bloodiest battlefields.
"You must be very qui et and pretend you are asleep."he whispers whispered.We don't know who may get on here you know."
"If I do you know I may fall sound asleep, and probably have to hold me to prevent me from falling off the seat."
"He crushed her hand convulsively.
"Who wouldn't like to hold you in his orv her arms."said he."
"The Glandelinians would"she giggled.
"Yes I guess they would.They nearly did in the hotel.And you can't get through even now Ul unless I take you"he added."If anybody comes whom you don't know Violet dear and speaks to me keep silent."
At that same instant two good sized burly ragamuffin like boys walked int o the car, scanning the people seated.One of them caught the little girls eye, and saw Penrud, recognized them both, and made a slight peculiar motion with his left hand.Penrod nodded, and as they passed he made a sign in answer then they passed, and then paused beside.a strange boy whose back was turned to them glancing sharply at him.Then came back to Penrod and Violet who apparently was sleepin g.
"Qn Anything for us Marco!"inquired one of the ragged boys politely.
"Nothing."said Penrud."but keep your eagle eye on this train.We suspect Gerald Starring is absolutely on this coach but he don't know we are here."
" It was only when the train moved out of the soon famous city on its long journey northward to Jennie Tory that the little girl dared look at her loving companion and adopted brother.His face was white.He feared for her saft y exceedin ly.
"You see"she said"I know you can get me through.I know you now through and through. I at first couldn't understand your strange pussy foot ears.Often I and my sisters have overheard remarks that even though fifty feet off you could hear t he cat as it walked away.Those men who had me, grabbed me by t he throat and were at leas t two of the six were just about to run me through the heart , when your gun exploded so rapidly.I can hear the shot s in my ears yet they were so loud."

He gave her axh a bewildered look, then embrassed, he sat upright wit h a st iff jerk, his boyish visage surging in color as he stammered;
"I couldn't help it.You were in danger.I also heard the key turn in your lock."
"She said",ow did you do it."!
"I learned that crack shooting amongst American Cowboys.They showed me many various shooting tricks with the pistol.I could shoot an enemy with my back turned and a looking glass in my hand and he wouldn't have time to shoot back.I hope that has scared the Glandelinians and ends their mischief against you for all time. To end it utterly as the gallows would end it.That attempt on you though merit ed the penalt y of burning at the stake.I could not help being so s cared oit her when I saw your danger.I would have screamed when I shot so frightened for you as I was but I couldn't.I love you and your sisters better than anything I can know, with God and His Blessed Mother coming first.But I know you can count on that. And then besides it is my respobsilility to protect you.Supposing that those wret ches would have killed you.I couldn't face your dear sisters for fear of the dreadful grief my awful news would cause.I could have survived your death, but I couldn't survive the tragedy to you and the result to your sisters.You see I know my self.And others seem to know me.Radcliffe my best boy friend said to me that though the Glandelinians call him a Rattlesnake, "t o the enemy I a m more dangerous Rattlesnake than he.Life is as it is before me, and my art for their sake, for your, yours and your parents and for my sake and your Gods and Country is to protect you at a m no matter what the cost.I have loved you and your dear sisters dearly the first moment I heard of you even though I never t hen seen you, or seen you as they without being in disguise."
" Penrod"she said"Are you sure that I and my sisters though we are Princesses are really worthy of your love.!"
"His face was aflame, now scarlet with fear , with chagrin at what he hd had seen her go through, and wit h angry shame. He hated Glandelinia more t han she even thought.
But he said;
"Who in the world is not worthy or who in the world are you not wort hy to. You md made yourself so wort hy that the whole Nation would destroy Glandelinia entirely had those six rf ruffians killed you, and Violet dearest without even the slightest argument you know that."
"Yes"she said"That's true.When we first heard of your good work and what you did for Angelinia Aronburg ansfter she rescued you from that snake infest ed attic and your refuging Jennie Turner from those two Professional spies we loved you even then and often papa and mama spoke as wishing you were their son.You even showed that you were loyal to us even beyond any measure though what you did you didn't know then untill Now I'll tell you.I was that little make believe Glandelin ian boyscut you arrested in the hayloft when you persued me as you saw me rob my sisters of their plans in pretense.I did that to try you and you even captured me and yet I'm so hard to capture.And you held me too untill I was before the court marshall and had to identify myself to prevent myself fac ing a firing squad.And I am the "bad boy" Glandelinian spy whom you a,s also captured at Turner Creek.Your tests were not found want in g.You'll t ake anybody you are suspicious of even if it turns out a mistake and causes you embrassment and sorrow.That shows you'll sacrific e anything for us.I even loved you when I made that scar on your face at St Martins when we bot h mist ook each other for enemies because of our disguises.You captured me in spite of t hat and I couldn't get away.There is no failing in you Penrod dear for if when II was n by mistake a prisoner of yours I could not even get away.An d how often I escaped the most viligiant guards of the enemy.So I am absolutely hopeful if we found Starring he could not get away from you either."
H"e mostioned his dry lips.
"No"he said"I don't think he could, --that is not alive anyway."
There was a moment of hesitation and then he continued;
""But Violet dearest, I know one thing"There is no chanc e for you unless I am c ontinually with you.I'm sorry to say it but no matter where you go on t his train I must be close by you. And my hand will be feeling my gun."
"Darling boy"she said nestling her head on ihis breast"You are as good as my Guardian Angel.I always believe you are his assistant."
"Yes dearest"He said.And as we suspect Starring is on this train,I shall not let you leave this seat unless you are close beside me.If he saw you first he might even kill you.And if he hopes to jump from this train I'll have him.And don't worry about us being arrested on this train.My gun will prevent that or both of them."
As she continued to nestle her pretty head on his breast he placed an arm around her and remained silent for a long time.Reaction from the tense strain and the terror of her narrow escape left her deathly tired;she knew no better way to sleep than to lay her cheek against his shoulder.

.she as he embraced her wound her arm so tightly around his that she knew he could not move wit hout awakening her, n r nor that any one could pull her from him wit hout arousing his fury.For two hours and a half she slumbered on i his shoulder unstirring untill some movement he accidentally made awakened her.

"Where are we darling!"she inquired.

"I think we are passing Rosa Villinge."

She lifted her head from his shoulder, and pressed her nose against the dark window.And saw the lights of some distan t fortress glimmering across t he river.

"I wish she murmured"We could be sure we were safe, so that we could both go to sleep."

"If you would like to be safer."he said in a low voice"I'd like to cover you up with t his blanket and you could sleep on untill we reach our destination."

"How long would that take!"

"It would take till mornin g."

"Is that what you have in mind Penrod darling."!

"You know it don't you.And how much of a little angel you look when you rest your head against my breast and sleep."

She sat up and bent forward to pe r at his closely.On y Only one smoky lamp remained burning in the car, and the expiring flame gave scarcely any light. There were electric lights in the car but because of fear of attacks on the t rain no one dared to use them.She could barely distinguish his shadowy form in the swaying obscurity of the rushing train.suddenly for the first time in the darkness she felt afraid.

"If some one tried to grab me could t you see him in the dark."

"I'm afraid not.I sent for the conductor when you w ere asleep and he came. He'll fill the lamp in a few minutes and another too."

The littl girl dropped her head back on i his breast with a faint sigh.

"After all"she thought"I have so many good protectors and yet why should I be scared."

"violet"he finally said in a whisper."Are you still trying to stay awake with me!"

"Yes so far I am"she said in a sleepy voice."For the first t ime in my life I'm afraid to be in the dark."

"I don't feel so good myself."said Penrod."Ah here comes the Condoc t or,"and in a few minutes the two lamps a were fully alive again.The locomot ive thundering on through darkness,, whistled derisively.

"When the train slows down I'm going to cover you with this "he said decidedly.

On the little girls lips there was a ghost of a smile.It faded to a tremor.

"Do you think I'm in such danger as that , Darlin g!"she faltered."

"Every possibility of it. But they may kill you on y on ly over my dead body.And while I've got two good guns wit h a chamber of fourty fives in each I believe I could hold my own against a hundred."

She moved her he head on i his shoulder and looked up at him beginning t o whimper a little and to reach into the poc ket of her little dres s for her handkerchief.He could see the glimmer of tears in her eyes something he hated, which moved him as nothing else moved him, she he felt the convuls ive tightening of her fingers on his and of nestling closer to him as if for pro - tection.She lifted the handkerchief to her face but he was already kissing the tears from her eyes saying softly;

"Please don't cry Violet.You will be safe.I on can feel it.We will see even your sisters soon and have after all fun out of this advanture.And I'll be happy to see their happy faes.I'm just dying to see them when they see you with me."

"Dearest, dearest"she breathed"I want to wear I want you to wear t his b eaut iful bracelet in m--memory of our pledge."

She put on his wrist a beautiful gold bracelet.And as she did so he said;

"I feel rotten Violet dear that oyou are hand cuffed to me. It seems as if you were my prisoner instead of a friend."

"It is only our safty and es pecially mine"she confinded to him."We can remove it when we get off the train."

Penrod was acting suspicious and for a moment she looked on him in horror.

"Violet"h e gasped."Who's that boy in the front seat down there."!

She looked and turned pale.

"Oh good gosh it's Gerald Starring."she cried.

"Don't talk so loud for heavens sake."

"The ex citement made me do it."she said breathlessly."My not her said t o me I'm perfectly justified before God for the Cause to kill or drive him so far from a Glandelinian army that he can't do anything for a long time."

"I'm trying to do my duty and save you too."he said. "Keep quiet .I'm going to make a plan.surprise and capture the brat befor she gets away."

She made no reply.she could feel the swelling muscles in his clenched right hand where the steel band held it against her own.she could feel his whole supple powerful body throbbing with rage, and fury and terrible despair.

Here was Violet's dangerous enemy in the camp of the car. He whispered something to her and both stealthily got up but Penrod forgot to unlock her handuff and a sudden lurch of the car almost threw him off his feet. In the frightenin g darkness the locomotive whistled again.A lantern and then a eletric light glimmered as a rush of air and cinders swept through through the ar from an opening door, and the onductor passed alon along the aisle his lantern shining on rows of empty seats.He moved on slowly into the car ahead.The train whistle sounded again and again, brakes began to check the speed of the long coaches, a signal lamp flashed by, another light glided past more slowly, ot hers more slowly still.The two were almost up to Starring when Penrod almost lost His bl balance knocking.Violet in the hea d with his own.At that instant Starring realized his de danger.He jumped at Violet jerked her handuffed wrist behind her back, pinned it and Penrods also there, making him clasp her waist with his manacled right arm.she snatched at her pistol in her little dress pocket, while Penrod tried to draw his with his left, but the boy passed his free hand under her knees and sprang to his feet cradlin g her, and causin g Penrod t o fall as Starring sprang to his feet.she strugglesstruggled venomously to get at her pist ol, while Penrod though he managed to draw his couldn't find chance e t o s hoot and ti tried to ban g Starring on the head with it.But he was already at the open door and out on the platformwith her and Penrod before fright unsealed her writ hin g lips.

"Don't, jump you little devil.""she shrieked."You'll kill us three.!Have you Glandelinian boyscouts gone crazy!"striking at his face with terrified fists.

"Oh Penrod don't let him kill us."

"Will you letime go then you little female snake.""panted Starring.

"No I WONT".

Wit h all her strength she struk i him in the face dazing him.Penrod tried to stop him too but had lost his gun.Then half blinded Starring jumped out into the darkness, where the stars glimmered on shrouded waters.But it seemed t hat the stars did not have a road to pass through water.There was no spalsh when the three landed; merely a violent shock.For that arile young manvin disguise gripping his writhing victim and Penrod had landed on a barrak of mash hay and wheat, and the little girl falling on top of bot h he and Penrod knocked the breath out of their bodies, and.the five wits out of her own noddle.When at last Penrod was able to breathe again, he found Starring had disappeared, and Violet lying senseless by him still handcuffed to Him.He gasped out an inquiry regarding whether she was insured or not.He blamed the crazy lurch of the train for the escape of the little Glandelinian any desperado.But he recieved no re reply from her.For when those three fighting youngsters landed, their heads that is Penrods an d Violets had rapped together like a pair of cocconuts, dazing him an d cutting him on the forehead and knok knockin g her completly out and now she lay senseless and inert across him her slender left arm st ill manacled to his right arm, and doubled under her body.

"The fiend"he hissed through his clenched teeth."If I ever meet him aloneI'll---"

He on tived to flounder upright buried to his knees in t he mouldy marsh hay.Then he carefully seated himself, drew her left arm carefully from under her, and let her sink back against his shoulder.As soon as he had satif satisfied himself that the fall had not broken her neck, or her wrist, or dislocated her shoud shoulder or done any other inmury injury, he grouped for her pockets in her disordered clothing, replaced her pistol and pocket book which lay on the hay, and flashed out of his own pocket a bunch of keys.He got the right key and unlocked the handcuffs, and detatching it, he took out thevkey and tossed the handuffs into his inside coat pocket.Her revlver, box of cartid cartridges and ammunition he he prudently pocketed in case he would need extra weapon i weapons in case he was attacked.she had in another pocket deep in e her little dr ess a thin packet ofpapers.He took these also professionally and sec reted t hem in ihis waist pocket for safe keeping.The little girl was still unconscious when he carefully lifted her once more and slid from the slippery mound of marsh hay.When he had climbed up the embankment to the railroad traks above he caught sight of the eletric lights of the station only a little way down t he tracks, and what interested him still more saw the rear lamps b burning on a standing train. This must be their own train, st ill held at the station.Their own car too which which, which was the last one.No ot her train had passed.He was certain of that.Now lugging her in his arms his tired arms he hurried over the cinb cinderbed sleepers toward the station.He could see a man in a cap and railroad uniform loitering on the dijdimly lighted platform.A lantern dangled from his han d. There was another man there too seated on a bench.Both were gazing northward along the track toward the panting locomotive.The rear platform of the long han d some sleeping car overlapped the station platof platform platform.Pen rod went around to the river side of the car climbed up with his little senseless burden , opened the rear door, and stepped into the empty car.There were t heir three valises just as they had left them.But the porter had made up t heir both berths of their section, and the baggage stood in the aisle by the curt ained lower berth.Penrod laid Violet on the gray blankets of the birth, and placed two soft pillows under her head, which still wore the saucy little hat with its tiny blue blossems.He though thought to himself "There was only one thing to do to such a dangerous younpster"when he met with him again"and that was to shoot him on sight.It was impossible to capture him alive, and he ought to have known that. As he thought he saw blood and n o n no one was around he grew nervous. He hesitated, and his boyish face ar was vas very red, and his head hands unsteady as with "I can'thhelp it dear God it's got to be done" he drew off her shoes, her garthers and stockings, her hat and her jacket, full of burs and hay.But he by this time had almost himself become afraid of the resourceful and dangerous young Glandelinian boyscout and he decided to get violet out of his way before it was too late.To see whether she was wounded or not he was Heaven knows he had to do it compelled to almost undress her entirely wit h the prudent view of makin making sure that she was not hurt.At last horribly embrassed, he had succeeded but found the blood must have come from Starrin g, which it did the latter having recieved a bloody nose in his fall.He replaced her clothing , then he pulled sheets and blankets over her, went to his seat and plaed placed the valises in the upper birth out of reach.Then he took out her pocket book which he drew from her pocket a tiny crystle flask of hat hartshorn which he had noticed there, and which he now thrust under her pret ty nose.The girls reaction was so prompt and violet or violent that it scared him, for she gave a terrific sneeze, and sat bolt upright, at first regarding him with a wild surmise.

"Penrod"she gasped"What the--- where am I."

"I brought you back back into the car."he said.We had a bad fall but you are not hurt."

"It was however nearly a minute before she fully realized where she was, and what outrageous condition she had missed being in.He was now as he got her to lay down politely pulling up the blankets around her t hroat for she was only partly undressed, and was making soothing and timid inquiries , when suddenly the full pru purport purport of what happened overwhelmed the little girl--and he saw hell flaming in her pretty eyes.

"I hope you didn't mind I had to undress you to see if you were hurt !"he faltered.

"she shook her head as if to say "No ."

"I---I had to do it."he faltered."I saw blood on you and thought he had slashed you."

"It's all right Penrod"she gasped"But but the villain escaped did he."

"Yes.He almost knocked me out too."

Impotent fury bowed her head with its tousled little golden curls and she buried her scarlet face in both hands.

"Our two tickets are safe darlin g."he stammered.

"As long as I live, as lon l long as I live"she wailed."I shall remember that Gerald Starring and despise him."

"Doh't don't cry so."he protested miserably, picking up his valis e and putting it up to the stop berth."Violet darling.It hurts me don't cry so."

"I can't help it he has been too wicked to me and my sisters and dear God" she stormed."Now the world will laugh at me, you, and my sisters, and I shall die of it--murdered by ridicule -- and by t hat little devil."

"Do you suppose he would tell what happened."?

"Yes I do.He is treacherous enough.You don't know him.I do.He is even a Rebel judas."she sobbed."

"In what way.?"

"He betrayed me at Cedari Cedernine with a kiss ."

This retortured him with anger.

"I'll get him "he said.If I don't, or you don't Heaven knows some one will."

"NHe's too wicked to escape."

Out side the dark windows opposite them a lantren began t o swing, a dist ant voice was calling"All aboard."

He ran to a window and threw it up.What he said to the man outside she could not tell but he told the whole story in short words asking the station agent to t ry and have the warning telegraphed everywh ere for his capture...That Starrin g had escaped her and Penrod infuriated her, and she buried her fae in clutchin g fingers and sobbed and sobbed..Penrod lingered a moment by the open window then looking miserably at her, put down the window and locked it.There was to be no sleep for him to night.He was too disturbed, too sad, too bitter and t oo angry to sleep.The train already began to move out.A breakman was just on the rear platform the onductor was there also, fussing with two lant rens.

Standing by the window looking out ,Penrod watched the red bttt glow of the lan tren receding through the night, untilll it became a tiny distant spark and vanished in misty obscurity. Then he changed his seat to one opposite the birth where Violet lay, placed his two revolvers by his side nearest the window pulled the shade down and prepared to be on the watch.He was so excit ed he couldn't s leep if he tried to do his best on that mathr.In the fury of her humiliation the lit tl little Princess in the lower berth had given way to a passion of tears. Pen rod hated worse than an ything to seeher cry, but he let her do it as he knew it was best to let her have her cry to a finis h.Rage at the esc ape of her would be prisoner and the almost fatel inu injury of herself and Penrod by that t hirty foot fall off the railroad bridge c onto the hay rack tran scen ded all grief for the loss of anything.Her head was awfully sore too on the bac k where she had struck Penrods in the fall, and felt lit tle relief in s pite of the fact that Penrod had been ext ravagant with the arnai arn ic e whic h he had put on.Her failure wit h its belief -threat of fur fut urevridic ule whic h would be made by the unc r unc hristian world s hould the c ircumstanc es ever become public, had left her almost hysterical.Yet out side of the sentimental merits, there really existed no fundamental weakness in the little girls c harac ter. There is no weakness in the Vivian Girls nor in Abbicannian and Calverinian and Angelinian children nor grown ups eit her bec ause here they are absolut ely without guile, really righteous beyond any belief.The s torm convuls ing her reac hed its peak, and quickly s ubsided.In the meantime Penrod now was giggling to himself.He wondered what had been the matter with him and Violet. ghe a frail tender little girl, handcuffed to him, for her protec tion, and in tyat that position both trying to capture a Glandelinian desperate boy spy the most dangerous of all spies of both sides combined and more dangerous than any of the christian girls couts or Violet and her sisters put to gether.And yet if the lurch of the car had not thrown i him and her off their guard he would be their prisoner now or either out of the way..However to her idea not thin i thinking of that yet she believed there was something to be done, and s he was striving to think what it might be and how to do it..Probably the first thing to do was to find her clothes.Penrod reached up at her request to the upper birth, and d u justly even helped her dress.As she dressed she was snivaling and sniffing and full of deadly purpos purpose.As soon as she had dressed, Penrod helped her down carefully, and his first impulse was to pull the bell rope and stop the train.But if the train at opped in some unin habited section ofthe trak and country, what would be the use, and who knows n w now which way the little rascally brest bra brat went.Penrod helped her to effac from her person and clothing all trac es of conflict and of tears, andythen knowing how he can make her feel happy again he hugged her close to him untill she was again all smiles.Then they both went off to fin d t he porter who was asleep in one of the remoter seats forward.

The porter exactly did kno q(blow) where they were at the moment of inquiry. Together Violet and Penrod in the lamp light consulted a time table which the porter re p or produc ed.It was pal plain enough t hat Henrietta upp opposite Rosa would be the next stop.She told him she and Penrod would get off there, and bot h return sdvto their section--or rather to the seat behind it.Penrod had taken ihis pistols.Bot h now sat together.

"I wish you will sleep"said Penrod."To make sure no one will try t o grab you I'll hold you in an embrace all the rest of the night.Even if I happened to fall asleep I sleep as lightly as a cat and awake at the slightes t sound. I don't like to hand uff you again now.That was the cause of our predicamen t when we tackled that young desperado.He could have killed us, and meat t o do it and kill himself too."

"I would like to"she said layin g her head agains t his breast but I in our e xcitement did not eatvan y thing and I'm so hungry I feel weak an d shaky. After that I'll try to sleep.But Penrod dear surely youn want t o eat too don't you."?

"I feel so exit ed and worked up I don't know if I can."he an swered.

"Oh but you must try.See I got over it quickly. You should c alm yourself too.Maybe after all it was almost a joke. For I don't believe we w ould be ridiculed after all unless he tells lies.Nobody ever heard of before tackled a person stronger than the two of us while handcuffed and yet would have had him had we not lost our balance when the crazy old car lurc hed on that crossing. "

Combat and emotion------or maybe it was only very young youth and health---had made her almost s t arvingly hungry.And besides she had not really ate no general dinner, and neither had Penrod.Penrod was not hun r hungry, his anger and mortification at whathappened to Violet,(n t t hin i thinking of himself) and the escape of the brat had made him feel no hunger whatever.At her c all the porter fetched them two tumblers and so e some ic e and uncorked the bottle of milk she pulled out of her valise.A bottle big enough to make two quarts.

And therevin the semi darkness of the rattling lurching car, she and Penrod ate ~~hhttttttttttt~~ han sandwitches and drank milk, their minds bus with the peril of the situation, and instant needs of the moment.Lesser and petty emotions hury feelings over Penrods mortification, sentimental grief for him for his forehead had been cut and badly bruised by her own striking his in that fall, all these unselfish personal reactions died out in the deeper anxiety for the cities of Jennie Tory and Big Girl Knool in danger.Because she was convinced that John Gerald Starring would now make his best effort t o return t o the Glandelin ian armies and carry out the terrible orders which had sent him thither at the risk of his neck.But in some way her mother had warned her;

"Your Father wants him dead or alive.But don't try to capture him yours elf. If you can get the papers then have the Gemini catch him if possible.Therefore it appeared the little girl could take her choice.She must not for the sake of her grieving sisters do anything rash.And she wouldn't wor for the world disregard the warning of her mot her.But she and Penrod for their safty must get off here, for if Starring to any of his spies describe the train t here is no telling what she and Penrod might meet with.But how could she suppose and Penrod too that Starring finding himself cornered and taken by surprise was desperate and dare devil en ug enough at even the dangerous risk of losin g his worthless soul to leap into the abyss under that bridge from a swiftly moving train and hurl her and Penrod down after him, while Penrod was handcuffed t o her.He could not have gotten away if luck would have been with her and Penrod by caus ing them to fall on i him.But he fall fell on them. She had never supposed anything like that could happen, probably not even thought of f for an ac t on any stage.And he had done that spectacular thing at the risk of killing himself, her and Penrod too.After all it was rather magnificent.what a climax to a third act.But he had made a fool of her and Penrod.That burned her up. What a brute of a boyscout.What a snake.All After all she would have better have shot the bra brat in ihis seat.Perhaps she still would be able to have a chance.What a beast he had been to make her fall on Penrod and hurt both him and herself and knock herself into an unwilling sleep.But how devilishly clever of him to spring at her and him and grab their arms which held the pistols before they c ould cover him.Confound the lurch of the c ar.That spoiled it all.What a little scoundrel.Oh no he wasn't exac tly that either.He was worse. What a little fiend.It was a cowardly, shameful, das tardly unprincipled thing to do.And poor Penrod had been forced to almost undress her because he was so crazed wit h desperation when e he saw the blood on her clot hes and couldn't find the supposed wound.But what's the difference if she took him for a brother. Surely Heaven knows there no wrong, no immodesty in a thing nec essary.And how Embrassed he was that he had to do it.Only desperation drove him to her for fear of finding Starring might have gave her a fatal wound as he always slashes with a dangerous knife at close quarters.He remembered Gertrudes experienc e with him in the barn andvthat drove him desperate t at the sight of the blood. .Therefore that was n n b n no respect.Brothers and sisters oft en bath at home together in the same tun tub everywhere and what is that..and because Penrod is so good to her and her sisters and ris ked so much she loved him equally as well as she loved her country and parent s and sisters , and there was not the slightest doubt that for him only God came firs t and she and Country next.

"What a brut e of a Starring."she whispered to Penrod."My head feels so sore that I wonder if I can sleep.

There were fresh tears in her eyes, and she sniffled as she lifted her glass of milk to her lips.

"Nevertheless "Penrod said as he placed an arm tightly around her and drew her to him"By His Will God keep him from escaping to the enemy lines . "With this milk drink to his capture so thatb he won't start too much of a battle."

"But "she said"I,m going after him.To morrow I'll wire a secret coe code to my sisters that on account of you dear 'Penrod I'm as safe as in an angels arms "and she laid h r her aching head back against his breast."what do you think.Am I doing right?"

"I'll help you but don't try and get him yourself."he warned.

"I won't"she answered."Mother told me not to.It would be too dangerous ."

"But how are we going t o get them to help us when we don't kno w now where the Gemini is."

"Oh easily."she whispered."They appear when you do not exp ct it.I know t hem by their mysterious signs."

"Penrod looked at his wrist watch.It was exactly ten oclock.It was supposed to be midnight when the train would stop at Henriettatown. On y two hours sleep for violet.

"Better try and get some lsleep while you can"he whisp red."I,ll hold you close to me so no one can grab you away incase t hey try.I won 't sleep.I can'T."

But my head hurts so I can.t"she answered.

"Oh yes you can."he said as he took her up into his arms and pressed her close to him.Just remain like this now and I'll bet you'll be asleep in a jiffy.But don't place your arms around my neck though, for if you fall asleep that way they'll remain so long that they'll be stiff and cramp.I'll keep you tightly close to me and if any one who we don't trust tries t o grabe you from me that person a or party seals their death warren t.My pistols are close beh beside me.The shade is drawn and so we're in the dark.I won't sleep. I promise that but if † do I can awaken at the slightest sound."

And he t old the truth.He held her so tightly and yet so gently that the very nature of th ev the embrace put her to sleep.

Indeed it surely his no use, no use at all for any oje one to con template it.All Abbieannian children, children of all the Abbieannian provinces are brave because of being so good, but it can be and is true that not one of them not even theunknown many million s of child scouts ever dared or would dare to acomplish what t he brave Vivian Girls would do.But I know lots of other children too, who would have liked to be them even no matter what Violet or her sisters suffered, or what dangerous adventures they wr went t hrough. Through.But to give the reader ease of mind, I would say never worry about them. Violet and her sisters a een the en d of the war and the glorious effects of the victoryband Heaven knows how long they lived after that.But in this story where people and children are so good, angel posses sed children for angel possessed they were do not die untill they go to heaven alive.They can be killed of course but do not die naturally.They are in the same condit ion as people in the Oz land and angel possessed children stey children untill they go to heaven and then are the most beautiful children ever imagined.

The n ew news papers that morning were full of Penrods daring r escue of the Princess Violet, but as no one saw the other incident of the attempt to capture Starring that was not recorded.Every hild in Abbieannia was heard to cry--"Penrod Penrod.More luck to you dear Penrod the safty of the Princ ess and the Nation.And Violet and her sisters felt much more relieved.Why should they grieve and fear when that"Dangerous good Rattlesnake"t o the glandelin ians was with her.They were in danger really not her.

Often from many sources children of Abbieannia, and her sister states have flooded emperor vivian with thousands of suggestions regarding how his fair and good little daughters could do their work again against the enemy without without danger, and Violet and her i s sis ters had honor honestly t ried to adopt as many of these suggestions as could be fitted in any of their exploits but the Glandelinians have cleverer spies than thought of and they only succeeded to a measure.Had they not had certain sympathic friends amongs t some of the Glandelinian generals, they would not be alive now. Yet so far after the pas t wonderful s uc cess of violet and her sisters, it is evident that t he dear little Princesses have become a firm fixture amongs t every one who know them.The little ones and grown ups too all love Violet and her sisters, the Glande linians hate them with a posionous hate, and as many of their small frien ds aply stated;"Abbieannia would be a sorrowful nation wit hout them.N ow here is Violet again, as sweet, and as brave as ever, andvthe heroine of the great es t and most daring adventure of her lifetime so far.There were on t his morning many requests at once by all the little children in Abbieannia for the papers when the n ews announced the fiercen ess of Penrod when Violet was attacked in the hotel that dreadful late afternoon.It seems the brave boy made hos t s upon hosts of dearest friends even d from the news of his first heroism at Delights Junction in putting a cowardly Englis hman to shame in spite of t he fac t that he frankly ackn owledged he was a humbug.The children had seen in the papers and heard how he mounted the signal station at C ed -C edernine and by his flag warnings c aused one of the worst Glandelinian onslaughts to be shattered.There is now one thing which everybody who read the papers which they had believed seemed im possible for him to do.Everybody said the word Penrod as fast as they believed Violet said it when she screamed for help when attacked in the hotel and wondered how he could so quickly shoot down fix Glandelinians before she finis hed the word and finished the sixth before she even got to the words"helpme" help me.".No one can imagine how everybody even grown ups an d good Foriegners stared hard at the pict ure of Penrod and Violet too.It certainly was astounding.But what would they say if they had seen in the papers too that the two of them while handcuffed had almost captured the desperado Gerald S tarring.!That was a feat probably unheard of.Penrod had always many friends among the children but now he had countless numbers of them and they even grown ups cut his pucture out an d framed it an d Violets too in one elegant picture frame and put it in their best parlor rooms.Poor Violet and her sis ters at first were shocked when they themselves had recieved the news papers and saw the big black Headlo he adlines;

MARCO PENROD KILLS FIVE GLANDELINIANS WHO ATTACKED PRINCESS VIOLET BEFORE IN HER CRY FOR HELP SHE OULD FINISH HIS NAME" PENROD" an d AND SHOOTS ANOTHER OUT OF THE W(NDOW.

And they opened their eyes when they read the full details which told jus t nearly the same thing as stated when it happened.Before that news they had not slep a wink all night, but had wept silently to themselves and praying that Our Dear Blessed Lord would save their sister from harm if He Willed.Before Jennie or Violet was even gone from them they had secretly asked Penrod to shadow her and protect her and he had intended to do so anyway and did.At first they believed the news paper reports made a great mistake for surely they n ever could have believed Penrod s could shoot like that.But then they did know from their experienc e that he was a better shot than any of them.Gertrude Angeline was the best s hot of all the girl heron heroines in the whole army better than they t oo, and he could hit every target as fast as he fired this pistols and they went like machine guns ..He had told them even the names of the C ow boys who had learned him even the unusual crack shooting, which they had tried in vain to copy from him andwhich he being their teacher couldn't even get into their little heads . There were many things he c ould do.Shooting an apple tossed into the air was n th nothing.He could at a distance of a hundred yards shoot off a very small tin can as fas t as you would put one on a barrel.There was not hing no matter what motion they had that he couldn't hit every t ime in the most difficult of shooting galleries either wit h a rifle or pistol.On the boyscout rifle range a most difficult practice at the start he won first prize. N ot a miss did he make even with a five hundred yard run ge..He could shoot a narrow branc h off a tree when swaying in a strong wind.That was a diffi'lt feat yethhe could do it every time he wanted to fire a s hot..He could lie down place a pistol at the back of his head and by means of a lookin g glass shoot down a can placed on a branch..T[illegible]ere were many more shooting qualifi ies which are too many to describe.And he didn't make slow work eit her.

"I believe my readers he should have been the proudest boy that ever lived. But he was ama g zed as Violet an d as humble and as sacrific in g.He never told of what he could do or did, and when praised would blus h like one having Scarlet fever and run away.Tears of love, greater love for him, and of pride for him and joy s tood in the eyes of Violets sis ters while she rea they read the story in the paper, and then went to their room and cried for sheer joy that their darling sister had such a good boy scout protector.He was t heir guardian angel in disguis e.General Jak Evans read of it too and he said bitterly; "Were to God that boy was my son.".Now the fear of her sisters was a quite deal pas t for it was evident that their dearest sister Violet was not t he one in danger but those who dared to tackle her.This won their love for him beyond an y breakage it won more than love and friendship, for it was a great achievement to have sent him to protect her.Indeed it was a fact t hough St arrin g wanted him Glandelinian agents to go"and g get her"when he escaped , t hey were afraid to do anything because they heard of the "Rattlesnake" s he had for a companion.His fangs were worse than teeth, and they s moked and spit ted. Indeed they would have rather abandon ed their career under t hese conditions than tackle Marc Penrod.everything they would do to fill their lifes ambition for their wic ked caus e, but to try anything on Princ ess Violet with her dan dangerous companion literally engrossed in her nothing doing.They knew no clever spy could dare go near her without the clever andvthoughtful assist ance that came for her.The Mutt and Jeff spies too long before this had had meetings wit h Penrod though he had said nothing, and they tried their best rec ently to keep if possible a good distanc e of five hundred miles from him.

CHAPTER FIFTEEN.

LITTLE MICHARLENA IS A BAIT FOR A FISH.

WHERE IT IS IMPOSSIBLE FOR VHILET AND HER SISTERS TO ESCAPE.

THE ARIVAN OF JACK EVANS. THEY MEET THE GLANDELINIAN GARGOYLIAN KURUS.

VIOL T VIOLET AND HER SISTERS ARE REUNITED. THE TRIAL OF THE MURDERER.

UNknown to any one little Mic hellena and her brother had been on the same train but on another conch.Her paren ts had wished to pay a visit to their brot her and therefore made the trip to Henrietta. However because of ~~something~~ something unknown the train was very l ate in ariving at Henriet ta.As believed by Penrod it should have arived at Henrietta at a lit tle before midnight, but it was already six oclo c k in the morning, and the gray November dawn was breaking in the east when the long train of eleven conches slowly rumbled up to the big magniv magnificent station.As it came to a stop the conductor shook Penrod but found he had not slept.

"We are at Henrietta now."he said."Do you wish to ride further or do you wantbto wake her?"

"I must get off for her sake."he said.And he aroused her having held her thus in his arms all night."No one had bothered him or her though at kid midnight when the train had stopped he had seen a man get off the train which filled him with at first an unaccountable horror and then he recognized him as the man who had killed the two children in his arms that fatal morning of the raid.(whih was the cause of the raid.)bIt had been too late to get the man he had disappeared in the darkness.While he had held the dead children in his arms he had begged them to prove they were in a heaven (y ot lack of fait h) by asking God if it is His will to let him catch their murderers.

After having awakened Violet with some difficulty, he at once arose from his seat placed his pistols in his holster, and bot h walked to the door of the car.The condoctur helped them both off the car and handed Penrod the t wo valises.Violet being a s trong girl nevertheless for her size an d age volunteered to carry the other one which was lighter so Penrod could use his free arm in case she was attacked..Finally they got a kind gentleman t o carry the valise.The engineer started his train again so that it puffed an d groaned and moved slowly away up the t rack.The reason s he was so late was that all all through the night there were times when the solid earth shook and trembled under him, an believing there was an earthquake the engineer was scr afraid that at any moment the rails might spread apart and an accident happened happen to his few pass engers.So he moved his train slowly and with caution.The cause the tremors was that some where probably at Jennie Tory both sides during the night had kept up an unusally severe artillery fire, and many great explos ions occ ured though as yet there was no infantry battles.

Penrod and the brave little girl stood still t o watch untill the t rain had di disappeared around a curve, then they turned to see where they was for Violet believed she recognized the streets of the fair city.The st ation so early in the morning was bare of people except a lone man who was wait ing for a train.It was he who volunteered so kindly and politely to carry the valises.. tipping his hat and saying;

"My boy I recognize you from the papers.It's better for the sake of your little sister that your both hands are free.Let me carry t hem for you."

There was hardly any people on the streets at so early an hour, though here and there were seen the passing of Military p olice for the town for its pr prot ec tion was under martial law.They went a considerable distance down t he street and soon found momentary loding in a hot el.The valises were taken care off by the clerk.With the hope of finding Starring Here if possible they went out to scour the st reet.Violet felt absolutely protected now wit h Starring close beside her.

They had gone a short distance and Penrod was making s ome joking remark from to Violet and had her laughing right good heart ily when suddenly they bec ame sober.

"You leave me alone.Help help military police"came a little girls voice from the distant turned corner of a street.

It was so close that Penrod and Violet were there on t he instant. Bot h the the girl and Micha Penrod gasped when they recognized e ach other and her face blushed.

"Throw up your hands or I'll riddle you"he said to the man who had been attacking her.As the man did s o and turned around the same horror of feeling came over the boy.It was the same man who had killed the little girl in his arm and mortally wounded a little boy in the same position while he had rescued them from a party of persuading Glandelinians.The fury of hell flashed in this tearful eyes and within this breast but he t still keepin g him c overed bowed with a mock politeness sayin ; saying;

"Good morning my dear sir.Glad to meet you this fine morning.I know if you don't want to commit suicide you'll come gladly with me.I have prayed most desperately for this moment.You are the skunk y who killed two children in my arms and I want to settle accounts with you."

The man would have made a break if he had the chance for the horror"of being burned at the stake" feel flashed before him, but the little girls cry had brought three military police on the quick run, and he was in t heir hands before he could make a move. The police gasped as they recognized the boy.

"Master Penrod the hero."they gasped."What is the matter.Did this man attac k your little Princess sister."

"No.He attacked t his little girl."pointing."But that is not what I wish him detained for.I hold you responsible responsible sirs if you let him escape.I have great accounts to settle with him.I want him taken to emperor vivians army at Jennie Tory as fast as he can get there.But let me accompany you to the Phot ographer if we can find one.I want his pictu re so in case he gives a wrong name."Have two and send the other to the christian Provost Mr Marshall."

"What did he do?" asked the man who held the man while the other was handcuffing hi him.

"Penrod began to blubber and hung his head to hide his tears as he said half sobbin g;

"I rescued two little child slaves and he shot them to deat h in my arms."

"He started to c ry but both Mel Michaellena and violet put their arms around him and Violet said;

"Don't take so Penrod.Brace up.I know how it hurts but I'm sure t hey won't let the villain escape."

"I'll say we won't said the man who was a lieutenant.And neither will he escape enroute to the christian lines.We'll take him ourselves ."

They went to where the sign was out"PHOTOGRAPHS TAK N WHILE TO YOU WAIT."

They found the place open and the man just busy taking t he phot ograph of a woman and child. The man looked surprised out of his wits when he saw who came in and he said;

"Oh I see my dear dear m boy.You wish to have a pict ure taken of your dear littl e girl companions and of your selves.St ep right t his way."

"I wouldn't mind that "said Penrod."If you so desire all right."But pushing the man roughly before him.This is the chief individual I want a phot photograph of.And while you police remove his hat and hold his arms so he won't sheild his face.I want two photographs of his.I don't trust names."

The photographer looked sharply at the man.

"A prisoner eh.I sure don't like his face.But if it is nec essary for him to be taken I'll do ir right gladly and not charge anything eit her."

But they insisted that they didn't want t o have it done for nothing."

After it was all completed and the snarling but cowardly man was led away Penrod said to the little girl;

"How did you come to be out in the street alone at t his hour of morning?"

"Mama sent me out to the store.We didn't even thin k anybody would be wicked here. papa and mama are visiting my aunt."

"Violet looked at Penrod in surprise and to the little girl.

"Penrod"she whispered"Ask her if she wants to become a girlscout .She can be in our Vivianite command.she's a hero.She caused you to capture that scoundrel."

"I would be glad to if papa and mamma consents"said the little girl her eyes opened wide at the honor."But I'll have to learn how to shoot .But "she added I know how to use a knife."

"Why didn't you defend yourself then.?"he asked.

"I t didn't think of any danger.I didn't carry one."

"Shall I accompany you and ask your parents permission.?"

The little girls face was happy with smiles as she said;

"Do so.Papa and mamma would give anything to see you.So would my darling brother and younger sister.I found out now I was not mistaken in what I said of you.And you came to my defense.You are good."

She beckoned to them, taking Violet by the hand. They didn't have very far to go and for a moment both Penrod and violet almost felt shy in going int o the presences of these good people.

"Papa Mamma"cried the little girl bursting into her rooms fire t ."Think of whom I brought.Princess Violet, and Penrod."

Her mother and father rose suddenly from the t able, and her brother looked bashful and shy all of her sudden but the smaller sister cried with glee;

"Oh the dear brave boy and the good little Princess.Oh pleas e bring t hem in."

She then went out into the hall and led both right into the room. The father and mot her called to the Uncle who was in the next room and he came out .

"Here is the boy we saw in the papers"said the man."Glad to see you my dear Princess and your brother.We had hoped for t his meeting as we knew what you my boy had told to my lit tle girl Michaelena."

And he em embraced them both, the brother though s hy took her in his arms too and the smaller girl was afraid to let both go once she had them in e her hands .

"Boy you sure look a protector"said the Mother as she was t hrough recieving them.Come and enjoy breakf ast with us.You're welcome.It is great t o have met good children like you."

Penrod and Violet not wishing to impon ing impose on these good people wanted to declline having some excuse that they would rather buy their meal and so forth but both parent s of the little girl would take n o refusal what ever but deliberately put them bot h in chairs by the table and said;

"Eat hearty.You will need your money.I don't need t o be inquisitive and wonder whether you will s ucceed in your mission because I know you did.It's too bad t hough my boy St arring was not captured.Someone said they saw him run from the train and got away but didn't know what happened."

Violet and Penrod looked at each other and she whispered;

"Go and tell them.It's all right."

The s tory was soon told and every one gaped wit h wide opened mouthed aston ish ment.

"If it wasn't for the lure h of that confounded conch we would have had him."said Penrod finis hing the details.But "But I was t hrown off my balance and against Violet, and that gave him a chance s to spring and had us by the left and right arm.Had we not been handcuffed together we could have drawn our pistols."

"My heavens"said the mot her in not o ironstonishment. "Two children handcuffed together trying to capture that desperado boy spy.I never for the world ever seen that acted on a s tage.I don't see how you two had the nerve to do it."

"In our excitemen t to catch him"put in Violet, we for the moment forgot we were handcuffed together."

"And you expect he may have fled here."!

"Yes.We are determined to either catch him or run him off so far from a Glande lin ian army that he cannot do any harm anywhere."

"What princ ipal city is in danger because of him wit h those orders you want t o destroy.?"

"Big Girl Knool. If Violet or I can keep him from reaching any of the foe armies in that nand this te rritory then that city is safe."

"Continue to pray for success and you'll have it. "said the mother."

They all en joyed a very hearty meal, but indeedc Violet s unat ural beauty had suc h an effect upon the father and his children that they surely felt very shy and embrassed in deed.They did not show it of course but t hey felt it n everthelass. After they had breakfasted, and Penrod after thanking them most heart ily had desired that he and Violet must be on their way, the head of t he family said;

"I hope to meet you again s ometime in the C hristian army.I forgot t o say that I am a general mys elf but have been home bec ause recent ly I have been slightly wounded in one of the battles.Therefore I was allowed a t three weeks furlough.I will do all in my power to help you two brave children to capture or run that s py out of t he Big Girl Knool territory unt ill emperor Vivian strikes Manley firs t . If there is an ything you two ever des ire you may always have it for the asking."

At this little Michaellena took advantage of one opportunit y and said wistfully and pleadin l pleadingly;

"Papa I would like to be a girlscout."

"And I a boyscout too"said her brot her."They're safe.The enemy even avoid t hem.You see that in the papa.Bet ter let us be one.The Govern ent Government may draft lots of little girls and boys into the t roop if it is necessary.They're a great help to the army."

For a moment there was silence.The parents didn't object but t hen t heir two older children did not kn w know the ways of a girl or boy scout an d would need a lot of training first.Neither one could han dle even a small pist ol though Michaelena could surely handle a sharp n knife..As far as danger was concerned t heir father knew from his own sight of it that it lay not for the child scouts but for the enemy who monkeyed with t hem.Fin lly the Mother herself said;

"Hubby dear if your three children and mine here were scouts it would do us a lot of good.My youngest hild here Mable is old enough t o be one too.They could even now help this good brave boy and his brave sister some way even now.What do you say.We can make the sacrifice, and anyway they'll always be safe.."
Their father then fore knowing how much he was in the army, and how much his wife acted as a nurse for soldier wounded and had often been compelled to leave the children in the care of some one else while away thought after all it was a God send that this was proposed and readily consented.
There could not be avoided however a tearful parting for it was a sacrifice to go and be let go but then nevertheless it was not then a sorrowful parting for it was evident that their children would have good times in the army and plenty of fun at the expense of the enemy and be as safe as all the others were.It was safer far safer in the army than in home.

S omethin after they had been outside Violet said to the three children; You stay here for a minute or so.I have something which I would like to speak t o Penrod alone to get his confidence and advice.It is something serious and if I let you hea hear you may be worried.We'll keep you in easy sight."
She He and Penrod wad walked off about fifty paces and then she said;
"Penrod dear I and my sisters now are in a pickle which none of us can really escape it is impossible."
"Why what happened now?"
"I and my sisters"she continued cannot get out of it no mat ter what happens.We have nothing to say.It is the law of the Government books made down by our Anchestors and Grand parents.If any of our Royalty witnesses the arrest of a a man and he's a murderers of a child then they have to condemn him.I will have to pass the sentence."And she looked very sober indeed.
"What's the dif'rence"!asked Penrod."He's not a decent soldier.A murderer of children.You are too soft I'm afraid Violet."
"No-no-no-no-- it's not that.But such a horrid responsibility.He'll burn at the stake.And oh God I kn w know from what I heard of it and your raid that you have so many honest witnesses.But it'll be oh such a sin if I back out .I can't do it either."
"Oh come come violet dear don't worry about that."said Penrod takin g her in his arm."I know what we'll do.We'll have special prayers and a Mass said to ask our D ar Lord if he He'll take off that responsibility and if it is his Will I know you'll find a way out.But talk it over with your Fathefr and Mother when we get back.Say nothing to your sisters unt ill you have spoken t o your dear parents.If they can s&e a way through the law that exempts you then our prayer is answered.If God does not will it it shows he's awfully angry at these rascals and wishes you and all of us to make an example of these child butchers before the world.You know Violet dear, you found it out yourself, that I wit nessed more horrible massacres of children than even your sisters or you ever had been in, and nearly been killed in.We know too Our Blessed Lords awful warning to thos e who harm little children in any way.If we let these dreadful events go by un a venged then we're as responsible as the rascals who murder the hildren.I never in my life ever heard of two children murdered in cold blood in a persons arms, and yet that happened to me.I took revenge by making that dreadful destructive ri raid I did in my hope of capturing the man who did the shooting. I didn't tell you but I nearly had him in the car last night.But he got off before I could make a move and was lost to me in the darkness ..so surely you should not letvalitle thing upset you that way."
"Well I guess I shouldn't.I'll see what my dear father and mot her can do about it .God's will be done."
For a moment Penrod had a slight mishievious smile on his face.
"I'll bet bet to escape the responsibility you're having even the slightest wish that the rascal might escape."
At this her eyes shown fire again.
"Not on your life "she said vehemently and with a stamp of her pretty foot."If he des erves it and I cannot escape t he res ponsibility I'll make him wish he had not caus e it to happen to me.Hope he'll escape.Indeed."
"Well then let's not worry over it"said Penrod."Let 's go back to the others and see if we can start on our journey elsewhere.We must try and frustrate that Starring and we have not much t ime to waz waste."
They looked around to see what they could find, and after a while Violet discovered about five horses, and a boy sitting by a tree.The horses were each tied to a postand standing mot ionless.The boy was asleep by the tree.
"Can you Michaelena and your brother and sister ride horses!"asked Violet.
"Yes"said Mable .We ought to know as papa taught us long ago."
"Let's go over and see if we can get the loan of the hors es"said Penrod.

They w ent over to the boy t[illegible] and violet poked him with her finger in the side.Presently he woke up, rose to a sitting position, and rubbed his eyes briskly. He rose respectfully and instantly on seeing the beautiful little girl Violet, and Penrod and the three other children.He recognized the two by having seen their pictures in the paper.He was embrassed and al most scared.
"Hallo---er ---ah---hello"he gasped looking with bewilderment at her and Penrod."Ara---ara---ara- --you er-- Violet---viv---viv---Vivian."
"yes"she answered looking gravely at his tousled hair and blinking gray eyes.
"But what are you scared of!We won't hurt you."
"e--ah I--I know---it"he stammered"but--but--"
"Come on one on boy wake up"said Penrod smiling in spiteof himself."she's not a ghost nor a spirit but on y on y only little Princess Violet and I am her new brother."
"Er--er--of course."he answered."Train--in!"
"We couldn't be here if it wasn't she said.
The bewildered boy then had to laugh at that, a and his laugh was merry and frank even though he was so ashamed.But Violets extreme beauty and lovelinesa embrassed him, and the presence of Penrod worked upon him too.
"There are five of us here"said Penrod pointing to the rest .I see you have six horses.Are they your's or do they belong to anybody."
"I believe--believe they're my fathers ."said the boy."We loan them to persons who believe they're ---goin g to --be cavarly- soldiers and wish to learn to ride."
"We would like to loan five horses for a special reason"said Penrod."Can we do so.Of course we may not return for a long time and if w anything happens to the horses we'll make up for them/.But it is necessary."
"I kn w kn w the necessity."said the boy now overcoming his timidity."You are after a boy spy.I hope you get him.Can I accompany you on the sixth.My father won't mind."
"Are you sure."
"Then I'll go and ask him.He lives in that house just across the st reet ."
The boy went and soon returned.
"I have the permission."
He tied Violets valise on the back of t he saddle of the horse Penrod intended to ride.
"Arevyour companion s two girl and boyscuts ?"
"They wish to be and are going to get trained right now."
The boy nodded.
"I am one too."he said."I'm on furlough.But I'll can cel that and give you lots of help.I'll know where I can notify my commander and he won't worryt hen if I'm not back when my furlough is up."
"All right little Princess"said Penrod.Hop up."
She got onto the horse, and Penrod and the three others followed.Then the ot her boy got up to his saddle, picked up the reins, s hook them and said
""Gid-dap to his horse.The horse to Violets surprise did not stir.Violet Nou thought he just wriggled one of his drooping ears, but that was all.
"Gid-dap"called the boy again.The horse still remained without moving.
"Perhaps sa"said Violet hardly able to supress a smile "If youuntied him,he would obey."
The boy laughed cheerfully, and jumped down.
"I must be half asleep yet."he said untying the horse."But Hen knows his business a l all right--- don't you Hen!"patting the lo ng nose of the animal.
Then he mounted his horse again, and took the reins, and their horses backed away from the trees turned quickly around, and the six began to troy down the sandy road, which was just visible in the dim light of the morning.
"I expected you and Penrod"said the boy"for a Gemini member told me to be here for you.I thought that train would never come and was afraid it had been cap tured or delayed by the enemy..I've waited at this spot for over five hours.That is why you found me asleep."
"We had a lot of something like earthquakes."said Violet.. "did you not feel the ska shaking of the ground.?"
"Yes,but we're used to such things in these neighborhoods."he replied."They are not earthquakes and don't scare us much. They were concussions a caud caused by severe cannonading.Didn't you hear the noise."
"I was asleep on the train"said violet looking with a happy smile at Penrod. "He cuddled me in his arms as if I were his littlest girl and lit erally hugged me into a sound sleep."
"The conductor said it was the worst quake he never knew, but believed too it was a concussion."said Penrod blushing but paying no attention to her words.
"Did he"said the lad."Then the worst of it must have happened,while I was asleep" he said thoughtfully.

"What part of the christian lines did you come from?"asked Violet anxiously."
"I came from the Lagoriana."
"How are my sisters?"she inquired almost becoming sad, and after a pause during which the horses continued to trot with long regular strides.
"From what I heard"and he looked mischieviously at Penrod"Wait untill they see your dear brother again.I don't need to say much.The newspapers betrayed it all.They feel good now and believe that you surely are safe with him.They and your mother are surprised too."
Is our Uncle there too?"she asked.
"Yes.Emperor vivian your father also."said the boy in an amused tone.I worked for him as an aide decamp, and it was he who sent me to take you back to the christian lines saying that your mot her said your work is done since you got the papers.The papers had the orders too so it wouldn't do Starring any good to go to big girl Kn ol Knool.'"
"Did those two Gemini heads reached the christian lines so soon!"she gasped.
"I'll say they did.They took a fast train as soon as they got those papers from you.They in the hands of Emperor vivian."
"Isn't that a surprising thing to happen!"she asked almost doubtfully almost believing the boy was only trying to fool her to mke her feel relieved.
"Why it might be a great deal for any one else to do, but not for them.Those Gemini heads are splendid workers.They work more than sleep."he added with a laugh.If you don't believe me you'll find it out when you get back to the lines. through you and Penrod Starring met a disgracin g failure."
"It was all Penrods doing"she said smiling at him."Penrod blushed again and said;
"You do the work Violet dear, and I get all the prisse.That doesn't seem right."
But she didn't pay any attent ion and said;
"What's your name my lad, thinking she liked the boys manner and the cheery tone of his voice.
"Not a very pretty one."he answered, as if a little ashamed."My whole name is Francis John S Zebediah, but my comrades down in the camp only call me Zeb saying the word is too hard to pron - pronounce.You have been at little Girl Knool, have you n t not!"
"Yes and got safely back with Penrods help."she answered looking out of the corner of her mischievious eye to see how the words would take effect..
"How long will it take to get back to the christian lines?"Penrod asked.
"On y a day.It's too bad you couldn't stay on the train but you know the train wouldn't go that direction because of the Glandelinian armies ."
"How long will you h e with us the same boy finally asked after some silence.
"On y Only a day.when we get back our friends and my dearest sisters and Penrod dear must start with our army to Big Girl Knool if not hing happens to break out at Jennie Tory.I've been away from my sisters a longer time than I hoped for, and I'm so anxious to relieve their worry by getting back again."
The boy flicked his own horse with his riding whip gently, and looked thoughtful.Then Penrod started to say something to hislittle beautiful companion, but before he could speak the horses were almost swept off their feet by a sudden sudden convulsion of the ground, and the earth and everything else you could think of the earth contains on its surfae and within seemed to rise up before them t o an enormous height almost suddenly, and Hev Heavens there came the loudest roar they had ever heard in their life time.Next instant as the roar sup subsided and the sharp crash stopped its wild echoes, Violet at her side saw the ground open in a wide crack and remain open and they were pelted by small objects of every description, dirt, gravel small stones, grass, mud and Heaven kn ws knows not what.
"Goodness"she cied as the rest looked scared, and she grasped the reins of her horse tightly aw as she could for fear the horse would bolt."What in the world was that!"
"That was an aeful big shell explosion "replied Zeb, with a white face."It almost got us that time V Princess."
"I believe Starring is the cause of this"said Penrod."I'd give anything to get my hands on him."
The horses of every one had stopped.short, and stood firm as a rock.Every one shook the reins and urged the animals to go, but the horses were stubborn from fear.Then Zeb cracked his riding whip at each one and touched the animals flanks lightly with it, and after a low moan of protest the horses stepp ed slowly along the road.

Neither the boy nor any of the girls spoke again for some minutes. There wasxa breath of danger in the air, and every few minutes the earth qould shake very viclently as great explosions n w dangerously close now far off rent t he earth into flyin g fragment s.From the direct ion of the sound of guns it was perfec tly evident that the shells were meant for them but fort unately no one was hit.The ears of every one of the hors es were standing erect upon their heads and every muscle of t heir big bodies was t ens e as t hey slowly trotted tward the direction of the christ ian lines.They were not going very fast eit her, but on t heir flan s flanks specks of foam began t o appear and at times one or ot her of the hors es would tremble like a leaf."Penrod nor the'ot her boy was n ot afraid for thems elves, but t heir hearts were in t heir mout hs for the safty of the lit tle girls ox especially Violet . The s ky from s moke had grown darker again, and even t he lit tle wind t here was made queer sobbing sounds as it s wept through t he nr nearer t t rees.Suddenly t here was a rending tearin g s ound just as s oon as t hey had reached an old abandoned quarr and an erupt ion appeared about a hundred yards ahead of t hem t he earth sim u, su s imult aneously s plit ting in to an other great c rack close to t hem. The con c ussion of the terrific explosion s had t hrown t he hors es literally off t heir feet wit h wit h wild nineighs of terror, t he animals wit h t heir riders fell bodily int o t he pit , hurlin g t heir se upon t s after t hem.Violet had grabbed fas t hold of her hors es rein s and Penrod don e the same.T he sudden rus h into spac e con fused t hem so that t hey could not t hink what in t he world was happening.A fog of some kind en engulfed t hem on every side, and in breathless s terror and s ice s ilenc e t hey waited for the dreadful deep fall t o end and crus h them again st jagged roc ks below in t he chasm of t he deep st one quarry.The horrible sensation of fallin g, t he t hicknes s of the smellim g fog, proved more than poor Violet c ould endure, and in a few moments t he brave little girl lost con sciousness.The boys did not fain t, and neit her did the ot her two girls nor her brother, but t hey were never t heless badly frightened and had let go of his hors e, expect ing every moment would be the en d of them all.
"CA sudden s hock of cold water made Violet recover her s en ses, and every one hors es and all fell into deep water wit h t remen dous splas hes .They sank s ome distanc e down int o the muddy waidr water and t hen rose to t he surfac e.Though cold the water was not so bad as to be disagreeable or numbing.At first t heir wors t t error was of drowning in all t his muck and water in t his deep dark pit or the nat ural fear that sudden deat h in an un t imel moment was about to overt ake them.They prayed hard as they rose gas pin g t o t he surface again .X C ras h after c rash of more explosions echoed far above the pit, and stones gravel and fragment s of clay and other debris rattled around t hem on every side and fell into t he wat er with splashes like great hailst on es.These t hey do could not s ee became of t he dense vapor t hat enh en s hrouded t hem, but they could feel some of them as t hey t oo were pelt ed, and one of the hors es floundering in the wat er screamed almost like a human bein g when a st st one overt ook him and struck his bony body.They did not reallly hurt the poor hors e, because t hey were onlylight objects and everything frombt he shock was fallin g together, s o t hat the terrified animal was ac t ually more frightened t han t hey were inured inured.How long t his stat e of things cont inued poor Violet could not even guess , s he was so greatly bewildered.But bye and bye as they found they could reach firmer ground below there and t heir horses too were safe, as she stared ahead int o what at first appeared as being in a black chasm wit h a beat ing heart , she began to dimly see the form of the hors es and her companions one of the hors es head high up into the air his ears erect and his long legs sp sprawling in every direct ion as he strove to get out of the muddy water.Also turning her head, she found that she could see the three boys close to her who had untill now remained as still and as silent as she herself.They found however they had not fallen into a deep chasm out of which no one could escape.They could get out but not the horses.They were in a deep stone quarry and because it was yet so early in t he morning and no sun s hone therefore it was dark below.To climb up and out would take no mat ter of t ime.But the hors es would have t o be hoisted up.And how.! Violet s ighed, and commenced t o breat he easier.Little Michaellena began t o laugh for now it seemed to her sort of comical.The shell explosion had t hrew t hem into t he pit by its concussion as t hey had ridden pas t t he quary.Violet began to realize and so did the ot hers t hat deat h was not in st ore for them after all, but t hat they had merely st arted upon anot her unusual adventure which promis hed to be just as queer and almost mirac,lous and unusual as were those she and even her s isters had so often before encountered.
Wit h this thought in mind the brave Prin c ess took heart, and secured a firm hold upon a rock above the now shallow water and drew herself up t o a dry s pot.Though the water had been cold, it was warm in t he big pit.

It would take too long to relate how they really got out , even wit h t he help of men who drew the hors es up for t hem but it was accomplished in a very short time at that.T he shellin g had stopped because some dist ant christ ian battery had had some"fun"wit h t he one of the enemy.As they got out of t he pit first , and scores of men were drawing up the horses by means of ot hers going down and roping t hem, Violet t hought the effect of her fall must have made her see thin gs.In t he cas t it looked as if t here were s ix great glowin g balls suspended in t he air.The c ent ral and larges t ones were white, and reminded her of the sun s hining below the dense smoky s ky.Around it were arranged like t he five points of a star, t he ot her t went y brilol brilliant balls being all t he colors of t he art istic paint s except black and brown.

These splendid groups of colored round lights were not stat ionary t o her eyes however but floated and sent rays dart in g in every direct ion, and the rains begun t o t ake on all t he delicate t intin gs of the rainbow growing more and more dist inc t ov every moment as they came nearer untill t o her surprised and st artled eyes all the spaccowas brilliantly illuminat ed. She was fright ened at first, t hinking maybe she had gone insane from her shock but it was not so t hose lights were act ually t here.Violet however was t oo dazed to say much(t hey were star shell lights) but she watched Penrods ears turned to a sho sort of violet , and t he ot her side of his face to rus e, and wondered that the soldiers workin g to draw up the horses should almost t urn yellow and t he others and t he hors estriped with blue and orange like t he stipes of a zebra.Then she looked at Zeb, whode face was blue, and whose hair was for a second pink, and gave a little laugh, that sounded a bit nervous.

"Is it not strange and funny?"she said.

The boyscout was startled, and his eys were big.Violet had a green streak t hrough the cent er of her pretty little face where t he blue and yellow lights came together, and her appearanc e seemed to add to his fright.

"I----I----I----don't --s-s-s-see anyt hing funny bout it ."he stammered"what --would---would h-h-h-hhave happened--if--if--roks --and st ones should be in--- t he bottom--instead of ---d-d-d-deco I---I-I mean deep --w-w-wwater."

The brave children however had no difficult y in getting into the saddles though they were soaked through the skin.

"Well that 's better"said Zeb."The c hristian lines are not far away."

"Violet and Penrod looked at one another in won der.

"Can you see the christian lines so easily from here?"she asked.

"I looked with my field glass es "replied the boy.

"Those are the bat bes t words I ever heard"Called out Mic haellen a, who had overheard them,"And I c an't explain why we could have reac Hed t he christian positions so soon .But this is a nice mess the enemy shells have got us in to, isn't it?We are all covered with mud and slime."

"As for that "We are all in the same sc rape ours elves."Answered Violet cheer fully."But never mind somet hing will happen pretty soon."

"Of c ourse"growled Penrod"If the enemy st arts it they'll be sorry it happened."

Zeb gave a shiver for to meet wit h Glandelinians out here in the open would not be very pleasant . All this was so t errible and unreal, that he could not underst and it at all, and so had good reason t o be afraid.To meet Glandelinian soldiery personal was not hing to him, but oh those shells. Swift ly the flaming colored"suns drew n earer and passed close overhead.The lilight then was so bright that it dazzled t heir eyes, and they covered their faces with t heir hand to esc ape being blinded . There was some heat radiat in g from t he c olored"Suns" but Zeg Zeb had wit h him on one of t he horses a very large umberalla and t his he let some of t h e girls crowd under so that it would shut out many of t he ; pierc ing rays so that t he lit tle girls could open t heir eyes again.

"We Have got to get to the chris tian c amp sometime."remarked Zeb with a deep s igh."We can't st ay out here t oo lon g you know.St arrin g might c ause a big c avarly squadron of the enemy to overt ake us."

"Of course there would be danger of that"said Penrod."I feel as if we were somewhere in the middle of the earth, and the c hanc es are it'll be reachin g the hot ter depths before lon g if we wish t o t ake the chanc es.Bit it s a big adventure after all isn't it."!

"Awful big, and awful sc ary."answered Zeb."We c an 't reach the christ ian army fast enough."

"We are coming to something now."announc ed brave lit tle Michaellena.

At t his they gazed in the direct ion she indicated.Yes far in the distance there was a long row of t riple bright colored t ents and yet not so very far away either.But their horses were going forth very slowly--al s o s lowly that t hey were no longer going at a trot--and t he brave children had ample t ime to t ake heart and look about them.In the dist an ce was a landscape wit h wit h hills and plains, lakes and rivers, but just now all t he scene was splendidly colored by the variegat ed lights from the nizt een great "St ar Shells" as they reallly were.Here and there were groups of tents, that were of t he christian army variet y, and in front of them float ed a beaut iful Abbieannian flag.Further off the t ent s appeared like a sea. The picket s recognizin g Penrod and violet let the little column pass at t he password and count ers ign given.

"I'm sure we are in no danger now."said Violet in a sober voice."I am so glad we are safe in t he christian lines again. And the country we are in s eems quit e pretty.But it surely is not the army we left ."

"We'll never find t hat army again I'm afraid."declared Zeb with a groan.

"Oh I'm not so sure of that"replied Penrod."But don't let us worry about such t hings Zeb, we are wit hin a christ ian army anyhow, and has idea it sure looks like a monstrous one.But it is not n ear Jennie Tory so Inwonder whose army it is."

The rest became silent havin g no reply to so sensible a speech, and all were fully occupied in st arin g at t he st range scenes spread out below t hem an d before them.T hey seemed to be riding int o t he outs kirts of a mighty en campment which had many tall signal stations.The s ignal stations had sharp pointed spires, and thes e spires were like great spear points.When they were finally in the t hicker settled part of the encampment the poor children trembled with so much excitement and awe that when they dismounted from t heir horses they could hardly stand, but Penrod was the first to leap from his horse.At t his moment a small beaut iful little child scout appeared from t he opening of a t ent.

"Oh "said violet"t hat's little Jannie Lillian whom we made a mascot and whom Gertrude had rescued."

"First time I ever saw her."said bot h Penrod and Zeb."Isn't s he cut e wit h that long bob hair of hers ."

They c alled t o Jannie who looked tward t hem wit h a st art .Then t he little girl ran forward.

"Why if it isn 't Prin c. ess Violet "she said as she took t he Princ ess 's shand in hers.Then she looked in bowilderment at Penrod and her face blushed.she recognized him by t he paper.t hough she never had seen him before."

"Whose army is t his Janie dear"Asked Violet, as the happy lit tle newly made child scout and once a littleslave looked up int o Violet 's face."

"This is General Jack Evans army."

"Jack *The*Evans here?"

"Sure.We're advan cing for Jennie Tory."

Bu put for some reason or ot her she couldn't keep her eyes off from Penrod even as bea t iful as violet was .Then she poin ted;t o him;

""Oh"she said"That's the hero Penrod"and suddenly she t hrew her little arms around his nec k and cried;

"Penrod dear, wit h you t he dear lit tle Princ esses are surely safe.God Bless you."

"I didn't do much"gasped Penrod surprised at t his and blushin g t oo."Violet was in dan ger and I only shot six Glandelin ian s oldiers .It 's t his queer gun that helped me along."

"Where's your dear sisters Violet ?"asked Jannie again lookin g up in violet s face."I'm most anxious to see them."

"They're at general vivianannas army.Where can we go n ow?"

"I don't know"answered Janie looking around her curiously."All t he s oldiers of t his part of the c amp are out on drill.I'll lead you the way."

The t ent s of t he encampment were made a little different from the on es of ot her christian c a p camps.The rainbow t int s from t he c olored lights n w slowly fading out fell upon t he en campment softly and gave t o t he t ri colored t ents many shifting hues , which were very pretty to see.But not a sound had broken t he st illness since they had arived, exc ept that of t heir own voices.This part of the encampment was absolutely desert ed.Aft er they had t raveled a lon g dist ance down the wide company st reet a s oldier appeared from a tent next t o t he one t hey were passing and s t epped int o plain view.He was a very large man, was well formed and had a handsome face calm and serene as the face of a fine port rait.His uniform fitt ied his form snugly and was gorgeously colored in brilliant shades of beaut iful dark lavander, which varied as t he strange beams from t he star shell light s touched them but was not wholly influenced by t he dying rays.The man had taken few steps across the Company Street , before t he n ot ic ed t he presence of t he children; but t hen he stopped abrupt ly.There was an expression of surprise and ast on ishment upon his t ranquil face, and after his eyes had rest ed upon t he horses for a moment he walked rapidly forward.It was some man whom violet had onc e known but she couldn't make him out now.The lit tle girl was greatly astonished.

"How strange little Fairy Princ ess that we should meet again."he exclaimed as he st opped her horse."don't you remember me?"

"How strange"she exclaimed.drawin g a lon g breath."I do remember you but I cannot rec all your name."

"Yes but its lots of fun to keep guessin g if it is s t range. "Remarked the man.

"But who are you."she asked almost in dist ress."I t hought you c ertainly were killed t he day you came to my res cue mon ths ago."

"I must have nine lives"said t he man"But if I did have t hem I don't believe I could lose one of t hem even by fighting hand to hand wit h your enemies-- bec ause I really couldn't man age t o be killed If I wanted t o.They say t hat's a c ertain x condit ion that happens to persons who befriends you and your sisters and that is luck never fails t o be good."

"Did you really succeed in esc apin g the enemy t hen?""asked t he Princ ess .

"Of course Princ ess, can 't you see me standing before you."

"It 's wonderful."said Violet ."But I can 't plac e you t o save my life, even though I do recognize you as a boy soldier who often rescued us and done us a lot of service and which we loved you so much for."

"Suppose we go down the Company S t reet for some distance, and t hen maybe we'll get bet ter acquainted."suggested Zeb, who wit h Penrod and the others had been even more amazed than violet at these st ranga happenin gs.

"Things are happening so fast that I feel like walkin g on air"said Penrod.

"Perhaps we'll have t he chanc e of meet ing wit h Gerald S t arrin g in t he camp"replied Violet .

Zeb drew back wit h a shiver.

"I myself wouldn't dare try t o cope wit h him un har un armed"he said."He t akes t wo knives to a person."

"Maybe Michaellena would fight him."con t inued violet lookin g a little mischieviously."

"And maybe she won't laughed Michaelel Michaelelena."I've had so much bad experienc e in my life that I'm on t en t ed t o fight in bet t er battles and not ne t op much at fl closequarters ."

"But we won't n eed t o fight him in t his camp"said Violet "for by t he t ime we would have seen him,I'm almost sure Penrod could take care of him wit hout gettin g hurt .We'd have had him now if it had not been that we handcuffed ourselves together.We forgot all about it when we tackled him.Ain't that right Penrod dear?"

"Yes."

"I don't see how he could have been strong enough t o hold t he two of you."replied Zeb in a surprised t one even if you were handcuffed t ogether. They said Starring only weighs nin t y pounds, while you Penrod my friend surely ought to weigh more than that."

"You don't weigh as much as you ought t o Zeb."remarked Michaelelna shaking her head as she looked at the boy."You are dreadfully skinny."

"Oh well it 's nat ure"said t he boy wit h a l laugh."And I've had lots of t rouble in my day, litt le girl frien d.For a good many days I went out on horsevt o do scout ing and spying, and t he excitement of it is enough to make any one get skin ny."

"I'll bet he eats enough t o get fat I'm sure"said Penrod gravely.

"Do I thought Can you remember any breakfast t hat I've had t o day.W"Zeb said wit h a grin.

"None of us had any breakfast "said Penrod"and in a t ime of danger as we were in it is foolish t o t alk about eating."

"Not hing is more dangerous t han bein g wit hout food."declared Zeb"And if we had not found our way here quicker we could not have been able t o tell whet her we would have yet eat en or not.If we had st opped t o buy somet hin g t o eat we would have ran int o a part y of Glandelin ians probably searchin g for you, and t hat beaut iful little sister of yours who wit h her sisters shouldn't have needed to suffer anything at all."And he said t he las t words wit h a bit terness indeed for he hated to s ee them even dist ress ed and hated t he Glandelin ians posionously for it.

"Oh but we don't suffer much, and its only adventure."exc laimed violet smilin g."But let 's not talk about our sufferin g now.I can see plenty of nice sc enery and fort isifed fields beyon d us.But I wish we could tell where a genera's headquarters are.I'd like to find our way back t o my sisters ."

"Why we can get there in t ime."said litt le Jannie."And I am as hungry as your boy friend is, and I want t o buy a bottle of milk."

"Where's your horse."asked violet.

"Oh I don't a horse for that short dist ance."said t he little girl."I can walk.It 's good exercise.

They decided to go on but as t hey proceeded Violet asked ;

"If I was to ask you t o capture that Gerald Starrin g would you t ry it Zeb?"

and she turned t o her companion with a serious look on her fac e. Hesitat ed in his answer for a moment and his face looked sullen.He was pale and frightened too at what he had read in the news paper, for t his dreadful news had upset him and made him nervous and worried t hough he loved Penrod for his t imely protect ion of t he dear litt le Vivian Girl heroine.Then he said;

"It's not a matt er of tryin g it Princ ess.It 's only if we happen t o meet .I'd try him out wit h a knife any day.I've never been really scared of any treac herous skunk yet ."

"Good boy"she answered, and she stretched out a han d t o him and s hook it hard.Then t hey st arted off again down the Company St reet .

"Well, well"said Violet, drawning a lon g breath."We are going to recieve a reception now."

For from t his part of the camp a c rowd of soldiers and even boy and girl scouts began to come from t he t ents t o look at t he new arivals, and pret t y soon quite a crowd of soldiers and child scouts(t he latter having visited the soldiers who were their fat hers) had as embled.But they at once recognized violet,and Penrod.There were men by great numbers, and t he soldiers were all beautifully uniformed, and t he child scouts not in uniform t his t ime were attrac t ively dressed, and many of t he boys and girls had wonderfully handsome little faces, and appeared more friendly t han any one would expect children to be.There was not an ugly person in all the t hron g, and violet was especially pleased and happy by t he appearanc e of these soldiers and child scouts because by the shape of t heir uniform coats it was an evident fac t she and her friends had struck t he army of t heir good lovin g Guardian and most lovin g man friend Jack Evans whom t hey had hoped also to make as a grown brot her in thevnear future as he had been s o good to them.They did not yet smile, nor did t hey frown , but many showed curious ity, and at first simply st ared wit h no more expression than t he faces of dolls t hey were so as t onished at the arival of violet and Penrod wit h c hild scouts .They paid more attention t o Penrod and violet , for t hes e soldiers had never before nor these child scouts eit her ever beheld a boyscout who could defend a little girl like he defended violet.But t heir starin g only lasted a minute.The child scouts start ed shriekin g sc reechin g and howlin g as t hey either flou flouru flourished handkerchiefs nr or t hrew hat s int o t he air and t he soldiers followed wit h a roar of cheers and shots proc laiming Penrod as t he best boyscout leader in t he world.The din was deafening an d by t he eldest of t he child scouts before he could say anyt hing or resist , Penrod was caught up and bore off on t heir s houlders, and Violet t oo.Pretty soon a man joined t he group who were a glistening st ar in t he dark hair just over his forehead.He had held his hat in his left hand as he approac hed t he exc excited crowd.He seemed t o be a general of high rank, for t he ot hers suddenly quieted down and press ed bac k to give him room.After turning his composed eyes upon t he children on t he hors es, and t hen upon Penrod and violet now standing on t he ground he gave a gasp.He recovered himself; took Violets hand respec tfully in his kissed it and said;

"T hanks be t o God and His Bles sed Mot her you are safe in c amp.Then s he said t o Penrod, who was a litt le taller t han Violet ;

"Tell me my boy are you Mast er Schofield Penrod."?

"I c annot t ell you a lie sir."he answered."I am."

"Then it was you who so quickly s hot six Glandelinian assass ins who attempted t o stab t he dear lit tle Princ ess in t hat hotel."?

For a moment the boy did not know what he meant by t his ques t ion .H e did n ot know the news of it had circulated around.Then remembering t he sc ene in t he hot el first wit h a palin g half frightened face he ans wered in a shaky voice-

"I had t o sir.It was nec essary.But t he six didn't att ack her.Only two.But they were in t he room.I shot t he on e firs t who was going t o, and shot so fas t at t he ot her four I cann't tell how I did it.T he ot her tried t o escape t hrough t he open window of her room and I killed him as I dashed aft er him."

The man wit h t he star st ood for a lon g t ime quietly t hinkin g over t his s peech.Then he asked;

"Where is Hendro Dargar."?

"I don't know"replied Penrod s t ill confused."But violet s eein g his perplexity, answered;

"I can t ell what happened.I was in my room s ittin g down after Penrod went out ..I heard some one unlock my room and thinking it was he comin g for somet hin g literally lot the murders in my room by opening t he door.I

Two grabbed me, one by the t hroat to chock me while t he ot her stabbed, but I man managed t o scream for help.At the same t ime I sc reamed"Penrod"it was all over except for the man who ran for the door.He or window.He fired as Penrod rushed in, but Penrod hit him inst ead.I was at firs t more s tart led by t he loud shots t han I was at my own perily and he fired so fast t hey sounded like from a loud mac hine gun."

The man regarded her and Penrod wit h his calm eyes.

The "T he news of t he incident has brought great excitement throughout t he country bec ause t he news papers are full of it."he said."I don 't kn ow how t his happened for us to know it t oo, but how in t he world did you t wo cj children happen to try t o capt ure Pen Starrin g while you were handcuffed t ogether."?

"I can 't remember how we did that ."said Violet "We even at t he moment forgot we were manacled."

"Well you c ertainly have a protec tor"said the man ."Your responsibilities have not failed. But t he arrest of t hat man Penrod.and you poor violet .It 's t oo bad t hat you cannot esc ape sentenc in g him.He was sent t hrough here an hour ago t o general vivianmas army.The Gemin i have him n ow and he cannot escape.If you could pass on s ome one else t he sentencin g it would be all right."

"How can I and my sisters do t hat?"asked violet .

"That I am not prepared to say.It is your affair dear Princ ess and not mine. You and your followers t hough must go t o t he House of t he Mess, and get a good breakfas t for surely you must all be hungry."

"Where is t he Mess hall?"violet inquired as she looked happily on her child friends.

"I will be more gladly than anythin g else to lead you t oo it.And Thank God"he smiled as he beamed on Penrod"Wait unt ill general Jack Evans meets you lad.This is his army. He loves you like a son for that .He c ried with joy all night when he heard the n ews he was so happy."

He t urned and walked down t he st reet.They had remounted t heir horses .As the horses ambled alon g, t he soldiers and t he child scouts made way for t hem most respectfully, and formed a respec tful cheerful and cheerin g pro cession in t heir r a rear.Slowly they moved down one company St reet and t hen another another, turning firs t t his way and then t hat, untill they came t o an open square in t he c enter of which was a big red yellow and purple s triped flag like tent wit h a beaut iful flag pole in ffont fron t and the Nat ional flag waving from it .It was the mess hall t ent of t he highest of t he christian generals and officers.

The doorway or entranc e of the big mess hall was very large, and soon the children found themselves in a loft y hall t hat was very beautifully furn ished as a dining hall and the tables were elegant ly set and had bu b beaut iful white table doths on t hem.The soldiers and child scouts followed to t he ent rance and after a mighty good cheer for Penrod and violet departed.The breakfast was t he bes t that Violet ,Penrod and her four friends had ever eat en probably in a life time.While they were heartily enjoying the meal the t en t door opened disclosing a handsome personage just dismounting from a horse.He was uniformed just as the other generals of this army, but his trousers only differed from t heirs in being white ins tead of bright yellow.He had bobbed hair instead of short , and wore a fantastic shaped hat n and all over the top of his hat was a big black plume.He looked so fant astic that Violet was even in res pectful awe of him.He looked tward the little Princess with friendly lovin g eyes , and his glance made her grow happier in an inst an t.It was the same man who had asked her if she had remembered him and whom she said she did recognize but whose name she could not remember.It was general Fredrick Nance.

Violet rose as she saw him and at onc e he had her in his embrace.

"Why how greatly you have improved since I saw you las t he said."And your dear brot her Penrod your protect or. what brought you and your friends into our lines."?

She told him the whole st ory.

"what in t he world made you t wo try t o capt ure that little snake with your hands handcuffed together?"he asked greatly surprised."I never heard of suc h a t hing."

"Bec ause we couldn't help it ."said Violet."We forgot we were."

"put why in the world did he so wickedly and viciously try t o kill himself and you t wo?"he cont inued.

"We couldn't explain that."

"Did you int en d to let him esc ape even at that peril."?

"We didn't declared the girl."I tried to draw my pistol but he held that hand so I couldn't."

"But where did he go."

"We don't know"answered violet in dignantly."If he had any sense at all he would have flew from even the Glandelinian armies.I All the Gemini are now bent upon capt uring him dead or alive, or running him c lean out of t he territ ory."

"He'll brand you int o ridicule because of that st range escapade"s aid general Nanc e bitterly.

"I don't believe he can "dec lared Penrod.

"He'll prove it."cried the general.

"Well let him try to prove it."answered Violet again indignant ly."We can prove we almost. capt ured him while han dcuffed toget her and t hen he'll get t he laugh on i himself.But how is it t hat this is so much kn own.?"

"We only know it from this early morning.The papers are full of it.Then y s terday even ing some of the Gemini passed through here wit h good news that you my dear Prin c ess were more successful t han even your Mot her t hought you could be."The general s t ill held her tightly in his ar s and Penrod was literally grinnin g for Violet really was happy and t hat is all Penrod wan t ed t o see.

"By the way dear friend Nanc e"said the man with t he star lookin g s t eadily at t he general"You t old us yest erday thatt he dear Princ ess was not expected to return to the christ ian lines for days.Yet she had just c ome here to our lines, aft er her prot ect or done t o Glandelinians t he worst t hin g that ever happened to them.Can you explain that ."

"Well the unexpec t ed happens "said t he general lookin g almost mischieviously at Penrod who blushed."I did say t hat and I know it.But when t his boy here is with t he Princ esses miracles happen s.I would not like t o t ry to harm any body in ihis presenc e even if I would have been an enemy.I'd be wiser to let well enough alone."

"Will t here be any one persueing after her?"asked t he man wit h t he s tar.

"No I don't t hink so."

"Neit her soldiers nor s pies or det ec t ives ."

"No my dear friend."

"Are you sure.?"

The general looked at Penrod.

"Well I c ouldn't s weare swear t o t hat.But my inst inct t ells me that they won't t ry it if t hey're wise, and he "and he winked at Penrod who grinned.What do you t hin k my boy."

"T hey may come."he said."I'll be ready for anybody t hat t ries anyt hing. I wouldn 't t rust a person who se face I don't like.And no matter how a enemy is disguised his face betrays himself t o me.My in st inc t t ells me t hat ."

Just t hen a soldier c ame walkin g fast into t he mess hall an d addressed the man wit h t he st ar after makin g a bow.

"His Gracious Excellenc y general Jack Evans is comin g sir."he said."He has been not ified that Violet an d Penrod are here and he's anxious t o s ee t hem."

Immediately the man wit h t he star, general N ance and all t hose wit hin the hall who had eit her finis hed breakfas t or were not through yet flocked out of t he mess hall int o t he Company S t reet, that t hey might see the approach of t he greatewt favorite gener or emperor Vivian ever had.Violet and Pen rod, and her friends ran after them, and Nance was close behind t hem.

Far down the Company St reet was an object very small t hat looked at firs t like a black spot.It was t wo miles away and at firs t because of the dist ance seemed t o be approaching slowlyp---so s lowly t hat at first it it scarcely seemed to move.The t n t hron g s t ood st ill and waited.It was all t hey c ould do for to go away an d leave t hat expected and lovin g s ight sight was impossible not could t hey hurry its fall or its approach in any way as it was not for them to try it.Violet an d Penrod were held in t he arms of the t wo offiers higher up so t hey could s ee what was comin g. Gradually t he spock grew bigger, which was proof t hat it was c omin g t heir way.Violet was surprise d to see how pat ien t t he soldiers and offic ers were for her own pure loving lit tle heart was beatin g rapidly wit h excitement and so was Penrods.That spec t meant t o her t he very one she had wished to see for a lon g long time and she knew he could assist her an d Penrod out of t heir difficulties.In five minutes t he horse and man had come n ear enough for her t o see t heir forms in t wo min utes she could see a head lo okin g over t he side of t he hors es neck, in t hree minutes t he hors e came right up t o t he c rowd and halt ed in a cloud of dust.T hen a tall hands ome man but wit h a bull dog expression of fac e leaped from t he saddle, t ook off his big fantast ic hat and bowed very gracefully t o t he crowd of officers and men.He was powerfully built t hough s omewhat slightly s lim, andvt he form of his head alone t old t hat his body had probably t he strength of a giant . "Why "c ried Violet , in amazement "It is dear Jac k Evans our Guardian." The t all man looked t ward her, but did not seem as s urprised as she was for he had heard s he was in this c amp and had c ome on a headlon g s peed t o see her and Penrod .But he smiled and first bowed as he answered;

"Yes my dear little angel child"I am Jack Evans"known as the "Great and Terrible!And he had her in his own embrace in an instant and she lovingly threw her arms around his neck and kissed him again and again .Then still holding her he turned to Penrod;"And you are Marco Penrod her little brother and guardian.I remember you very well.You are good to be a great assistance to me I see.I read of you in the papers .Were to the Will of Our Dear Blessed Lord I had a son like you."

"Who did you say that general general is!"whispered Zeb to Penrod.

"He is the wonderful guardian of the dear Vivian Girls .Have you not heard of him."

Just then the man with the star came and stood before the general with a salute.

"Sir "said he "Do you think we can advance today so we can lend a hand to the army at Jonnie Tory."

"Yes I intend to advance right away."

"What section are the enemy situnticed."!

"Don't know what section it is my son."returned the general with a smile "And to be honest I could learn any details of her.I went out scouting with a number of my officers, which some times get a information far better than merely spying but the landscape further off is covered so thick with a haze that none of us can see anything.Yesterday I went up in a baloon to scout that way, and when I came down the baloon had to land in a deep quarry not far from here.Fortunately I did not let too much gas out of the baloom so I was able to rise again.When I learned that Penrod and the dear little Angel here was in my camp I retracted my steps and continued on untill I reached here leaving my officers and cavarly to follow after.I felt like hesitating in my advance now since I recieved such a blessing, but if dear little Violet wishes me to go I would like to as I would like again to see her dear little sisters with pleasure.Sorry you poor little dear that this happened to you but thank be to good it was Penr dPenrod---"

He looked around in amazement .Penrod was gone.To avoid being praised by the general he had skipped away.The man with the star had listened with attention.Violet still in the embrace of Evans whispered to one of the soldiers;"Go get Penrod.He must not escape."

Penrod tried to hide but the soldiers got him.

"Oh no you don't boy."said one of the soldiers laughing as he tried to escape.

"Violet says you're to be taken right back. General Evans wants to speak to you."

Penrod blushing red tried to resist but he was soon before general Evans who laughed.

"This boy, who isx is a little brother to the Princesses want's to escape me"he said."Tyi This boy who by the help of General Great hert recieved lots of tatraining in Canada and the Western parts of The famous United States is a Wizard at pistols, rifles and even knives.I know this long before as general Great Heart told me but forgot to say anything about it.Did you not learn many things from Cowboys and Indians my boy."

"I did." stammered Penrod.

"Don't be so embrassed my boy.I'm a mere equal as you are any day by my rank.It's just the kind as you are who do heroic deeds but when it comes to be reward you're afraid. "Then turning to a man he said;

"This boy who is from Foriegn parts is called a Wizard at the Knife. Is not there one amongst you who is an expert knife fighter.We could show you easily enough what this boy could do.Only you'll have to cover the knife to prevent injury or use a fake one."

"I know a man who is better than me."replied a man called Oz, promptly.

"I have stood off six Glandelinians once and they used swords at me too. I believe I could disarm the boy."

"Ah you shall prove that"said Evans laughing."We Abbiesnnians have at this time one of the most wonderful boy scouts that ever came into out middist , but he sometimes or seldom makes a mistake.Ain't that right Penrod."

"I seldom make mistakes ."declared Penrod boldly.

"Oh Penrod"said Violet ,"You made a big mistake on the train when you tackled that little desperado while you were handcuffed to me.And then almost captured him."

"Nonsense"said the little boy turning red-"I only forgot we were handcuffed together."

"For her protection it was a good plan "said Evans."But in another it made you fail to capture the snake.But come with me my boy.I wish you to meet our best knife fighting expert.I'll bet you can disarm him in a hurry."enrod at first did not like this invitation, but he would not refuse to accept it .He knew he could beat any one at the knife or pistol but didn't like to show off or admit it.So he followed the great Guardian of the Vivian Girls, and Violet and Zeb and the others came after him, while a great throng of soldiers and boyscouts came after him.There at ood at the table just finishing his grace after meals a lith long man, and when Penrod saw him he said;

"Is that the man."?

"He "said Evans in his quiet voice"But he is excellent at the sabre.He is a cavarly officer. But my lad there is only one fault I do find in you."

"I never sin der any wrong, and love everybody of our side so where is the wrong?"asked Penrod.

"Only Only a short time ago when I held Violet in my arms you made your disappearance.You do a lot of good things and then run away when rw reward awaits you."

"Well what then sir."

"You should never do that .You deserve a reward and should be rewarded. If you are so scared of my rewarding you what will you do when you face her sisters.Ha.You are red in the face.I can see that .Yet you wouldn't part from them for all the world."

"Well I can't escape from them."said Penrod his face still more redden ing.If I ran off from their reward you might with just ice say I was wrong, but then sir what about you.How much didn't you do for them."

It was general Evans turn to blush.He was caught and couldn't at first answer.

"Very clever you are my lad."said the general nodding his head as if pleased.I am delighted to find good boys in my lines.Were you ever in a circus brother!"

"No"said Penrod.

"I thought you sure were in one, the way I have often seen you ride horses ."declared Evans seriously.

"I was going to join one"d declared the little boy."I once went od to join Bailum and Barneys great Consolidated Shows .It was a fine aggregation I assure you but because I am an Abbiesnnian they wouldn't take me."

"Where did you learn your expert horseback ridin g?"asked Evans.

"The cowboys learned me.But sir who's the man I'm to prove is not as good with the knife as I might be."!

"I am the one.Violet knows no man has ever beat ed me in a fight yet ."

"You your Excellency.Why I---I---

"Will get great honor by proving you're better"laughed general Evans."If you can worst me in this sham fight you are surely a wizard, and everybody will be positively sure that between me and you Violet , and her sisters will never meet a fatal incident."

"Oh I'mgood at the knife and gun all right , you may be sure of that sir. Just as good as you are but couldn't you choose some one else.It don't seem proper to fight the same with you."

"That can't be"said the general."It's a fact no one can best me yet .And if you are able to prove you are better, I will make you at the request of Angelina Aronturg and Violets sisters , for I got the request in my pok pocket the highest chief of all the girl and boys couts of the whole nation and a chief guardian of the Princesses a great honor in deed. Otherwise----"

"What will happen otherwise!"asked Penrod a little anxiously.

"You'll only have the commission as their loving brother."

"Just sure that is enough."said Penrod lovingly lovingly on Violet and then at the man with the star a little suspiciously as he had a big grin on his face."Their company is .Heaven to me and ain't that enough."

"No sir my boy."You must earn a high commission.You'll be a sure terror of the enemy then and you can lead even the most treneondous raids you want and nothing can be opposed to your wishes.You'll have the same aurthority as Emperor Vivian."

"But I don't deserve this, I'm not worthy and--

"You are not worthy.Don't let me hear that again."said Penbot Evans."If you were not worthy why did they take to you.You must perform the feat and I'll bet you'll disarm me as strong as I am."

"All right sir."I'll try to beat you all right ."

Evans took out his long gleaming knife, and Penrod did the same. Think leather was wrapped around the two knifknives and tied fast so they would not cut or otherwise in jure each other .The fight lasted twenty five minutes, and Evans sent one of the soldiers to get his knfe. Penrod had sent it flying out in to the company street to the surprise of every one.And Evans was such an expert .

"What did I tell you"laughed Evans."I'm a good expert but I know not your Indinn ways at the knife." "Then he said to the others "Now let see any of you afterwards try to equal the others things he is able to perf p rform. He led Pen rod to t he shooting Gallery which was also one of the most difficult and which even many of the crackshot soldiers failed to win a prize.

"Lend t his boy a rifle"said general Evans to t he s oldier in charge."I want him to show some of his ex pert shoot in g."

"You surely don't want t o have that boy shoot down all my target ."said the man his mout h gapin g open.

"Well he don't have to shoot everything."laughed P Evans."I just want t o show what t he lad can do."

As the lad was handed a good rifle at once from somewhere there c ame t he tinkling of bells ple playing sweet music, yet look where they would the children could discover no bells at all anywhere.Everybody else list ened but showed no great interest .It was really one of the incidents t hat happens when you are near an An gel possess ed child.Violet was one an d so were her sisters or ot herwise t hey would h not have gon e t hrough what they did and lived or been afford such sure prot ect ion as t hey really had.If persons were not n ear t o protect t hem Nature in some way t ook a han d.

Penrod fired all t he ca rtridges given h im an dt here was on ly one on objec t he did really miss.That object was not t here..The man in charge of t he shoot ing gallery did not look surprised, and Evans won dered.

"I t hought you would be shocked"said Evans .

"Do you your excellenc y t hink I don't know t he boy."He shot up on e of my shoot in g galleries about four mon t hs ago and it was more difficult t han t his one and had many more t argets to s hoot at .He won every prize. I surely would not want t o tackle an y lit tle child he defends ."

Everybody else had showed t he greatest surprise and int erest It had always been one of the t hings Penrod did to show he was a good shot.But here in t he shoot in g galleries t here was no cowboy or Indian trick shot target s .He knowning everybody was int erested said;

"If on ly there were t rick target s ."

He saw a t hin branc h waving in t he breeze.He asked for more target s loaded t he rifle and brought t he branch down wit h one quick aimed shot .The crowd was shocked, amazed.

"Gosh"said Violet ."I'm a good shot every t ime.But I c ouldn't do t hat t o save my life."

Penrod smiled upon e her and said"I'll t ry to learn you and your sis ters some t ime."T hen he smiled upon t he as[illegible]assemblage and as ked;

"I have a long rope here.Will somebody kindly lend me a large s ton r ston e. I can show something d good."

Nobody could find a stone in t he Company gt reet.

A"Ahem"said Penrod"Will somebody please be bring me a brick then!"

But t here was no bricks to be found eit her."

"Very good"remarked Evans himself,"I'll let you us e my old hat t hen, if you please.I'll make it heavy enough by filling it wit h gravel and t yin g it up."

And t he general disc did so and handed it t o Penrod who t ied it t o t he rope.

"Now good people"Obs erve him carefully.You see t here is not hing here but t he rope and hat .Will somebody swing t he hat around fast ."

"Let me see the weight of it ."said Violet with a smile.

She t ook t he rope and hat but could not hardly lift it, and returned it t o Penrod who handed it t o Evans t o swing. Evans swun g it like a pen duleum.The people wat ched t he scene carefully.Quickly Penrod placed the rifle t o t he shoulder.C rack.Came t he shot and t he hat went to t he ground the rope absolutely cut in two.

"Why that boy is a Wizard."c ried some of t he soldiers . "Why who could have t hought any one could do t hat .And t he rope so thin."

"I c an do a st unt too"said Penrod wh "which can be done if any one ain't afraid to try it on me wit h t his rope.If any one of you can hang me and chock me I'll give him t his ten dollar bill.Any one game enough.I'll prove it by talkin g while hangin g by the n eck."

"Don't do it "said violet ."You might get hurt ."

"N o I won't "said t he boy."T he Glandelinians hanged me onc e and I'm st ill here.I c ut myself down for t hey didn't bind my hands or feet .But I hun g long enough t o have a sore t hroat .Any one want t o try it.I'll admit t here's a trick in it but I can do it ."

A man st epped forward andvt ook t he rope.A noose was made and s lung tight ly around Penrods n eck.T he crowd watched in tent ly, for they had never seen such a t hing before.T he man t han l s lung t he ot her end over a branch and seein g that t he noose was tight enough drew him up.

"All right everybody"he said as he was swingin g up t here.You--you look prot prot ty good down t here.As Violet and her sisters had been almos t hung t o death several t imes I'm goin g t obt each them t his t rick alone.Don don't t hink t his is magic or that it is supernat ural for it is only a tric k which some of t he Indians lean learned me.I can work my neck so s t rangely that the rope doesn 't strangle.N ow you can let me down an d I'll show you anot her."

Nobody could get ovs e over t his performanc e an d Violet was flabbergast ed.

"If I was pulled up t here Penrod dear"she said"I'd been dead by that t ime."

"You won't if I can help it ."he said wit h a very determined voice.T hen he gave a bow t o t he silent t n thnorg t hron g t hat had watched him.T hen He t ook out of his pocket t wo knives.He t hrew the bot h at t he same t ime and made on e drive the ot her int o a t ree and its elf out a bran c h from anot her t ree. Everybody gas ped in ast on ishment.He repeat ed t he same performanc e t en t imes wit hout a miss.Even Evans couldn't believe his eye sight .Then he as ked if an ybody else had kn ives .T hey han ded him t heirs untill he had t en knives .He t ook his own kn ife and t ied it t o a strin g wit h his left ..He placed t he ot hers s t ickin g in t o t he groun d in a row.T hen he made a s wing by t he end of t he s t rin g and caused his own to kn knock out every on e of t he knives simultan eous ly.No body saw how he did it but in t he same row format ion t hey were stickin g in t he bark of a t ree.He smiled and said;

"If any Glandelinian wants t o tackle me wit h as many knives let him come ahead.The bo y cont in ued t his surprisin g performance about six or s even ti es wit hout a miss and t hen allowed t heir owners t o reclaim t heir knives.

"N ow "said Evan s""You oft en have done so before.Violet or any of her sisters are as quick as a lightning flash wit h knives.Show her how quickly nevert heless you can even disarm her before she can do anyt hin g.To prove your dexterity you'll have t o use t he bare kn ife though. But violet knows she'll not in sure you as she can 't ."

Wit h t his Penrod handed her his knife and got anot her for apparent defense.S he put it where she always sec retly hides her kn ife.Then Penrod pret ending he was an enemy t ryin g t o sneak upon her rus hed her.She quickly quicker than eye could see drew t he blade but it was sent by his own flying from her hand nearly as quick wit hout an in u injury on eit her side.

"I've t ried hard t o learn her how t o bea t me but poor lit t le girl s he can't "said Penrod regretfully.

"I can't get t he met hod of your at t ack."she said.

"But t hat shows he sure can defend you."said Evan s ."Either wit h a knife gun or pist ol."

"He sure is indeed a wonderful boy, and his kn ife and rifle powers are greater than ao any one known."

One man t hough good and loyal like t he rest was skeptical yet .

"I'll bet I can prove he won't be a won derful Boy Wizard lon g."remarked this man whose name was George Gwig.

"Why not."

"Because I know ra stunt he can't perform with a fake ss sword."was t he reply."If he does I'll take my hat off t o him and give him t his pearl neck lac e t o give t o his little sister.But if he c an do it I'll be glad.But I'll bet he can 't."

Penrod at first looked a lit tle t roubled. The man drew from a leat hern cas e several s trangely con s t ruct ed sharp kn ives , which he joined t oget her on e after the ot her untill t hey made somet hing like a lon g sword.T hen he att atched a handle t o t his sword and t hen ha handed it t o Penrod.He had two men hang up a lon g st out bag filled wit h sand and when t his was complet ed st art ed it swinging.

"See if you can at on e st roke of t hat fake sword cut t his bag in t wo wit hout makin g t he sword come apart "he said.

Penrod los t no t ime but leapin g forward he rais ed t he sharp but fake sword, watchtched t his chance whirled it on ce or twic e around his head and then gave a mighty s t roke that cut t he sack exac t ly in two.Violet screamed wit h delight and enthusiasm and as t he two half of t he sack fell apart it let t he sand spill into t he road and hung limp not hin g now but lon g pieces of cloth.

"Why"he c ertain y is won derful"cried the man, as t onished."I t ried that again and again and t he sword c ame apaot apart in every piece."

"Of course"said Evans."Too bad t here is not hin g else we can t hink of but come Penrod.If you will accompany me wit h Violet and your child s cout friends there, I will explain to you much bet ter t han I can here t he plen did sit uation of my army."

After Penrod had wiped t he sand particles from the sword and taken it apart and put the pieces together again t o the surprise of the soldier who had formed it he handed it to him and he placed it in hist attcheat hitn t leathern case again, t hen Evan s ordered some of t he soldiers t o lead his hors e t o its st able.Jim Michaelenas brot her pricked up his ears, when he heard they were going to make a round of t he camp.T hey were quite contented to s e how beautiful t he camp really was... So t he proc ession moved through t he streets, Evans Violet , Penrod and t he little child s couts firs t, t he general sec on d, the man with t he st ar next, and at last t he c rowd of soldiers and c hild scout s.T he ernormous encampment had fine Company St reets, for t he army was ernormously huge, but when t he proc ession had passed down one of thes e they came upon a broad clearing of t he enc ampmen t covered with garden s and wat ered by prs pret ty brooks t hat flowed t hrough it tward the river so dist ant away.There were paths through t hese garden s and over some of the brooks were beaut iful bridges .Evans had formed his encampment also aroun d t his to give the camp a beautiful appearance while he stayed in t his territ ory.Violet Penrod and Zeb now dismount ed from t he horses , and walked bes ide the general so t hat they might see and examine t he flowersxand plants better for Violet , and her sisters had a passion for flowers .

"Who built these lovely bridges!"asked the little Prin c ess .

"T he one who owned t his property built t hem."answered General Evans.

"That 's queer"said she."He must cert ainly have been a rich man."did it take you very long t o form your big camps here."!

"Of c ourse"he replied."aut who ever owned t hese sc eneries t ook a good many years t o make t his.That is why we are also so an r angry when t he enemy ruins such lovely sight s in t heir raids .They have no t ast e for beaut y it seems."

"But surely t he s sceneries could be mended."she said.

"Yes, but it would t ake a lon g t ime, and then t he poor own er must wait untill everythin g repairs ."

They first pas sed through many beait uful gardens which were on ce of flow rs but hardly not hing grew lovely here now as it was coming on t ward t he second week of November.But many of the varied flowers s t ill remained n evertheless but no one not even Violet c ould hardly tell what kind of flow rs flowers t hey reallly were bec ause of s uch varied clo colors.Some were pink, s ome whit e,, blue or yellow.The plant s half wit hered now bec ause of t he lateness of t he season had died hd had broad leaves and grew close to t he ground. When t hey passed over a field of gras c still fres h for the S eason some of their horses immediately st retc hed down t heir heads and began to nibble.They let t heir horses s tay there t o eat and went on .

Penrod havin g some in his bag gave Violet an d the t wo lit tle girls some oranges.while they ate t hem he asked;

"How does they tast e!"

"Not bad at all."said Violet ."If we c an get plent y of them t hey'll do us good.By t his time the party had reac hed a freshly plowed field, and Evans said t o Violet and t he others wit h him;

"T his was the planting ground .."

Several of the soldiers c ame forward wit h spades an d began diggin g for pr potatoes .

"We need plent y of potat oes for our armies ."s aid Evan s.

"Do you really int end to make an advanc e for Jen nie Tory t his aftern oon !" asked Penrod.

"C ert ainly, cert ainlt y."was t he reply."At leas t half of my army is advancin g already.Did you not hhear the size of army I have."

"Not that I ever heard of.I and Violet didn't even know it was here un till Zeb brought us here."

"How s t range, and the enemy has s t ried various t ricks to oust me out of the posit ion.Then the en emy must have kept everyone from knowing of my pres en c e.But if you will come with me to that ni c e high ris e of ground I shall show you that we are on the advan c e."

It appeared t hat all these soldiers and c hild s c outs who followed mus t have been very respectful and yet curious to see Violet , an d especially Penrod, and so happy were both, t hat t hey felt as if theyhcould walk through he the air wit h ease.The lit tle party of c hildren n w n ow followed t he greatvgen eral adrosss a few more of t he bridges an d alon g s everal pat hs going up t he high ris e of ground unt ill t hey were on t he sunkit an d close to a garden en c losed by a high hedge.

At firs t t hey were att racted more by what was ins ide of t he hedge than anything else, for there were rows upon rows of large handsome plants , s till fresh despite it being November wit h broad leaves gracefully c urvin g un tilll t heir points nearly reached t he ground.In t he c en ter of each plant grew or had grown but still remained a beautiful big blossom.The bloss oms were of all s izes from t he blossom t hat had just began from a bud t o a full grown lovely flower.On s one of the bushes might be s een s bud, a half bloss om an d a ripe one.T his s ight explained t o Violet t hat who ever had en joyed t his sc enery sure had a tast e for gardenin g.Evans wan ted t o pluck some of t he blossoms but violet begged him n ot t o.T hen t hey s aw far in t he dis t an c e a vast c hristian army in mot ion.It was a part of Evans already on t he advan ce.

Travelin g wit.h us untill I make a junct ion with Vivianna will be safe for bot h of you."he said.T his section of the army does n ot move however un till t his afternoon for I int end t o c over t heir advanc e.You will n otic e that here an d t here are stron l stron gly advanced posit ions hidden in all that foliage an d if an y Glandelinian army wan ts t o try somet hin g I'll willing t o acc ept t he challenge.A Glandelin ian army under one of t he Manleys is pret ty close by."

"How long could you defend thos e posit ions in c as e of a very fierc e att ack!"sked Violet .

"That depends upon how man y we put int o t he posit ion ."he replied."Of c ourse I do n.ot int end t o have a gen eral squabble here .Only t o c over the advancin g s ec tion from an attack."If we keep cool and collec ted, and meet wit h no blunders, I ought to be able t o hold off a whole foc army.I've been able t o prove to the en my enemy t hat t hey have a hard t ime makin g a ret reat .If t he enemy knows whos e army t his is I doubt if he'll t ake a c hanc e t o move against me."

"Do you expec t they would attack just bec ause I an d Penrod are here!" asked Zeb and Michaelenan brot her together.

"I c annot t ell on t hat .But I believe if the en emy kn ows I'm in comman d I believe they won't.We are in quit e a solid pos it ion, and have no need t o fear ancat tac k, unless the enemy wants to be destroyed."

"But t hese Glandelin ian generals dare any anyt hing."s aid Zeb.

"And you are right, somet imes they do but only when they think t hey can catch me of my guard."But that is considered a great musfortun e if we are caught off of our guard"For t hen we must do all we can t o rest ore any portion of our lines that have been broken and do so at once."

"Which was way do you intend to advanc e!"asked Penrod.

"I will show you."was t he reply."S t ep t hisway, please .

He led them a lit tle higher up c lose to one large and b eaut iful bush.He pointed to a road.

"This "said he"is t he main road tward Jennie Tory.It is t he s aft es t road t o t ravel and in just a situation t hat if an enemy t ries t o attac k. we can find ample posit ion s to defend ours el ves wit h success .I int end to t ravel t his road for your s akes for I know for what you and Violet did, you are in pos it ive even unseen dan ger.The Therefore I'll guard you bot h an d Penrod c an help by guardin g Violet . I will s upply him wit h t wo far more dan gerous guns than he has now. "

They s tood before it in silent admiration.But t hey saw on t he road close by comin g apparent ly tward them t he figure of a small lovely girl so exquisit ely formed and c olored in her clot hing and so lovely in t he delicat e expression of her features t hat Violet t hought it must be on e of her sisters comin g t o the army alone t o fin d her.Thd T he lit tle girl however did not wear a uniform, but wore a s oft dress while daint y lac e like t rac eries trimmed t he sleeves .Her flesh was fine and s moot h as polisg polished ivory and her pos poise express ed bot h dign it y and grace.

"Who is t hat comin g here! "asked Penrod c uriously lookin g hard at Violet . Violet was staring hard at t he lit tle girl coming forward. T hen sudden ly she put her field glasses to her eyes .

"Heavens s he is my sister Angelina."

"Are you sure?"asked Penrod. feeling at firs t frightfully alarmed to t hin k she would risk t he peril t o t ravel alon e.

"She surely mus t be my s is ter as she has her features, for s he is dres sed like a Royal Abbiennian Prin cess.But how she is c omin g alone I don't comprehen d."

I can't hardly believe it"gasped Penrod."I'll look in my glas s es ."

He hesitat ed then he looked;

"You sure are not mista ken."said he finally."But in one way it is not An galina.It's little Daisy.How could she have don e it an d in s afty.It t akes n weeks for an y one t o walk all t hat dist anc e from Jennie Tory t o this place of Henriet ta cit y or at leas t that is my judgemen t.I don't believe she knows we are here t hough.Won't she recieve a lovely s urpris e."

"She des erves a good day of happiness and her sis ters and you t oo."declared Jack Evanstnt@ddiJack Evans n oddin g.

"This is one of the mos t umpleasan t t hin gs about our adven t uren ome lives in t his c ruel war."said Violet wit h a sigh"T^at while we are in our full prime andchappiness we mus t so oft en seperat e from eac h ot her and fear for t heir s afty.And just becaus e the devil of an en emy won't leave out Beloved Holy C ountry alone."An d she said the last words bit terly in deed.

"I'm s ure Ptinc ess Dais y is soon ready t o rec ieve a happy surprise" As sert ed Mic haelena, gazin g hard at the beaut iful lit tle girl who was approachin g."She's as perfec t a lit tle angel as s he c an be.Let 's hide and surprise her."

"N o"said Violet ."She may t hink its an ambush and shoot us by mist ake.She is dan gerous if she thinks she's surpris ed by enemies for I s ee she is wholly armed."

"Never mind"said Evans h^ hast ily."She will get a surpris e all right by seeing us here.I know how t o s urprise her.Violet you hide behind me an d Penrod you hide behind t he man wit h t he star. T hen when she is n ear enough and speaks t o me in my embrac e t hen you t wo pop out and s urprise her."

"What are you go.in g to do on t he advanc e!" as ked Zeb.

"T^at is a mat ter I have not quit e decided upon "was t he reply."I t hink t he enemy army must be furt her off than I s upposed or ot herwis e s he would not have ris ked t ravelin g alone.I t hin k I shall let Penrod t hink for me what to do for he is quite skillful and will be of good us e t o t he t wo Heavenly lit tle Prin c esses.They are "An gel Possess ed"but t hen they n eed prot ec t ion just the same from bot h.But the res t of you must not show an y sign s of anyt hin g untill we surpris e her."

"You need not worry."Said Violet wit h ax a happy s mile."We won't give her a bad shock I'm sure."

"But gee Violet "said Zeb"I'm afraid s he's prettier than you."

"Don't I know it .But Heavens we ain't vain in t his country and you kn ow it .My heart goes out to her awfully and yet God t oo Comes firs t."

"But why do the Glandelinians want t o des t roy such lovely lit tle girls like us !"asked Michaelen a.

"You mean like me and my s is ters!"

"Yes."

"I suppose because we do a lot of s pying work on t hem."

"T^hat is not the main thing"said Penrod bit terly."T^ey hate you and your sisters like we hate snakes an d you know it."

"Those Glandelinians don't belong here."returned Evans ."So wic ked they are t hey have no right to be on t he earth at all."

"No body as ked them to bec ome such a wicked N at ion."said Violet .

"That 's no excuse."dec lared Evans coldly.

Penrod and Violet looked at each ot her in perplexit y, and Zeb s ighed.T^ey knew why Evans hated t he Glandelin ians so.N ot only on account of what t hey did to her an d her sis ters but he had person al acc ount s t o square also. Me Michaellena rubbed her hand over her face and said in her s oft voice;

"T hos e Glandelin ians won't need t o t ry t o des t roy me, for if I don't get somet hing to eat pret ty soon, I s hall s t arve to death an d s o save them the t rouble."

If you died from st arvat ion the Glandelinian s might plant you."s ugges t ed Penrod wit ha s mile.

"Well if t hey plan t me piece by piece I'll grow in t o t horns and sc tatch t hem."she answered.

"Oh Mic haelena you on ly t wo hours ago hand had your breakfas t wit h me."said Violet .

"Oh she's growin g g fast"said Zeb.Perhaps we c an find her somet hin g t o eat soon.We can give her a couple of Glandelin ians t o eat."

"Pooh"snarled t he girl wit h a s n eer."Inwouldn't let my dress t ouch t he nast y t hin gs .They are not worthy enough to be c alled snakes ."

"You don't n eed to eat s n akes though."remarked Violet wit h a ,a laugh"You are big enough now t o eat any kind of food."

"Snakes are bet ter eatin g than Glandelin ian s oldiers ."said Michaelena.

"I'm kind of hun gry mys elf at that"said Penrod."T his lon g walk in t he crisp air made us hungry.Gos h when is she comin g.S he's a lon g way off and I'm afraid Glandelinians will come."

"Your rifle c an reach t hat far"said Evans .So can ours ."

"I not ic ed some lat e fall s t rawberries growin g or ripen ed in one of t he garden s.S c on our way back we can pick them"s aid Michaelenas brother Jim.

"Never mind your hunger."in terrupted Evans laughin g."Before we left I ordered a good din ner prepared for ours elves in my own headquarters a nd lit tle Daisy surely will be in vit ed too.S oo.she's quite n ear now.Follow me please frien ds t o meet her.The res t of you keep her overal wit h your rifles in c ase she is attacked suddenly.Remember no quarter if Glandelin ians make for her."

The words of Evans were not very comforting, for it was feared they Glandelinians might appear t o assassinat e her in t he road.The child for a moment felt sad and dis pondent, but she c ame up so c lose now t hat all feelin g of fear for her s afty went away and Evans touched Violet s i s oft ly on t he shoulder.

"Wait ."he w hispered.

"What for!"asked Violet .

"Suppose we really not s urprise her that way but run forward and greet her" said the general."I'm s ure she'll recieve a surprise enough as we come."

"All right ."exclaimed violet eagerly."But why ain't my s isters with her."

"Maybe t hey sent her here f t c see me."said Evans."

As she saw the t hree important personages that awaited her lit tle Dais y st opped s hort in amazement and yet delighted surprise.Of all t hin gs she expect ed everything else but to see Penrod and Violet here in this army.Then wit h a glad c ry s he ran forward to greet t hem an d Penrod an d Violet t ogether seized one hand of t he lovely little Princ ess.P Evans allowed bot h Penrod and Violet to embrac e the lit tle girl to t heir hearts c ont ent.T hen before Evans t ook her up into his arms t he beautiful lit tle creat ure passed her hand over her eyes an instant , t ucked in a st ray loc k of hair t hat had become disarranged by Penrod as he hugged her, and t hen wit h a happy glad c ry surrendered herself int o the arms of her loving friend and Guardian General Jack Evans.Aft er he had hugged her as long as he liked, he finally let her down and she after a half bewildered look around t he garden i hill made t he ot hers pres ent a gracious bow, and t hen t urn ing t o Pen rod placed her lit tle arms aroun d his n eck and kis sed him s aying in a s weet but even toned voic e;

"I t hank you very much for having saved my sis ters life. The Gemin i t old us what had happened, your succ ess in s carin g St arring out of t he dist rict and when we learned thfc through a sec ret mes sage code that you were here my sisters s ent for me t o c ome here.They're on the way t oo but I was the first t o st art out ."

"We salut e your little Royal Highn esses"Cried Zeb kn eelin g and kissin g her hand. But she made him get up, and t o his embrassment t hrew her arms around him t oo and kissed him dec laring him a good boy for leadin g Pen rod and Violet saftly into the camp.She bowed gracefully to t he t hree ot her c hildren.Just t hen t he voice of t he general who wore the st ar was heard c allin g upon t hem t o hasten t o anot her part , and a moment lat er he returned t o t he enclosure followed by a n umber of his soldiers who bowed respec tfully as they saw t he second lit tle Princ ess happy in the arm of Violet and Pen rod.

Instant ly the lit tle Prin c ess t urned an d fac ed him, and when he s aw her he s t ood st ill an d smiled.

S he t oo was recieved h int o his arms as he was her ot her great frien d Fredrick N anc e.

"Deares t sister Dais y"said violet after this "Pen rod surely did won ders in coming to my resc ue in Lit tle Girl Knool.We are here not merely on a return but thought we c ould pick up St arrin g in t his t errit ory.We would have capt ured him on t he t rain when we discovered him but we forgot b t o remove ourselves from t he handcuffs and he got away."

Dais y looked at t hem bot h queerly.

"You mean t o say you were handcuffed toget her an d--and--"

"Yes "said Violet s milin g mischievious ly at Penrod"We forgot t o un lock t hem an d almost capt ured S tarrin g nevert heless."

"I didn't remember we s t ill hand on t he handcuffs "said Penrod in a low voice."For fear someone might t ry to grab her from me I handcuffed her t o my right hand.Then forgot ting we t ried t o capture t he rasc al."

"Let 's got back t o our own headquarters ."s aid general Jac k Evans ."You t hree lit tle heroines an d hero can be by yours elves there all you want.Hope your sisters are st rongly escorted."

"T hey are"said Dais y.We learned t hat Penrod was enrout e here but I didn didn't know you were here so s oon ."

The soldiers now formed themselves into a new proc ession or parade and marc hed t ward general Evans headquarters t ovesc ort t hem to t he b a beautiful st ruct ure and t o perform t hose c eremonies proper to the occ as s ion . But while t he soldiers in the proc ession marc hed.Evans had placed t he boy and two Princ esses on t heir horses, and hade Michaellena and t he others to follow and therefore they led the way.Yet des pit e being Princ ess es

Violet and her sist ers n ever showed t hems elves in any way as on y superior being or more exalt ed t han t heir Fat hers subject and looked upon all as t heir equal and loving friends and c ompanions .

Seein g that t hair friends were pret ty hungry Violet dec ided t o let t hem have s omet hin g to eat , and t herefore ordered some of the s oldiers to go into t he veget able garden s.They brought s t raw berries and ot her easily eat able veget ables an d delicious fruits of which t hey at e heartily. T he soldiers who brought t hem were offered t heir hearts s hare t oo. Michael lena cont inually c alled general Man ley names bec ause she had heard s o much about him and his t r treac hery.As they cont inued on t he lit tle girl Mable said;

"I don't believe t hat wic ked general John Man ey is a great gen eral at all."

"N o"answered Penrod"You are quit e right .In t he s t riet sens e of t he word he is not only a general or not a general, but only a humbug."

"Man e Manley and his t wo sons have always been a humbug."agreed Violet while Daisy a was almost laughing."I and my sis ters have known John Man ey a long t ime.But he is dangerous just t he same."

"If that is so that he is a humbug"said Jim"How could he somet imes wors t a good sized chris tian army like he did."

"Don't know"said Dais y hers elf"But it mus t have been by t reachery.He an d all his Glandelinians are c alled "Man g boos "bu bec ause t hey're s o cruel, savage and c old hearted ed.It 's they mostly who committ t hose horrible mas sacres of c hildren which we have seen ."

"Very t rue"declared Pen rod n dd nodding at her."Itbis often nec ess ary as it seem for him to decieve an y of our chris t ian generals , but I don 't mind t ellin g you who are my lit tle sisters, t hat t he main one we have t o look out for, is t he Federals, Izner Mylet ze, and C lancy.They really are expert generals and dan gerous ."

"I s aw that Mylet ze several times wit h my own eyes ."exc laimed Zeb. "So did I."said Mic haelena.

"Where."

"N ear C asaplan ia when he made an invasion t here. Did you ever s ee him Penrod!"

"T o be sure."ans wered t he boy."You don't believe me but I'm t ellin g you all t he t rut h. I almost capt ured him one e wit h my boy s couts ."

"I heard of that"said Violet ."If you had Glandelin ia would have lost a great general.You were double c rossed.T at is how he got away."

"Yes and I capt ured and made shoRt of those double c ross ers t oo"s aid Penrod."I forgot t o ment ion it .When I s earc hed one of t hose men who attacked you wit h t he kn ife I found somet hin g in his pocket .T his is how he come t o kn ow you were t he one they s hould kill.I got it in my inside poc ket now.It 's a pict ure of you, a phot ograph."

"Let 's s ee it "said Daisy, eagerly.

Penrod felt c arefully in his pocket as he rode on , and pulled out t he t iny phot ograph.

"Oh what a cun nin g beaut iful lit tle picutre."c ried Mic haellena.

"Be careful"said Violet"Don't c rus h t he pic ture.

"Could you get a duplic ate of it and have on e made for me!"as ked Zeb in a pleadin g voic e."I'm awfully stuck on it ."

"Why Zeb."said Violet laughingly"What a foolis h litt leques t ion ."Sure we could easily en ough. I could give you t his one if you wan t it ."

S he happened to overhear Zeb murmur to himself;

"T he poor lit tle gen erous girls.It his dreadful t o see an d hear what t he Glandelinians do to t hem."

"I should say so and indeed"grunt ed Penrod who overheard the words ."Glandelin ians are as c ruel as men wit hout hearts ."

"T hey're not really cruel."said Zeb yawning."Cruel is not the word for it.T he devils are Sain ts in comparis on."

"We can n ot let t hem get at the Princ ess s es even no matter why"de c lared Penrod in a s t ern voice."T e Glandelin ians have just for what t hey don e to Violet an d her sis ters st artled and horfified t he whole world.Some day I'm going t o prove I can be c ruel t oo.The n ext man t hat t ries t o kn ife any of t he lit tle Prin c ess es I hope t o take alive. I'll build a slow fire aroun d him s tark naked and ross t him like a lamb.T hat is the on ly way to prove wo boy and girlscouts mean busines s ."

""How did they happen t o at tack you Violet !"asked Dais y."I never heard of such a t hin g before."

"They came as soon as my bac k was turned."said Penrod."I must con fes s t o you Dais y t here is somet hin g the mat ter wit h my ears .They are all right but t hey're unusual.My doct or said I got what he c alls 2 "Pus ey foot " ears. I can hear a cat walkin g"and t o prove it t here goes on e n ow" and she obitely t hey looked for he was not even stan ding in a pos it ion t o see it , and Dais y and Violet was amazed.

"But how did t hey get int o your room so easily"As ked Dais y lookin g pleadin l pleadingly into Violet s face."T hat is he if he heard t hem."

"I wasn 't in my room."said Violet "Pen rod had just left me at t he door and I just opened it when I was att acked and pushed in .But it all happened t he moment Penrods back was turned and he was s t ill at his own door.I called for help byt but it was all over before I finis hed t he las t word.I n ever knew Penrod c ould s hoot so good."

"I have an idea"said Pen rod"That t here are fis hes in t hes e brooks. You lit tle girls like fish."

"Fish."cried c ried Violet ."Do I like Fis h.Why t hat is better t han meat ."

"T hen I'll try t o catch you some."said he.

"But won't they be mof mere s mall nothings like t hings usually found in brooks."asked Dais y.

"I t hink not .wis hes are large in brooks too s ometimes ."

Penrod bent a pin for a hook, and took a long piece of s tring from his poc ket for a fis h lin e. Violet dug up some worms for him.He s till s at his horse as he t hrew the end of his line in to the wat er of a near by brook and soon felt a sharp tug that t old him a fis h had bitten , and was s ufh caught on t he bent pin, so t he hor drew in t he s t ring, and s ure en ough a big fis h c ame wit h it , large en ough for a whole family an d was landed saft ly on the shore, where it began to flop aroun d in great excitement.T he fish looked like a perch and its scales glins glist ened like beaut iful cut jewels.Violet t ried t o grab it up in s her hands but it was slippery and flopped from t hem down in t o Zebs t rous ers and it added t o t he merri ment as he t ried t o disengage it which he finally did. Penrod rat ain ed t he s ti st ring to the fish and slung it s till wrigglin g over his s houlder. Violet happened to remember t hat in t he corner of her valise were on e or two boxes of crackers t hat were left over from her lunc heon on t he t rain and s he went to her horse and brought them. Thes e she decided t o munch on as they rode on for they wouldn't be eatin g fis h un t ill t hey got bac k. T he fish had to be fried.Penrod captured four more fishes and t hen s aid;

"N ow let us go back t o t he camps.T hat is if Jim has had en ough of t he sight s."

"I've t i t ried to s ee plenty while I had t he c hen ce."said he."But I am ready t o go now, at any t ime you wish.So aft er Zeb had put t he pict ure Violet gave him in t o his ins ide poc ket , t hey all remounted t heir hors es and s t arted for the direc tion of Evan s headquarters .Fredrick N and s led t he way.

"Wherech shallwe say!"asked Penrod.

"You will s tay wig wit h us as you'revour brot her now you kn ow."replied Violet .

"I t hink I shall t ake possession of Jack Evan s room as he wants us four t ogether."replied Penrod and "and when your sis ters come we will be again reunited.For Jen nie had said t o me when she plea ed t o me t o cover Violet , that she would keep w me together wit h her sisters always, and t hef t herefore we belong wit h Jack Evans as he too is t heir chief guar i guardian."

Violet agreed t o t his plan, and when t hey reached t he great s quare t hey st opped before t he building.

"It cert ainly does look very home like."said Violet gazin g aroun d at t he han dsome room she en tered."It is sure some beaut iful place to s tay anyhow."

T hey t hen walked up t he s tairs, and reached t he upper hll.They went up so fast they were nearly out of breath when t hey came to t he t op, and perc ieved a doorway leadin g in t o halls in t he upper part of t he house. Followin g these halls t hey discovered a number of small but beaut iful bed rooms opening from them and t he beds were beaut iful and clean.

"I won der if anybody ever slept in t hem."s aid t he girl."

"Why there seems to be no end of adventure in our lives"Penrod replied. "Very t rue."agreed Dais y."But it 's a lon g time sin ce I have had any sleep an d I'm t ired.S o I think I s hall lie down upon one of t hose beds and take a nap."

"I will t oo"said Violet, and chose and lit tle room at t he end of t he hall. Penrod kn own ing t hat en emies could be even hidden wit hin t he chris t ian lines stood on guard but in hidin g. But n o one dist urbed t hem.

When Penrod went to the door where Zeb had lain down.The little boy havin having g had a good morning sleep, felt rest ed and refreshed, and lookin g in t he doorway he saw Zeb s it ting up on his bed and yawn in g.So Penrod went in t o him.

"Zeb"said he"I wish you would go t o my horse in t he stable, and fet c h my sat c hel, t he t wo lantrems t ock off t he train, and ot her t hin gs that are t ied t o t he saddle.There is nothing els e that I c are about ."

So t he boy went willingly upon the errand, and by the time he returned

Violet was awak .Then Dais y got up n and t hey held a council to decid[illegible]It t what t hey should do n ext, but could t hink of no way t o better the con dit ion.

"I don't like the way these Glandelinians are now a days."said lit tle Dais y. "T hey're getting fiercer and fiere fiercer in spite of what we t ry t o do."

"I agf agree with you."I don't believe there is any warm blood in t hem."remarked Penrod.

"And they surely must have no heart s;--so t hey c an't love any one--n ot even t hemselves ."declared Zeb.

"Do you t hin k Dais y dear"asked Violet "t hat our sisters will saft ly make t he journ ey. If t hey are really comin g I c an have Evans delay t He advanc e bec ause T don't care to have them risk t oo much danger as I'm worrid about t hem makin g t he trip.I am surprised you came so saftly.Then if t here was any place to go I'd like to go there since I believe I'm t t hrough with Gerald S t arring for a while."

"But is there an y ot her s afe place bes ides Jennie Tory!"as ked Penrod.

"I don't know"she ans wered "But is it safe for them "she con t inued t o Dais y.

"I s hould s ay it is"she answered."Do you t hink t hey'd go without a big cavarly es cort .I went alone but I was covered and you didn 't know it ."

"We e coveredyou t oo sa"said Penrod.

" Just t hen they heard t he voice of one of t he soldiers callin g t o t hem, and going t o the doorway leading t o t he big hall, t hey found general Jack Evans n and his s t aff had come int o t he recept ion room.S o they went down t o greet t he great general wh who said to t hem;

"I have been talkin g with my advisers about t he approach of your s ters . We know t he road by which t hey're comin g and I an going t o go down it wit h a portion of my army.We can meet t hem t hat way and knowing an army is c oming that way I'm sure no Glandelinit n hordes will dare attack t hem or t heir escort .And for t heir own saft y we mus t not remain here."

"How soon are we going t o advanc e!"asked violet .

"You don't object do you I hope!"asked Evans.

"Oh we cannot objec t to anything you do Evans dear bec ause it always was so disas terous to thev.en gny.S o you can go right ah ahead.But what will happen if a Glandelinian horde att acks my sis ters ."

"That hord will be des t royed."was the answer.

"In what way."

"We shall t hrow forward your big squadron of c hild scouts which is in t his army called as you know"The Twinin g Vines"said Evans "and t hough lit tle girls an and boys on ohlr horseback as t hey are, t hey will soon c rush the enemy, and save your darlin g sis ters especially if their es cort got wors t ed.The survivors we will drive int o oblivion.Then unt ill t hey get here your darling sisters will be rid of t heir un welcome enemies ."

"But you are in need of a s trong rot ainer to guard t he advanc e!"said Penrod." nd are we sure which road the Prin c esses will take.I am a greater scout t han any scout t hat ever rode a horse.But I wouldn't want to ris k t raveling on a road wit hin t hese territories that I know not hing about . I believe for my part it is safer t o remain for a whole while."

"I believe your advice" is t rue"said Violet "But I do not fear anything for I hv have just recieved information that my s isters are too far off t o reach us for t wo or three days yet , and are acc ompanied by an army.So we could advance."

Then Dais y said;

"Oh Evans dear, before we advance let me see a good en t ert ainment . I was inin formed by some of t he sildiers t hat Penrod is a Wizard at all sorts of weapons .Let us s ee his art s, and t he drills he is able t o perform.I hear d he even disarmed you in a sham knife fight t his very morn in g when you want ed t o prove he was a bet ter on e."

"Anything you say Dais y but t his will be for you an d Violet and Zeb and the ot her children alone."

Then he drew his kn ife and Penrod did t he s ame.It T he kn if knives were covered as before, and t he bot h of t hem repeated t he sham kn ife fight . It en ded a lit tle quicker t his time indeed, and Evans kn ife when flyin g int o a was t s basket .Daisy was truly sat on is hed as any little girl could be.But afterwards she said;

"I don't need to ask about horseback riding for I have s een him and s o have my sis ters perform horse back tric k riding t hat looked like won derful magic t o me.what else did he do t o day.?"

Penrod exhibited his shoot in g qualities by shoot in g a brah branch from a t ree through an open window.T hen he joined t oget her t he blades of t he s trange sword Evans had rot ain ed, and cut an other sack full of sand in t wo but he struck so hard t his t ime that t he t wo sect ions flew but of t he window.

hen he showed an as t onishing feat. He told Violet to place a old hat again st the wall which s he did.Then e he rejointed t he blades of t he s word, balan c ed it very s killfully upon t he end of his nose, gave a sudden forward thrust of his head, and t he sword flew from his nos e and st ruck point firs t in t o t he hat and stuck t here.Violet and Daisy and even Evans and Zeb and t he others gasped at t his feat .

But there was still another feat that he could accomplish that was more sur pri surprising still.H illia ryes fell on two good sized lantrens and a ca n of kerosene oil which one of the soldiers had brought from a wagon, a d he got

"Your Excellency"said he smiling"and my two dear sisters"I will now proceed to prove my ability by creating an act which I heard thousands had triedvto achieve and which they had never succeeded in doing before, also I will exhibt a destroyer which in case of a necessity , could save the little darlings in the face of the seeming impossibilities.this destroyer is more dreadful than even the wo rst of our machine guns and yet it ain't a gun either. "

So he placed violet on one side of him and Daisy upon the other, and at a distance placed the two lantrens.

"on't be over surprised."he h whispered to them."Iem going to snuff the light out of each lantren by shooting through the very glass."

"Say."said Evans"Do you mean you can do that?"

"ust wait and see."

Then without even dignitiy or any look of importa nce upon his face but more of that of humbleness the boy got out his match box and lighted the two lantrens and had each flame burning as high as possible without their smoking.It indeed at that distance to which they were put it seemed an impossible feat and Evans aboutely aboustely doubted it could be done.He never saw any lantren put out except by blowing.They gleamed steadily and clearly!first to show what he could do he sa id to violet and Daisy;

"Of your sisters and most of the rest of us you two are the best crackshots.I don't want to be over confident?I'll give you each a try of ten shots and see if you can do it yourselves!"

They took the try with rifles and strange to say even did not touch the lamps. And they didn't ,iss miss on purpose either.

"Some others started to laugh.

"on't la ugh"Penrod said almost sternly."This is an exhibit ion not a joking affair.None of you could hit the lamp either I'll be t."

The soldiers were much impressed because they had never before seen any persons trybto even ac hieve such an almost impi impossible featvand yet doubyed doubtedvthat Penrod could do it too.He aimed his rifle and fired quickly at the first lamp! 'Crack' when went the rifle.o the surprise of all there was no light and the glass was shattered. A murmur of great surprise went up from every body.He aimed again, and though the light went out, the mom entum of the bullet carried the lamp off the stump. Everybody was held speechless.Next the boy produced from his valise a funny looking gun.It appeared like a huge rifle but of a toy make.It shot no bullets but had a strange large looking bulb in the rear of it. He poured in the kerosene and mixed it with gasolene and turpentine.They thought the bulb was to be squeezed but it was not.He only pressed the trigger and some oil squirted out.

"Everybody get out of the way"he shouted.

eeping his hand on the trigger he lighted the end of the gun, and a huge hundred tongues of flame shot forward to a great distance with a roar giving forth huge clouds of black smoke.It was the first liquid fire gun any body had ever seen here.As soon as he released the trigger it stopped.Then he took from his pocket a little funny box and opened it.He pulled the trigger again and for a secon seconds time placed it against the puzzle and pressed on a button.He released his hand from there none too soon and the same surprising feat was acco mplished.

" always carry this gun with me for an emergency."he said."ou saw how far that flame was shot.So those of the Glandelinians who wish in my presence to make iolet and her sisters or any children prisoners or wish to massacre them just need to step in my way that's all."

"I don't think the glandelinians would like that test a second time"Said Evans amq zed a mazed!"ou my lad are the greatest little boy we have ever known. Nobody but you could put the lights out of a lamp with rifle shot s and if you can with a rifle at that range its still easier for you with pistols.As it is evident that the Princesses have choosen you wisely for a little brother I am positively sure no harm will ever come to them even if they do get captured once in a while."

Penrod was so pleased to have gained the generals great confidence that he could say nothing.For tw o or three hours after this our friends were in the headquarters enjoying themselves together.

Finally after a little lunch before dinner they w.n went out to see the view as they had nothing else to do. They were surprised to see a mass of something in the distance moving forward and they were grey and some carried Glandelinian Standards. There was some firing everywhere further off but they thought thevenemy was only trying to fde feel the christian lines and so they were not excited.

A PART OF EVANS ARMY IN ACTION AT HENRIETTA.

BUT THE CONFLICT IS SEVERE AND DESULTORY.

yet paisy herself became a little suspicious. Zeb himself had gone to sleep in the generals headquarte·s, and a number of the child scouts boys and girls were running around on the floor of the generals biggest room playing games with each other and amusing themselves, and some from found the general's door ajar and wandered into the hall and then into the basement of the magnificent building. They even commenced to frisk and play with Michaelena and her sister and brother as if they had known each other for years.

Suddenly these children heard Evans voice calling out in sterntorian tones, and some distance off the sound of very severe firing. They looked out the windows to see a rising filed some distance off filled with the fierce Mic-Mollestinians who are called "Mangaboos" because they are so savage and cruel. Each of the Glandelinians rushed on outstripping the other with fixed bayonets which was thrust defiantly tward the christian troops who were resisting them. And and strange to say it was the section of the christian lines where the two vivian girls and Penrod were that were so fiercely attacked.

What the child scouts had heard from Evans was;

"Here stop those foolish Glandelinian devils before they swarm into the camp!"

and he roared this command angrily. Every boy and girl scampered out of the house instantly and ran frantically for their own part of the camp. They knew themselves what to do if this section of the camp was overwhelmed. The Glandelinian attack was brave indeed but the soldiers compressed them on three sides, and a scathing fire from hidden positions of the child scouts cut them down in dreadful numbers, so the Glandelinians still retaining solid ranks slowly retreated untill they were driven from the field and road and out across the field the persueing christians increasing in numbers. Here from another direction advanci advanced another column of soldiers, pinkie Abyssinkilians and silently they now urged the amazed and half frightened Glandelinians on a faster retreat. A Regiment of Glandelinians snarling with rage tried to cover the retreat of the others but suffered heavy loss. They found out that the christian army at any section were ready and able to protect the pretty little girls from any injury whatever. Slowly slowly but steadily the troops drove the heartless" Mangaboos" on untill they passed through the Henrietta Lanes and over some recent gardens and other fields and came to the broad plains leading to the hills.

"What does thismean anyway!" asked one of the higher officers coming up with more troops.

"Why those christian dogs are driving us tward out own position" replied the defeated general. "If I were in your position I'd fight these miserable turnip roots but they surprised us and from unseen spots a dreadful fire had been poured upon us."

"You're cowards every one of you" cried the higher officer. "Rally your soldiers and stand ground."

"All right I'll do it" said the officer. "And if we win I'll kill that Vivian Girl violet, and Penrod too."

Ten minutes later they had rallied and they counter charged against the advancing christian troops as hard as they could. A dozen of their platoons of men were swept away, and seeing their success the Glandelinians pressed the fierce attack again and again charging into the crowded lines of the christian troops disperi desperising some of their regiments in all dir directions and sending a whole line on the retreat to escape their iron steel and so forth. General Eureka helped by coming up with a battery, and these troops also charged the christians furiously and brought down so many christian soldiers that the christian soldiers feared them as much as they did the Mangaboos! But the foes were too many to be repulsed for long. They tired the Glandelinian columns out and came more and more against them in very strong concentration, and although the field of battle was thickly covered with the fallen christian soldiery, the Glandelinians had to give up at last and allow themselves to be driven back to their own position.

When they recoiled to their position the situation looked dismal and forbidding in the extreme. Half way up to them was a long wave of advancing victorious christians moving defiantband exultant bent on getting even for the sudden attack upon them. In their advanced position they gave the christians resistance enough to have probably stopped a legion of angels if it could be done, but nevertheless the Abbiesinnians and Angelinians drove the christians beyond this position, and having pushed the last regiment before them they took possession of the works and "All Hell" couldn't get them out of it again.

The Christian troops were not even satisfied with this they began to concentrate more against the surprised foe so that the Glandelinians could not even dare move from their works to retreat to the main positions and encampments.

"This is dreadful" groaned general Jim Scalto. "It will be the end of our adventure I guess. Why did Crazy Manley sent us only to try and capture that little gutter snipe."!

"If general Wizard was here" said one of his lieutenants "He would not see us suffer so."

"We ought ought to have called to him and general Dorothia when we were first counter attacked." added Eureka! "But never mind, be brave my friends, and I will send a courier and have him give the news of our precarious position and get them to come to our rescue. And we may succeed yet in getting the little brats."

The christians were already pressing them back from these works now, but the courier managed to gallop through the battle lines. A number of christian soldiers saw him dash away, and a number first opened fire, and missing some of the cavarly mounted their horses and gave chase. The man however had a faster horse than they and he soon left them far behind. Then he entered the main Glandelinian position of a vast full Glandelinian army and aroused Manley to the danger of the situation.

As soon as the general knew what had happened they went he went to notify general Turner and a newc division of Glandelinians was sent to the aid of general Jim. The aid readily came in division after division but it was of no use the enemy couldn,t drive them back. The works had to be abandoned and for good.

Violet, paisy, and Penrod with great exultency observed the whole fray. A great crowd of child scouts also watched. Violet was so exultant she was dancing up and down with excitement. The firing after four hours of it soon ceased which proved that the enemy could not accomplish anything. Penrod realizing the situation said to the little girls;

"My dears what shall we do if this happens again! Jump out and fight too?"

"What's the use" replied Violet. "But if they tried to capture us I would. I'd as soon die here fighting as be captured by those cruel and heartless Glandelinians. You know what they would do to us with their sharp knives."

"That's the way I feel about it" remarked Zeb. "I've seen so much of them I've had enough og those Mic-Mollestinians."

"All right" said Penrod "I'm with you whatever you decide. But its safe for us to go out a distance before we eat. Let's go out and explore the better part of the camp. We'll tell Evans so he'll have us covered."

Noting the light of day was growing dim he picked up his hat which he had dropped from his hand in his excitement and placed it carefully on his head. Zeb struck a match and lighted one of the lantrens. The rays of the afternoon sun were now shut out from them by the clouds of smoke that again spread across the sky from the east.

"How big is that southeastern forest fire by this time?" asked violet.

"I'll explore it and see." replied Penrod.

"Yes" said Violet "do. I'll appreciate the miracle" and penrod then laughed.

It was getting very dark. Penrod carried the lantren to light the way, while Violet and Daisy followed at his side. The coming darkness did not come to an end as they had hoped and expected it would, but it did not get worse either. They went up a road that slanted upward tward a good sized hill covered with the christian encampments, and which ran in a direction that promished to lead them to the side of the christian lines opposite that at which the petty battle had taken place.

"It surely isn,t a bad road." observed Penrod "and if we c follow it it might lead us to some part of the camp where we will probably meet some of our old acquaintances. I suppose the wicked Glandelinians were always afraid to attack any of these portions of the christian positions because it is too well defended. It would however be a good advantage to them in the dark to make a surprise attack."

"If anything was going to happen don't you think the lantrens would betray us?" asked Daisy.

"I believe you're right." said Penrod. "I'll blow it out." and he did. Instead of their horses this time they were on foot, but Penrod was going cautiously along the way, Zeb leading while Daisy and Violet each held on to penrod so they would know they were safe. Sometimes the road was so narrow that they had to walk single file or walk on the grass apart from one another, then it would broaden out as wide as a street, but also the road was terribly dry and dusty, and for a long time they traveled on without any accident accident. They stopped sometimes to rest for the climb was rather steep and tiresome.

"We must be nearly as nigh as though we were climbing a mountain by this time" said violet,,,,."I didn't know this hill was so tall."

"We are certainly a good distance away from the land of the "Mangaboos"added Zeb"for we have planted away from that direction ever since we have started and by the way of the numbers of soldiers here the thickness of the tents all the way up we are getting back to Evans headquarters and ought to be there before dinner."

But they kept steadily moving, and just as they were abu about tired out with their long journey the atmosphere suddenly began to grow lighter. To their joy they observed a shift in the wind was driving away some of the smoke for they were all weary of this continued smoky darkness, which after a time had made their eyes ache with the constantly pressing smoke and murkiness.

As itb grew lighter they found themselves face to face with a view of a charming country spread before them. By looking down from the top now of the hill with general Evans headquarters in the distance they observed a delightful country side, but here too they observed that for some reason or other there was a huge hollow or depression in the ground that was shaped like the hollow of a great cup and half full of water. The hills at a far distance were purple in hue. The ground far below were all laid out into lovely lawns and gardens with pebble paths leading through them and great groves of beautiful trees dotting the landscape here and there. There were many orchards too bearing luscious fall fruits that are all unknown in our world. Alluring brooks of crystal water flowed sparkling between their fall flower strewn banks, while scattered over the countryside were dozens of the quaintest and most picturesque cottages and country catholic chtttdhs Chruchs violet and daisy or penrod had ever seen. Some of them were in clusters such as villiages and towns, but the buildings even in the to n towns had ample grounds of their own with orchards and gardens surrounding it. As they gazed upon this exquisite scene they were enraptured by its beauties and the fragrance that permeated the soft air which became clean and clear now of smoke and which they breathed so gratefully after the confined smoky atmosphere. Several minutes were consumed in silent admiration before they noticed two very singular and unusal facts about this country. One was that it took on pecular shades in the reddened sun. The second and even more singular fact was the absence of any inhabitants of this splendid place. From their elevated position they could overlook the entire country side, but not a single moving object could they see. All appeared mysteriously deserted. But they soon realized why. To their left but at some distance in the lower country also extended a new and vast encampment. The striped tents and their gray tops told them"the enemy". But he was too far off to do any harm. With some difficulty they walked over the loose rocks untill they reached the green lawns some distance above nearest Evans headquarters where the mountain side paths orchards and gardens began. His headquarters however was 3 was still some distance away.

"Isn't it fine!"cried violet, in a joyious voice as she sprang forward over the velvety grass.

"Yes indeed"answered Penrod. "We were lucky to get this far away from the danger of those dreadful glandelinians. They would have a hard time carrying this hill."

"It wouldn't be so bad"remarked Zeb gazing around him"If there was no crazy war and we were obliged to live here always. We could not find a prettier place I'm sure. Even though itb is a reminder of a wicked army yet even the glandelinian tents because of their bright tri colored strips and gray tops even add to the beauty."

He took some crackers from his pocket and began to nibble on them. He offered some to the little girls but theybdeclined saying they would rather wait and eat their dinner.

"I'd give anything if you two little girls could walk walk through the air though."said Zeb."I heard some angel possessed children can do that."

"Maybe we could"said violet."But we won't try it. It's taking chances. But anyway we are satisfied to walk on the ground."

"I wonder why it is so deserted down below"said daisy."Is it because of the enemy. I'm always wondering where are the people?"

Penrod shook his head.

"You little girls surely know by now why no people would stay where an enemy camp is close by."he said."Fathers and mothers don't want to see their children torn from them and gutted before their eyes."

They heard the sudden twittering of a boid but could not find the creature anywhere. Slowly now they walked along the path tward Evans headquarters. Presently they came to a low plant which had had broad spreading leaves in the center of which grew a single fruit as large as a peach. The fruit was so daintily colored and so fragrant and looked so appetizing and delicious that violet stopped and exclaimedg in happy excitement;

"What is it do you suppose!"she reached out her hand to pluck it, when Penrod said-

"I see glandelinians. A regiment of them down below in the fields beyond."

"Where are they !" asked violet and Daisy together, in astonishment mingled with a little fear.

The rest all looked in that direction, but the glandelinians had all disappeared.

"Dear me"cried Penrod"They must have suspected something and ran away. But I was looking that way and did not see them go. Did you!"

"No"replied the children together.

"I think I saw them now"said Mih Michaellena.

"Where !"called Penrod.

Several strange sounds were heard in the direction of the Glandelinian camps, were instantly heard, but Penrod nor the others could discover a single man in gray.

"Where are they!"he asked again.

"Why they were to our right."declared violet."Can't you see them!"

"No" answered Penrod in a puzzled tone.

"Be careful they can see us."said Daisy.

They laid themselves down flat. Though the others claimed they did see them he couldn't see a soul.

"It is very strange he "he said soberly."The G a Glandelinians either have become invisible in some way or have hiding places into which they can go before they are seen."

"I'll bet it is because they see us outlined against the summit of this hill and believe we are scouting on them."cried Daisy.

"It couldn't be possible."said violet."I only hope they don't train any cannon on us. I dread shrapnell. That's the worse missles there are."

"It would be fine excitement though"declared Daisy.

"Yes. I believe it would be."Said violet with a smile."I remember how wildly your heart was beating when one exploded right above us two weeks ago."

"But we must not let any of their long range gunners see us apparently spying on them here."Penrod warned the children"Now we too may be caught under shrpanell ifire and there's nothing does more havoc than those little explodina devils. If we see any suspicious scenes we must drop out of sight."

The travelers now resumed their walk, tward the building which they presently reached. General Evans headquarters indeed was a pretty place with vines growing thi thickly over the broad front porch. The door stood open and a long table was set in the front room with chairs enough for Penrod Evans and his followers. This time Evans generals were to eat in their own quarters as Evans wished the three heroic children by themselves with him. On the tables were decorated plates, new knives and forks and dishes of bread, meat and fruits and vegetables. The meat was smoking hot. Only one man was waiting on the table getting things ready. While they were eating several persons who appeared to be strangers came looking into the doorway. One was a little girl with her brother.

"What beautiful little girls with the boy."exclaimed the little girl who stood in the doorway.

A peal of merry laughter answered her, and violet Daisy and Penrod let their knives and forks fall to the plates with a clatter. Evans had pushed back his chair from the table, and this was so astonishing and mysterious that the little girl was almost tempted to run away in fright.

"Here are strangers Evans dear."violet cried to him in her shrill and childish but bird like voice.

"So I see my dear."answered the general."what do you want my child."?

"Well, well"said a man who stood now in the door way too"Are there really good christian people in this room."?

"Of course we are "replied Evans.

"And pardon me sir for the foolish question---"But are you all Christians?"

"Surely"Daisy answered, repeating her low rippling childish laughter."Are you surprised that you are not unable or able to understand why two of us are so angelic in features?"and she winked at Evans and Penrod.

"Why yes indeed"sa stammered the man."All people I ever met were here in this army all the soldiers, and soldier children are good looking but I never saw two like you little girls."

"Where do you come from, then if you never saw or heard of us!"asked violet in a curious tone.

"We belonged to one of those villiages down in the territory belong this hill" explained the man"But recently because of that glandelinian army down there we fled away. I'm afraid they'll murder my two children here."

"Dreadful creatures."Exclaimed Daisy."I and my little sister here had plenty experience with them."

"They burned my home."continued the man truthfully""But we found refuge in this great big holy army. We were sent up here to see general Evans. This is a beautiful army I like the tents in color better than those striped things below. What do you call it."?

"It is St Michaels Camp."

" hThank you.Re have seen no soldiers in the company Street s since we arived so we came to this house to inquire our way to General Jack Evans headquarters."

"I understand. Are you hungry.?"asked violet.

"I could eat something"said the little girl.

"So could I."added the boy who was her brother.....

"but then we do not wish to intrude, I assure you." the father hastened to say.

"That is all right if these dear little girls say so."returned the general very pleasantly."you are welcome to what we have. And if you need aid in what you are looking for the general for.I can get you the aid you need.I'm the general himself."

As he spoke the man jumped in surprise. violet and Daisy could not help laughing merrilyat this action, and the little girl was sure they were in no danger among such light hearted children, even if the little girls appeared to have celestial beauty and delicateness.

"what prompted you to come all this way?"inquired the general.

"I wented to get some aid from a cavarly squadron."said the little girl."My mother was captured by the Glandellnians and we wanted help."

Evans at once stood up."where did they take her?"was his next question.

"They took her to the child slave encampment."she explained.

"couldn't the poor woman fight and get away?"asked the general.

"O she can kick pretty hard with her feet and bite and scratch a little, but she can't exactly fight."she replied.

"Then we will get her back."said the boy who sat between Violet and Daisy.

"Are you sure you little girls could do it."

"what's the one thing they can do and is fail to fail in anything they attempt whether I'm with them or not."answered Penrod."They have outwitted many large and fierce Glandelinian columns of cavarly, and they have seldom been caught, and when they were caught they either escaped themselves or were rescued."

"but how can your two children friends do it.They're so delicate that they look like they would cry if a bee stung them."

"We look that way I believe that"said violet."but we can do it nevertheless.This whole army is under our command whether you knew it or not.I'm violet Angelic vivian daughter of emperor vivian; this is my brother; and"Indicating Penrod, and here is my youngest darlingest sister."

"The vivian Girl Princesses"exclaimed the man in great astonishment."Why I---I---"

"ou need not be afraid of us for that"Daisy laughed."We know how to k keep being seen by our enemies, whether human or animal."

"When you have so many soldiers in your armies wh why do you do the spying yourselves?"the little girl inquired astonished for she had heard of violet and her sisters before but never had even seen a picture of them.

"For two good reasons my dear"violet answered."Spying on the enemy is the most exciting adventure that we know of, and it is our duty to do it as the nations safty depends upon us. and because none of the soldiers know how to do it for that was proved.We have many helpers in detectives and the like but without us they can do nothing.but now good waf wanderers your luncheron is on the table, so please sit down and eat as much as you like, and rest easy as to your dear mother.I'll summon help by a mysterious code which I'll write now."

The strangers took their seats at the table willingly enough, while the vivian girl wrote down a note and handed it to an aidecamp who speddily brought the slip of paper to one of the christian cavarly generals who at one once started off with an enormous column to bring back that woman at whatever the cost.They indeed were all hungry and the platters were now heaped with with good things to eat. In front of each plate was a smaller dish bearing one of the delicious fruits that violet had seen growing on the plant and the perfume that arose from these was so enticing and sweet that they were sorely tempted to eat of them first but atisfied their hunger with other things first.

"hat made it that you did not seek some other section of the christian lines?"asked asked violet.

"We didn't want to be seen by any one we didn't know."

"but as you remained in such a locality it was surprising Glandelinian patrols didn't see and destroy you."said Daisy."We ourselves when we go on scouting parties always hug and kiss each other almost a last good bye because often we don't know whether our ourvadventure would be a safe one or not."

"and when we scout we don't have to be so particular about our uniforms."remarked Penrod.

The little girl laughed and stretched out her hands.

"Come here please, violet, and your darling little sister---and let me hug and feel of you!"she requested.They came to her willingly, and the little girl whose name was orothy passed her hands over their faces and forms and decided they were as pretty as angel children in heaven.She felt that the hair of the two little Princesses was soft and fluffy and their skin as smooth as silk. orothy could see their nose and ears and lips were well and delicately formed.

"If I could see your five sisters.I am sure the would also be beautiful."

she declared.

Daisy and violet laughed, and violet said;;

"We are not vain and care not to display our pure beauty and good actions and pleasant ways are what makes us lovely more than anything else to our fi friends and companions.If people like us for looks alone they are not worthy to us then. We can anyway see and appreciate the beauties of nature, the loveliness of god whom we'd give anything to have live amongst us at home, the dainty flowers and trees, the green fields and the clear blue of the sky which puts us in mind of the beautiful blue mantle worn by Our Dear Blessed Mother."

"ot about the birds, beast and fishes?"asked the little girls brother.

The birds we cannot see, because all this smoky atmosphere drives them away and we long to hear their sweet songs and so enjoy them again.We hate to see these dirty Glandelinians for they persecute us very much. or what they are we were able to find out it would be a big sin for us not to hate them, for to love them we love God's enemies and the devil, and we can't do that.But the fishes that swim in rivers and brooks we can see, and often we catch them to eat."

"It occurs to me you have a great deal to make you happy, even while you have such thrilling and dangerous adventures."remarked the man."Nevertheless we prefer that you dear little Princesses had remained home where it is safe."

"where is any where safe in these times?"demanded Penrod."People are safer within the army than they are without. just then another boy came in, for he had been untilll now wandering outside looking at the great throngs of soldiers and admiring the huge beautiful colored tents,and when the boy saw the table set with food and his father, brother and sister eating with such strange and beautiful little girls and a uniformed man and boy, he was inclined to be frightened, but his little sister Dorothy reassured him by explaining that the two little girls were Princesses and could and would do no harm to anybody who were good little christians.He was then invited to eat his fill by Evans and the little girls, while the little boy was eating Penrod himself said to the man;

"Can you tell us sir"If there is any route by which general Evans can make a quick un hindered advance for Jennie ory, and encompass the enemy there."

"Oh one can do down this broad dusty road easily enough"answered the man"But to advance further you will have to inter into a far more less pleasant country.As for reaching Jennie ory I never have heard that it is possible for you to do that, and if you succeeded in getting there the enemy would attack you very fiercely."

"Oh no we don't think it is so dangerous."said violet."We've been there and we know."

"Yes you have been there, but not there now."said the man."Things have changed there."

This section of the country is a very charming place."resumed the man."It is better you stay here for the present for the sake of these two little Princesses."

"but we are not afraid of them"said paisy."We cannot even be contented in any other sector than here when we have to go on.Even if we should come to unpleasant places on our way it is necessary for our countrys cause, in order to reach Jennie ory Jennie tory, to keep moving on tward it."

"In that case"said the man"It will be best for your army to cross the territory in a northeastward course.but you'll have to watch out that that big Glande linian army yonder does not follow after you or start any tricks.They have a great big horde of Gargoylian Kurds with them, and I believe you little Princesses know they're the most dangerous mangabbo or Mangabbo Glandelinians of all."

"What are Mangaboos or Gargoyles!"asked his son.

"That's the name giving to Glandelinians becauseythey're as cruel as demons.I heard of one of the christian armies who fought for nine days and nights with these dreadful Glandelinian soldiery before they could escape them and make a safe retreat, but the survivors of the battle could never be induced to describe the dreadful masks of these fierce Glandelinian soldiery,.That Glandelinian army there is under general Raymond Richardson federal and his fierceness at leadership is well known."

Penrod, and the two little Vivian Girls were rather discouraged by this gloomy report, but violet said with a sigh;;

"If the only way to get to Jennie ory is to meet the Gargoylian Kurds, then we have got to meet them.We know them well ourselves.They can't be worst than the Growlywogs, or Turneranniens and Zimmermanniens."

"but you must remember younhad emperor vivian and other great generals with their armies to help you conquer those demons."suggested Penrod."Just how my dear there is not a single decent shape of ground in this whole territory to fight a battle in.The enemy could cover his army while we could couldn't cover our own."

"Oh I guess our dear Jack Evans could fight hard if he had to.couldn't you Evans dear!"asked violet.

"Perhaps I could defeat them even here."answered Evans confidentially.

"and you have a very large fighting army."Daisy said.

"True "he replied"And I have good cavarly squadrons who could do anything good sort of fighting."

"That the Glandilinians under Federal dread the most is that ripping shrapnell fire."said the mans voice."I heard of that from a friend who is a soldier in general Charles Browns army.He told me that during the battle of cedermine along his sector when the christian guns let go such a storm of sphr shrapnell fire the glandelinians shuddered at the sight of such dreadful slaughter and the mangled heaps of wounded and drew back, hesitating to continue the combat.but of course they were in great numbers and they didn't stop untill they really had to."

"Very good"said Penrod"we can also depend on our great hordes of boy and girlscouts for even our general will admit that they're more dangerous to the enemy than even the whole army, so we ought to defeat the Gargoylians or the whole of federals rebel army."

"But tell me"said violet"how did such a brave champion of a christian general who fought for nine days and nights let the glandelinians finally defeat him?"and and who knows that he really was defeated."

"The army of that Champion general had during the battle destroyed eleven great divisions of thevenemy s oldiers."returned the man"and we know this is true, because when any great event occurs the papers are full of it."

The strangers now bade farefull or farewell to the kind general and the loving lovely little vivian girls and penrod, and after the man had called their attention to as slowly rising but high and long hill as a safer route, and told them how to travel in ord e r to reach it, they went awa y to seek the help that Evans promished promished to recover the mother.Unusal to say the mother was rescued and a number of child s laves taken and prisoners besides.

The section of the army in which Penrod and the Princesses were was the first to advance a nd as violaelena were with her sister and brother designed to a child scout troop they were not with the heroines no w.They followed the course of a broad stream, and passed a number of abandoned but pretty villages; but of course they saw no one as everybody had fled.Fruits and flowers grew plentifully about but the marching soldiers cleaned all this up so the enemy could not obtain anything.Penrod a nd the two Princesses had been s ome distance ahead of the army and at about two oclock in the afternoon they stopped to rest, and while they ate a little lunch, a man who was dressed like a civilian rode suddenly up to them and asked;

"Be ye Master Penrod and the Princesses?"

Penrod seeing the man was all right answered;

"Yes."

"Well there are a number of glandelinian scounting pattols about and close by. Be careful."

Penrod drew his sabre at once after remounting his horse.violet and Daisy mounted their horses with the help of penrod.

"You cannot escape so many glandelinians that way."said the man."even yout brothers trick shooting wouldn't succeed in stoppi n g so many."

"How can we escape?"as ked Daisy nervously"for an unseen danger is alt l always the hardest to face.

"You must first take to the river and get back to your army."ead the reply.

"The Glandelinians will not venture upon the water unless their horses a re not "water scared?"

"The current of the river is awful strong."said Violet.

"We would be drowned."said Daisy!"Nobody can swim that current."

"Oh there is no need of that."said the man on horseback."you three are strangers in this part of the country, and do not seem to know the ways of our good farmers, so I'll lead you to a bridge.I know how you can reach your army again."

He bade them follow a nd they did.

"I know a secret which the enemy soldiers do not know, so you can use it to escape if you are persued."said the man."and be careful.They're gargoylians."

"Thank you sir."cried Pen od joyfully. They followed the man to a certain distance till they came in s ight of a small wooden bridge.

"Under the water by the bridge "said the man"there is a bed of quicksand. When you get across you can destroy the bridge."

They reached the bridge and got safely across.Penrod and violet proceeded to pull up the planks while the man started to ride away.Violet and Daisy took hold of one board pried loose by Penrod and tore it loose flinging it down into the water.They had nearly finished the last board, when a low thunder of horses hoofs was suddenly heard.

"Quick get out of sight or you are lost."signalled the man as he too dashed away, and without hesitation, the three remounted their horses, and dashed away.They still still heard the n oise but didn't see no one come.Then around the turn of the road came a column of glandelinian horse horsemen but as they saw the fugitives they also had to halt as the bridge was destroyed.They cursed blasphemed and swore and a sudden roar of carbines greeted the fugitives.violets horse plunged madly for two or three pashes from flying bullets appeared upon its flanks, from which the blood flowed freely!

But no one was hurt.

"Don't follow the course of the river or they'll do the same."said Penrod.

violet and daisy had stopped for a second to answer the fire but a bullet from one of the soldiers k o knocked the pistol out of daisy's hand. They however found themselves safe from persuit on this side of the river, but as they continued toard the christian lines they suddenly dashed into a party of glandelinians who just turned the bend of the road.They were ten with number and they rushed the little party, but penrod was strong for his age and he sabred three of the glandelinians while violet and Daisy dashed away. but they wouldn't abandon Penrod to his peril and taking advantage of the confusion caused by Penrod fight they drew their own sabres and dashed into the fray themselves themselves.Violet sabred a glandelinian officer giving him a bad shoulder wound.The glandelinians beset so fiercely by penrod and the little girls turned in a pan d panic and rushed out upon and across thewater.

After this violet Daisy and penrod seemed to be perfectly safe from furthat danger. violet however had a d light sabre wound on her arm; but penrod took out of his pocket some salve a nd bandages with h which he bandaged the cuts which really the three had recieved from the sabres of the glandelinians.None of the glandelinians had been seriously wounded either; but they were afraid to tackle the three children not having known at first they could fight like cavalry soldiers. And the three of them licked ten robust sturdybwell arm armed soldiers.

"I think we had better stick to the river after this untill we rejoin t our army" said violet."If that unknown friend of ours hand not warned us, and told us what to do; we would all be dead by this time as these glandelinians won't give us any quarter."

"That is true."agreed Penrod"and as the river is flowing in the direction of our army it will be the easiest way for us to travel .After a journey of about ten minutes they came to a point where the river curved and met with the advancing army and here they found they must cross a mile or so of the country before they came to the foot of the mountain.There were few houses in this part; and few orchards or flowe s so our friends feared that even the army might en o encounter a desperate attack; which they had learned to dread being caught in the way of with all their hearts.

"We'll ha ve to make a quick advance in these localities"said Evans riding up"and and you must ride your horses with out cavalry troop.They'll aid you as fast as as they can so you won't have trouble with the patrols again."

"You are right"answered Penrod."I'll do my best to guard the little dears, but you know sir"and penrod grinned"They came to my rescue after I fought the enemy off so they could esca pe."

"You'll learn lots more of thm yet"smiled Evans.

All three joined with the kinkie Abyssinkilian cavarly.violets horse was still snorting from the sharp bullet cuts from the glandelinian shots and therefore violet was able to remount a fresh steed.The thought that more of these fearsome enemy troopers might be near and come in a great a quadron acted as a spur and made them all keep close to the main army; and the whole squadrons galloped onward in a way that made the little g irls and penrod catch their breath.The very legs of the many horses moved so fast that they could scarcely be seen.

"I'm afraid they're all running away."gasped violet.

"o they ain't"said penrod."The cavarly has to do these movements in order to guard every movement of the army from glandelinian horsemen."

The beautiful mountain before them was shaped like a long ridge; but was not too tall; and did not have any deep descents or a scents.The road ran up the slopes and the road was a broader here and not steep. before they continued up violet had told a shocking story which she and six of her sisters had witnessed; and which was a warning to daisy; herself and penrod to be careful and on the watch.Sometime before she had known penrod a lone glandelinian had lassoed her and her sisters together with the one rope fastened them to trees except jolie; and to jolie tied ropes around her leg s and fastened stones to her feet heavy ones.No one was in sight to rescue them and they hanged jolie by the neck to a tree or at least the man did.Daisy said she had prayed desperately heard at the horrid sight; but sisters had fainted.A strong wind had risen while jolie hung strangling there; a wind which had not blown before; and something must have strained the rope by swinging in the wind for it broke and let the child down so suddenly that before the rascal could get away from under the stones tied to her feet landed on his head crushing his brains out.After a f desperate effort she had succeeded in loosening the rope enough to quite chocking; butcouldn't get it loose enough to get back sufficient breath.however she cut the ropes from the stones and finally reached a farm house where a farmer cut the rope from her neck and went with a crowd of men to rescue her sisters.This proves that glandelinians will also tackle enemies with the lasso. Penrod always remembered this story with horror, and he kept also close to them for fear som t something would happen.

"I wonder if the army is ever going to advance up such a rise of ground in a hurry."said violet gravely.

"No trouble at all."declared Penrod, with a contemptuous sneer at the thought of the enemy hanging little girls like them."Still I don't care what the enemy thinks of it we'll march up that hill whether the enemy likes it or not.I wish they just would follow our cavarly."

"Suppose they would surprise and attack us!"suggested Daisy doubtfully.

"The boy and girl scouts are on the look out for such moves.They keep themselves hidd en in secluded spots and places a s they advance with out cavarly."

"What would happen if they tried to capture us:"?

"They would run into a dreadful ambuscade; that is all."answered Penrod grimly."That is the way we treat those gray coated snakes."

"They may beat them anyway."said violet.

"I hope by the help of god they won't;but this is the shortest way to get to Jennie dry.Yet the more I think of what you and your sisters have suffered because of the Glandelinians the more bitter I feel .The story of poor Julia being hanged even if she was saved by that fail, has made me feel absolutely rottten."

"But think what happened to that wicked soldier who hanged her."

"I'm not worrying the least about that;I wish a mountain would fall on them all."

The cavarly bag began to ascend the road the three being between a strong column of armed Winkie cavarly.The light because of great smoke in the sky again was dim; and they feared they would mount into sudden darkness; but no one was allowed to even light a cigarette for fear of attracting the enemy by the glare.But the gradual condition of the ascent enabled every one to proceed steadily untill they came to a winding in the road or rather a turn.They could not see the country below them now because of a strange haze that covered the atmosphere but there was no danger of a fire here because the whole moun tain was pretty free of trees and other high and inflammble growth though grass and flowers were still in abundance. Theycontinued on with ty e climb and still the road was broad and easy climb ing.The horses of the three brave children panted a little, and because of this Penrod wished to allow the horses to stop for breath.The cavarly leader was glad to allow a resting period for sintunual climbing up is sure to make ones a legs ache.The road however did not wind around the hill as supposed but continually went upward, but it sure sure was a gloomy journey; but soon to their left but far down below them there was gradually showing a broad streak of light.As the cavarly men halted to rest they looked upon a strange scene.Below them was a vast space at the bottom of which far to the southeast was a black sea of rolling smoke clouds, through which b lood red flames constantly shot up;it rose far above them into banks of rolling clouds which constantly shifted position and changed color.The blues and greys were very beautiful eve though it was all smoke, and the two brave little girls noticed that seemingly on the cloud banks seemed to sit or recline flessy shadowy forms almost like some strange beings of another world.

"I'm glad those ghostly shadowy forms are not real."said Penrod in a awed voice.

"Of course they ain't."replied violet softly while Daisy giggled."There ain't such things as spooks, spooks, ghosts or phantoms."

"I didn't say they were"said Penrod with a smile."I believe in them though only if I see them in pers on and have witnesses to proof it is not a fake.Nevertheless those shapes seem like open work.If I should squeeze one, there would not be anything left of it."

In the open space between the strangely shaped clouds of smoke, and the black red tinted sea of smoke beneath could be seen on occasional strange shooting red streak of tongue shoot swiftly through the air and disappear.These shoots coming and disappearing were of enormous size and remin ded Penrod of great volcanic eruptions he had read about in volcanic history.They made a fierce sight as they pierced the clouds;; and the children hoped none of theswould happen to shoot across the road where they were.

"Well I declare"said Penrod turning in his saddle."What in the world do you want!"

The two children turned around in their own saddles and found a man standing in the middle of the road; who was somewhat afraid of the boy in uniform and of the cav lry cavarly close by; though the two girls wore their best civilian garb. He bowed very politely when he saw he had attracted their attention. He was a middle aged man tall: with a long bob of white hair and a short beard.He wore and beard were carefully combed.

"Where did you come from, and what do you want Mr!"asked violet sweetingly.

"I am a refugee."answered the man timidly."Once I lived in the country but the enemy destroyed my home wife and children.I have lived in a secluded place on this this mountain for the last year."

"How far up sir are we on this hill by now!"in inquite inquired Penrod in an almost discouraged tone."

"You are about half way up my lad."replied the man "but as I have never been in either direction, down or up; since I arived on this hill to live, I cannot be positive whether it is exactly half way up or not."

"Have you a home on this hill!"asked Penrod, who had been examining the strange personage carefully to make sure he was not any one up to a trick or something.

"I do be sure"said the other."I am a great christian spy you must know, and I can watch every moment of the enemy armies from here and signal to the christian generals."

"What have you discovered now then if you discovered anything!"

"Nothing just yet; except that the enemy army is still stationary where it was before;but a Glandelinian cavarly force of some enormous size it advancing up the hill from another locality."

"I thought that would be so"said Penrod with a sigh."May we be able to see the Glandelinians from here!"

"Yes indeed my lad if you use your field glasses. Come this way, and bring a good cavarly escort with you, the three of you.Don't take any chances for Heavens f sake."

And the man with the long overcoat turned and led the way into a small knol.Here was a sort of small station with a platform on top.

"There is a view from here but for heavens sake don't go up now."said the man as he took a small box and handled it gently.""This box my lad contains ten dozen extremely small but powerful grenades--enough to blow up a big rock with;will you accept them my dear boy.They'll be a great protection to your dear sisters. you little angels need protection."She added addressing violet and Daisy.

"We are not afraid of the enemy."Daisy said smiling.

"I know it;but that am I. But that don't make us safe nevertheless.Will you open the boxes and see how the grenades are"said the man seriously.Then he picked up another box:"In this "He continued"are what looks like many assorted fire crackers.But they are not.They are invaluable as defense against a attacking horde as they set things afire when they explode.You my dear boy"turning to Penrod"ought to have this department.Once you have tried these things, I am sure you will never be without them."

"But my dear man I have no money with me"said the boy evasively.

The man gave a hearty laugh.

"For the sake of your dearest little angel sisters I won't take money for them" he returned."All the reward I want for giving these to you is that they are protected even to all time and are as happy as they family ought to be.You will notice that these little things in the box from their small size look absolutely a fake Hamiland.But wait.I'll light on e of these little grenades and you will see!"

He drew one out, no more bigger than a golf ball.It had a long handle though.He struck a match lit the fuze and flung it far across the road.There came a shocking crash that echoed in the air with a series of bangs, and a great cloud of gray smoke rose high mingled with gravel grass and earth that even from that distance reached them in a shower.

"Think of that landing among the Glandelinians he "he said.

Penrod gladly accepted the explosives.Then the man bade the two children that violet and Daisy come down from their horses for a moment.

"They obe, I obeyed and to Penrods surprise he produced from his pocket a long narrow box and in a few minutes both violet and Daisy had the most beautiful blue ribbons on their hair.It did the man and penrod good to see how the eyes of the two little girls sparkle when they recieved this treasure. They each threw their arms around his neck and kissed him gratefully.

"You have made us very, very happy sir for your good consideration of us and our safty."Violet exclaimed.

"I'm glad to do anything for you he "he said."Don't fear about the explosives for dropping one or falling with them does nothing whatever. I'll throw this one and prove it."He then put it against a rock but there was no result.

"You may need them for defense some time"he continued"and there is really no use in my giving them to you unless you need them.But you are in grave danger and don't or didn't know it.But there'll be no danger with these with you."

"Why did you seek seclusion on this hill!" Enquired Penrod.

"I could not help it.It is a sad story, but if you will try to restrain your tears, I will tell you about it.In the country I had a happy home, and wife and children.They are no more.My home was burned, with my children in it before my very eyes.They t ied to escape and were tossed in the flames.Now "Now the man grew fiercely excited as if he was almost insane from his loss. "I hate these Glandelinians"he stormed."I hate them for what they did you all little children, I hate them what they did to the beautiful Vivian G ir princesses.I'll do in my power all in my power to destroy them by spying if I hang a thousand times a million times for it. Ever since then I have here made my hope, o not for refuge t but to spy.I have spied everywhere.I have went into the enemy lines to enlist as a soldier, and while there I gave information to the christians a hundred fold.I'll get even even if I hang a thousand million times."

When the man had com pleted this strange horrified tale, violet and daisy were almost crying, because it was all so terrible, but Penrod remained grim and silent. Soon the man advanced away and the cave l ca cavarly resumed the journey.

another breath less climb brought the three children themselves to a spot where there was a flat plateau in the on the mountain. They again peered to the southeast and yet all they could see was rolling rolling balmks of black smokeyclouds so thick thw that they obscured all else. but they were obliged to rest having left the escorting cavarly some distance behind in the dark, and while they had dismounted and were sitting togeth er on a large rock, Penrod brought fur th one of his own pistols.

"Why its the same pistol you shot the six men with" cried Violet.

"Yes" sighed Penrod "nd also it had a number of bullets still left. But goodness me this climb makes me and my horse dreadfully hun gry."

"Please Penrod dear" said Daisy looking into a bag setting beside him "May I eat just one of those apples? you would never miss one of them I'm sure."

"iss one." laughed Penrod "Why go help yourselves to every apple you can eat. I got them for you personally."

"What a good loving brother." exclaimed Daisy.

"And he sure does love us too and loves to hold me so oh so long in his arms don't you Penrod" said violet.

"When I have one of you in my arms" said Penrod demurely "It is like being in a childrens heaven."

"No wonder we love so you." said Daisy.

"When I look at you two, and your sisters also I cannot help thinking what horrid snakes the landelinians are who try to do you dirt." Exclaimed Penrod. "But it is not your features that counts though Heavens they're beautiful enough. Children like you make good friends anywhere, I heard even among some landelinians."

"We can only trust a few of them though." said Daisy Reproachfully.

"But not all" said violet. "Though they have saved us, none of them are friends." Penrod placed his arm around little Daisy who was sitting closest and said slightly tenderly!

"Won't you be my beautiful dear little Daisy."

"Why Penrod dear" you know I'm everything to you like my dear sisters are."

"You and your sisters remind me of beautiful roses. You are more beautiful than a daisy and oh so innocent and pure. It seems I was mistaken when at the first meet of you and your sisters so long ago I was so timorous."

"None who is timid could belong to our party I'm sure" said violet. "You see Penrod dear" you are mk making yourself liked very much by even our highest generals for being so good to us. When we at first asked papa to let us have you for a brother we had a hard time getting his consent. We love every one and when we can be sure we can trust them we let any one embrace us to their hearts content. but papa wants boys who have good mettle and bravery and loves us like a brother before he would give this consent. But we were able to prove you a were worthy of us and so he consented. There are certain things only proper for us, but I nor my sisters never heard of so good a boy un der any circumstances even though you were foreign."

"Foreign!"

"Yes."

Penrod laughed good heartedly. "Where did you get that information.?"

"Why Penrod dear" said violet more happily now "Ain't you a foreigner.." That at first was papas main objection because foreigners always turn out bad."

"You don't understand the situation" said penrod. "General greatheart took me from an orphan asylum when I was little, and brought me over to the United States and Canada or Canada to see the sights. I learned English there, but I must admit I cannot read it. I can talk it only very badly. you can talk english too I know for you learned it. Here is a part of my English" Heem see grande sni snuffle leddle bye buy for youse sinor captianio sees she not so. "Can you speak English better than I can. I'll say you can. some one must have hoodwinked you when they told you I was a Can Canadian. I can speak French too but that don't mean I'm French. My father and mother who are dead were Abyssinkillians. I was born though in Pandora Calverinia. did you ever though see the American flag before" he finally asked.

"Yes. They are pretty flags" said violet. "We respect all flags but it wouldn't be proper for us to respect the landelinian flag no matter how pretty they are. We have nevertheless been so happy that papa gave us the consent to have you as our brother because our hearts came out to you oh so much, but of course only next to God, God comes first. I we would not be proper for us to love you more than God or for you to place us first before God."

"And the landelinians have no reason to offen him either or to torment you and imperil your nation." said Penrod. "Some times I wish I was one of those Anglomenean creatures and then if any of those landelinians tried to injury injure any one of you, or any chil ren I'd treat the rascals like a creature of that kind does."

Violet and daisy looked at Penrod thoughtfully as if to try to decide whether he really wished wished he was one or not.

"In that case" Daisy said "I believe they'll let us alone when you are around even if you aint one. The way you shot those landelinians down when they attacked violet made me shudden when I and my sisters read the news. so I believe I and my dear sisters will be perfectly safe hereafter. but sometimes Penrod dear something may happen that will cause you not always to be around."

"That won't be if I can help it." he answered "We all of Abbieannian are a happy or should be a happy family and do love one another. some good foriegners cannot understand how Abbieannians everywhere are so good."

Violet yawned and stretched herself.

"One sort of Foriegners are all right, we found that out" said violet. "Those are real Americans no matter what their language may be. They're more dangerous to the landelinians than the men of our own kind. Those Americans are fighters believe me and they for some reason or other hate the Glandelinians worse than anybody I ever heard of."

"Did you ever meet with any yet." ?

"No I have always loved to hear about them" she said. "But if they do see us I hope they won't love us just because of our beauty."

"No one can help loving little girls or boys like you are." asserted Penrod. "All children can be loved dearly by the good if they behave. children in our country don't even know what a scolding is for they nor no one never does the slightest thing sinful or wrong. That is why I'll say that those Glandelinians are worst than devils to do what they do."

"We must be pretty near the top now." said Daisy as she arose to her feet."

"Good Gracious" we are some distance off from our cavarly" said Violet. "Suppose the big landelinian gargoylian cavarly should come upon us. I'd like nothing better to get back to the cavarly I'm sure. We were foolish to come so far out, but I thought they were close behind us."

Penrod or Daisy did not reply to this for they needed all their breath to use for hastily getting back. They urged their horses back toward the cavarly with full speed.

"Thank Goodness we are nearly there." said Penrod. "And the boy who was in the advance ug urged his horse faster. Then he suddenly halted, almost backing his horse up.

"Let's get to some shelter." said violet.

"Nonsense" said Penrod. "I believe that was only a stray shot fired by mistake."

Then violet came riding back.

"What's the matter violet dear."

"Everything" said violet. "I've taken a look toward that direction, and its no fit situation for us three to be in. We should have stayed with the cavarly. We are in grave danger."

"Never mind we can't turn back" said Daisy. "And we don't intend to stay here anyhow."

"It's dangerous for you." warned Penrod almost sternly and in a stubborn tone. "There is something wrong somewhere."

"See here my good brother." broke in violet "ittle Daisy and I have been in many queer and dangerous adventures in our travels and pastimes and always escaped without harm even though I and my sisters have even been hanged so often, or terribly shocked and tormented so often that we ought to be used to it by now. We have even been in the mists of slaughtered children often--haven't we Daisy dear- so we don't care what the situation is. We can go ahead penrod dear, and whatever happens we'll make the best of it. you got your shooting tricks Penrod, and those little explosives. so why worry over our safty. We never go where we are afraid to go, and if we are in danger from attack the sound of firing will bring the cavarly to our rescue."

"All right" answered Penrod apprehensively "This is your excursion, and not mine so if you get into trouble don't blame me."

"Oh Penrod you worry over us for nothing. We wouldn't run ourselves into unecessary danger for anything. We said that to try you and you balked. If it is your own concern you'd jump into a fiery furnace just for a brave act. If were in the slightest danger you get scared. "urely you must know if we are said to be angel possessed we could always be saved. But if you don't want us to go ahead then to save you poor dear boy from agony we won't. We'll stay right here then. but don't cry Penrod. I see you are starting to whimper. what are we worth anything to you? nothing. You are our worth."

"No no" Penrod said wiping his eyes. "You are mistaken. You may say that but Heaven knows you're worth plenty in the eyes of God and His blessed mother or you wouldn't be so possessed with the protection of angels."

They were standing upon a broad platform and now were gazing at the most startled and curious sight their eyes had ever beheld/.

This part of the hill is absolutely a wilderness. The ground was the color of sawdust and looked like it, and the pebbles scattered around had the appearance of hard knots from trees. In the distance there were odd wooden houses with carved wooden flowers on the edge of the veranda roofs. The trees were tall and imposing and was the sort of pine though high which in winter do like the other kind get bare of their neddles so that only their branches showed. There was other only here and there little patches of half dried grass. No birds of any kind fluttered a mong the teees but in the distance some cows were browsing upon the the grass. The approaching Glande linians surely fitted the name "Gargoylians" and they were coming on the swiftest horses. These were very numerous, but the foremost of them had halted in sprur surprise, gazing sharply upon the two beautiful little girls and the boy who was between them. The Gargoyliane this time only happened to be wearing only their uniforms and overcoat cloaks but now were devoid of of their hed ious masks. But they were savage looking soldiers, and they were great big men. They all wore long bobbed hair and the faces of many were decidedly ugly to look upon though there were many too who were either natural, or good looking but wickedly eyed just the same. But some had long noses, fighting Prize fighter faces and chins, wicked sinister expressions and a fury of fire and hell in their eyes. Others had flat pugnoses, protruding like eyes, cauliflower ears, but all whether handsome or not were all disagreeable in appearance. They carried long lances, were armed with four brace of pistols, a long Arabian like rifles and wicked looking sabres and also carried sacks w sacks which chilled the children to the bone at the sight of for these horsemen were the Cavaraly-calvry Grenadiers.

The tops of their hats had big black plumes and each hat were carved or shaped very fantastically, while all had a row of strange white balls along the black edges and the hats shaped like the College Professors but the top square was much bigger. They also had keen looking blades stuck inside their belts and wore two long cartridge belts. The noiseless motion of their many horses was one of the most peculiar thing about these Glandelinian cavarly.

Their dashing horses made no sign at all or no noise even, and as they came forward they did not make noise in speaking but conversed mainly by quick signals made with their fingers or lips. The foremost group of these fierce soldiers at first remained staring and motionless glaring with evil eyes on the three child ren. In turn Penrod and the two little girls stepping behind trees examined the Glandelinians with the same silent attention.

"There's going to be trouble I'm sure." Remarked Penrod. "We're in grave danger too for they'll use grenades on us if possible."

"You are right" sighed Violet. "There's going to be trouble and our swords are not stout enough to cut up those attackers if they charge us with the lance. The tree won't protect us either for it will only be the death of us if a grenade hits it." She looked anxiously to the rear for some cover.

There was plenty of cover even from grenades and believed me they raced for it. Several of the Glandelinians fired and one threw a grenade but it exploded too far off to do any harm but showered them with dust.

From behind their protection Penrod drew his revolvers. Violet and her sisters had drawn their own but she said;

"If the attack continues too long we're done for. "Our ammunition is short, and those savages don't give any quarter."

"What harm can those devil do?" asked Daisy. "Our cavarly is close by too and if they hear firing they'll come too."

"Yes but if any of their grenades lands here in case they throw them at short range we will be killed." answered Penrod "and I know them well. They mean to capture us for murderous purposes by the looks of their eyes. Even there are so many that our own revolvers can merely succeed in damaging a few of their ranks, and after that unless the cavarly comes to our aid soon enough we'll be at their mercy."

"But why fight at all in that case?" asked the girl just to try him. "We might as well surrender. You can give them the signal with a white flag."

"Yes I'll surrender you little girls" he retorted "Over my dead body. It's my duty to do the best they know how, and despite the dangerous situation I'm not going to only do it but try to come out victorious if possible."

"Why not use those grenades he gave you" said Violet?

"I am going to."

"If we had known they were coming this way we might have remained more wisely with the cavarly" responded Daisy. "But we dropped into this adventure unexpete unexpt unexpectedly."

The Glandelinians had backed their horses away to a short distance, when they saw the children prepare to defend themselves, for their leaders recognized the three, and knew they were no ordinary "fraidy cat children" they had heard of and for a time even hesitated to attack even though only three were against them. But they were dangerously exposed and the children were not. First one of the soldiers approached on horseback with a small white flag and when within speaking distance demanded of the three to surrender, but Penrod shouted back "Yes I'll surrender all right. Come and get us if you can."

As soon as the man went back, the Glandelinians formed a line of battle and rode swiftly toward the position the three were in their long lances at the ready. Penrod had especially attracted their notice, because they didn't think he would fight so much as the little girls, and believing he would quail before their advance and run to save his own skin he became the center of their attack. Yes indeed Penrod did run. At least his guns did and so rapidly that Violet and Daisy was astonished and dumbfounded. Crack, crash bang, went his pistols as fast as machine guns, and the Glandelinians before them fell dead or wounded right and left horses too blunging up the advance and throwing the rest into confusion. Violet and her little sister had not even had a chance to fire a shot. Then Penrod reached down into the box lighted two grenades and flung them among the soldiers. The explosions were terrific and their noise a slight shock to Violet and her sister. The havoc created drove the Glandelinians into a panic, and without shouts and yells they scattered in confusion like straws in the wind. An officer who appeared to be a colonel was the last to go and Penrod brought him hastily off that horse with one good shot. The survivors retreated to a safe distance. Some who were only slightly wounded and had only fallen off their horses picked themselves up from the ground one by one to quickly rejoin their fellows, but penrod knowing what was in store for him and the poor little girls if caught gave no quarter and shot them down too. Violet and Jennie thought he had won the fight and that the Glandelinians would go away. But penrod was not quite so confident.

"Without a great column going against them those devils are impossible to defeat." he said "and all the damage I have done is to down about ten or twenty of them and a number of their horses. That cannot make their bravery any less I'm sure, and will only make their fury that much uglier, and it is my opinion they will soon renew the attack."

"What made them rush off like that?" asked Daisy.

"My vigorious shooting of course. Don't you remember my trick shooting. I suppose those Glandelinians thought at the first rush I would run away. Wi Well they know now."

"Suppose we escape down a certain part of the hill and lose ourselves from them in the gathering darkness." suggested Violet. "We have time just now, and I'd rather face the danger of getting lost in the wilderness below than face those dreadful Wangaboos on horseback."

"No" returned Daisy, stoutly "It would be far more dangerous for us to attempt to go back for they are swift horsemen and would overtake us in a jiffy and cut us down. We will have to fight it out untill help comes or untill we find a safe way to make an easy escape. Penrods grenades won't give out for a long time."

"That is what I advise." said Penrod. "They have not defeated us yet, and my guns and ammunition and these little bombs and my fire liquid gun is worth a whole army. I'll use that though as a last resort. But if they throw grenades we better lie flat. These rocks will protect us to a good extent if we hug them right enough."

But the Gargoylians were clever enough not not to direct the attack against Penrod alone this time. The horsemen silently adga advanced in a great swarm this time carrying small black objects in their hands, having been joined by many more of their kind, and they rushed on furiously coming however in military precision and in double line. Then came a shower of grenades and great explosions roared all about the three but no one was hit. One grenade fell amongst them but before it could explode Penrod picked it up and threw it at the Glandelinians killing eight and woundeing thirteen. Then Penrod raised his two revolvers, and fired rapidly into the throng of the enemy, and Violet and Daisy fired too as fast as they could. Then when the guns were empty he threw a number of the grenades. The firing made great noise, and the explosions of the grenades sounded like claps of thunder in that silent spot. The Glandelinians fell in severe numbers upon the ground in some instances both horse and horse and man. The resistance was so desperate, that the Glandelinians seeing that even their lances, their grenade and their reture return withering fire of rifles couldn't do any harm to the three wheeled their horses, and retreated again to a distance. Penrod ran and captured one of the fallen Gargoylians that lay nearest to him. He wore a black hat the shape of a crown, and his bullet had struck the man exactly in the eye. He relieved the dead man of his grenades, pistols, sabre, and cartridge belt and rifle. Then Penrod added the body as a part of the defensework. By that time the others had all retired.

For a while the enemy hesitated to renew the attack. Then a few of them advanced untill another shot or two from Penrod or the little girls made them retreat.

"That is fine" said Daisy now giggling with glee.

"We've got them on the run now sure enough" said Violet.

"But only for a time." replied Penrod shaking his head gloomily. "It's lucky too that I secured the cartridges from that dead soldier, but I'm afraid they'll only fit the rifle and not my pistols. And now these revolvers are only good for six shots each, and when all our grenades are gone we'll be helpless. We can not fire a rifle like we can a pistol."

Then not let us waste our ammunition." said Daisy. "Let's not fire if only a few advance. We're strong enough to cope with a few at close quarters."

The glandelinians seemed to realize this for a sent a few of their band time after time to attack the three, and draw the fire from their revolvers. But they were surprised that no shots came, and they were also afraid to tackle the three at close quarters and the main main band was too far away to come to their aid should the three run at them with drawn sabres. They could best them with the sword even against a lance and the soldiers knew it for they were recognized already as two of the vivian girls and Penrod. However the main body thought that the reason there was no firing was because they exhausted their ammunition. They were enraged too for they even with their grenades had caused no damage whatever except to slightly stun them by the shocking explosions of their grenades, so the glandelinians nor the three were no nearer victory than the beginning of the fray.

"What shall we do now" they heard one of the glandelinian leaders ask of the superior.

"Let's charge altogether and rent the air with our famous yell." said the head leader. "That'll scare the little snakes out of their stronghold."

"And charge on irresistibly at the same time." added a third. "We can get near the main column so that they will help us surround the brats if possible, and each one must charge for all he is worth."

"What shall we ourselves do now?" asked Violet anxiously.

"We'll give them a good hail of lead and grenades." said Daisy!

"And keep up a good steady fire at the same time." as added Penrod. "But in case I have to use my fire liquid gun step a little out of my way so you won't get any of the fire accidentally. That gun will help us more than anything. Violet must use some of the grenades also although they'll be of no account in this affair if the rascals become too close. you daisy can use the explosive fire crackers."

"I'll use them freely" said Daisy. Now having decided on what to use they were to prove more dangerous to the enemy than supposed.

When the next company of gargoylian hords advanced, they began yelling as if they had gone mad. Violet and Daisy were the first to open fire and they too gave dreadful dreadful shrills screams. Penrod threw six grenades, and Daisy threw some of the fire crackers. Yells of pain and terror went up from the glandelinians who now were somewhat daunted, but nevertheless they kept up the attack, and their fling of grenades, lances, and their withering rifle fire was so severe that the three defn defenders had to lie flat so that nothing would happen. The glandelinians advanced in a swarm as thick as bees even though they were shot from their horses as fast as Penrod and the little girls could shoot, or fling the explosives. Violet aquatted upon the ground against a big rock which absolutely covered her and proved a great protection. One of the horsemen rode up close to the place but his sabre snapped into a dozen dozen pieces at the first blow that he struck at penrod for the boy parried it with his own. Then he shot the man down. Penrod had brought down dozens of the foes, but at last they clustered so thickly about the defenders that he used the last resort. He had his fire gun ready, and holding it properly turned it on and lit the muzzle. Child wild screams of range and pain came from the glandelinians as a terrific shheesheet of flame shot amongst them singing scores upon scores of men and horses. Daisy and Violet performed wonderful work with the little grenades. The glandelinians despite the horror of it all continued the attack with desperate desperation but all this bravery ammounted to nothing at all. The fire gun was a frightful weapon and would not seem to exhaust itself and so many glandelinians were frightfully burned that they retreated in panic leaving their dead wounded bleeding and horribly burned comrades behind them. One man had wound his arm around penrod trying with the hand of the other to get the fire gun from him, but Violet had shot him in the back of the head. Daisy was for the moment captured by three glandelinians and she had expected nothing else but instant death, but Violet shot them down and saved her sister. The nearest of the straggling glandelinians made a wild dash to escape and urged their horses down the road like a streak, but a grenade laid them low before they had gone very far. There was now in the distance a strange pounding roar, and violet looking saw a number of christian cavarly coming forward. but they were not in big enough numbers and while they diverted the attention of the enemy the three children hastily mounted their horses and rode away to a strong brick house in which they hoped to make a safer defense untill the main body could come to their rescue. The gargoylians for the moment fighting the christian cavarly did not persue. The creatures had sense enough to reason that they could surround the house and set it afire, and the only mistake they made was in supposing the three brave children were unable to overcome such ordinary difficulties....

Penrod covered the two little girls as they went in, and by his spirited trick pistol fire he dropped a good many glandelinians in a very remarkable short time and held the others at bay. when violet had disappeared into the building Penrod ran in and quickly slammed the door shut and barricaded it with everything that was found in the room, the little girls helping with what they could could carry. The glandelinians however had silently disappeared into the darkness leaving our friends to breathe freely once more.... POOLUY THE

"What an awful awful fight." said violet, catching her breath in little gasps.

"Oh I don't know." declared Daisy, smoothing her ruffled hair with her hand "We held them at bay pretty good and nobody managed to hurt us even with their grenades."

"Thank God we are still together any way, even if we are besieged." sighed the little girl.

"I wonder how it was they didn't succeed in even getting us on the spot." remarked Penrod who had brought the horses in with him.

"They probably couldn't get at us because of the position" violet answered, reflectively "but there is no doubt they intend to kill us as dead as possible in a short time if they succeed in capturing us."

"As dead as possible would be pretty dead, wouldn't it sister dear?" asked Daisy.

"No my dear, it would be very bad. But we do not need to worry about that just now. They do not seem to reorganize renew the attack now so let us examine our place and see if there is any mysterious way of escaping. our cavarly probably didn't know which way we went."

The space now underneath the roof where they stood permitted them to see on all sides of the tall building, and they looked with sorrow and disdain at the great column of glandelinian horsemen besieging the building and spread out on all sides of them. Many had flaming torches and it was evident they intended to set fire to the building if they couldn't succeed in breaking in! Every thing was a hedious aspect, and the scene seemed uncanny and extremely unatural in the glare of the flaming torches... From the platform on which they stood a stair descended into the house and the threese children explored it. Several stories of empty rooms rewarded their search but nothing more so after a time they came back to their platform again. Had there been any doors or windows in the lower rooms the enemy could have broken into the building easily or had not the boards of the house been so thick and stout, the enemy could have easily worked their way in and their capture and destruction would be easy. why the enemy now hesitated to renew the attack they did not know. There was a constant and strong light coming from an unknown source which revealed the glandelinians on horse moving about this way and that.

"It seems that they are now afraid to attack us here." observed Penrod. "All glandelinians are cautious after that first experience."

"I'm beginning to feel sleepy." observed Daisy."

"No time to dare sleep now" said violet.

"Why where's the glandelinians?" cried daisy suddenly.

They all looked around, but the glandelinians were no where to be seen.

"They may have retreated because of some reason." said Penrod gruffly.

"Where? Gone back to their main column?" asked the little girl.

"No I believe they just retreated and are climbing down the side of the hill."

"They couldn't climb down Penrod." said Daisy! "To climb means to go up."

"Who said so?" demanded penrod with a smile.

"My school teacher said so, and she knows a lot penrod dear."

"No climb down' is sometimes used as a figure of speech." remarked Penrod.

"Well this was a figure of a glandelinian cavarly column." said Daisy.

"Yes and they must have gone down whether they climbed or crept" declared Penrod.

"Dear me how careless we were to go off so far from our protecting cavarly escort." exclaimed violet much distressed. "The gargles may get us sure."

"Ha,ha" chuckled Penrod "They're not gargles little angel, they're devils."

"Never mind, I am afraid they'll get us yet whatever they're called."

"No they won't said daisy who was looking through her field glasses.

"What are you doing Daisy dear."

"Watching the movement of the glandelinian column to our right. They're too funny for anything sis, even though they're so fierce. Just now they're preparing for a seige of our house---and what do you think, they're leaving some of their fast horses close to our house."

"What their horses.?

"Yes indeed."

"That" said Penrod, "explains why they suddenly made their disappearance. "They disappeared on purpose to make a trick. They think we'll come out and take a chance on escaping on their horses, so that they could open a dreadful fire upon us from ambush. I wish we could find a secret passage underground in this building. We could escape to our troopers easily."

"Could we find one if we looked down below in the basement?" asked Violet anxiously.

"I think so. If the glandelinians don't get wise and return to the attack while we are away we could find it if there is any secret passage."

"But how could a secret passage under the house help us get away?" questioned the girl. "It may lead us into a cavern impossible to get out of and throw us into a deadly abyss or something. I'm for taking the chances of dashing off on those fast horses."

"I wish we had some black clothing to put on." he said."That would hide our attempt and the glandelinians would only think the horses would run away."

"Could we get away on horses if we were dressed in black?"asked Daisy.

"I think so."If the Gargoylians don't catch on to the game.so if we had some black coats and hats we could probably get off before they discover our trick, at least far enough to recieve help from our own friends."

"But which direction would we have tk t to take to do it?"questioned the little Princess."

"Come here said the boy placing his arms around each girl and drawing them forward to the window."Do you see that big bulge in the hill yonder?"he continued pointing with his finger.

"Yes it is a good way off but as dark as it is I believe I can see it."Daisy replied.

"Well beside that rock our cavarly has encamped for I can see it with my glasses. I'll draw forth my long distanced spy glass, and then you can see it more plainly. He drew his powerful telescope, and by its aid the little girls clearly saw q the camp andthe soldiers making their supper far away.

"How where or will we get there ahead of the gurgles?"she asked.

"That I cannot tell."said penrod"But we cannot be too far from the christian cavarly escort, and if we make it fast enough we'll be back to our comrades again where we belong. So if we had the black clothing our forms couldn't be seen in the dark and we could escape the glandelinians especially if we come close to our comrades who will save us by coming to our rescue."

"We can search for something like that in the big clothes closet."said Daisy, who had thoughtfully listened to all this.But the two of you my dears must remain where you are to resist in case an attack comes."

"But how can you find your way up and down the stairs without getting lost in this big building. ?"inquired violet wonderingly.

"I can climb down the stairs all right."she said.

"No you can't remarked Penrod, with a twinkle in his eyes."you may go down the stairs but you can only climb up."

"Well I'll climb up when I get back then."said the little girl with a laugh.

"You must be very quiet in going down the steps."warned Penrod"For if you make the least noise the glandelinians may hear you.They can hear a pin drop."

"I'm not going to drop a pin."said paisy. And she disappeared down the steps.

She soon came to where there was a big cupboard and found it open .The two others while they watched waited in breathless suspe suspense untill Daisy again appeared, her arms full of black clothing.She had some difficulty carrying the heavy bundle up the steps but soon the three were standing together again in the room.Dai Daisy was no longer slee py, but full of energy and excitement.

The clothing found were deep black overcoats and fortunately for children of their size but for boys.Nevertheless they put these on. The overcoats were fastened fastened with belts which were no easy task to fix as the clothing they discovered were of foreign make. owever Penrod helped the little girls to get the buckles g together and then they helped him buncklе his.Then they started down stairs to noiseless ly move the barricade from the door. Fortunately these preparations had not consumed as great a time as supposed but the Gargoylians were beginning to get pa impatient now and some of them were beginning to come forward to see whether their trick worked or not. owever the dark cloor o cl color of their coats hid the movements of the children in the black darkness.Penrod helped Daisy and violet to a horse, and mounted his own.They were splendid war horse and as fast as race horses and could easily w be worth a prize.

"Now we got to rush it and god help us if we don'et said penrod."

"Which way must we go!"asked poor violet undecidedly.

"Tward the east.There is where the b luge is."

They lashed their horses with the reins and off they gallopped . violet and Daisy was a little anxious about the success of their escapade.Penrod groaned too a s if frightened f or their own safty.But the main part of it was however that they flew, and flewcswiftly before the glandelinians knew what was up or had time to open fire.Their escapads however had been seen, and the officers lost no time in collecting a band to persue the escaping children, so that when violet happened to look back she saw them coming in a swarm. However our dear little friends had a good start, and were able to maintain it, for the horses were those belonging to the enemy and were able to go just as fast as the glan-glandeliniens. All the way tward the great bulge the glandelinians followed them, and when they finally got to the edge of a big high grass field all dry like straw and five feet tall they ran through it to the other side and halted.The persuers were some distance away but coming as fast as horses could ride.

"Our horses are jaded and can go further without resting."said Penrod desperatelt desperately.

"Then I'm afraid they'll catch us yet before we can get help."said violet greatly excited.

"We've got to stop them at any cost."declared Penrod."Quick violet help me lead these horses to that shelter of rock over there."

Violet did so right good willingly.The glandelinians came up but recieved a sudden blaze of fire from penrods pistols and were checked. But it was evident they would not give up ina hurry.A lance hurled by one of the glandelinians struck so close that Violets whole sleeve and upper part of her waist on her left side was torn off so that her chest and arm was almost bare.

"Down girls or they'llhit you,gasped Penrod."For Godis sake let me see you there Violet"he added."It looks as if you,re bleeding."

She was wounded, but the wound on her shoulder was more merely a scratch.

During the lull he bandeged it up and put ihis coat over her as she felt chilly.For a time these glandelinians noticing the nature of the boy were afraid to charge across the high grass field.They kept up a steady roar of rifle fire however but hit no one. But penrod knew there was no hope of getting back to the horses unless he did something desperate. Suddenly he thought of a scheme would which would not only drive the glandelinians back but bring the others as well to the rescue. He let loose his liquid fire gun upon the high grass.The flames leaped up at once, and began to spread through the high grass with great speed.He trained the liquid fire elsewhere and soon had a fearful conflagration racing tward the glandelinians.If the wind should change and drive the fire another way it would be still better.The glandelinians drew out of the grassy field at once being filled with fear and horror horror, for such a dreadful thing as a li liquid fire gun they had never before known in all the history of their world .

"That fire will prove a barrier untill we reach ottttttttat our friends." said penrod smiling pleasantly all over his face at the success of their stratgem. "Perhaps the flames will catch up with them and burn a lot of them and if it does these glandelinians will never be missed.But come little angels l t let us get back to our cavarly escaprt.They soon met up with a patrol of christians and when they got back the strange and funny part of it was not one of the cavarly soldiers had even so much as missed them.They didn't even know the two little girls and penrod had been so far away, and when they learned of it and how the children escaped they were amazed and horrified. The advance now was continued but the cavarly deployed in proper columns and kept a good lookout for those dambe dangerous gargoylian Kurds their leader signalling a warning to general Evans that glandelinian cavarly was moving near them, and that Penrod and the little girls had had a narrow escape from desctruction.up at this part of the mountain to their disappointment there was now t no regular roadway. A sort of inclined narrow path led upward for a way and it was very rough and steep.This rough going delayed and bothered them for a while, because they must guard the three worlds best children.But even here the glandelinian cava cavarly appeared looking for the Princesses and Penrod and made a fierce and desperate attack upon the cavarly.They charged so savagely that they rode through a portion of the christian cavarly column, but were finally repulsed with great loss.

Fearing that such an attack may be renewed Penrod, and the little girls crept closer within the main body of the christian cavarly for protection.In this position they managed to get along fairly well.They heard again the sound of a cavarly conflict elsewhere, and it was not a great distance away either, but it soon died out and all was again still.The cavatly had deployed in wedge for mations to protect the three children and was so thick and extensive that the conflicts which soon renewed were so distant that the children only heard and did not see any of it.

"Anyway,said violet"We escaped those awful Glan e glandelinians and that is one comfort."

"Probably the glandelinians are still busy trying to get in atb at us."returned Penrod."We put ourselbes in a hole by going out so far.But even if the enemy o do succeed in penetrating a part of the line of cavarly it o would be very difficult for them to reach us, so I am sure we need fear them any longer, unless they could come insuch force as to dispersecthis cavarly, and I doubt that."

The advance for the caval cavarly while disturbed by these savage petty attacks was pretty difficult and dangerous, and once in a while they would come to a deep crack in the ground or side of the hill, which made the way quite dangerous, but the cracks were not so very wide but that the horses were able to jump over them.some times they had to climb over heaps of loose rocks, but they mn managed by dint of hard difficult work to keep going and yet fighting constantly all that distance. The enemy never desisted in their continuous desultoryb attacks... But the whole cavarly squadron and the three children were both weary and discouraged when at last beset by a stronger body of enemy cavarlythey had to make a fierce and desperate stand near a big long walled up rock.Far inthe distance to the ntttttttt north-east but near to the rolling horizon appeared groups of dull yellow lights, two of them always being side by side. Some of these were motionless at first but soon began to flicker more brightly, and to sway slowly from side to ytte, side, and then up and down.

"What sort of a territory is this!"asked Penrod, trying to see more clearly through the gloom.

"I cannot imagine I'm sure."answered Violet peering about."I wonder if the attack is coming."

"Woogh." cried Daisy her hair almost standing straight on end"Look what is coming tward our cavarly bearing torches.They look fierce than the heads of alligators, crocodiles, or some other dreadful creatures.Don't you see their terrible terrible masks?"

"Daisy seems to see better than we can in the dark."whispered Violet."Tell us dear what does the creatures look like?"she asked addressing her sister.

"I simply can't describe them."answered the little girl shuddering.Th"They are the Gargoylian kurds but now they got their masks on.""2

"Where are they?"enquired the girl.

"They are advancing cautiously tward the cavarly in our front.Oh Violet, Violet and Penrod dear---you can't imagine what horrid things they are.They're uglier than the Glandelinians called Omarian curdes who also wear masks."

"Be careful not to show yourselves"spoke an officer near by."As a matter of fact we soldiers would not like to have those ugly looking devils capture the loveliest and prettiest little girls now nor their escort for all the world.But we'll have to fight hard.

"We'll be careful"d c declared violet who for the first time in her life felt good and scared.

"Why they're hesitating in their advance."Penrod exclaimed.

"No indeed"answered the man who had spoken to them before."You are wrong about that..They are up to some d ida distardly trick but we hope to frustrate them."

"What's that!"What are they up to?" asked Violet, while she and little Daisy gazed fearfully at the horrible mak masks of the dangerous soldiers who carried carried flaring torches.

But some how or other these Glandelinians had learned that not far away was the main army of cavarly, that the main christian army was on the advance, and therefore fearing the results of the sound of so much firing, believe me they decided to make themselves scarce, and they did."

While the advance was continued some body had taken upo the suvject of the most famous really of all boyscout spies, and that was the boy only known as Adeledefob. He was not an assistant of Ging igore, Gingigore was his Confederate.

"What do you think of the boy?"smiled Penrod somewhat mischiveously.

"We must tell the truth, though we don't want to hurt you Penrod dear,"said Violet,"But he's far a better spy than even you are.."

Penrod laughed mischieviously.

"Where is he at"inquired Daisy.

"He is not in the enemys lines now"said Penrod."I suppose I should be jealious of him but for good reasons I can't.Oh Princess--if you only knew who he really was you would be surprised out of your wits.But for his sake I cannot now really reveal his identification, though often he has been your companion and you did not know it."

"Tut, tut"said Violet.Outside of Walter Starring, Perkins and Fredrick Nance we can't remember any other boy being with us except you Penrod dear.We never in our lives saw Adeldefob though we heard a lot from or of him frim the Gemini and secret service men.As a matter of fact he was the cause o that poor little Jannie got free from the Glandelinians and a whole lot of children besides, and he has wrecked many a Glandelinian army and frustrated many a plan. We don't want to hurt you penrod dear but I'm sure Mother has often told us he was the best boy spy and scout in all the world."

"It don't hurt me"declared Penrod Emphaticallu"nd besides Princesses I know him more than you do.He is far better than you had ever heard.I wish I could tell you who he is but for the sake of his secret work just now I cannot reveal his identy but I'm truthful violet, when I say he has often been your best companion, and accompanied you on many a mission and brought you and yours sisters and even Evans through dangerous adventures saftly and you knew him now not?"

"Why?" Daisy exclaimed.

"I'm sorry I cannot tell .You wouldn't want me to spoil it all for him dear sisters would you." ?

"No" answered Violet"It would be wrong, and besides even though were are the beloved of the nation if we did that and pride p ried into his affairs and caused disaster he would be right to hold us girls and you responsible. We hopw to find our who he is some one day, but just now we must let it remain a mystery.2"

"What's his other other name?"asked Daisy.

"He has no other name and besides that is not his right name."

"What's that?"asked Violet.

"He only assumes the name of Adeldefob of course, but no one who all knows him is allowed to reveal him or any of his trickery untill the given time."was the reply."At least even I have forbidden it and God help the one who does. Every general and boy or girlscout is very proud, and say too like you do that they don't want to hert me in saying it, but that in comparing to him"I don't even ammount to much, but I have always laughed, and said some day when they learn his ntenty they'll get the most shocking surprise of their life.I wish I could reveal him even to you at least but that I even cannot do."

"Where is he at now?"asked Violet looking curiously and anxiously around.

"I cannot tell you that either"said Penrod laughing though serious."He don't even want his presence to be even known.But if good luck comes I'll see to it that he comes to interview you but I'll have to wait for the opportune time.But I'll bet you will love him better than me when you do."

"No Penrod dear, we don't do those things."said Violet almost reproachfully. E"Even though he is better than you in his work we have loved you most.But some times "and she looked at him curiously "I wished you were him."

"Oh you do?"

"Yes Penrod dear I do.Then we sure would have a great brother indeed and oh mother and Father would sure be proud of you as they are of him."

"I know him well."said Penrod."I know him as well as myself!"

"Oh are you a personal friend of his!"qn enquired Violet, drawing back in her happy surprise.

"A very personal friend.I love him as well as I love myself."said Penrod rolling his eyes.

"And do you, do you know him to speak to.Were you often with him."

"To be sure I do know him but I never was with him in his adventures.He has been very often in the enemys lines and just now though he is in camp he has not been heard from, and therefore he has to be kept hidden.Gingigore knows who he really is but I have warned him not to tell untill the proper time.Then he does tell, he'll only tell it y to you and your darling sisters, and in my presence.Then we will all know who he reallly is."

"How old is he?"enquired Daisy, who stared at Penrod as is fascinated and almost suspicisuspicious by his queer way of speaking that he was him himself.(He was)

"About my age,I must say.Though you know it not he is well loved by every body, and though you know him not to speak to he knows you as well as I do. If I remember rightly you saw him three weeks ago and he spoke to you and you knew it not.He even can disguise his voice so that you would not even know who he was."

"But that is surely unusual"cried the two girls in amazement amazement.

"I don't think so."said Penrod.

"No"said Violet."It seems to me very unusual.I suppose you think that your saving me that afternoon by shooting down six Glandelinians before I finished my cry for help was not unusual either."

"Not to me it wasn't."

"How old is his mother!"asked Daisy.

"He's an orphan."said Penrod."He doesn't like any one to speak of her because he says it brings back to him sad memories."

"I should think it would , and I don't blame the poor boy."agreed Violet, and whil doing so has brought or sent through Gingigore and make believe child slaves very important information.I read a bulliten Princesses once that shocked me.I know how much reward would be given for your capture and that of your sisters dead or alive, but your predicament on that score is nothing.I don't believe the Glandelinian government has that sum they seem to promise for his capture dead or alive.If you choose and Gingigore knows about it or thinks its all right I'll have him reveal it to you who he is to morrow if we can.But remember I and your five sisters must be together first."

"As for that we would love to hear who he is Penrod dear, but it would be unfortunate if we couldn't reach Jennie tory by to morrow, for unfortunately that is quite a distance, so that we cannot march that fast in twenty four hours.It in this locality is too dangerous now to chance traveling by train.Therefore if you choose we will have him tell us two,and we can reveal it to our sisters when we meet.But unless you think it is not worth while you can do as you like."

There was a regretful asccent in her voice, and Daisy sighed dismally.

"Gringore won't give in to that."said Penrod."And remember sisters you and your darling sisters, and I must be alone with him and no one else in the room. We may get there on time.I'll pray pray for a hastry advance for your sakes."

Violet, and pa Daisy felt some what relived. relieved.Presently Daisy asked;
"Why does Adeldefob keep all h is identification so secret even from the best of us."?
"Don't you know that often boy and girlscouts of the enemy have tried to cause you and your sisters trouble by coming here in disguise as yourselves and being your double that way?"
"Yes and we caught them at it too."said Violet bitterly.
"Well unless Gingigore knows you are the original vivian Girls he won't Tell.No one can fool me in disguise as you have seen, and therefore I have known you.You tried to fool me in disguises and failed."
"I know that"said violet.
"Well I can "said penrod prove you are the original.I remembered that even without my knowledge you and your sisters have often gone for several weeks on such adventureous trips, and had come upon you with my scouts.Had I not been able to recognize you in your disguise I would often have made mistakes by arresting you for enemy spies.My assistant has told me god has been Good to me for your sakes to give me a strong instinct to know when you are the Original and when there are duplicates.You remember the day I arrested what appeared to be you for sure and good, and your sisters and how they in i insisted so strongly and stoutly they were you and I made a mistake and going to punish me for not listening to reason, and the shock I caused you little girls, when I brought them before you and their duol duplicate was discovered.They made a good big mistake that time, for had I believed them they surely would have made good their escape and got away with the plans we w found in their possession and which belonged to you.I could reveal to you why you are always discovered by the enemy and when or why I can read you through your disguises.It would be good for you to know.No matter how you disguise, you cannot hide all of your beauty.Did you not know that?"
"No indde indeed"said violet surprised."We didn't think that was the cause of our being discovered by those awful soldiers."
"Permit me to say, and Adeldefob said the same thing"returned Penrod "That you too are rather unusally graceful in your manner of either horseback riding, manner of smeech or of walking..Many of the generals consided that you and your sisters are very beautiful in appearance even when disguised, for even your mother has told me so, and she knows? The enemy know that you cannot hide your beauty and too that you are of a very Saintttttttttt Saintly Family and generation, families about nearly equally as Holy as the blessed Virgin, and have a holy and righteous and most beautiful and Angelic Jedi Pedigree, that the whole world can challenge any human being or probably even angels to equal, as it extends for us Abbieanj Abbieann is Abbieannians in knowledge about twenty thousand years to the the time of the famous green robed Emperor of Abbieannian of the still more famous Atlantis Region of Calverinia, who lived in a time when the people of the other far distant section of the world were all pagans. Do you think Darling sisters that any one can match that pPedigree?"
"Yes COur blessed Mother and more so Our Blessed Lord can go far beyond that?" said Daisy.
"you are right.But I am refering to humans."said Penrod.
"She was a Human being."said Daisy.
"Well"said Penrod "you and your sisters were born of a beautiful family, and generation, and I guess that's being more respectful and righteous as being born of a dirty Glandelinian Royal Family, who are like a dragon living in a cave with his tail tie tied to a rock.If it isn't I'll have to stand the humiliation of it that is all."
"I would not want to be such a royal family for all the world."said violet."But there's something wrong about Adeldefob.I'm suspicious of you Penrod, but well I'll find out.you talk so much about him that I'm suspicious that you are him .If you are it will be my happiest day to find it out and""-- Penrod laughed and said;
"Keep quiet sisters.Soldiers are coming too close to us now and heaven only knows whether there are friends all of them or not."
Being reassured that the Glande linians were not coming back to make ant any trouble the beautiful little girls and Penrod now took time to examine the scene more clearly.They could see a lot despite the darkness because the the glare of distant forest fires made some light...
Far to their rear the advancing christian army in the dark had a most peculiar shape.The van of the army looked like some ernormous head and their bayonets glittered in a strange carmine color in the light of the fire glare.A portion of the advancing line wasceo thrown out of shape so to form form like two ernormous legs, as if just back of the monsters head, and the body turned far to the distance as if the monster was some long dragon.

Violet thought if any animal ever existed this size it would beat the size of the biggest plesiosomenean Creature they had ever seen, for this"Dragon"seemed to be absolutely without end in its length.
"It occures to me "said penrod"that we ought to be leaving this ridge, before the main Glandelinian army gets wise to our advance."
"I don't believe there is any need for hurry."said Daisy."Evans would be glad to meet an attack of the enemy here I'm sure."
"you may be right."replied Penrod"but we are a little particular just now about where a battle should be fought.The nature of this hill would expose us all to the fire of the attackers.Will you kindly tell me Darlings, whether you ever had any adventure that proved nearly fatal. ?"
"Joice did have one which did prove fatal?"
"Go onViolet you're kidding me."
"Well when she was hanged"said Violet"Was n't it fatal when the rope broke, while swinging, and let her feet with those stones tied to it crash down on that snakes head."
"Yes fatal to him ."smiled Penrod."but were you ever hanged with your sisters?"
"Often.But we always escaped. We could tell you too that when we once hanged untill we were almost unconscious we surely did suffer.It is not the tightness of the rope that is around our necks though that feels bad enough with that pain and dreadful tickling feeling which makes you have an irrestible desire to cough and you can't.It is that awful feeling that comes because you cannot breathe. We have a horror for that.you feel you can't stand it for anything and yet you cannot get air.When that happened to us and when we were rescued before we died , the condition of us was such from so long without air, that when we were saved the general who we were brought to had to get a doctor to make us regain our breath properly.We had what we called an all twenty four hours torture of off and on suffocation, and terrible burning and pain in our lo lungs, our faces were blue, and we were in the hottest fever we ever felt.It sure most be awful to hang to death even when you deserve it.but because we are good."
"Please don't speak of it"said Penrod his face white."I don't like to hear of your suffering that way."
"But it is good for you to hear so you can do plenty for us"said violet as the cavarly hurried on faster now than usual for they had no idea when the enemy cavarly would come in all its force, and were anxious not to risk a general conflict here."Joice told me the shock of her fall when she killed the man made her thick at first her neck and legs were broken.But though her legs recieved a dreadful wrenching, she was able to walk anyway when she got her feet free of the rocks.She then cut us loose with a piece of stone.I and Jennie tried to unfasten the rope that still remained around her neck which still had shocked her so much that she could only draw her breathin small gasps, but we couldn't and only in unintentionally drew it tighter yet.We managed to hurry her to a farm house where the farmer carefully partly burned and cut the rope loose. The rocks had tightened the rope around her neck to bad that they left dreadful black and blue marks and it was sore in and out. She said that was her most dreadful experience in her life."
"I can't understandhow these soldiers can do that to such beautiful little girls as you even though you spy on them."said Penrod."And there was raging bitterness in his tone.
"Do demons care about how you look?"asked violet almost sarcastically.
"I don't know about that"rero retorted Penrod,"but I'm afraid I'll have to say demons are not that bad."
For a considerable distance the way led up a straight incline broad now and very gentle, and the cavarly troop and the three children made such good progress that they grew hopeful and eager, thinking they might see another christian army at any minute.but at length there was a signal coming to the officers of the cavarly, which announced that this sector of the hill was being completely surrounded by a great big horde of Glandelinian cavarly and blocked them from proceeding a single step further.This Glandelinian column was seperated however from the rest of the following Glandelinian army, and had been in swift motion by diversion.When first the foremost of the christian cavarly were halted by it the horsemen stood like a solid wall before them with leveled lances, but presently another section of the Gland elinian cavarly had moved up in an obliqye or oblique formation, forming across a wide smooth path across the fields to the other sides.this immense Glandelinian column of cavarly(not Gargoylian Kurds only but all other cavarly) had appeared so unexpectedly that the generals in charge of the christian cavarly were dumbo dum bfounded, but to make matters not so good for the enemy side either, they had been unprepared to take advantage of the surprise they gave to the christians either, and allowed the christians to deploy themselves into a strong unassailable position, bef before they had time to order their gray coated troopers to charge.

But they knew now that the christian generals were pa prepared for them and decided to plan to besiege them in stead. Violet Daisy and Penrod for a mom ent had been dangerously ex posed to the nearest of the glandelinian hordes, but they saw a means to escape, and so wa ited patiently an till most of the enemy was not so a l a lert. Then the three children rushed across the road, urging their horses into the passage beyond violet and Daisy landing saftly though their horses were a little out of brea th. Penrods horse came last, but the lance hurled by a Glan delinian almost ca ught him, for just as his horse raced across the opening, the nearlest of the g andelinians saw him and flung a shower of lances, the lance knocking losse a loose stone which struck the h orse on the flank. Then the enemy hurled a powerful gre nade, they heard a crunching grinding sound, saw a flash and were enveloped in a pungeant clo ud of smoke."

"Never mind we have escaped them a nd are saftly with the rest."said Penrod"We won't let them get us any how."

"I8m not so sure of that"Returned Daisy."The glandelinians may make a most violent onslaught and if they press back any portion of this line they may break through and catch us here."

"It is possible"agreed Penrod"If it proves they'll win. But I have been examining this position, and I do not see any signs of any possibilities of the enemy carrying it and if the attack is sev ere the noise of so much firing will bring Evans main army of cavarly on the double time."

"Then we're all right."said violet"For if the noise brings help the enemy won't be able to get to us now."

"Off course not my dear. Butthe re is another thing to consider. The enemy leader probably knows the road to safty, and if that is so all help for us is b locked off and the enemy might make so vehement an attack as to destroy our large esco t escort."said Penrod thoughtfully.

"D ea r me"cried violet. That would be unlucky wouldn't it. Blessed Lord Jesus if it by Thy will preserve us."

"Very. Unless we can f in d a secret passage f or our cavarly. For my part if we manage to get out of this dangerous section of the country, I'll b e glad it isn't the way the enemy goes."

"So will I "Returned Violet."It's enough to be menanced by these devils to be attacked also. No one knows what that dangerous glandelinian army of cavarly might do."

They moved on aga in to reach the main body of their cavarly, creeply slowly up up another inclins. Their j ourney was soon ove r they reached it, and were told by the officers in charge that the glandelinians had blocked all further outlets and that there was no way to signal for help from the main body or notify Evans of the danger. They did not realize their ill fortune at first, for their hearts had been gladdened by the rays of forest fire lights making the scene lightee up befor before them. That meant that they could see so far and Daisy had pointed out that the army which her sisters were in were on the advance, and would soon meet with that of Evans, th and that the succession of perilous adventures they hd had encountered had at last brought them enear their dearest friends, and their belo ved sisters, which m eant happiness to them. But when the little brave chil re children looked more caref ull y around them they discovered that they were just as good as being in a strong prison from which there was no hope of escape, for instead of attacking the glandelinians were laying seige.

"But we are pretty close to Jennie tory again"cried violet"for there is the lights of the town--the most beautiful little town known in these parts."and she pointed eagerly at the distant lights.

"Almost near Jennie tory and vivianamas army isn't b eing there."said Daisy in a discontented tone."It would not be poss ible for me even to get near that road yonder--or through it if I got there."

"It appears that the path ends here."announ ced Penrod gloomily.

"And th ere is no way to go back."added Violet with a low whistle of perplexity.

"I was sure it would come to this in the end."remarked Penrod."Folks don't go through s uch a da n gerous adventure as we have g one through in persuing that brat of a Starring, and then get back aga in to tell of their adventures---not in real life. And the whole thing has been unatural, because the enemy knew of our move right off hand and persued and now besieged us."

"And general Evans doesn't know a thing about it."added Violet."We would not be in dan g er of starvation up here as we couldn't be besieged that long, but the enemy could tra p us some way during this short seige and then taking us unawares could make such an attack that every one of us would perish before help ca me. Don't forget that the enemy can be trifled with."

"I've heard of the glandelinian tatics before"said Da isy"And som etimes no harm ca me of it."

"Were you ever b efore s hut up by a gla ndelinian army of cavarly, with no way of getting out of the trap?"enquired her sister seriously.

"No"answered Daisy."But don't you lose heart, violet, and penrod d ear for I'm sure this is not the end of us by all means."

The ref ere nce of the situation reminded Penrod that he had not enjoyed so much of a s upp er lately and neither did the little girls, a nd therefore must be hungry. So he sat down upon the floor of the passage, drew the two little girls and hugg ing them tight with each arm said;

"My d ears I'm afraid that Starring boy did this and got us into a lot of trouble, and that unless Our Blessed Lord does something unusual for us we'll never be able to get out of this trap."

"But what's wrong?"asked Daisy who had placed her arm around him."We've been in many bad pickles in our da y ourselves and so have my sisters and escaped, so you might as well explain what has happened? "

"Well we are surrounded by the sme enemy."

"Well said violet smiling sweetly into his face"you are a wizard of a boy scout, are you not?"

"They say I am."replied the boy.

"Then you can do a few wizzies and g et us and the cavarly out of this hole." declared Daisy with much confidence.

"I could if I happened to be a real magician."returned Penrod sadly." But I'm not. I don't know yet what to do. I'm trying to think."

"Nonsense"cried the two little girls together and laughing."You're only so excited you cannot think. I'll bet you'll be saving us yet."

Penrod shook his head.

"It's true enough."returned violet earnestly as she placed her little arms lovingly around his neck and kissed him on the forehead and which caused him to hold her tighter but gently."You did wonders and you once proved it to me. You can do several very wonderf ul things--if you can only remember them. You know you sa id to learned them from the Indians in the West of the United States."

"Thank you my dears for doing me justice."responded Penrod gratefully. "But I know of one signal trick that Indians do but if I try it I may may expose myself to the enemy who would f rsu f rustrate me by shooting me down."

"If you select a sheltered spot to do it I don't believe it'll come to that "remarked Daisy, who had been in deep thought as she cudd led her head against his chest."But I'm not going to let the enemy strangle us again just yet, because I and my sister needs all the air and life we can have for our countrys sake, and you probably needs your too."

"If I can't find shelter to make that signal we are helpless to escape." sighed Penrod.

"We may be helpless"answered Violet as she laid her head against his shoulder and smiled up prettily at him so that he was touched in spite of himself"But suppose my sisters were closer by than we would suppose. Cheer up Penrod. They understand your fire signal if others don't and they can do more than we can. And think they may be advancing with the Vivianite burroughs and the fierce Logarian girl and boy scout lancer cavarly. The enemy fear them like position. Cheer up Penrod dear. Through god's intercession your signal may be seen by them and I,m sure they'll help us."

"Your sisters."exclaimed Penrod."In what direction would they be."

"If their army was on the move it would be coming directly tward us from the northeast."was the reply."Angelinia Aronburg your d ear friend too would be with them."

"Did they say they would try to come?"asked Penrod of little Da isy who was almost falling asleep in his har arms because of the way he held her.

"Yes"she answered with a smile."One of the scouts went up in a baloon for them and from a height told what direction Evans army lay."

"I remem ber that. Said Pe rod nodding."Have you any means for a spy glass that would detect their approach in the darkness?"

"No Penrod dear I'm sorry but I forgot to take them with me when I come. "explained the child."But But I brought something with me which I think could trick the enemy so they couldn't do anything if you mak made the signal."

"Where is the c olumn who would be accompanying your darling sisters?"enquired Penrod, who had listened with great interest and hope.

"It is somewhere northea st of here. If they can see your sig nal they'll come swift enough. You know you did use it once before when we were in peril together and you know the result of that signal. Then only I and you were together."

"And were you saved ve y very quickly?"asked violet, astonished at what she said or heard.

"Of c ourse in less than f if teen miles."And my sisters have with them very powerful field glasses that would reveal to them the exact scene where any of their loved ones or friends may be in peril, at any time they happen to hear of it. Well Violet and penrod re dear Joice had said to be me before I left for here that if I or you or vigl violet were in danger she and her sisters would look for the signal and if we are in need of any help you Penrod dear are to make a certain fire signal, and she and her sisye sisters and all her following will rush to our aid."

"Do you mean that Princess Joice our darling sister will see the fire signal at that great distance, and see all of us here, and what we are doing through that powerful field glass?"demanded Penrod.

"Of course, at any time when you make the signal."she replied with a happy laugh at his startled surprised expression. She could really laugh despite the danger. but she knew her instinct told her that with Penrod here she and Violet were positively safe. Her instinct told her too that her sisters were not so far off as believed or feared.

"And when I make the signal, Joice will bring the whole column of our fierce children soldiers suddenly upon these rascally levilled horsemen."?

"That's it exactly, by means of the speedy horses."

"Then"said Penrod, you and your darling sister and all of us will really be saved thank God, and I'm very glad of it for your sake. I dread to think of seeing the Glandelinians hang ing you again or doing worst. I would rather die cheerfully than see any harm come to you. but we'll escape our sad fate."

"If your signal works you won't need fear of us hanging."said Violet."There's nothing cheerful about hanging that I could ever see remembering the horror of our past experiences and our lung trouble because of so long without air, but we have to risk it for our countrys cause and for God."

"Have you ever been hanged untill you were unconcscious altogether."said Penrod with horror in his heart."

"Not that I can remember, and I'm not anxious to br begin."said Violet. I "I dread it it."

"Don't worry sister dear."said Daisy."Penrod will make the signal and save us all. If he can't I'll hold you in my arms, and he'e will hold us, and we'll die and go to heaven together. Are you going to make the signal Penrod dear.W?

"I'll try?"

"Could n you not manege to hold me in your arms and put me to sleep?"asked Daisy jokingly.

Penrod laughed and held her tight.

"I'll do better than that later on."he promisod"for I know I can easily save you all by that signal even if Violet's dear sisters were too far off to see it."

"How?" asked Daisy sleepily.

"You didn't know it you poor little dears but I learned general Evans and his cavarly generals that trick. All I need to do it is build a big fire and smother it off and on with a big wet blankets. The Indians do that and members of their fellow tribe tribes know what it means. I can make one that Evans can tell means we're in serious danger. The fire though has to be a big one and you must keep at a safe distance so that your flimsy dresses won't ignite from the sparks I'll have to make."

"We will stay where it is possibly safe."promised Violet.

"The Indians learned me that fire trick."remarked Penrod,"and other things too"I'd like to see how the effect is upon your sisters if they too observe it. I would like to see them again, and especially for poor dear little Jennie. She's so sad looking at times but when she smiles at you oh how I could hug her. and she is so far away. I'll bet they would be glad to see me too."

"Of course they would "declared Daisy."And Jennie. She cried from Happiness when she learned how you fought for violets safty. She and our sisters cannot wait till you come back. That is why they advanced the army themselves."

"Do you happen to know how far they would be by this time?"he enqured.

"They are not so far"said Daisy.

"I sometimes wonder what has ailed your sisters at times"he continued."Are you and thry really Angel Possessed. Sometimes a strange light at night seems to raidiate from even you two and at times there's a queer smell ascif there was strange sweetest mysterious perfume in the air."

"I8m afraid I don't know anything about that."said Violet, shaking her pretty head. "Are you sure you see that."

"Yes indeed. That is what makes me wish to stay with you always. It's like being In Heaven already."

"Well you will."said Violet."but oh poor Jennie. She wouldn't go away anywhere without you again. She said so because she likes you better than any body she ever knew. I remember when she was in sone real hopeless peril once and you saved her as if by a miracle. When she was once grieved and distressed by something som ething, and cried broken heartedly for so long, you came along, held her in your arms, made her so happy that she fell asleep in your arms with a smile on her face. When she asked you to go and Cover poor violet little me as Daisy said, she recieved a surprise when you proved that you had intended to do it anyway."

"I,m afraid I8m not so worthy of her and you dear little girls at times."said Per Penrod."you poor dear little girls are so good you should have been in a happier state than in this cruel war torn region. Why did you do all this?"

"You sound now like Hendro Darger." said Daisy with a little pretty pout. "You are so afraid that something will always happen to us. Couldn't you wish that we were in some safer place than this then?"

"My heart aches for that."

"Don't worry "said Daisy."Penrod loves us more than he loves himself. What time is it penrod dear."

The good boy looked at his watch a wrist one.

Half past seven."he said.

"Then we must wait about five minutes"she continued"but it won't take long after that to make the signal and they'll be near enough to come to our help."

They sat silently thinking for a time. Then Penrod suddenly asked;

"Is Angeline Richees and Timothy Grovetons troopers of child scouts also advancing with them?"

"Yes."

"Then the enemy better look out."remarked Penrod with a sniff.

"It is possible they won't risk even a clash with the child troopers."acknowledged the little girl still reclining on his breast slespily."The horses of the enemy though can trot as fast as their can, and may escape."

"Pah, I hope they'll surprise those skunks and give not one of those child bloody murderers murderers any quarter."cried Penrod.

Violet or Jennie did not reply to that. The little girls knew it was justified but hated that sort of massacre to occure before their eyes. The few minutes dragged wearily enough for the three little eager watchers, but finally Penrod announced that it was time for him to make the signal. He went to a secluded spot where no one would be surprised or fired on and soon had a big fire going. He surprised the little girls by his seemingly crazing crazy motionws He surprised the little girls with hisseemingly crazy motions of up and down with a wet blanket on top of the flaming fire. Finally he was through and turning violet was surprised to see that in the northeast a similar fire signal was being answered. She literally cried with glee. The strange part of it was the enemy had not understood what that was and had thought that somebody had either gone mad, or was trying to keep himself warm even though the night was too warm as it is for comfort. Then the time dragged again wearily for them. Half an hour passed and then an hour. Then from some distance to the east came a strange thudding roar as of many horses coming up the hill.

"Nothing though seems to happen."said Violet beginning to doubt a little.

"Oh we must give them time to------"

She had no time to fi i fi i finish the last words, when they were suddenly startled by the piercing storm of shrieks and wild screams that came apparently from a great horde of terrified chil re children, and there was suddenly a terrible din of crashes of rifles and pistols, and they saw a hof horde of child scouts burst suddenly upon the Glandelinian cavarly without the slightest warning. Their numbers were too many, and instead of offering even the slightest resistance the Glandelinians retreated in panic and terrified confusion being in the wildest flight from what they called "Those little no account brats on horseback. But they couldn't. The child scouts pushed on by more behind and driving cavarly soldiers too tore through the Glandelinian column applying the sabre in right good fashion creating dreadful slaughter before the rest of the force could escape. There had been no sound of any kind or no warning untill the fierce child scouts burst upon the Glandelinians from the rear. It was all over in fifteen minutes.

"Thank God and His blessed mother they arived."announced Penrod as now the escort cavarly joined in the persuit"for I know something about these good scouts. Let us be ready for we will soon be reunited with our comrades."

"Will they be surprised to find us here?"asked Daisy in a voice that trembled a little with the excitement of the moment.

"I don't doubt it."replied Penrod.

However there was no reunion that night. but when the advance was to renew the next morning it had passed on to a great distance without further hinderance. They were also in a now beautiful country, and the army had halted while the three children were surrounded by merry faced child scouts on horseback in gorgeous purple and golden customs of uniforms and beautiful heart shaped hats covered with many extraordinary designs. Penrod took the reins of his horse not being able to cover recover from his amazement, for the child scouts these not Vivianites, but the Standard order, were big beginning to gather around and stare with loving friendly eyes at the strangers. It was these who had made that irresistible attack that night.

"Widsp"cried the boy general, and at the word his horse slowly trotted onward followed by Violet and Daisy, and every one cheered for them and showed the great greate at respect and suddenly threw a shower of flowers all about them.

any child s cout officers dressed in the most neat a nd handsome uniforms stood ready to we lcome Penrod and the tw o little adopted sisters of his, and when the boyscout leader dismounted from his horse a most pretty little girl, too pretty it seemed to be even a human in a beautif l beautiful and neat white dress and waists and a beautiful little hat cried out in surprise; and j oy;

"Why it's our beloved brothe r Pe nrod, come back sa ftly w ith our darling sisters aga i n." again."

Penrod for a moment looked at her closely hardly recognizing her without her uniform, and then he immediately had her in his arms hugging her tightly end kissing her.

"On my word"he exclaimed""It's little Princess Jennie--as happy, g ood, pert and prettier than ever."

"W hy not Penrod dear?"asked Joice throwing her arms around his neck and kiss ing him in return. "ut oh , was so a frad for poor violet"she said as she hugged her and Daisy in turn."

"B ut why me first."Exclaimed Penrod surprised."Poor violet and Daisy you forgot."

"Oh no we didn't"said Jennie."They told me you deserved it first for oh you were so good to her and Daisy.You look more f irm and stronge r than you used to be."

"You are a lucky boy"said Angelinia Aronburg as he then took the little girls hands in his and shook them cordially."ou have now s uch b eautiful little Princessesas Princesses as your sisters.. They surely love you dearly."

"And all the army iwill not willingly part from you."added a tall s oldier in a major generals uniform."

"Penrod wondering w here the other little Princesses were turned to look at him.

"id you not wear black whiskers at one time?"he asked.

"Yes"said the genera l". ut , shaved them off long ago, and sin ce then I have rise n from a colonel to be one of the chief Generals of the main christian armies."

"That's nice"said the little boyscout general."ut I assure you my good people that I wonder w here the rest of my darling Princess sisters are."

"Oh they're making preparations f or your royal reception."cried all the servants whil e Jenni and her sisters with him were now too happy to speak for the moment but c ould do nothing but smile happily.

"ou are very welcome for we all know what you did for Princess V iolet"cried all the child scout officers waving pretty flags, and it pleased Penrod but also mad e him very emb rassed to note the love and respect with which every one and the Royal intertain ers bowed before him. is fame had not been forgotten in any parts of the christian country by all means, and the whole country had gone wild w hen it read the news of his sudden and da ngerous defense of violet. Som e sad incident was to happen soon, which however instead of working real bad or near fatal harm was to make him such a da ngerous enemy of the enemy boyscouts that they made themselves scarce.

"here is Angeline Hettie, Catherine and the rest"Enquired Pen rod anxiously, as he left his horse, and stood between his other darling little sisters and retain ed his embrace of Jennie so beautifully that she had fallen asleep in i his arms for she had risen too early that morning to meet him and was tired out.

"They are with mperor and mpress vivian in the private rooms of their head quarters getting everything ready for your reception."replied Joice."ut But they have asked me to welcome you first in their stead, a nd to s how you your apartments. But for what you d one to poor d ear little Jennie I believe you'll have to retain her in your arms now."and joice laughed happily.

Penrod look d around h im with wondering eyes. Such magnificence and beauty of military array as was displaced in this army and in the headquarters and through throughout the Company Streets as more than he had ever drea med of , and h could scarcely believe that all the gorgeous g litter a s real and not tinsel ,.

"What's b ec ome of Timothy Groveton?"asked Penrod almost uneasily for he had grown to love that daring boyscout who had so often made a perfect fool out of the enemy to his evident delight.He had seen considerable things in all his boy and girlscout followers, and believed that Timothy was just as reat a boy as h imself and loved him like a brother.It had perplexed Joice and her sisters for a time to know what had become of him, but they knew though he was somewhere at his duties, for he never was in peril . there was no need of sorry.In fact those contending him were in peril.The girl and boyscouts had been astonished at the s ight of so unusual a thing as Jennie so quickly fa lling happily to sleep in Penrods loving embrace, but this does happen to little children in this country who are angel possessed, for they have the moods of an angel, their happiness, their o sorrow at sinful things , their p protection and their anger.If they were not angel possess ed they would not have survived the dangers they faced.

10-373

B ut those who lived in Abbiesnnia were apt to be as onished by queer happy sights, and knew when real love for the an el possessed was real there that childs happiness was too supreme oto be believed.

"There are no chances for the enemy doing anything here."said Penrod"Unless we hav e spies working against us."

""one of them have come here before."answered Joice"ut yesterday a man gave me an awful knock on the head with a stick."

"id he mean to do it?"asked Penrod angrily a nd his face was white.

"Oh no"she hastened to say"He apolized for he did it by accident.But he's sort of awkward and some tim es does not watch what he is doing.He even hit himself this m orning."

Th is mollified Penrod a little, and af ter some thought Joice decided to have every one c ome to the palace.

Joice said to penrod;

"your own room which is of course with ours together as we are in one is back of the great reception room.We have missed you o oh so much since you left us for violets sake.ould you like to sleep with us again?"

"You ask me would I like to slee p with little angels?Why it would be a little Heaven."returned the boy."It will seem like being at home a gain af ter being aw y from Heaven."

He knew the way to it and he went there carrying Jennie, and a soldier servant followed him carrying his satchel. The room wa s so grand and beautiful that those who were not accustomed would have feared to sit in the chairs o or lie upon the bed lest he or she might dim their splendor.In the closet were Penrods many fa ncy custom high commissioned un f uniform customs of rich lavender velvets and brocades, and as Penrod laid Jennie gently on the bed one of the attendants said they would take care of the Princess for him and that he should prepare to din with the vivian Girls in an hours time.Then if Jennie didn't awaken he would awaken her.

"she'll awaken when , say so"said Penrod curtly."obody is to touch her understand?"

"All right sir, as you say sir."

Opening from the chamber was a fine bath room having a marble tub with perfumed water, so the boyscout leader, still dazed by the reception and the no velty of his surroundings, indulged in a good bath to g t all the dust off of him and then selected a maroon velvet lavander uniform custom with gilt buttons to replace his own soiled and dusty uniform which had however been such as grand but needed cleaning from the dust of his travel. There were silk yellow stockings and soft yellow leather s hoes with diamond buckles to accompany his new custom custume and when he was fully dressed Penrod looked much more dignified and imposing than he even really was.No one no matter what they looked or dressed like in this country were vain, haughty or proud. The bed not the bedroom but his dressing room was large with a green marble floor and carved marble wa inscoting which wa s so stately in its appearance that it would have a w ed any one else. Being used to th ese things Penrod accepted it as a mere detai; detail, and at his command the attendants gave his other uniform a good dusting , combed his hair.They told him dinner would be served directly and one of them as ked whether it wa s right to awaken Jenni ; but he answered;

"No one awakens her untill one of her sisters comes.Heaven helps the one who does so without orders."

Then to his surprise they brought in the man who had shot the children in his arms."

"ta ke that thing awa y."he commanded."Do you take me for a salamander? W hy did you bring him here for."

"He shot those children in your arms Master Penrod and we thought!!

"Thought?"---cried Penrod with a sniff."o you take me for a Tom cat. Away with him .I'll settle his hash when it comes to the proper time. And Princess violet will sentence him."

The soldiers didn't know what to do with the man and were about to say som thing .

"Well, well"said Penrod now thr u throughly provoked."Why are you retaining that snake in my presence be for.How stupid and ignora nt you seem to be you three foriegners. hy is it you wish to present him to me at this time."

"ut what would your highness like to have done with him?"

"ighness."repeated Penrod who was unused to s uch titles."Well my highness would like to see him put at the stake if it is possible."

"He ought to be"said the first s pokeman with much defference."We'll confine him in the strongest guardhouse."

"o you believe you can.Well do so"said Penrod."ut don't let him escape as you value your lives.He will kill you if he gets loose."

You see dear readerthe incident of the boy and girl being shot in his arms mad e him awfully a ng ry and he hated the assassin.Bringing the scoundrel before him worked up his temper .

Penrod was all ready when an attendant came to escort him to the presence of the Princesses.He was going to stop at the bed room.

"Did any of the Princesses say you can awaken her?"Penrod asked.

"No I thought;---"

"Right about face march on and lead me to their little Angelic selves"ordered Penrod.He followed almost bashfully and was ushered into a room more dainty and atttatitd attractive than it was sple splendid. Here he f round found Joice and her sisters and since they now were absolutely without disguise and dressed in civilian white clothes they were so marvelously beautiful that the boy general stopped suddenly with a gasp of embrassment and admiration.But joice sprung up and ra n to seize her new brothers hand, drawing him impulsively toard her lovely little sisters who each in turn hugged and kissed him most fondly and he couldn't resist holding them in his arms a long time ither.

"Where is our d earest little Jennie f"asked joice almost looking mischieviously at Penrod.

"She's asleep yet."said Penrod."U would not let any one awaken her-----"

The door opened and to his surprise and distain Jennie entered.For a moment he was angry.

"If any one awakened you against my orders"----

"No ,no"she hastened to say as she recieved his embrace"I awoke myself."

The Empress and the great lovely Ruler had been quite anxious and curious to meet the famous boyscout "foriegner" as they thought he was, so when they were all seated at the d inner table Empr Emperor Vivian sa id;

"I am glad to say you are the best of all boys I ever met.My little daughter violet told me all.I'm sorry I mistook you for a foriegn boy but now I have found out everything from your recent guardian and friend General Greatheart.you are a fine little Calverinian boy and it was a blessing of God that you were with Violet those days.But please tell me my dear son how it came you helped my darling violet to capture those plans which if Manley recieved them would hav e been my own ruin ation even.It was a matter that I have long wished to enquire about because you are a Calverinian and violet is an Abbieannian.No one also my d ear boy, I am sure is better able to also explian this mystery of you Handcuffed to Violet, to try and dare tackle that boyscout Starring.

St Starring, and almost capturing him, which you were not successful because only of th- cars lurch.I never heard of such a thing in stories, or on a stage.#"

"That is true"answered the boy som ewhat embrassed"But I and dear violet forgot we were handcuffed together.But it will give me great pleasure to explain my connection with that work.violet deserves the credit for h she got those papers while I covered her.In the first place, I must tell y ou that I was born in Pand ora in this sta te , a nd my fathe r w ho was a off icer in the army wanted a lways that I should become a boyscout when I grew old enough.The rea s on meny at first mistook me for a foriegner is because general Greatheart brought me from Canada.But the rea l fact is he brought me there in the first place to see the country and then to the western part of the United States, w here I learned my crackshot shooting from cowboys and their stunts of fancy horseback riding.Indians learned me the knife trick.I could hold eleven at bay if they even took two knives apiece against me.When my father and mother died in the Calmanrinia storm disaster I was rendered an orphan.General Greathen rt who knew me before that took me un der his temporary care, learned me the boy scout life and took me to the foriegn countries.Though no one knew it I was a boyscout officer even b eforevthis dreadful war broke out but I was in the enemy lines all the time spying, sneaking child slaves to freedom and doing everything else , giving out information.In fact I must confess to you all and Gingigore would prove it I'm the original "Adeldefob."

Violet and her sisters gasped at this announcement, and Violet sat down sudd enly in her amazement.

"Surely you don't mean you are the famous boyscout called "Adeldefob"by nickname?"Asked Joice in astonishment.

"You can ask gingire G ingigore, even little Jennie, and besides Radcliffe. I have in the enemys lines a lways assumed that name.They have never even discovered the deception yet."

"But, but-----"

"B ut what's so strange about that?"asked Penrod amazed himself at their astonishmen t."Surely it was nothing for m to assume a false name to decieve the the enemy."

"Surely no one can blame my dear little daughters for being astonished"said the Emperor sympathically."But then did you have a hand in the strange getting away of little Junnie.?"

107 374

"Perhaps so"replied Penrod noticing now how violet, a nd her sisters continually looked at him."I got up that jiag also in which Angelinia Aronburg found her in.They used to call me a Wizard and I was able to fool the Glandelinians too by doing strange tricks of ventriloquism which I learned in America."

"What does that mean dear boy?"asked the Empress.. ....

"Throwing my voice into any object I pleased to make it appear that the object was speaking instead of me.I once made a person believe his statue of a woman was possessed by a devil. Also I with general Greatheart made beloon n ascensions. One day my beloon ran away with me and him and brought me in the western part of the United states before I or he knes how to make it descend.When the cowboys saw us c ome from the sky they helped us to one of their Ranches and took care of us untill we got over our fright.I told them in English because I learned it in canada that I was an Abbieannian, and my companion also, and they learned me and him some easy but great tricks that amazed us, andvthey learned me and him the best horseback riding ever experienced.Those cowboys are the best horseback riders in the world."

"Now I begin to understand"Said the empress smiling.

"At that time."continued Penrod, busily eating his meat while talking"I learned all that trick shooting , and also fire drills from the Indians, and that slick work with a knife.I could with a little knife outdoe a man who rushes at me with a sabre or bayonet whether he is on horseback or not.When I returned here with general Greatheart in the year of 1908 I got into the boy scout troop through his help.At that time there were four seperate child scout troopers in this land, each one of the four then being led by a man officer.But the child scouts thought my ability was greater than that of the leaders because of the trick shooting and horseback riding I could do, and perhaps the leaders thought so too, for they elected me the head of the whole four bunds. I ordered a new organization of child and girlscouts and boyscouts of other regimentsto be formed , and when the organization was completed I was announced as the supreme officer of them all, which included all the four older organizations which were then called the Manchkins, the gilliking, the winkies; and the quadling Regiments. I had good times with them all and was their leader for nearly four years; untill the war broke out.So when after that I met the great Gemini War Detective called Hendrogargar he introduced me to his chief aides Whilliam Schloeder, whos nickname is Gingigore and I arranged to go away with him to spy on the enemy. Before I became asquainted with your little Heavenly Angels(Violet and her sisters smiled when he said this) at Delights's Junction"I have had many adventures and Ging igore or Dargar, can prove I never was even discovered by the enemy yet. The only r eason that those Professional International spies I went at me twice is because I interfered with their intentions of trying to capture my friend Jennie Turner.When they made me a prisoner, she went right to Angelinia Aron ur Aronburg and she rescued me."

"That is quite a history."said Emperor Vivian,"but there is a little more history about our Fair Land of Abbieannia and her States, that you do not seem to understand------perhaps for the reasonthat no one ever told it to you.MuMany years before you came to be born here this land was then united under one Ruler, though it is now under two, myself and my brother, and strange as it may seem the Rulers name was almost Vivian at the end.Mr Far distant Generated Relative happened to have been a wom an and her name was Jane Penrod Vivian.My Brother Hanson looked up His and My Generaltion in his great book which the Government supplies to you or to me rather and I have been able to find out that therefore that you are originally the real brother of my fair daughters for the people who you say were your father and mother only adopted you.I can prove you are my lost son who had been stolen away from me when you were a little babbit baby. That happened when my first little daughter also Jennie by name died of Scarlet Fever.. I know now from my discovery that all glandelinian generals have leagued together to depose of my little daughters, but through you being with them, and through their faithful guardian Jack Evans this has never been successful.One old woman named Mombi told me that I was wise in adopting you for their brother before I and Hanson discovered the real fact.That was the people we re glad to see you, and why my daughters really wished you with them.Through your good loyalty to us and them see the reward you have recieved."

"Not at that tim "said Penrod, thoughtfully"There we re tao other good rulers by the name of Penrod Vivian also"said violet.

"A Yes"replied the empress."But Mombi was still our faithful friend too.When Joice my first little daughter was born she took such care of her that she is the bright strong healthy happy youngste r that she is to day."

"I am very glad of that."said Penrod."And hope you will consider me one of your most faithful sons."

"We all even the whole nation owes a great deal to such a wonderful Wizard of a boy."continued the empress,"for it was you who helped the dear Princesses in secret build this wonderful organization of so big a body of childscouts as we have now in our magnificent armies,"

"Violet and her dear sisters build build the regiments."the boy answered. "I only directed and planned the job."

"But you did it wisely and well, and made them the dread of the enemy as they are to day."said Empress Vivian"and made the whole nation proud of what they call your almost magical art.You s trained them like cowboys are trained, trick shooting, trick lance fencing, trick Indian like sabre fighting and good work at horse dashing, so that in a clash th y they come out with a loss while the enemy are literally slaughtered.So as you are now discovered as our little lost stolenson I offer you our own palace, the full command of the situation as the Pri ncesses, the same aurthority and dignified rank, a nd also you shall be the Official P iPrince of my whole Kingdom, to take the place of my wicked tttttt Ttttttttt Traitor son germania and he treated with every respect and consideration, consideration, and do with my little daughters as you like in all things that show your love and I ill guarentiee that no matter how good you are to them they are too good themselves to b even spoiled and will only be that much more good to you."

"I accept your kind generous offer with gratitude, Gracious mother a nd Father" the good brave boy said, ina soft voice, and they could all see that tear drops were standing in his keen blue eyes.It meant a good deal to him to discover he was really their brother, and that he could secure such g ood company for good as the d earest and loveliest little girls he had ever set eyes on. nd they were really his sisters .How he now held little jennie and then the others close to his throbbing heart.

"He's more than a g ood brother though."sa id Violet smiling at him through her own tears."To think he was and is also "Adeldefob.That was a shock to hear that.What a wonderful boy indeed."

"nd that is the safest kind of a brother to have."replied Empress Vivian promptly.

"Our dear Penrod sure can do some wonderful tricks, and its no humbug"said violet."He can even disarm Evans in a knife drill."

"He shall amuse us with his tricks the day or so after to morrow."said the Empress."I have sent messengers to summon all of violets f riends to meet her and Penrod and give them welcome, and they ought to arive very soon now."

Indeed the d inner was no sooner finished, than in rushed the older Son of Emperor Vivian James vivian to huge hug violet and her sisters each in his arms and tell her and they how glad he was to see them again.The boy Penrod was as much welcomed as they."

"How are your various child scout organizations.f"Enquired the Prince, as he held happy little Jennie in his arms a long time.

"Working finely"answered Penrod."I'm very certain they are."

"And I'm very certain, my dear little brother, that you ave our armies the best protection in the world, for the enemy dread to face even a patrol of them."

"How long were you owa since you l fet the first time?"was the next question.

"Quite a while untill I captured a glandelinian army not long ago.My brother Germaine is besieging the town of Blendale and couldn't come but he sends his best regards and says he is coming next month if possible to have Christma Ch l Christmas with us."

Just then there was loud laughing of a c hild outside, and when a servant threw open the doo r with a low bow, a little black haired girl strutted in. Violet sprang forward and caught the little child in her arms uttering at the same time a glad cry.

"h Jannie dear."she said."How fat and sleek you have grown and how beautiful you look in your new uniform."

"Why Why shouldn't I?"asked the little girl, in a sweet clear voice."A land all my girlscouts live on the fat of the enemys land don't I Empress."

"Thanks to my son here you have everything you wish for."said The Empress.

The little girl after she was m embraced by the others stood and looked hard at Penrod. As she gazed curiously at him he saw around her little beautiful neck was a string of beautiful petals pearls, and on her wrist was a brace let of emeralds iven to her by on e of the Princesses. She nestled herself comfortably in Emperors lap all the time looking at Penrod.

Then she jumped down and pointing said;

"I know that good boy but I didn,t think he was your son.I saw him in the enemys lines spying on them so much.He helped me to get free.I thought he was "Adeldefob"for he looks like h im."

All in violet and her sisters looked at Penrod."Was the confession from this little girl.

"I am Adeldefob over there"smiled the boy taking the little girl in his arms."But how did you know it."

"I know you from your looks."she said."You were Adeldefob over there.I am so glad to see you are the brother of the dear Princesses."

And now General Jack Evans ariyed his uniform most beautifully decorated.The great general and guardian loved violet and her sisters most tenderly, and Admired and loved Penrod just the same, and welcomed with joy the news that Penrod was really the long lost little son of Emperor Vivian. His name was correct however as it was known, but his last name was Vivian too.

"My dear boy"said Jack Evans"I can never thank you enough for the excelleny excellent service you rendered poor violet in Little Girl Knool, and the big baby that I was cried with joy when I read those papers.It has made every body your best friends, I assure you, and my heart also beats for you as kindly and as lovingly to day as it ever did."

"I'm glad to hear that"said Penrod."But I couldn't help it."I couldn't stand it to let them harm her.."

"Not at all."returned Evans."You are surely the best boy in the world."

Little Jannie was not at all shy as she used to be in the presence of all this Good Royalty for they were always so friendly and sincere that she had grown to admire them very much, even f inding good qualities in everybody.Then came another surprise.Both the famous men Dargar and Mr Whilliam Schloeder walked in on being announced.

"This"said the Empress"is our g reat War Detectives, Hendro Peter Dargar, and Whilliam Peter Schloeder, who assists the Princesses and the whole army in general, and even when myself was in great distress, and now is the head chiefs of all our Christian Secret Service, spies and Agents."

"Ah"said jack Evans."I know these so distinguished a personages well.They are in reality the main peril to the enemyand doubtless the two most inteligent spies in all the armies the world ever knew."

"How well he has often been able to disguise himself"said violet.

"And said Emperor vivian"This is my youngest son Penrod."

"I don't doubt your word in the least sire--and I------" Whilliam Schloeder f ounf found the words frozen in his mouth as he on recognizing Penrod stared as if he couldn't believe his eyesight.

"Why Adeldefob, what--why---or are you the little brother of the Princesses.I thought,---"

"What's the matter asked Emperor Vivian while His Wife and little girls again looked all the more amazed;"What's the matter friend.

"Why in the enemys lines, I--I--why I can't believe it.This is my best assistant and companion who is known there as Adeldefob, and I thought---" he couldn't find words to say hardly anything he was so astonished.It was now more than ever evident that P n to violet and her sisters that Penrod was also Adeldefob and they couldn't hide their astonishment, and admir e admiration. Then Whilliamschloeder told the whole story, relating he was the one who goes by the name of George Gingigore and that Penrod was in the enemys lines as Adeldefob.Adeldefob saved the Christian armies at Cedermine and Evangeline St Clare"said General Schloed er."But Heavens I didn't know he was a little Prince. I thought he only really was A"Adeledefob."and he was so astonished that he sat down and with a handkerchief wiped his forehead.

Everybody was more astonished than he was, even Dargar who had never s ee seen seen Penrod before untill he had come to help violet..After the great man had recovered from his astonishment, he shook Penrods had warmly and said;

"Well done my lad.You are the bravest and greatest boy that ever lived."

After this Emperor showed violet and her sisters the beautiful little horse and rig that he had bought for them.As he went riding with them, at the advice of Penrod violet brouched up the subject which she hated the most but Emperor vivian said dismally;

"I'm sorry my dear but you will have to go through with it.Even I nor the Government can't help you; you have nothing to say even .To refrain from that duty would be a mortal sin, and you wouldn't want that just for the sake of a man who shoots little to death in a boys arms would you Violet dear."

"I should say not."declared violet most decidedly."Then burn at the stake he will.Jennie Turner will preside as judge two days after to day and I ill myself write the verdict."

CHAPTER SIXTEEN...

THE MIXED WICKED PLOT IMPOSED,
BUT GOD DISPOSES.

THE TRIAL OF THE MAN WHO SHOT THE CHILDREN TO DEATH IN PENRODS ARMS.

"Say boy"said a Courier the next morning"I am looking for Marco Penrod.Princess Jennie sent this loving message to him."

"I am Marco Penrod"said the boy."

The courier looked sharply at him and saw that he was. He handed him the note and he read;

"Dearest loving little brother, as we have nothing on the line of duty today I would like you to take a nice ride on my rig with me.

Your dearest and loving little sister.

Jennie Francis Vivian ."

XXXXXXXXXXXX

He looked at the Courier and said;

"All right you may go. He wants me to ride on the little buggy with her."

The man went away, but slowly. Somehow or other he was suspicious but he couldn't tell why."He knew the face was the same, and the voice too but somehow or other there was some catch in it, and he didn't really have the gait of Penrod. But then he thought after all maybe Penrod was not feeling well that day.

They were soon on the way in the rig.He had embraced and kissed her as was custom and then let her mount the rig first, and then got on too.He advised her to drive saying though he was an expert at riding horses he knew nothing about driving.This astonished her but she said nothing. They rode on silently together. He did not see the boy silently and most cautiously relieve her of her weapons, but when they were some great distance from the christian lines, he suddenly flashed a weapon and said;

"Now I have you a prisoner my fair little Pet Princess sister.I have at first loved you and them, but money the love of money has turned my head and I'm going in for the reward that is offered for you dead or alive. Don't make any resistance as I have your weapons.If you do I'll be compelled to shoot."

"Shock and horror convulsed the poor little girl.Penrod turned traitor like her wicked big brother.It seemed inconcievable.But she saw in his face entrenchment he what he said.There was his looks and everything right as Penrod always appeared but there was a sinte sinister expression in his face and his eyes flamed with wicked glee. Treachery and fury was in his eyes.He said no more but kept her covered as he ordered her sternly to drive for the enemys lines. As soon as they arived, he was challenged by a sentry, and penrod gave the counter sign.

"Pass"said the guard. and Jennie weeping bitterly was compelled to drive on.

"To relieve the reader so he would not have to worry,This was not penrod but the treacherous Fredrick Powden disguised as him.Jennie was soon to discover this.

At their entrance into the enemys lines Penrod jumped down, and ordered her to get off the rig.

"As soon as I can"he grinned"I'll turn you over to general ,Manley." And remember if you escape, you cannot even so much as prove what I done to your sisters for you are the only witness.,You are the prettiest oneand my love to you was only a fake.I have hated you and your sisters all the time."

Jennie at first broken hearted by this treason was now fury stricken. All the anger of the Angel possessing her came into her.Like a wild cat she screamed, and flew at him digging her finger nails into his face and scratched his eyes till he was blinded.He felt such a pain from the attack he couldn't even emit a sound. Glandelinian soldiers ran up to his assistance however, and tore her screaming away from him and carrying her to a tent threw her roughtly to the floor so that her head struck violently against the tent pole and made her see stars.Penrod was carried away quickly to have his face attended to and his eyes for he could not hardly see and his face was covered with blood.

"The wild cat"he now groaned."Wait untill I get her again."

107376

Two guards were placed over the tent, and the glandelinians who had ore crowded around dispersed.

"I know I hate christian children and those Princesses Especially"said one of them."But that is a dirty trick her brother played on her and he a Prince.I shun him even though he may recieve refuge here."

"He is a skunk"said another who was a Caucasian Kurd."We are classified to be such wicked soldiers, but we don't believe in such treachery as that."

Poor Jennie in the tent wept bitterly for a long long time. Also the shock rendered to her by the fact that she was betrayed by her supposed to be loving brother, and the way he was thrown down made her ill. She threw up into a bucket in the tent and her face was white.Then she thought suddenly of Caten and His followers.

"I hate you worse than ever"she thought to herself."It is your kind who turned my brothers head for old money. I hate you I hated you.I'll get even.I'll convert, convert him if I have to die for it."

For a long long time she lay now silent but too sad to cry. All was silent outside, and when she looked outside she observed that the sentries who were supposed to guard her were asleep. She cried again for a long time and felt feverish.Then she crossed herself and moaned oh so piteously;

"Oh please Dear Best God, and Your Dear Blessed Mother, Please, please don't let this be so.Oh please don't let it be penrod.Oh this is my worse treatment yet.But Oh I know not my will but Thine be done."and she wept anew for some time, then sudd enly a strange but slight feeling of consolation came over her. supposing it was not Penrod. could it be a bad Glandelinian boyscout dog duplicated him and did this. She would make her escape and see since the guards were asleep. If her dearest brother really didn't do it his face would be free from her self inflicted fury.Oh Dear god "she whimpered"Help me.I love you; but oh don't let me drink this Chalice if is is it is thy will."

For a time she felt so ill and weak she didn't dare stir. She was very sick and white and in no condition to try and make an escape.

THE MEANEST BOY ON EARTH.

Some of the wicked Glandelinian soldiers of the enemy came to taunt her and even swore vows that it was her brother turned wicked for the sake of obtaining a reward, and that because he had been compelled to go to a hospital to have his face treated he would get even by getting her sisters by tricks also.This seemed to confirm to her that her brother really did it.But then she wondered in her tried how he could be so cruel after all she and her sisters did for him, and how he had shown such true love for her.Despite her horror of it all she couldn't help beginning to feel a certain doubt in it all for why would he do that trick shooting to save Violet, on unless it was only a scheme to fool her later on, or that he may not have really shot them and that the gun had blanks and the men pretended to fall and when no one saw it they left used as good as ever.Of course she knew any body who is wicked could do any tricks to carry on their treacherous work, and the worst person in the world is really one to who is treacherous.And what made her feel it worse was that he had seemed to love Violet and her the most and her sisters apparently equally as good.And then she at first when her father had thought he was a foreigner and didn't look into the lads history had had such a terrible time with the help of her sisters to get him to accept the lad as their brother.And if so how could he really turn like this.But then there could be another cause if he didn't do it from wickedness or really for money.He had gone through many hardships for the armies and girlscouts, and supposing supposing he had lost his reason?But then she and her sisters could tell by any ones face whether they were crazy or not, no matter how they acted, andthis boy who had tricked her so treacherously looked perfectly normal.Despite her prostration she still felt there could have been a duplicate, and that the only hope of finding out whether that as true was to get back to the christian lines and find out for herself.But if so he had done it instead of taking vengeance on Penrod, she would cheat the devil, yes she would.She would Convert Penrod back to the Righteous path he should go if she had to die for it. She first tried to recover her composure and then creeping to the opening of the tent looked out again.One of the guards was sitting on a box, and it was surely a mystery that he didn't shake himself off the seat, he was snoring so so loud.The other was leaning against the tree nearest the tent, but he too was asleep. She knew the penalty of glandelinian soldiers caught asleep on guard duty, but her own safty was first. She crept past them and seeing the company street absolutely deserted, crept tward the groves of trees that were to the front. She knew these were the way back to the christian lines as she knew the road well.She didn't know how she made it, but she did, and no one saw her. When she reached the shelter of the big trees and found the road, and knew it by the big wheels she wanted. But again here her grief overwhelmed her and she cried most bitterly for several minutes, and prayed again desperately that Penrod didn't really do it. She lay there trying her best to quiet herself and when she felt she could take the chances she walked down the road. But she felt xdreadfully faint and weak, and very ill, and had to stop to rest oh so often. Never before had she in her life time felt such overpowering sorrow, and even rage. The way the boy had spoken to her, the sound of his voice, and his form and features surely seemed to confirm more than ever that it really was Penrod. She knew too that the Evil spirits can do even wonders sometimes, and can put in the best of persons of foriegn countries the greed of gold, but Penrod an Abbieannium, how could it be. But supposing that there was a mistake, and that Penrod would have been too much in the wicked Glandelinian armies and caught their ways? But if he really was so good how could that be! he wouldn't on no account use any rash judgement, and supposing she would accuse him, and find out he was not guilty of such treachery. How could he or even her sisters forgive her. no she must find out. The tell tale scratches on his face and the condition of his eyes would prove whether he was the one or not. and besides if he was, and was in the enemys base hospital he couldn't be in the christian lines nor would he have the courage to go back to her sisters since his face was so frightfully torn.

She traveled down the road for quite a distance untill she left the woods and then she had to rest for a while for she felt so overcome that she couldnot go any further. Finally she went on again, and had traveled for half an hour when she sank almost in a faint in the middle of the road, right in front of the two horses of a farmers wagon who was being driven down the road. The horses literally passed over her before they could be brought to a stop but she was not to trampled on, and the wheels of the wagon did not touch her. In horror the farmer brought the wagon to a stop or the horses rather, jumped from the seat and went to the assistance of the little girl. She had recovered a little by this time but was weeping bitterly again.

Trying to soothe her and noticing she was ill he put her onto the hay in the wagon and brought her home to his home. As he alighted from the wagon he called to his wife, whose name was Miranda and she lifted the little child from the wagon and carried her into the house. Her two children a boy and girl pretty too and each between fourteen and fifteen years of age were shocked when they saw the little girl and the boy recognized her by a picture he had seen.

"Oh Why pa she is the little Princess Jennie Vivian" he said as his mother laid the sobbing child on the bed.

"I found her in the road right under my horses feet." said the Farmer Farmer. "she sank in a faint before them before I could bring them to a stop. She's ill for her face is as white as chalk."

The Farmers daughter, went into the bed room, and taking the child in her arms embraced her and begged her not to cry so and tell them what was the matter. As she didn't want to accuse Penrod un less she was sure Jennie couldn't tell, but now both the Farmer and His wife could see, that her illness was caused by a shock more than by any other cause.

"Something very mean has been done to her" said the Farmer. Then he asked; "Were you my dear captured by the Glandelinians?"

Jennie shook her head.

"Did the Glandelinians have you?"

Jennie nodded through her sobs.

"How did it happen then that they have or had you if they didn't capture you Princess.?"

"I--I--- was treacherously---betrayed brought into---the camp of the enemy by a pretended---friend--and--aand--" she couldn't go no further and broke into a pitiful fit of weeping that convulsed her.

"The snake" said the Farmer. "This is the worst thing I ever heard of. "One One of our darlings of the Nation b treacherously betrayed. Taken into the enemy lines by a pretended friend. Could you tell me who he was? "

"I cannot tell yet" she sobbed. "I believe I know, but please don't ask me---sir as---as---I don't---want too use---rash judgement."

"Try to recover yourself you poor child" begged the mother. "As soon as you'll feel better we'll take you softly on the wagon to the christian lines where you can see your brother Penrod."

At this she wept anew more wildly and when asked "Did something happen to him too" she only begged them not to speak of him yet as it only made her worse. The Mother went and got a little hot brandy and made her swallow a little. Then a bowl of hot soup was given her and she was aided to drink a little of it. Poor Jennie was so shaky she couldn't hold the spoon, and had the woman not held the bowl the poor child would have dropped it and the soup would have been spilled on her.

"Who ever that treacherous snake was will answer to God for it" said the Farmer. "to cause such a good little girl like that such grief. If Miranda see that the hired hand get's my buggy and horses ready. We'll take the poor little angel to the christian lines as soon as possible. Our horses are fast and we ought to ger get there in a few minutes."

The good lady went out to obey but muttered a Prayer to Our Blessed Lord as she did so, while the two children put some vigil lights before a Statue and a Beautiful Picture of the Sacred Heart, and knelt down to pray heartily for the Poor little girl.

The wagon was or Buggy was ready in no time, and the good woman carried the slightly comfot comforted child out and into the buggy. A minute passed and the buggy was on its way while the Mother held Jennie on so tenderly in her arms and caressed the poor child so nicely that she finally could not help smiling through her tears.

"That's the way I like to see you you poor dear child" said the Farmer.

They had only gone on for about two minutes when suddenly---

"Don't advance unless you can give the counter sign. Halt or I'll fire. I've got you covered" and two girlscouts and a soldier sentry stepped into view.

"Oh its is a farmer, and they've got-----why heavens" exclaimed the boy and it was George Zimmermann, and at the sight he could not speak any further. He was paralyzed, and his heart sank within him and a lump in his throat almost chocked him, and tears flowed suddenly from his eyes.

The girl too was struck dumb but she made the motion to the Farmer "Pass" and he went on. Jennie was able to direct him to her own part of the camp and feeling she could stand on her feet, she indicated the tent where her sisters were. He lifted her down and then went to the wagon to get her hat. Jennie recieved a second shock in hearing these words before she opened the tent flap."

"But Penrod you have been worrying all day long. Surely Jennie must be with papa. She wouldn't go outside the camp without letting us know. You have let us win all the games this morning, and when you went to dinner with us you wouldn't even eat."

"But I can't help it" she heard Penrod say and there was more than worry in his voice, it sounded like he was trying desperately to supress himself from crying. "My instinct tells me something has happened or otherwise she could would be here."

"She's been gone so long though" said a voice that sounded like Catherines' That I'm worried myself."

"But surely if anything happens Jennie could take care of herself" said Hettie.

"Yes but look at Penrods face" said another who was Daisy. "He's as white as if he seen a ghost." I believe there is some cause for worry. But papa said too that she was not seen to day at all. Maybe something is wrong. We ought to organize a big troop of child scouts and hunt for her."

Jennie suddenly opened the tent and looked in shaking like a leaf. She looked so searchingly at Penrods face. It was marred all right, marred with his look of over anxiety and worry, and as white as a sheet. He looked in amazement at her as she saw her look at his clear scratchless face.

"Why Jennie Dear" Penrod and her sisters together said with loving reproach; "where were you all this time? Penrod has been with us all this time and he worried and so did we."

"Why she's ill." cried Penrod hardly daring to breath."

This second shock and too sudden a relief at the sight of Penrod was too much for poor Jennie. She sank in a wo swoon at the tent entrance and as she fell her sisters screamed in terror, and Penrod whiter yet was too shaken and too paralyzed to even move to lift her up but shaded his eyes with his hands and sobbed. The farmer had reached the tent by this time, and had her on the cot, while two of her sisters were forced to take care of Penrod and bathe his head in cool water, while Joice ran to get a doctor, probably for both. By the time the doctor arived Penrod had somewhat recovered., and Jennie was sobbing as if her heart would break, and yet for a time no matter how they had pleaded they couldn't giv get her quiet.

The doctor examined her and finally said;

"She is ill from shock. I believe I can get her quiet. Violet you run for your Mother the Empress if you can find her. Penrod you'll have to help me as you j know some doctoring yourself. Angeline and the rest of you little angels would you mind stepping outside untill I tell you to come in."

"They obeyed but they were all crying bitterly themselves.

The Doctor after a few minutes was able to get her quieted considerably.

"There must be something concerning me I am afraid." Said Penrod in a hoarse whisper.

"Maybe. He" He turned to the farmer who had brought her and who had been at first too shocked shocked to do anything to assist her also.

"She swooned under my horses as I was driving down the road" he said. "I don do not be able to say what happened because she couldn't tell."

As the doctor was attending her a girlscout stepped in.
"Master Penrod"she begged."I must say I know you are busy but I have something important to tell you."
He glanced at the doctor.
"Tell us in here."he commanded.
"Well sir"to Penrod"Do you know anything about this letter.I found it in the Company Street torn in several pieces.I pasted it together as well as I could and I couldn't understand.I 'm sure my dear boy friend, that you didn't tear such a loving little letter up like that."
Penrod accepted it and read;

"Dearest loving little Brother, as we have nothing on the line of duty, would like you to take a nice ride on my rig with me.
Your dearest and loving little sister.
Jennie Francis Vivian.
x
XXXXX X X X X X X X X X X X X

"Did you have that letter!"the girl asked and she looked slightly reproachfully." AT HIM
"For a moment Penrod couldn't say anything; but finally Violet who had entered on that account and seeing the letter;said;
"Oh my dear ge girl,he didn't recieve even a note.Where did you get it!"
"I found it down there in the road.It was torn to pieces.Here is the envelope. It was lying in the mud."
Violet recieved the letter and envelope, and after reading it tearfully, showed it to her sisters.
"There is base treachery in this some where."said Joice bitterly."If it is that Fredrick Lowden I'll"---
"But surely it couldn't---"
"Yes it could"insisted Joice savagely."That reptile could duplicate anybody if he had the chance.He made up as me once and caught him.The soldiers were surprised to find two Joice Vivians in the army and one of them turn out to be a boy.But he then escaped.I'm afraid he disguised as Penrod and stole this note or recieved it from a courier."
I'll find out from Jennie when she feels better"said Violet.
The Doctor just then came out.
"You may go innow"he said."But she must rest and sleep or otherwise serious complications may set in.She recieved a dreadful heart breaking shock of some sort and she is as nervous as a leaf in a storm. But see that she remains good and quiet.But I don't believe it will injure her for you to find out what happened."
After sorrowfully consulting among themselves, they went in and saw Jennie lying there and weeping so piteously while Penrod having recovered from the effects of it himself was having her in his arms embracing her tenderly and saying;
"Please please don't cry so Jennie dear.I am sure you couldn't help it when you thought it was me.For my safe and Gods don't cry so."
"Jennie dear plead ed Joice holding the letter to her."Did you send this note to Penrod.
"I did "she sobbed.
"By whom!"
"A courier."
"Do you remember his name."
"His name--- was--(sob) Oscar Hinderson a colobel."
Joice went outside and seeing one of the soldiers passing hailed to him.The soldier willingly approached, and seeing her twar dimmed eyes would have requested what the matter was but she hastily told him the story without the questioning and told him to send or bring Colonel Hinderson.
The colonel was not long in coming.
"Did you give this letter to Penrod!"she demanded almost severely.
"I did Princess."
"You did not."she retorted.
"What do you mean---"
"Oh you didn't.You let some rascal hood wink you into giving him this note. You know that you should not have given any boy a note from any of us unless we are with nessing the giving of it in person.Why did you do it.Jennie is broken up by a disaster that came upon her and you're responsible.I ought to be good and sore at you.It is like you men who are the few foriegners in our army.You blunder too much.You ought to reason before you give anything to boys without our presence being there."

"But sure I hope I didn't do no harm Princess.Penrod is the best boy you ever had a most loving brother and he surely made a serious mistake if he tore it up like that."
"He didn't tear it up."said Joice almost vehemently while now her other sisters were around her and appearing also provoked."He never recieved it."
"He didn't.!hy I thought---"
"Yes you thought all right.You undeliberately or deliberately disobeyed our orders absolutely.You should not give any message to anybody unless we see who it is delivered too.Jennie is inan awful plight and so is Penrod, and us and it is your fault for your carelessness.I'm going to dismiss you as a courier."
"nd she strode away followed by her sisters, and went into the tent.
Poor Jennie was weeping in his arms and he was having an awful time comforting her.But he was finally succeeding, and he was holding her in such a tender yet loving embrace that to her sisters delight, and relief she was beginning to close her eyes.
He literally rocked her gently to and fro as if she had been a little weeping baby, and that with the embrace, his soothing comforting words, and the condition of the child soon put her into a deep sleep which was really the saving of her indeed.
When he was sure that Jennie was lying quiet in his arms he slowly turned to Violet and demanded gently in a hoarse whisper;
"What in the world happened to her, wonder.What was wrong what that note."
"Why"said Violet angrily"The courier recieved this note from Jennie, and without telling us about it to see you got it instead, he went and gave it to a strange boy.I'll bet my own eye teeth it was Fredrick Lowden."
"Fredrick Lowden!"
"Yes.The Courer in his bewildered way confessed it was you."
"He"said Penrod and he was so startled that he said the words a little too loud, but to his relief observed that jennie was not in the least aroused.His face now was really white but his brow was as black as a thundercloud.
"Do you mean!----"he gasped;
"I do mean it.That boy was was disguised as you.For the courier admitted he gave the note to you.and I and my sisters with you all day without a minute of seperation.Why that's ridiculous.If he gave it to you then we're blind."
"Why I sure recieved no note."
"We know it. I believe I can understand it, for outside the doctor gave me Jennie's full confession, though she told you something as much as her awful condition would allow.I wish she had torn the very eyes out of that treacherous weasel. I'm positively sure it was that Lowden boy of the enemy boy spies, because no doby nobody could do any duplicating on the enemy child scout side but that little brat."
"But such treachery." complained Penrod."I can prov prove it from my friend Angelinla Aronburg and others that no matter what us child scouts did we never so much as did the slightest or the sligh test act of treachery against any of the enemy.That surely isn't fair and I won't tolerate.They always say that any one trifling with me is trifling with fire.Well to cause Jennie to be this way and me and you in such distress is trifling with me and I'm the fire.I'll get even or my name isn't Penrod."
"But they'll discover that their scheme failed and they'll disappear untill the storm blows over." Said Hettie.
"Ha-Ha-Ha."laughed Penrod."That's funny indeed.When the storm blows over. Did you ever see a storm blow over in ME".and he said this with a fierceness that was savage indeed, and there was a flash in his eyes that even made them almost afraid of him as brave little girls as they were.They remembered the destructive raid of only two or three days or so ago that he made, and that was only in revenge because the little girl and boy were shot to death in his arms.
"But how could he get the disguise to duplicate as you Penrod."Angeline whimpered.
"I do not understand that either either.But there is another point.I never did and never would allow any person to duplicate me even if it was only in fun or a joke. But to do it for such a act of treachery.But I'm suspicious.you remember violet, how I and you terrified that boy Starring when roughhandcuffed together we almost captured Starring.He must have plotted this, with some awful purpose in view.Supposed he would have succeeded and caused me to get it into dishonor and probably not allowed to be with you any more.You and your sisters might have been assassinated .There's some vile plot in this I'm sure."

At this moment the sentry announced that Angelinia Aronburg, Jennie Garner, Timothy Groveton, and also Jennie or Angeline Riches, the two Saunders girls, Mildred Maxwell, and others looking dreadfully sick and worried had come to plead their cause and find out what for Heavens sake happened to poor Jennie.

Violet ordered that they should be admitted, and they were. Angelinia Aronburg stood rooted to the spot gazing with fearful staring eyes at Jennie in Penrods arms, and at Penrod.

"Penrod in as few words as possible told the whole story. Angelinia Aronburg literally covered her face with her hands and wept.

"Angelinia" demanded Penrod almost sternly "did I or you or any of our scouts if ever do an act of treachery to the enemy."?

"No; no" she sobbed.

Angeline Riches did not weep. But her face was as white as a sheet as she rose and with a sinister sheer on her face said;

"If they are treachery treacherous, what harm is there in being treacherous too. We ought to."

"But it would be horrie horrid" said Jean Saunders.

"Not to me "pouted Mildred Maxwell. "We have acted a little too much as if we were mere sheep lately. It's got to stop. I'll not let any more of this go. We can duplicate too and will if I can."

The others nodded too."

Penrod glanced at violet and her sisters but they did not seem to even look as if they would protest.

"I would surely be no sin on our part to do it. she said himself. "I never approved of treachery but if they are going to do things like that then--- please violet, Joice and you too Angeline, please don't start weeping again. I understand how it is and I cannot tell you how I feel come here Angeline please don't you are acting like poor Jennie" and he drew her to him and held her in his left arm while he retained poor Jennie with the other. We will "We will righteously get even don't cry so please Angeline. I cannt stand it." Everybody now was either crying or were wet with tears.

"Oh "said Angelinia Aronburg. "I cannt believe this is really true. This surely can't be" she sobbed. "We never did in our career ever do any wicked treachery to the enemy. Oh I hope poor Jennie was only dreaming it---. Oh this isn't fair, that Lowden boy, didn't believe it in him even though he was the sna e many said he was. Oh surely Penrod it cannt be true. Poor Jennie. she looks so white and sick."

"It surely was true" said Joice through her sobs. "The farmer who brought her told me she fainted right in front of his horses on the road before he could rein in, and only by a miracle they didn't trampl trample her or the wheels of his heavy hay wagon run over on her. she was under the wagon when he brought her from the road. she told Penrod and the Doctor all the truth of her experience. This is the letter she sent to him and such a loving little le letter. I can't hardly bear to think of it."

"Angelinia Aronburg recieved the letter, but she couldn't bear to read it.

"That boy and his two followers, are the meanest lads on earth." said Jennie Garner very angrily. "If I had them I'd court marshall them to face the burning at the stake as it is a fit crime to that punishment. We have never did a treacherous act to any of the glandelinians yet, but if Violet or her sisters, and especially poor Jennie gives us the permiss ion we certainly will in the future. This is the dirtiest trick that ever was done to anybody and it seems to unusual that I'm afraid it would almost be impossible for an angel to believe it. My God it couldn't be, that poor little girl, the most lovingly little angel on the face of the earth. Penrod dear what are you going to do."

"I'm only fire just now." retorted Penrod with his face black with his scowl for he was raging like a furnace within. "Those that meddles with my sisters is playing with dangerous fire, for it is trifly trifling with me and I'm the fire. They as Hettie suggested may make themselves scarce untill the storm blows over. Well let them do it. I'll get the Gemini to hound them down if they have to sent their members in every place in the world to get them. And I'll give orders not to trifle with them either for if they cannot capture them alive, then to shoot them down on sight. But if they're ever captured, I'll I'll be the judge of that Court Marshall, Jennie shall be the witness, and her sisters and some of you chief girlscouts shall be the jury. Then we'll see who the joke is on then."

"Do you believe that Jennie will recover? "asked Minnie Saunders anxiously.

"The doctor said she would recover very soon if only I could get her to sleep. and as you see she sure is as asleep as if she was dead. If she was not breathing so I would have been frightened. And see the poor little. she is smiling too. Oh that sure is good."

"Oh that is relief to see that" sighed her sisters together. "If later on we could only get her to eat a little supper. Then I'm sure she'll be all right. But she was so shaky."

At this moment the sentry announced that a tall strange man wished to see them, or rather claimed that he had been sent for."

He was admitted, and to their surprise it was Gringore (William Schneider)

"I'm sorry" Princess "said he" but Dargar was or is busy somewhere and could not be located. So I came in stead. I heard the whole detail, and so did some of my followers. They just came from the enemys lines, and were in one of the biggest of the Glandelinian base hospitals disguised as a doctor, though too he really is one. That boy whom little Jennie mistook for Penrod had or has a very seriously scratched face. His eye sight probably can be saved so the enemy surgeon said but his face will show scars all the rest of his life. The two boys Starring and Dargar, were there too to learn what had happened and blamied him for it saying he blundered not in taming Jennie too much in the camp but for seizing her at all. It was meant by that act of treachery to seize violet herself, as it was believed by them through the testimony of some spy within our lines that you my boy had left the camp on a scouting trip and would not be in. The discovery that you were with your sisters all this time; and of the boy being scratched and torn in his face and of Jennie's peculiar and easy escape because the two guards were all asleep filled the two boys with fright and terror and they have fled to a remote army somewhere of which we no know nothing about. But here is what I discovered, and Thank God it failed. Starring is enraged over the lost of those important papers violet secured and gave to me and Dargar, and he plotted to get even by causing the destruction of you little girls. He surely realized he could not do it unless Penrod your dear brother was gotten out of the way. They can see he is dangerous and therefore to get him out of the way they believed if one of their numbers could disguise as you Penrod, and trap violet treacherously and cause her to believe that Penrod turned traitor against you, you if escaping could have accused him and had him banished from your company forever or probably share the awful fates of traitors. Then if that succeeded, agents disguised as christian soldiers were to be as the sentries guarding your headquarters; and when the opportunity came at night when you were asleep they would have run their bayonets through your hearts and escaped. Without Penrod you would not have been guarded, as Evans has transferred transferred his army to another section to guard against the foe moving for Jennie Gary and could not return here in time to shield you. I believe from your many narrow escapes that you little girls are angel possessed, because for some reason or other those sentries asleep on duty were found out will not beshot for being asleep on guard dur duty. They had been most mysteriously doped and it was proved too that no one had been near them. A sleep potion of some sort was discovered to have been in their food. So the Court Marshall could not blame them. What also saved Jennie from too much of a threat breaks that would have been probably fatal was her discovery that Penrod had not been so treacherous for she sure had scratched and torn that boys face somethin terrible and the doctors had a terrible time to save him from bleeding to death. Too bad in my opinion that he either didn't or had his eyes blinded for life. Such Treachery. From the fact that Dargar and Starring are all right and from their fierce reproaches to him even in his condition it was Fredrick Lowden. They told him he acted too sudden in his plan also and that when he had her a prisoner he also should have kept his mouth shut in the first place and not said anything to her, as she is a "dangerous little wild cat". so now we understand everything. It was the most treacherous plot ever found out. We would have tried to kidnap the little brat from the hospital and brought him a prisoner here but it was just then impossible, for fearing of you Penrod, and your followers; and believing you might take immediate ve immediate vengeance he is too closely guarded and will be moved to a hospital in the enemy country under heavy guard as soon as possible. The two others have flew the coop coop and therefore they cannot be captured now."

Violet and her other sisters and Penrod were too flabbergasted and horrified to even say a word. He continued;

"I can prove the plot was hatched too. I found a note which had been dropped on the floor in the hospital near by by that boys bed, which was a mysterious sort of a chiper dispatch. No one at first could discover what it meant but Miss Mary Stanck who is good at such things made it out for me. I have it here with me but I do not believe it would do any of you any good unless you can understand it. It is the most mysterious code in the world. This is it." and he produced a strange paper of a yellow color, but all it had on it was strange marks and dashes. Violet and her sisters shook their heads as they looked at it, but to their surprise Penrod was able to make it out.

"From posing in the enemys lines as "Adelede fob" I learned many of their dispatches and coden"he said."Lain surely to a tell the truth."Violet i you are the one mention d on this code and Jennie was captured instead.It says here that the sentries sentries in disguise we re either to knife, bayonet or strangle you in your sleep or if not successful in that to see to it your food was doped with some deadly suddenly acting poison, probably arsenic..The boy didn't form this himself, it was from a spy who said I "Did"go out on a scouting trip this early morning.Well then I must have in my sleep, for I do not remember leaving camp at all. But I can tell you how it happened to be thought I did. I made mention to Gertrude Angeline that I intended to(she shook her head yes) but then as you my dear little Daisy begged me to stay and play with you and your sisters I gratefully and willingly obliged.At that time for some reason or other poor Jennie overslept and I refused to either arouse or or allow any one to do so. Sometime after I suppose from the little loving note she sent to me she wished me to go out riding with her.Through the carelessness of that Courier that little snake recieved recieved the note himself and played that treacherous trick. I am surprised that poor Jennie fell for it so easily but I believe the scoundrel must have disguised himself too well, and at first may have acted exactly as I did, pretending to love her and so on.As much as I hate that man Manley however is not to blame for this as he did not hatch the plot.Those three boys are the guilty ones only for this Code proves it.Though Lowden disguised as me and pulled through with the treacherous act, Starring was the plotter. That he blundered in capturing Jennie serves him right.If I ever lay my hands on him and his two companions he would carry scars all his life.He'll die for this believe me.Is it possible to have spies of our sort go into the enemy cities and try to snatch him."

"I wouldn't advise it now"declared Joice with a toss of her pretty head."That would be too dangerous."

"It would be best"suggested Catherine"to let the rascals believe the "Storm" has blown over."They will lose their caution then, and I and you and my sisters will do our best to capture them.Starring plotted it but as Lowden caused Jennie this dreadful horror we'll settle with him worse.The other two if caught we'll imprison for life, but Lowden I hate to say it but it must be done will pay for it with fire."

"I am glad that you have discovered all this and that we understand the situation" said Angeline to the Gemini leader through her tears."We were oh so frightened frightened when she fainted at our tent entrance.There she is starting to stir she is awakening.Penrod see if you can prevent her from crying.I'm going to see if we can get some broth and something for her to eat.You can coax her I'm sure."

Angeline went out, but at her advice and request Gingigore remained and was offered a chair. Jennie had stirred and awakened and would have again cried bitterly, but finding herself in Penrods arms, and her sister Joice caressing her head and face she tried to be brave and held the tears in check however she felt much much better, than before, her illness was really gone, though she still trembled.

"Do you believe you can eat a little supper"Penrod said.

"Yes"But "Yes "she said between sobs"but oh Penrod dear how I am grateful to Our Dear Bless ed Lord that it was not you.Oh I was so frightened so upset.I believe I doubted you then.Will you please forgive me.""and she started to weep afresh."

"Don't cry so please"said Penrod soothingly"I can't stand it.There is nothing you did to be forgiven for.I made the same fault myself when once I was decieved."He glanced at Angelinia Aronburg, and she nodded.Then as violet and her sisters had never heard of it he told the whole story, of how he was followed fooled and almost captured a prisoner because"Angelinia Aronburg" boy betrayed him, how he accused her of it, how she requested time to prove her innocence, and he granted the request, and how he soon discovered the deception in a man her size and shot him dead.

"There is treachery in nearly all these Glandelinians especially if they are Scoodliers"said he."That man I shot was Angelinia's size and was a Omarian .I was sorry though I had shot him dead.There had been an easy chance to capture him, bring him before the higher authorities in my camp, have Gertrude as a main witness, clear her of the accusation I made, and burned him at the stake which is the penalty for treachery."

As bad as her shock had been, and as shaky as she was yet, Jennie however was able to partake of a much better supper than was supposed, in really she ate more than her sisters or Penrod did.She was helped to sit up on the cot and ate with a good show of appetite.

It had been several hours now since she had first returned to her sisters , and she felt much better now though she still suffered from the effects of the shock. Penrod Penrod wondered how things were now and whether she was in the right condition to be able to tell what had really happened to her. Violet did not feel whether she can or not, for maybe the remembrance of it may bring her into the same spell again.But nevertheless Jennie felt willing to tell it all right, and she did. She told of the notes he had written but that the letter or note which he had shown her was only a duplicate for she had written a much longer and more loving letter than that. She told of the ride with him in the rig, that he had acted in every way as if he had been really Penrod, how he disarmed her without her seeing him, and of his treacherous words after he had made her a prisoner in the enemys lines. She told of her wild fit of anger and her attack, and that she really would have blinded him for good had not the soldiers pulled her from him and threw her against a tent pole.,The way she described how the "False Penrod" acted his part stunned him for that increased the idea of how treacherous he was. When she finished between her sobs, Violet asked;

"How was it he could so easily decieve you.Could you not detect in the slightest degree any deception at all.Didn't his voice have any slight difference from Penrods."?

"No"sobbed Jennie."He sounded just exactly as if he was Penrod, and he basely hugged and kissed me the same way.That was his deception but I couldn't know."

"Do you know what his size was in height!"Penrod demanded of Gingigore.

"He I believe is the same height as you are Penrod"said the Geminian Chieftian.

"Then if that is true the rascal is my own height and was easily able to decieve "said Penrod."I have often heard that of all these Glandelinian cuts he is the only one who may or can be able to duplicate any one his size and appear as some one else. How he ever succeeded in making himself look like me or not.I'm going to investigate and see if any of my photographs are missing. if so then that spy who helped him swiped one of them.I have counted them and remember their number."

"Shall I go and find it."said Violet.

"No I'd be afraid to leave you out on the company street so late now when so many of the soldiers are out.I'll go myself. Angelinia": to Gertrude Angeline You guard the tent entrance and see that no one attempt enters while I'm gone, not even Emperor Vivian if he don't give the counter sign I'll whisper to you. Some one could duplicate him too.I'll be gone only a minute."

To their surprise however Penrod was gone longer than ten minutes.Violet and Joice sat beside Jennie who was about falling asleep again to their joy and satisfaction. Finally in about fifteen minutes Penrod returned.

"I can't understand it.She said."The guard who watches your building, sisters, says no one entered without his knowledge and I believe him too for nothing of any sort is missing in our rooms not even one of my photographs, and nothing has ever been disturbed. I wonder how he did it."

"Gingigore to them had a strange appearance in his face.

"I believe I suspect."he suddenly said pounding the small table at which he sat with with his hand."Remember Penrod how wild the reports were in, in the newspapers when you slew those six Glandelinians so suddenly before Violet could finishyour First name!"

"Yes but what has that to do about his doubling on me!"demanded Penrod in surprise.

"Easy.Your photograph and Violets were in the front page and big ones too.If any of those news papers were also sold in the enemys lines or if any one secured them then the rascal used that picture that was in the newspaper to make up as you."

"By golly I believe you are right."said Penrod"But then I cannot understand that either.Our own newspapers are never sold to Glandelinians, wouldn't be given to them at any price."

"Yes but spies disguised as christians in the cities could easily get a copy." said violet."

"Then that settles it"declared Penrod."The newspapers gave me away by making my picture on the paper.If I had thought I would not allow or had allowed the popul publication of my pictur in the paper. I understood the news gave a lot of descriptions about the event but I never thought my picture was publicated. And the next thing is how did the papers get my photograph. I hope none of you girlscout officers never sent my photograph to the Angelinia Agathia daily times."

"No"said Angelinia Aronburg."You may have been snapshotted by some news paper man ."

"Well when I get hold of him I'll make him eat a newspaper for it."said Penrod."That party then if he did so disobeyed the law for no one has a right to take a photograph of any of us without our consent.We could even charge him with being or attempting to be a spy for that act. "

For a while everybody was silent. Penrod was guessing a lot but he didn't say anything. After holding Jennie for a while his arms untill she was asleep again he had Joice and Violet put her to bed in the tent, while he stood still and rigid before the tent entrance. A great stream of drilling soldiers were just marching down the Company street, and receiving the "command" "dismissed" were in orderly fashion repairing to their respective commands. The two princesses soon had Jennie in her night gown and in the bed and then they wondered what Penrod was thinking of. Gingigore had left by this time, but he that is Penrod retained his friends the girlscout generals, excepting Minnie Saunders, and she he sent to her respective commands, with a code message he had written himself. He then sat at the table and was very quiet for a while while he appearne apparently was studying what appeared to be his Geography. In fact he was studying a map of the territory.

He suddenly glanced at Jennie. She was sleeping quietly but surely now there was a a real happy smile on her face though tears did still seem to ooze from her closed eyes.

"Send for the girlscout who brought me the note!" he said to Jean Saunders.

"What was her name.?"

"Lucille Anna."

"Lady Penrod dear. It what did so she do."

"I want to find out what road she picked it up on!"

Jean went readily enough. It was some twenty minutes however before she returned with the little girl who at first looked a little worried."

Penrod spoke as she entered and graciously offered her his seat. She was too embarrassed to obey, not understanding now he so high in position and the brother of Violet and her sisters should offer her a common girlscout his own chair.

She declined most graciously.

"I say sit down." said Penrod.

There was a command in his voice this time, and she feverishly obeyed though there was a laughed red at such honor.

"I remember" he said "you are the one who brought me the torn up note. Do you remember just what road you found it on."?

Violet and her sisters wondered what he was up to.

"Yes---yes" stammered the little girl. "It's the --- road that runs through Company L. The main wide road of General Hemp's camp. Here's the marks of fresh tracks of some rig too going that way in the mud and the hoofs of some horse. I believe though water ten ----"

"Just call me Penrod." he said with a smile."

"Well it appears Penrod as if the hoofs belong more to some pony."

Penrod was silent for a full minute while he drummed on the table lightly with his fingers.

"Does your father know what happened ?" asked Penrod of Jolie.

"No" she answered. "I and my sisters at your advice forbid any one telling him as we didn't want him or dear mother to be upset."

"Good. And about the rig. Where did you get it though I understand we had it for a long time. ?"

"Mother gave it and the pony to us as a remembrance of her when she is so far away, and now its gone. said Violet with tears coming to her eyes.

Penrod grinned.

"I'm going to get that pony and rig."

"What gasped Violet and her sisters.

"I said I'm going to get that pony and rig, and I don't mean maybe. Angelinia Aronburg my friend, get your whole shebang of a troop ready. Jennie Saunders do the same with yours. In fact see that the whole entire child scout troop in our whole army is ready in the saddle within an hour from now. You Mary (no Mary Stanck) see that general Fredrick Nance has his whole cavarly Squadron on horse. Everybody besides all your other weapons carry your unbreakable lance. I'm going to get that rig if I have to make a fierce attack. Sisters, I want every one of you except Joice dear to accompany me for the satisfaction of showing you that when I intend to get a thing I DO IT."

"Don't you think it is very dangerous" protested Joice.

"The way I plan it it won't be for us but it will be for the enemy if I'm resisted." he answered. "I'm going to get that rig and pony for it belongs to you and your sisters sisters and I won't let the enemy have it."

The girlscout leaders had gone off to do as they were ordered, and within less than an hours time the whole force of child scouts, and the entire division of the whole army of christian cavarly were ready, not only under Fred Nance but those of Baldwin, Walter Jennings and others.

Joice was to remain behind however to watch and attend to Jennie Saunders and to see to her needs. Of course Penrod admitted that if her sisters did not feel as if they desired to join the expedition they could remain with Jennie, but they were willing, for they never requested any one to go where they would'nt go themselves, and would not remain behind when their dear ones were going on a probably perilous adventure either. Really afraid as they were of dangerous adventures they also were nevertheless no cowards either.

All the girls scouts at Fort de Angelinea advise Timothy Groveton was to command the boyscout divisions in person, while she was to take charge of all the girls. Penrod in the main was to be at the head of the whole expedition, with Violet and the other five Princesses accompanying him. All were to carry their most reliable weapons, and their strong sharp unbreakable lances. Lucille Anna was to accompany them too as no girlscout was to be left out. But she was to lead to the road on which the rig wheel tracks were and where she had found the torn up note. When the whole immense column was ready, the command "Forward" was given by Penrod but in signal, and the whole started forward at the gallop the little girl Anna being delighted to lead the way to the road, which they reached in about ten minutes. Then they went down it toward the direction of the enemys line lines, and as everybody had swift horses, it did not take even fifteen minutes to even reache within sight of the Glandelinian encampments. Then it being more gloomy than twilight now Penrod had his troops to deply in lines across fields and glens while he went forward with Violet, and her sisters to scout and see the lay of the land, while he issued commands to his leaders to have everybody ready at moments notice.

"There's the rig and pony tied to a tree near the limits of the enemys camp" said Angeline Pointing.

"It seems strange the enemy left it there" said Jo Catherine. "And strange there are a few guards even about. I believe the enemy at this sector is a little presumptious."

"Penrod was gazing at her and she noticed he had a most mischievious grin.

"I've changed my mind about the rig and pony." he said.

"Why?"

"I'm going to overhaul everything in that part of the camp. It's the easiest change for a overwhelming raid I ever had and why should I not choose the opportunity. This is a chance for me to strike in Jennie's behalf."

"put the ponyand rig."?

"We'll get that first. But listen girls. For my sake do not participate in the raid as you are too shaky over Jennie's condition, and though I feel bad too my desire to get even overcomes that. I don't want anything to happen to you, and you know surely nothing will happen to me. I've got my best pistols, gren grenades and my liquid fire gun."

"put where shall we go" Demanded Daisy for really she and her sisters felt somewhat relieved that they did not need to share in the raid, in case it would result in a conflict."

"I'll see to it that the rig and pony is obtained first, and then you can ride back a litl little ways in it. This is too tempting a sight for me to resist, and therefore I'm not resisting temptations this time. This is a good chance to show the enemy what it is to trifle with me through what happened to poor Jennie and I'm going to get or destroy everything I can. I'll ignite all their tents and barracks. Over yonder I can see with my field glasses is a large child slave encampment and I'm going to direct the first part of the raid there and get every one I can. But for your sakes stay out of it this time. For you're too shaky to do any fighting, and I'm not as bad as I feel. You'll do it won't you dear sisters. Of course I cannot prevent you if you intend to go at it, but I'll plead if you don't."

"We are not foolish" said Violet through her tears. "I'm afraid I'm so much a tremble I couldn't even shoot you where you stand. We'll be wise, and stay out of it, and what happens will be only a great dram for us at a distance. But please for our sakes and god's most be careful Penrod dear."

"I sure will." said Penrod bitterly. "The enemy will remember me forever after this evening."

He went to the command he left behind.

"Jean Saunders dear" you're a good scrapper." said He to the girlscout leader. "Take your friend Jack and a good number of child scouts there, and go for that rig and pony there. If you are resisted give no quarter. Remember we won't be bothered with prisoners. They're not worth it the child assassins."

"What good is a rig and pony to us."? said Jean not understanding at first.

"It seems strange Master Penrod that you bring us all out for that dear. What's the joke?"

"It is no joke at all." Grinned Penrod. "The rig and pony is the property of the P I Princesses."

"If that's the case I'll see who can stop me from getting it." she retorted, and gave the order to a goodly number of troopers. They dashed forward in a line, overwhelmed the sentries and pickets in that section and soon had the rig and pony on its way back without any resistance whatever. Violet, and her five sisters were soon in their respective seats, and Angeline drove the rig to a safe distence. Then Angelinia Aronburg, Angeline Richee, and Timothy Groveton were sent for.

"I just wish to inform you" Penrod said "That I'm going to raid the enemys camp.

Angelina richard you go for the child slaves camp there and destroy everything, set everything up in flames and bring the child slaves to freedom.Give no quarter to their cruel and sinful masters.The rest of us will overwhelm the whole camp in this sector.In this I hope to find one or two of those brats who caused Jennie's misery.If I do I'll---"

He didn't finished, for he suddenly cnoked, and tears welled to his eyes.

It might be in some way somewhat impossible to describe the raid in real full detail.Heaven alone can tell how many tents were set in flames, and barracks too. One big building about seven hundred yards long was full of explosives and this was either accidentally or purposely set afire, and exploded in a series of terrible eruptions heard for five hundred miles, and wrecked a goodly portion of the whole entire main enemy army encampments of barracks by the concussions and leveled all the remaining tents to the ground, and caused the wildest panic and confusion. The number of child slaves rescued from slavery was fifteen thousand. A long line of wagons, were captured, provision and ammunition alive, and also an immense herd of cattle cattle and a big drove of horses also.General John Manley in this sector of the encampment would would literally have been captured had he not been rescued by a dashing body of cavarly who engaged the Abyssinkillians cavarly with great fury and were repulsed. The main shock of this cavarly attack, at first driving the Abyssinkillians back was met by a great drove of the child scouts who defeated the enemy without a single loss to themselves and woeful loss to the enemy. In the confusion of the raid and conflict Manley was put out of command by a serious wound and his horse was shot to death. Even great numbers of the military dairy wagons were captured full of cans of milk, and even a great number of chicken coops full of hens, and roosters. Sheep and hogs added to the booty, besides a full supply from six Glandelinian Quarter Master Stores, of clothing of various sorts for soldiers. Glandelinian uniforms were tossed into the flames only the linen and other clothing brought away.The conflagration spread with such rapidity that the glare was seen in the sky as far as Little Girl knool. and the people in that city city and other cities and towns thought a forest fire was raging there.

The greatest effort on record was made to resist and drive the raiders away but no effort could be successful as their numbers were too great, and the whole Glandelinian army of infantry in this locality put to terror and panicky flight.

The worst of it was that the confused glandelinian generals and other officials officials at first didn't know who the raiders were. When it was learned it was those under Penrod, Angelinia Aronburg and others the panic and terror reigned supreme, and so frightened was everybody that Penrod had the whole show all to himself. The enemy tried to use one of their batteries of sixty guns to stop the raiders and the guns were only captured. and the gunners shot or lan ced or sab red at their pieces. Among the wagons captured was one that had Manleys best selected house hold goods and furniture, for he had intended to move into a new headqua rters by morning and everything had been left in the wagon..his best sa bre, and on t cartridge belt and also his pistols were among these and several important plans which he had solved out and was going to send to his Confederates Threatening Big Girl knool. There was also a valuable hanging hanging clock, which had beautiful chimes and added with this were secured his household child slaves, and his best uniform and hat . and two of his most magnificent horses.

In the meantime after Penrod had started off with his columns Joice had ta en her seat by Jennies bed to watch over the poor little girl and see that she would not restless reawaken. It was about probably twenty minutes after Penrod her sisters and the whole column had gone away when throughout the camp came suddenly the cry of "Fire.Big fire somewhere.Must be in the enemys camps." Joice went out to see and tward the south observed a terrific glare in the Heavens and great clouds of smoke rolling high into the sky.

"Where is the fire?"she demanded of one of the excited soldiers, for the Company street was jammed with a big crowd watching the glare.

"It's in the enemy's camp"he cried."A conflagration must have started there through some cause."

Joice watched the glare in surprise and excitement, but never had an instant thought that there was a raid going on.She only remembered Penrod had come to recover the pony and rig. Penrod had never said anything about a raid to her or her sisters here. As she watched the glare increased most terrifically, and seemed to spread along the horizon untill the sky was was bright as molten metal. Joice stepped in to see if the exciting crys outside had aroused Jennie, and in fact it had not yet. she stepped out again and glanced at the glare.. Then there came a tremendous flash and a dreadful shock, and believe me she was keen, and she didn't intend to either. The soldiers most of them either did many or strange antics or fell on their faces, and the tents swayed as if there was a cyclone, and there came such a terrific rolling of thunder in that direction as to even shock their ears, from that dreadful distance.

"Gosh there sure was an explosion."cried the soldiers."What in the world blew up over there," and then from some other locality came the sound of heavy firing which lasted for about ten minutes. Jennie had been thrown out of her own bed by the terrific concussion, and at first was scared.She ran out of the tent at first in terror and panic herself and seeing the crowd of soldiers and joice, and the ever increasing glare in the sky lost some of her horror, for a moment forgot her misery and asked Joice what had happened.

Joice however couldn't tell her.she only believed it was some disaster which may have stirred some loose in the foe lines but what really caused it she was not sure..Jennie was so excited and so intensely fascinated over the scene she beheld and by the excitement of the soldiers that she entirely for that moment forgot her distress of the afternoon before and stood there with one arm around Joice continually watching the glare. Then she suddenly gasped;

"where is Penrod and my other sisters."

"They went to the enemy lines to reclaim our buggy and horse."said Joice,

"Penrod.Exclaimed Jennie, and a sudden light a strange light shown in her eyes. "Do you really mean---"

"That is what he said he was going to do.what is the matter about that!"

"Oh, thought"began Jennie passing her hand across her forehead; I--I---"

"say listen Jennie out with it..hat is the matter.Do you really believe he did that!It couldn't be possible."

"But, but Joice dear, remember the awful raid he made nearly a week ago."He was awful put out and mad over what happened to me this afternoon.If I had thought---"

"Nonsse Jennie dear,laughed Joice hugging and kissing her."He did not say he was going to make a raid.It couldn't be possible. and that awful fire over there. and the awful explosion. surely something else must have done it.But if he--oh Heavens I am afraid its so.He was so mad and his face was so white Jennie dear.He might have struck a blow for the purpose to get those boys.Oh if he did---"she could not say more but stood there watching the glare which to her surprise was int intensifying much more and spreading on in other directions. There seemed by some sound to be some more explosions but if they were they were not loud. Soon some of the officers of higher position came riding up advising the soldiers not to jam up the company street too much in case Penrod and his force came on the return.Joice called the officer to her and tried to learn the details.

"All I understand there is a big conflagration in the enemys lines, but it seems mighty fishy to me"he answered.. "Why is your little sister already going to be so early.I see she is standing beside you in her night gown."

"She was already in bed but the explosion woke her up."said Joice."She has been ill but she's feeling better now."

"Ill.Why it's unusual for her to be ill."said the officer surprised"She is always so hale and happy I cannot understand it."

Joice didn't want to say any more about that and went to the topic of the fire. She didn't want Jennie to break down again. But the colonel did not know any more about the fire than she did..Jennie herself however could not help being suspicious that Penrod did it all, for revenge of what she suffered for she remembered well, that if anything don't go right, in the least with him, his"Rattlesnake" temper works up. She believed about that he was doing more than that. Finally as it was getting too chilly for her to remain out there long in her Nightie she went into the tent, but she was now too excited to go to sleep, and sat on the cot.Joice went back in the tent.

"How do you feel now Jennie Dear!"she said as she sat on the bed with her.

"I feel much better, "she answered and Joice was relieved intensely to see her smile like her former self. Jennie however was still shaky, she could easily see that but otherwise she much better than in the afternoon. Hoping she would not make her feel bad again, but determined to try and get some information she asked Jennie with a loving reproach;

"now was it Jennie dear that you happened to let such a rascally boy decieve you that way?"

"Because he appeared and acted as if he was Penrod"she answered."It was my belief of his turning traitor against us, that made me so broken up"and tears came to her eyes again.

"Did you tell that courier to give it to Penrod in person or that he should bring the note to Penrod only in our presence.?"

"In our presence of course.didn't he do it!"

"No he did not.He delivered it to that rascally boy. He won't be a courier for m any longer for I'm going to discharge him .If he does those things ac cattainly ca t certainly can't trust him."said joice decidelly."He's responsible for his carelessness and I told him so.He went away sad, but , don't care."

For a long while now they remained on the cot together, Joice holding Jennie in her arms all that time.How long she remained so she did not Know, sh bu but when then she looked down she saw Jennie was asleep in her arms. That was good indeed and carefully she laid her on the cot and covered her with the blankets. She had no sooner covered her, when she heard some one shouting out in the company street, and fearing they would arouse Jennie aga in she hastily e went out to command they they should be quiet when the sight she met almost drove her speechless with amazement.He at first believed she was seeing things.Her astonishment was so great that she had to hold onto a tree close to her tent for support..

"Why---why--- Penrod---I thought------w the rig and pony------l---l----"she could not say any more.Her sisters were coming up tward the tent with Angeline driving the pony, but that was not allit was what she also beheld was t what held her speechless and spell bound.

"Oh joice, joice dear"said violet as she sprang from the beautiful little buggy firs t."Penrod got our rig and pony all right."

"I---I---See he ---did"joice stammered "as she gazed as at the long calvacade of wagons passing, by, a great big column of children slaves escorted by the c hild scouts, and then a perfect parade of everything else that the troopers under Penrod had captured in the raid.Not only joice but even all the soldiers were l flabbergasted and stood on r ig cons on both sides of the company Street. "Did Penrod do, all that"gasped joice as violet and her sister other sisters went in to the tent, followed by Penrod and Angelinia Aronburg.

"Well you see it was like this"began Penrod surprised at her amazement."The temptation was too great, I'll confess, and as Jennie recieved such a shock and is too this afternoon, and as our camp was in bad need of stores and provisions provisions I found it impossible to resist the temptation, actemptation too which I believed it very foolish and sinful to pray against.go as it came to my mind that we might have a celebration of over the return of I and poor dear violet, and as Jennie had suffered so I thought since my name is "Rattlesnake I ought to be one, and so I was for the last three hours.Too bad that I didn't capture general Manley though.He escaped but he won't be in command for a while. I shot him through the arm and leg as he attacked me in his flight from his headquarters.I brought you Joice and for violet and your sisters and myself a bunch of fine beautiful horses to ride on. I also got a beautiful clock clock for our own head quarters wherever we will reside.As for Manleys uniform and hat which I got , don't now what to do as we cannot make use of it. But I got all his magnificent household furniture and bedding, and therefore we can surely have a splendid good time. I don't now what we all got in the raid, but my assistant says I rescued fifteen thousand child slaves, have secured five hundred head of cattle, seven h seventeen hundred chickens and hens and so forth, about four hundred turkeys. a whole flock of geese and fowl of o every description, and what is better yet a big train of Milk wagons full of cold delightful milk. What I really secured in the raid though dear sisters I cannot really tell untill it is investigated in the morning.I counted five thousand horses, but Angelinia Aronburg here insists she counted twenty thousand.If she is right----- but what is the matter Joice dear, what is so surprising to all that.That raid was nothing.I just gave in to the temptation."

But poor Joice couldn't find words to answer. she only smiled and shook her head.

"Oh Joice dear it was fearful."said violet."The fires.Our girl and boy scouts lost control of themselves and applied the torch to the barracks and all the tents. and the Explosion.The concussion threw us out of our rig into the dusty road and sent our horse sprawling. Penrod said he had not intended to start explosions for fear of arousing Jennie when he wanted her to sleep on. The buildings appeared so much the same that we couldn't tell which had explosives explosives and which had not.I believe a million dollars worth of explosives went up.That explosion increased the fires.We were showered and everybody else with the flaming embers and broken timbers but no one was hurt or burned. Even great groves of trees caught fire after the explosion.We could see the enemy cavarly destroy itself in making an attack upon the Abyssinkillian cavarly and the child scouts.Our side even among the cavarly soldiers did not lost a single person in even a lightly wounded nor dead. The raid lasted for quite a number of hours and the enemy fled in all directions.some even fell on their knees begging for quarter and got none. Of course I and my dear sisters here at the advice of Penrod did not join the raid.He feared we were too upset over what had happened to poor Jennie.But Penrod sure made a raid all right."

"And I thought at first as only went out to recover the horse and bug y." put in Catherine."Oh Penrod you are more than the "Adeldefob" that you some-times assume.The Glandelinian generals will sure be afraid of you and the child scouts now. And you nearly captured General Manley.I see that through my field glasses.""

"Let's forget it now and retire for a well needed sleep."said Penrod."Especially you little angels anyhow.That raid was nothing anyhow.I'll bet it was not as big or the one I made four or five days ago. You girls try and get some sleep as anyhow you were all up too early this morning and I got up late.As I,m too excited to sleep I'll remain awake for a while and keep watch over Jennie."

"But Penrod you ought to get some sleep too."said Daisy."I could stay up."---

He caught her in his arms gave her a good hug and laid her under the blankets on her cot saying"Off to dreamland you go, and "and strange enough she did. Her sisters thought it was best for them to do so too and after he had done the same to them, he painted on a big cardboard"Silence Please"and hung it on the tree outside within plain sight of everybody.About ten minutes later, one man who was a foriegner and not a soldier passed by and whisperingly warned Penrod that there were several men qactinig actinig suspiciously close by.Penrod thanged him and kept watch. Who ever the fellows were, however suspected that the tent was well guarded, and were afraid to come for fear of capture and therefore gave up whatever their intention was and stole cautiously away.

Penrod however by late night fell asleep himself in his chair but the sentries outside"mistook" themselves for owls "for they forgot everything else but that they were on guard.If any onepassed them then they must have been spirits. Though Penrod slept his sleep was a troubled one for he dreamed "he was Fred Bowden who did the act of treachery"and the dream was so bad it finally awoke him and he could not sleep any more.. Therefore he got up, and washed his face in cold water replaced his uniform, though in his stttttet excitement and after effects of the dream he at first put on violet's clothes instead of his own before he discovered the error. Jennie too was the first to awaken early that morning, and when the mosemy memory of her shock came to her she would have wept again but penrod quickly had her in his arms and comforted her.He soon had her smiling through her tears but he saw that she was still terribly shaky, and that it was best for her to remain in bed for the full day. When her sisters were aroused, they went about attending to her as much as possible, and were greatly relieved too when she even ate a heavier breakfast than they did.

Penrod himself ate very little, they even had had to coax him to before he ate at all. Finally however he said to Joice sort of mischieviously like;

"Well Joice dear did you recover from last nights surprise yet?"

"You would make fun of me" said joice with a pretended prot protest"You said you were going after the pony and rig and you brought the whole enemy encampment with you.I couldn't say a word was so surprised."

"You are wrong." declared Penrod."I didn't bring the enemys encampment as we don't use crazy quilt tents.Those went up in flames.But I brought what my troopers could capture.He needed cattle and so we I believe captured five hundred head or probably more."

Just then a Courier entered the tent having been admitted by the sentries.

"Master Penrod"said the man and he glanced so queerly at Penrod "You're wanted at your fathers headquarters right away.Your sisters too.Emperor Vivian wants to converse with youabout something."

"We'll be there right away"said Penrod though he flushed red in the face as he suspected he was wanted about the raid, and oh he was bashful in the face of credit or praise. but he had to go, and so did his sisters except poor Jennie who had to remain in bed. As they all otherwise had to go, and as she and Jennie Turner were dangerous in the extreme to trifle with Angelinia Aronburg and the latter were set to guard and watch over Jennie, who though still a tremble and not yet quite herself was now happier ad she surely understand understood that Penrod was more faithful to her than even any one could believe and had not done that awful trick. She was happier too to realize she had not been mistaken when she suspected the awful fire and other scene she witnessed with joice that night.

"I thought all the time he did that"she smiled at Joice." but I didn't say anything then."

"WOULD COULD have thought"stared Joice,"and she couldn't hardly say why more.

"You ought to have seen what we did"said violet to Jennie and joice. "The fires, the explosions, the rescue of so many child slaves and everything that went on.A Big Glandelinian cavarly force assaulted the soldier cavarly and drove on vec victoriously for a time because of their overwhelming numbers. The child scout raiders saw what was coming and half of them too retreated to a distance, suddenly left wheeled and reformed, and then swept upon the enemy from two directions screaming so fiercely al and my sisters were deafened.It was a miracle for the Glandelinian soldiers who did succeed in escaping the massacre.The child scouts gave no quarter.A lot of cavarly horses and all the lances sabres and pistols of the fallen cavarly were captured, and cartridge belts and bags of hand grenades. I thought to have seen the explosion juice and Jennie dear.We were sitting in our rig watching the progress of the conflagration set by the scouts. All of a sudden we saw an enormous series of blinding flashes, and before we could even know what happened we were lying in the dusty road instead of our rig and the horse was down too and the rig upset. The concussion shook the trees like a tornado and we saw many tens tents and wooden buildings devastated by the concussion as if the earth was in awful convulsion and great clouds of dust clouded the air.Lots of flaming debris was scattered everywhere and we were engulfed by the cloud of powder smoke while we rose to our feet.We managed to lift the rig up ourselves but had a hard time to get the horse back on his feet. At first so bad was the sh h shock that we thought we suffered from it and our ears were deaf for a time. We seemed to have heard no sound but felt an awful shock on our ears. The flash seemed to have risen hundreds of feet and the cloud was even all aflame. It rolled as if it was a cloud of fire from some dreadful volcanic eruption. Penrod dear didn't you know that was a Glandelinian Can't filled with explosives and muntions."

"No I didn't admitted Penrod. For fear of Jennie being aroused from her sleep, I had advised my followers not to set anything afire where it had the words "Explosives "on the building. But every officer testified to me on the return that no building had such a word. Therefore I believe it was set on fire without the thought of what the building contained or otherwise the structure caught fire from the conflagration. I was thrown from my horse by the concussion, and so were many of the rest. A number of the child scouts and soldiers were scratched hurt or slightly burned by the flying embers and boards, but not severely. severely."

"I felt the same shock on my ears"said Juice.

"This far from the enemy camp."!

"Yes"

"Didn't you hear any sound.!"

"No the shock was too great on my ears. I thought I was deaf for good at first, and after wards afterwards there was an awful ringing sound in my ears. Our camp here acted as if there was a sudden great earthquake. I and Jennie saw the flash here too."

They were now within sight of Emperor Vivianc headquarters. For they had gone done on their rig. They were recieved with the greatest respect by all within the grounds of the building, but everybody surely gazed at Penrod with admiration. In a internment camp well guarded but happy and care free were the child slaves who had been rescued, and they all looked at Penrod with great awe and curiousity for they had heard it was he who lead the re raid that made them free. Many slaves were even outside the camp in the company streets for they you must understand were not confined as prisoners. They had the same freedom as everybody else, but the guards were their protectors. Many crowded as close as they could to see the wonderful boy who had done so much that surprise night, and too to see his sisters who appeared to them as if they were little beings from a Heaven near by. Every Everybody cheered when they observed Penrod mout mount the steps. Finally he was within the building, after letting him his sisters first..

In the main beautiful room Emperor Vivian and His Wife were waiting with the generals, Evans, and even Dargar and Gingore. The two latter looked at Penrod as if they could not believe hi their eyesight.

His speech for a time but she handit as astonished as she was, "I heard you made that raid last night. We couldn't understand what the fire and explosion was that occured last evening in the enemy lines. I h a heard it is it is still burning for the enemy fire departments of the camp were even crippled by your raiders, or the fire engines and other apparatus captured and brought here to camp."

"Yes but it wasn't much of a raid I believe"said Penrod modestly. "But how did you find our mother dear that I and my troop made the raid."

"Did you not find out my dear son that these two Gemini Leaders were within within the enemys lines when the raid occured, and also being mistaken for foes in their disguise they too had a narrow escape from capture."

"Penrod didn't know what to say.."

"Dargar then said;

"My dear boy, and you say it wasn't much of a raid. Then can you explain this list of what your followers captured. The quarter muster sergeants spent the whole night checking up on everything brought in. We don't know where to put it all. If you can tell me it wasn't much of a raid, then you surely yourself, and your leaders didn't know what you captured."

Violet and her sisters gasped and Angeline glanced at Penrod, then at Gingore, and couldn't say a word herself. Penrod took the long slip of paper which was a long one, though it had been rolled and sealed. He broke the seal and then as he glanced over it didn't know what to make of it himself. His sisters too glanced over it and were surprised out of their wits.

"And you told me Penrod dear you only captured five hundred head of cattle!" Protested Juice.

"How could I know"said Penrod hoarsely. "I had no chance to count them."

This was the list of the things Penrod captured, and it was a very "small" list. It ran as follows;

First-----17,000 head of cattle.

Second. 100,000 head of horses including the horses of the cavarly captured in the battle.

Third. 10,000 provision wagons.

Fourth. Nine thousand munition wagons.

Fifth. Fourteen hundred Milk wagons or 1,000,000 gallons of milk.

Sixth. Fifteen thousand hens and chickens.

Seventh. 25,678 child slaves and three hundred tons of tools and material captured from the child slave camps, and five hundred child slave provision wagons.

Eighth. Fifteen hundred head of hogs.

Ninth, 10,576 sheep.

Tenth. Manleys Household goods, besides his own personal belongings, such as linen clothing, bedding, a valuable hanging clock, and his sabre pistols, and best uniform coat and hat., and his beautiful horses. and wagon.

Eleventh. 200 cannon of small size, with sixty big guns captured as they were going to be used by the enemy to stop the raid.

Twelvth. $6,789 valuable turkeys and various other eatable fowls, such as ducks, and geese., and quail. Out of love for these latter the child scouts retain the qual for pets.

Thirteenth. Enough bed linen and clothing to start a hundred big Dry good stores with.

Fourteenth. 100 wagon loads of rifles and cartridge belts.

Fifteenth. 888 tons of pistols and revolvers.

Sixteenth. Thirteen big ambulance wagons.

Seventeenth. More bed blankets, overcoats and army material of other cotton material than the Quarter Master Sergeants could yet even find time to estimate though they worked on it all night and were still working and using extra barracks and tents to place them and yet find no room for the rest."

Eighteenth. 987 great big army stoves, and as many camp stovepipes.

"Nineteenth. Wagons enough full of canned goods, and other foods, to start a thousand grocery stores with.

Twentieth. 10,000 prisoners captured by the soldiers.

Twenty first. Merchandize of all sorts so far yet beyond numbering.

Twenty Second. About 1,000 tons of Hospital and surgical supplies.

Twenty third. Four hundred Glandelinian child scouts captured, beside one of their leaders who was a captian and who was badly wounded."

"Twenty Fourth. Two hundred Fire Department Apparatus."

"How did you do it."Gasped Juice.

"I surely don't want the credit for it all."exclaimed Penrod "My raiders were in the heat of it all.I didn't think we did all that."

"You surely could have seen what you secured." protested Angeline "you made or your followers made enough fires to light up the countryside for many miles. And you say it wasn't much of a raid."

"Penrod couldn't say anything more.He was whipped and had to admit it.

"There sure was some doings"said Gingore."And believe it or not Manley was captured, but the Enemy cavarly came to his assistance and fought so hard he was rescued. The child scout troopers massacred the cavarly or what section of it didn't get away. And Penrod shot the general in two places and he lies in the hospital badly wounded. Federal had to assume command in his place. It is the conversation of our whole army this morning. Everybody is excited. If you'd just glance out of the window to the south you can see evidence that the conflagration is still raging. Every effort is being made to put it out but to no avail. The army has to abandon everything to the fire and retreat out of dangerous. And your son says it wasn't much of a raid. I and Dargar were in the territory and only by a miracle we escaped. It was Gertrude Angeline, Herself and some others who shot our horses from under us. It was a miracle we escaped. Had we known before hand a raid was coming we would have stayed away. We were going to locate Starring and his Confederate."

[illegible] turned [illegible] and [illegible] it was true indeed. Far to the [illegible] direction [illegible] there the glare had been seen in the heavens but a little more to the [illegible] great clouds of black and white smoke smoke rose high in the air spreading in fantastic shapes and rolls. [illegible] The size of the smoke clouds showed a fierce uncontrollable conflagration was raging.

"It's an awful big fire, far bigger than last night"said Darger."Everything is going.They have been pulling down and saving what tents they can some distance ahead of the fire but the scores of thousands of big wooden buildings and all other tents, and store houses and other buildings cannot be saved.The Builders wiped out the enemy's fire departments and ruined all the hose."

"And the concussion of the explosions damaged so many buildings that they cannot be counted and they too are in the path of the flames"said Gingivore.Thousands of Mandelinians were [illegible] killed beneath the wreckage and many more thousands injured many perhaps fatally.Over a quarter of the number of enemy tents were leveled by the concussion."

There was for a few minutes of silence then Emperor Vivian himself said;

"Penrod my dear son what made you go forth to accomplish such a raid!"

Then said Jack Evans jokingly"He loves his dear sisters so much that I'll bet it was just to gain more and more of their confidence and love."

But Penrod only shook his head to that and hanging his head to hide his tears for the remembrance brought grief to him again" and said;

"No sir general Evans, and papa I didn't."

"What was the raid for then, and why are you crying?" asked Empress Vivian.

"Surely Evans was only saying that in fun my lad."

"I------i---did---it---for revenge"the boy blubbered!

"Revenge"cried Emperor Vivian surprised."What for."

But Penrod could not go any further, but sat down suddenly and hide his face in his hands. Tears had come to the eyes of Violet and her sisters as Penrod cried, and Violet finally mastering herself told the whole story of what had happened that afternoon.

"We left poor Jennie in her tent under the care of Angelinia Aronburg and Jennie Turner"sobbed Violet "because she wasn't yet well enough to be up.We were afraid yesterday that she would have died from the effects of her shock, but Penrod easily brought her to and got her asleep. Empress

At this news Empress Vivian felt for a moment ill herself, and Emperor Vivian was white with anger and looked like a loaded cannon. Either one at first were unable to think of any words that would express their feelings Then the Empress herself was the first to speak.Her face was very stern and her voice most stern.

"Penrod dearone said"I shall converse with you afterwards, but at present I shall only say that you have been very good to do such a thing as you did to the enemy last night.I'm heartily sorry you did not succeed in capturing those three varmints, for they really ought to be punished byburning at the stakefor doing such a treach treacherous thing as that.I never heard of such a thing, or that such a thing could happen to so good and loving a child.don't cry so my son.I understand how you felt, and how you almost fainted at the tent entrance yourself when Jennie fell in that swoon. It is terible my poor little Jennie.Oh God how could it be."

"It is hard to tell of any punishment which would be severe enough for that Clendelinian devil Fred Howden, because he is the worst of the lot."said Jack Evans Himself, angrily."We ought to have the whole world turned by our Gemini Agents for the three.It ought to be easier to find the other one since Jennie torn torn up his face so badly."

"No,no--it wouldn't do no good now we must wait until our two brothers comes home."cried Violet between her sobs."They have spies that can locate anybody.They wrote by wireless they were coming soon.and then I and my sisters, and especially poor Jen Jennie will tell him or them everything, and they'll decide what must be done to cause the capture of those three reptiles."

"Very well dear I'm very willing"said Empress Vivian."but I too shall have a word to say to your two good brothers.That's simply shocking.Yes the Child scout troop now of it Penrod my son."!

"Yes "he sobbed."Lucille Anna told everything.She found the letter Jennie wrote to me, and brought it torn up.Here it is."and he produced it to Empress Vivian.

"My dear son"said Emperor Vivian trying to give a cheerful grin despite how bad he felt himself."My dear son you mustn't feel so bad at heart.The dreadful thing is over now, just be jolly that's just the way to be. And you my dear darling little daughters, just don't be so unhappy over it for surely as a violet says Jennie is much better now.Be brave as always no matter what ever happens.Our little darling daughters are regular soldiers.Tell I'll have Jennie brought here where she can be well cared for."

[illegible] Violet [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] and she started into a fit of violent and very loud sobbing. Her wailing grew louder and louder and more bitter, and she sobbed as if her heart would break. Angelinia Aronburg was scared.

"Don't cry so please Jennie please don't."she begged"But listen to me.It is all over and you must remember it was not Penrod who done such a dreadful thing, and we and he revenged it for you last night.Just for God's Love and our own don't cry so Jennie.You'll get ill again and maybe die."

It was some time before poor Jennie could hold back her sobs.But all the while she understood that both Angelinia Aronburg and Jennie Turner were comforting her, and it helped her greatly or she would never have been able to stop crying. And to have better success Penrod and her sisters were sent for and they came into her bedroom.Penrod understood how to comfort her, and he had her in his arms in a moment.For a time while he embraced her and kissed her tear stained face she started sobbing anew.

"Jennie, Jennie dear, please jennie"said Penrod"Please don't cry any more. I'll do anything to make you happier, honest true I will and more too, if only you won't be so sad any longer.You understood the doctor said you must try to calm yourself. And let's forget that horrible incident.It wasn't really me so why worry any longer."

"But, but, I thought---thought--it was --you, and even accused you"she sobbed. He appeared so much as if he was.Oh I couldn't stand it."

This time however she held on to herself and he embraced her tighter as he said soothingly;

"You shouldn't worry about that.You didn't do wrong.He basely decieved you into believing it was me."

"Surely you'll still love and forgive me"she begged her speech still inst interrupted by sobbing;

"But surely Jennie dear"he answered"I told you before there is nothing to be forgiving for.You did me no wrong in believing I was a traitor.It was that wicked little snake who decieved you.Forget it Jennie for God's sake please."

Jennie's eyes were still red from weeping when Emperor Vivian got up from the chair.He said;

"Penrod you can do wonders for her.Retain her in your arms untill she falls asleep and if she needs to let her poor thing, cry to her hearts content. Then see to it that you can get her into a nice fine fine sleep.To morrow I believe everything will be all right.Something though should have been done in a most hurry.But I can see that her grief will soon spent itself though the doctor will be here soon to do something for the bad state of her nerves.But this situation though is terrible.And all this to my own daughters.Without anybody noticing or suspecting it in the least yesterday.That is too much to stand for.You take your little sister in hand, do anything you want with her and for her and get her to sleep.When she is put her into the bed, and then you come down with your sisters and the two girls.I have something good I want to say to you.Your raid is the talk of the whole army."

Penrod did as he was told very willingly. He foldled her as if she were only a three year old.The window curtain of this bedroom was down, and as Violet, and her sisters wished to see the conflagration from there they put the curtain up a short distance. Any person who had or would not have seen and heard what had really occured would have believed there was some enormous volcanic eruption from the Infernal Regions.

"It causes me to have the feeling of a great forest fire coming this way."said Violet who had been wiping her eyes free of her tears."Penrod dear now in the world did you do it all."?

"Why give me all the credit!"he demanded with a mere trace of a smile."I only directed the raid."I didn't know how far it extended. And Lucillie telling everybody about what happened to Jennie caused my followers to be so aroused that when the raid started I or my leaders were not able to control them and we let them go ahead.I did not believe however we captured that much.You see it was not so easy to see everything in the deepening gloom."

"It is just like you"said juice."You want to give the credit to somebody else. Why not say I did it when I and my sisters were not even in it."

"Sure."said Bettie."You lead the raid so the responsibility of it rests on you.You deserve all the credit too.You didn't pay no attention when you came here with us, but everybody just scared and stared at you especially all those child slaves whom you and your fellowers rescued and freed.And you told us you were not going after the rig and pony."

"Well didn't I?"

"Yes."said Catherine now with a joyful smile which he desired more than anything to see "But Heavens whatbyou also brought with you.We witnessed everything.Such a destructive raid.he never saw anything so terrific before. Your temper must certainly been up.And for her and us.I never believed you really were so aroused.But how did Stanley escape from you.?"

"He didn't escape from me."said Penrod."What made you believe I captured him?"

"Didn't you capture him?"

"No."

"Then how did you happen to shoot him twice?"

"The Abyssinkillian soldiers captured him under Walter Starring."said Penrod. "When the Glandelinian cavarly made the assault the christian cavarly was driven toward my own troopers.In was in the heat of the conflict that I managed to fire some shots at him as he was getting away.But he was rescued nevertheless. We burned down his headquarters though."

"Who chased after Gingigore and Angar during the raid;" asked Juice..

"I and Angelinia Aronburg did with our troopers.We thought they were Glandelinian officers and fired shots at them.They got between some of the barracks however and escaped....."""""

They were now quiet for some time, violet,and her sisters always placing their attention more than anything else on the great fire in the distance. Finally they noticed that little Jennie was sound asleep in Penrods arms and he arose to put her into the nice snowy bed.

"You little girls because of your worry didn't sleep a single minute last night"declared Penrod regretfully."While I go down to father why not try and obtain some sleep now.Jennie is all right and past being worried about. I can see that by the happy smile on her face.Heaven knows you sure need some sleep."

"We ought to it is true"admitted Angeline"But we're so interested and fascinated by all that cloud of smoke and fire over there which your raiders made that we can't bring interest in anything else.he never saw such a cloud of smoke in our lives."

"Why not go over to the territory and see the fire then"suggested Penrod. "When papa is true with me I'll take you over with an escort.I know the way and I believe it is safe."

"It would be with you around"Thought Violet to herself, but Penrod seemed to have read her thoughts for he said;

"So only I with me with you it would be safe sh violet.You can't seem to forget my beautiful gun play eh."

"No.I shiver when I remember it even"declared violet."I do remember you were always before that an unusually good shot but never believed you could do such great shooting as that.I wish I and my sisters had had that training."

"I've been trying to learn you those things for the last six months"said Penrod."

"Yes, but we can't catch onto the trick."said juice "We are better than anyboy or anybody we know with even our knives and can flash one out so quick you wouldn't even see it come but yet you could beat the seven of us easy. We have proven that when you try to learn us at one time the knife drill.You des arm us every time no matter how swift we draw the covered blades."

"It takes time I know"said Penrod "because it is a difficult Indian trick. But it will pay for you to learn as much as possible.Sometimes something can happy happen without even me knowing it"he said."Then you can sure defend yourselves and if you know any knife tricks as well as I do, I'd laugh at the Glandelinians that would try to molest you."

As soon as jennie was well covered up, and the shades drawn down so the light would not awaken her, Violet and her sisters and Penrod went down stairs into the quarters where Emperor Vivian and the Empress were. Most of the others were gone, but Jack Evens were still there. As soon as as the seven were seated at a tabe table toward which The emperor motioned them he said;

"Well for this first thing that man who shot the two children in your arms have two days ago been duly sentenced by your sisters to die. Now since that matter is over I must have some thing to say about the disaster.Are you sure my dear boy that the explosion in the enemys lines was not designed."

"No Father it wasn't smiled Penrod."I would have allowed it though on one condition.And that is if the noise didn't arouse Jennie and wanted her to sleep on. There was no evidence of that great long building having explosives and neither was it set on fire.All my scouts were a long way from the structure when the crash came.The building really caught from the conflagration."

"Gingigore told me that $10,000,000 worth of enemy explosives went up that night.The blast was terrific, and felt as far away as Big Girlmool and other cities. Windows were driven out bythe convussion there. What really made you accomplish the raid. Really was it for revenge for Jennie's plight?"

"It was"said Penrod."But at first on our starting out I had no thought of a raid in my mind.I only intended to recover the rig and Pony which through Lowdens treachery the enemy had captured.I discovered that portion of the enemy encampments even so vast were not strictly guarded for some reason. Maybe the enemy was overconfident. I was burning over what happened that afternoon, and seeing such an easy an chance I couldn't resist the temptation. Then too the army and the child scouts in general need ed supplies badly. And then the child slave encampment was also tempting. I'd give anything to rescue every one there is. Therefore seeing such an opportunity I struck!"

"Were your sisters here in the raid."?

"No. I warned them not to participate because they were so upset by Jennie's plight, and fearing they may not be able to fight as they usually can then I didn't want them to go in. They were for the first time glad to be out of it. We're not you sisters?"

"Yes." Admitted Hettie. "I was so shaky that I don't believe I could have hit a barn with a stone let alone shoot at the enemy."

"I was the same" admitted Violet. "My sisters seemed to be that way too."

"Well" said Emperor Vivian "I don't know what to say. Dargar, Gingiore and our loving friend here my dear Evans, and all the officials who came to me this morning declared your raid is the talk of every christian army in this territory and the terror of the enemy. The army you raided is on a retreat abandoning everything to the flames for fear you'll come and strike elsewhere just as an expected unexpectedly. Heaven knowns only when Manley will be back in his command. His wounds is very dangerous. General Daniel ponies of that Glandelinian cavarly that stormed the soldier troopers was slain it was said by Jean gaunders when she lanced him as he tried to sabre her. The Glandelinian loss of that cavarly was tattttttd terrific in dead and wounded. Their lances were no match to yours. I heard it is estimated a hundred thousand buildings in the encampment all wood wooden are all burned a or burning and the conflagration is catching everything else, small patches of forests, high fields of grass and grain, and everything inflamable material in the camps. Tents hardly could be salvaged, and your raiders cleaned out ebeevery every quarter master stores, and your raiders helped themselves to every thing in the provision and other Canteens, and captured in the Y.M.C.A'a all sorts of stationary material and moving picture machines and films. and set the structures on fire. That list made out wasn't all as it never was yet completed, and the quarter master sergeants in our camp have summoned desperately for help to take care of all your raiders brought into camp. The stuff stuff will have to be transferred to other camps for as large as our army is we have no room for it all here. We're literally crowded out of house and home with it. One of our armies it is said moved off from the territory nearest to the enemy for fear of the fire catching their camp. You have without intending it realizing it made yourself very famous in the eye of the whole nation and gained great honor and respect now than ever before for your child scout followers, and a great fear of the enemy. How in the world did you and your followers do it!"

"I believe I can explain that." declared Evans. "Some time yesterday afternoon one of the little girlscouts came to her regiment and spread the news about Jennie. I overheard some of it, and from what I heard you understand news of any kind spreads like wild fire. That news spread faster than scandal does in a foreign country of tattlespipers let it out. The child scouts either wept, were tearful or frenzied with rage. Therefore I suppose when Penrod suggested the raid, they all took satisfaction out of the enemy by throwing all pre cautions to the winds. I believe that fire will burn on for a full week."

"I believe I know who that was" said Violet. "It was Lucille Anna."

"The little girl who found the torn note?" demanded Evans.

"Yes." Admitted Joice.

"Then it was she who aroused the whole camp" declared Evans.

"Well my boy" declared Emperor Vivian himself "There's an immense crowd outside, who won't be pacified untill they have seen you" and he led the child to one of the windows. "See that immense mod of soldiers. They're impatient to see you. Everybody is excited and gratified and full of spirits. I believe You'll have have to give them full satisfaction."

Penrod would have backed out had he had the chance, but laughingly his sisters were behind him and they pushed him and almost carried him out to the very gates of the court where the immense crowd of soldiers were. The cheering that went up was perfectly deafening and every one either brandished their rifles, or threw their hats high into the air, or waved flags and other standards. Then before Penrod understood what had happened to him he was paraded far down the company street on the soldiers of one of the officers, being cheered all the way down and on the return, followed by his sisters who were excited and now overjoyed by the whole scene. Jennie of course was awakened by the din and having run to the window to see what had happened was surprised to see Penrod being carried on the soldiers shoulder and followed by an immense crowd of soldiers who were throwing hats into the air and doing all other sorts of antics. Following behind the soldiers were a crowd of the rescued child slaves who were eager to see who the boyscout leader was who had caused them such a happy ending if their sad welfare as slaves. But they too did their best to join in the cheering. This sort of conduct lasted for about half an hour and then Penrod was brought to the stone steps of the building, where he now stood with het his sisters, emperor and Empress vivian, and Jack Evans. Jennie could be also seen looking out of the window, and she was smiling happily through her tears. Emperor vivian made to the now silent crowd a thrilling speech on the era very and conduct of the boy telling what drove him to start the raid, and what all he and his followers had captured. Seeing Jennie in the window and smiling happily now, the crowd pointed that way and screeched, yelled, and screamed themselves hoarse with their cheering. Emperor Vivian brought her out still in her night gown and standing there she appeared as if she were a little white robed celestial figure from Heaven.

"Penrod did all that for her and for his sympathy for his dear sisters" He finished with. "The enemy now will learn I hope what it is to trifle with my son by molesting his sisters. I believe they will be left alone in the future for a long time if not for good. Penrod is their best protector, and my beloved son."

There was not much cheering this time because everybody had become hoarse, but there was the same frantic tossing of hats in the air and so forth. Soon the crowd had dispersed at Emperor Vivians request. Later ward the real dinner hour, because even Jennie was her own happy self again, everybody could really eat, but half the time even then they paid more attention to the big clouds outside, and especially Jennie who not having heard of it asked;

"Is that that big fire you made last night Penrod dear!"

"I didn't do it really" laughed Penrod. "But my followers did. If you feel you are able to go Jennie with your sisters this afternoon, I'll take you to the big fire as near as it is safe."

"I believe she is all right." smiled the empress. "See how poor Jennie is even laughing now. She's happier now than you could believe. The shock is all gone. Even see how she eats will you."

"Good Gosh" Penrod "Exclaimed Joice. "What a fire. And it is so severe that we feel the heat blood from here. And see the flames over there. Hundreds of feet high. And all that wall of smoke. What in the world did your raiders do last night."

"I lost control of them and so did my officers" confessed Penrod. "They applied the torch to everything."

They were close to the conflagration as they dared, to go and as far as eye could reach it appeared as if the very earth had become one vast volcanic eruption. Within sight hundreds of barracks were burning, but elsewhere could be seen nothing else but immense rolling smoke clouds. They were viewing the conflagration at a distance of about a mile, and the wind blowing from them toward the fire too. even that distance off and the high wind blowing from them toward the fire too. They were in their elk and they sat and watched the scene with great awe and and fascination. For nearly all the afternoon they remained there watching the great conflagration. A number of railroad lines ran through this territory and as The little girls and Penrod were returning they thought they heard the sound of approaching trains. Saddenly Jennie thought she saw smoke in the distance. She said so to her sisters but they believed she was only seeing theings things through the effect of her sorrowful the day before. But yes, there it was again. Penrod speed ed his horse up to a case of a round, and saw in the in the distance a long groaning train. It was being hauled by two snorting big locomotive engines. Ahead with his field glasses saw men on top of the long pullman coaches... They were Glandelinian machine gunners on the strict watch, barricaded with sand bags on the roof of that particular coach. Penrod gave them a burst from his long range rifle, and laughed derisively as they tried to put him or his horses in return. Then he wheeled his horse, and matters something under his breath hurried on the return to where his coat two and the little Vivian girls were.

"What's the matter" said Jennie appeared worried.

"A train load of child slaves being brought somewhere. They'll pass this way. Many of the cars are also full of Glandelinian soldiers. I'm going to get those children."

Examining the ground well, he found a bare space behind some hills and rode into position and he told them of his intention. His child scout followers whooped for joy. Penrod stationed Joe Greene and others with their machine guns the hill e came in, the railroad line and the long line of child scouts now dismounted hid along the summit too with their long rifles trained on the place where the others had placed the dynimite to blow up the tracks.

The train was coming closer and closer. The foremost coaches were crowded with Glandelinian soldiers. Penrod again again went to scout a little. He could hear the enemy machine guns popping at him but he surely felt he was safe unless some glandelinian soldier was aiming good enough to hit his horse. no one did and he rose to vantage again. Now the train was almost at the curve--and around it was disaster for the rascally child slave holders, and no victory for penrod and his followers. This time Violet and her sisters were to join in the fray.

This was Penrods chance indeed. He adare devil as he was rode down at them within po pistol shot range, firing his pistols at the crews on top of the coaches. They were therefore so busy trying to dodge his bullets, and hit him that that they paid no attention to what might be hidden around that dreaful curve. Then came a dreadful pandemonium and all at once. There was an eruption under the tracks, the two engines seemed to stop short, stand still, and then suddenly rise right up into th the air. They rose and toppled over into the culvery with a dreadful sound of pounding iron against the stones. The coaches too seemed to be crashing together. Penrod felt the ground quiver. Ending a sudden survey both ways to guard against possible approaching patrols, he turned back to his command and rushed over the hill to assume command and start the action as soon as he could. The coaches containing the child slaves he knew were not injured. At his command rifles and machine guns and hand grenades were cracking, roaring and thundering wildly. Joe greene and the others with machine guns were mowing down the Glandelinians who had escaped the disaster. The boy and girlscouts who were charging toward the train also were screaming and yelling at the top of their voices, and firing in a steady stream. violet and her sisters new that the child scouts scouts for what had often happened to them, and especially to Jennie, and what had happened to children in times past, would take no prisoners. They hated the Glandelinians too much much. They were right no prisoners were taken at all , and soon the cries of the wounded still were stilled. but the shouts of the victorious child scouts had increased. They ran in and out among the fallen enemy, looting, tearing off cartridge belts, securing pistols and rifles and screaming and laughing with delight. One big box car was on its side. They tore into it. This was a find indeed. Rare carpets, rich brocades, silks and satins. Every horse was loaded with loot. Penrod and violet and her sisters laughingly secured the engine bells.

"Just mementoes for our own good time." Violet said.

Five hundred grateful now laughing and cheerful child slaves were secured. Of the girls Penrod and his scouts placed on their own horses. The boys of course to show respect for their girl friends were willing to "hoof" it.

With these child slaves and the booty also the whole company began its return toward the christian lines. They had just barely reached it, when around a bend in the road came a cavacade of christian general officers and soldiers. The leading general as Jack Evans himself. He stopped the column of his abruptly and Penrod did also. Evans was startled and amazed. Penrod stopped at the same time the horse drawing the rig on which were the Princesses and stared at the general also. Evans rode a beautiful horse, but it was one of those belonging to violet, which she always permits her guardian to ride, and the saddle of hers which was of red leather set with sparkling diamonds was strapped to the horse. Evans eyes protruded as if he had been strangled, and he stared at Penrod and the booty and the child slaves, and then at the rig and violet and her sisters as if he was seeing a spirit or something. Then Evans exclaimed to Penrod;

"For goodns goodness sake, what sort of a being are you Penrod. Is this what you call taking your little sisters to see the fire?"

"I did ." The boy answered surprised at his friends amazement. "We watched it all the afternoon. And surely I am a boy."

"Oh I guess I'll have to believe you are a boy all right." said Evans" but you are unlike anything I expected to see. And this afternoon night. I wondered who destroyed that train yonder and committed the massacre. I just came from there."

"I do not admit it sir." Penrod observed, evidently enjoying Evans surprise. "But I don't know where I am considered anything quite unusual. I only wrecked and raided the train."

"You are quite indeed unusual. Your father from the top of his headquarters with his field glasses saw the raid from there, but did not find out who did it. He sent me to see. A boy like you must be angel possessed too."

"I don't feel no symptons of it." returned the other. "but I saw the train loaded withchils slaves and I couldn't resist the temptation to rescue them them, and I just had to give in. I am afraid I may cause myself to be world renowned but I canit help it. If they treat me with great respect it surely won't cause me any pride. To my own idea I'm not much account, and not even worthy of my darling sisters now nor my followers. I'm only a mere bow boy who feels as if I should get even with the enemy."

"You are not much account!"

"Oh not exactly of course. There are no real good boyscout leaders at all that can love them as I do but I'm not worthy of them nevertheless. But I'm a splendid imitation of a good boy scout raider."

Evans gave an id indignant laugh while violet and her sisters gazed with pride on the boy.

"Look at that boy" he cried to his followers. "Look at him you good child ch scouts, and you rescued children slaves. Behold a real good loyal Prince, a terror to the enemy, a dangerous raider, and a fierce fighter. And he says he's not worthy of his sisters, and is of no account. He humbles himself too much. Behold a real Abbieannian prince who besides me even better than me is a great protector of his darling little sisters."

Penrod gave a start and wanted to ride his horse out of the way, but his escape was blocked. His face blushed scarlet and he couldn't say a word.

"Is it possible" said General Nemo who had never seen the boy before, "That he is a real Prince, the brother of violet, and her sisters ?" he murmured..

"Not only possible but true." replied Evans, who was gratified by the impression he had created. "It is proved by five good points. For example see the booty he has on the horses and the little slave girls riding on the saddles. See the boy slaves on foot. and he even gave his horse to a number of child slaves and is on foot."

walking "walking never both bothers me." said the boy still blushing.

"And notice the big fire burning over there which his raiders made last night."

"It is not necessary to see that." declared general Nemo.

"And also remember what was brought into our encampments last nigh night by his raiders." said Evans proudly.

"There was nothing to that" returned Penrod modestly.

"No you do great things and miss the pleasure of it because you are not proud" said Evans with admiration. "you do not understand the extent of the raid you made last night for ren revenge of Jennie's sad mishap, nor the delight of the precious rations the army and child scouts now can enjoy nor the satisfaction of drinking so much nice fresh milk from all the cows and milk wagons you captured. you may say you are of no account, but if you are a no account boyscout, you are a mighty poor imitation of one."

"Oh I cannot hope to ever be like you sir." sighed Penrod. "But I'm glad to mee t at last for the third time the great loving guardian of my sisters, a real hero who is a general w and who deserves to have a higher commiss on. And--"

"Cannot hope to be like me!" Exploded Evans. "why I'm myself nothing in compas comparison. I'm glad at last to now and meet with a real prince, a Prince that has already surprised the world with your doings. You certainly deserve to be the brother of the most beautiful little girls and the most good little happy angel possess ed children I ever beheld, or the world ever beheld, and you deserve that favor from God indeed. Wait untill your two big brothers come. They have heard of this and will be glad to see you."

This praise won Penrod completely out nevertheless he sure was embrassed. If only he could get away. Said Evans;

"your chief fault my friend, Ettiggg Prince Penrod is that you are much too humble for your Staff and position, and that I suppose you cannot help not any of us can, for we Abbieannians see more good in others than we believe in outselves. Real boys as you are, are made of the stuff the greatest Abbieannian heroes are made of."

"I can see the fact inthat all right." said general plain Night Linger" And what has been witnessed is admirable and distinct. Also I can see what he and his followers have with him. And he calls that bringing his darling sisters to see the big fire."

"Exactly" said Penrod.

"What raid I suppose you are going to accomplish to morrow!" asked general Nemo."

Penrod did not realize whether he would start one to morrow or not but he answered;

"If I have the chance I'll accomplish a bigger one than this."

"If nothing can surprise me any greater" declared general Ned Perkins "He,ll make a raid yet that'll run a whole glandelinian army out of the country with out a battle. You poor little dear (to Jennie) He surely struck in revenge for you last night. It's now about six oclock (looking at his watch(and the quarter masters sergeants are in despair of hoping to check up on all you brought in. And the destruction you committed Heavens look at that glare in the sky since it is getting dark. It appears as if it is the end of the world. And the heat is terrible even at di this distance.Some fire."

"But I never did start the fire."said Penrod"I only ordered them to set fires to some of the tents and buildings so we would have light to accomplish the raid. I never thought my followers would start a fire that big."

If they were not real good Abbieannians were no Envy ever comes to people, they might have been tempted to envy Penrod, for being able to do these things, and yet Evans decided he would not attempt to change places with general Manley under any circumstances.

"How did you ever happen to plan on the raid you made last night?"asked general Fred Mance.

"The capture of my sisters ony and rig did that" was the reply."The rig was in possession of the enemy after the treacherous capture of Jennie and I made up my mind to get the pony and rig.Well it was so easy to get no more than the rig that I did not let the opportunity slip."

Evans was about to reply, when a number of refugees came in sight down the road.at the sight of Penrod and his followers, and Evans and the rest some of them gave a howl of terror, and stood trembling like a leaf.They were in the act of plunging down the path to escape, when Evans cried out;

"Stop you poor boobe.Stop.These are friends not enemies and will do you no harm."

The refugees hesitated, eyeing the column of child scouts, fearfully and especially Penrod.Penrod to them had clear intelligent eyes, a beautiful uniform, and a robest body and appeared very dangerous indeed.The peculiar forms of the hats of the boy and girlscouts, the way they were armed were enough to cause terror to the stoutest heart, and it was no wonder that the refugees not at first understanding who and what they were were afraid to face them.But Evans had introduced the boy and girlscout leaders and the rest in a calm tone saying ;

"This my noble refugees, is my friend Prince Schfield Penrod Vivian, the noble and beautiful brother of his darling sisters the Vivian Girl Heroine and Darlings of the Nation.He is the valiant son of Emperor Vivian and at the same time a faithful protector of the darling Princesses.They are in the rig.He has just returned from another raid.He is the terror of the enemy.These child scouts of ware warm loyal and loving friends of the Princesses and brother, and are just returning from a raid;"

Hearing these words the refugees mostly women and children resolved to conquer their alarm.They bowed their heads with a much dignity as they could muster toard the beautiful but dangerous appearing children soldiers, who in turn nodded in a friendly way.

"Is not the Prince a beautiful boy?"asked the mother of the children "closest to the child scouts.

"Yes"said one of the boys."How would you like to be a Glandelinian and meet him in a fight mother dear."?

"That is doubtless a matter of taste."returned the mother."He's a dreadfully touch fighter.My conscious would never permit me to engage him in a lance or sabre fight.He's too dangerous."

"Some of your boys ought to be scouts"said Penrod"For I also have a conscience, and it tells me most children would be better protected if they were child scouts."

Evans seemed to smile, and winked one eye slowly.

"The Prince is right"he said" and if you do get your children in as sc scouts it will do much to protect them from harm.When you get used to them you will learn more about our child scouts than you do now and wont need to be afraid of them."

Then they all returned to the christian lines, and Penrod and his followers turned the booty over to general Charles Brown.

"He's a miracle"remarked the general as Penrod and his followers rode away.

It was some time yet before the arival of the supper hour,,, andhearing the voices of some of their other friends violet and her sisters ran forward to greet them.They each in turn hugged Walter Starring and Timothy Grovton with eager delight, and allowed themselves to be hugged in turn By the time they had endulged in a good talk, and violet and her sisters had told them of the sad thing which had happened to poor Jennie,the supper bell rang from their own headquarters, and the Princesses went inside to join Penrod and their parents atthe evening meal.As they entered the great hall a voice called out in a rather loud tone;

"What are you here with our army too.A week ago you were at Vivian Wickey."

"Yes we are."Violet answered glancing all around, to see where the voice came from.

"What brought you back dear Princesses through all this dangerous territory?" was the next question.. and the eyes of violet and her sisters rested on a tall stately man.

"Good gracious Joice exclaimed."I thought you were at Angelinia Athia!"

"So I was."replied the man."But I was summoned here by your Father as he expected me to do many wonderful things to the enemy by and by."

"It's very strangeold Angeline."Why did you come here for Count?"

"I am to lead one of your armies."replied the man always called "Count De piff" because he crushed so many Glandelinian armies opposed to him"I did not believe however it was of much importance.But here comes your Good Father the Emperor with Penrod, so I won't delay your supper for I can see by your very faces you are good and hungry."

Just then Penrod opened the door and greeted Violet and her sisters with a fond embrace and a storm of Kisses. Even poor Jennie who had recovered pretty good from her shock of the afternoon of the day before seemed fresh fresh and rosy again and in good spirits...

"Supper is served sisters dear."he said" and you sure appear to be very hungry. So don't let us Keep it waiting a single minute."

Violet and her other sisters and everybody too were happy to see the change in Jennie.When the supper was about finished Joice said to one of the girlscouts who served her as an aide-de-camp;

"Please go to my Boudoir Minnie, and get the white slip of tablet paper I left on my writing table.I want to write a note to Jennie Turner right away. I'm going to decide whether we have a right to return treachery to such an enemy or not.We'll hold a council over it."

Minnie at once departed on the errand, and she was gone so long,that after they had helped their Mother clean and wipe the dishes and straigh en the dining room Joice and her sisters had almost forgotten her mission, when the girlscout aide-de-camp returned with a troubled face.

"The tablet and writing materials are not there, your Highness"said she.

"Not there?"exclaimed Violet herself suddenly turning from a dish she was going to wipe."Are you sure,"and she glanced at Joice.

"I have hunted in every part of the room."The girlscout returned."That was why I was so long."

"Was not the door closed and locked?"demanded the Princess.

"Yes your highness I'm sure it was,for when I unlocked it and opened the door some one crept out and ran downthe stairs..They ran into into another room and I fastened the door so that party couldn't get out."

Hearing this, violet,and her sisters , their parents, and Penrod exchanged startled glances. Jennie herself jumped up at once.

"Come sisters"she said anxiously. "Let us go ourselves and search for the tablet."

So they, and Penrod went to the dressing room of the Princesses, and searched carefully in every corner and among the vases and baskets and ornaments that stood about the pretty boudior.But not a trance could they find of the tablet or the writing materials they sought.They searched to see if anything else was missing but they were not."

Jennie remembering her past shoc was nearly weeping ,by this time while her sisters , and Penrod were angry and indignant.When they returned to the dining room where their parents were just finishing the sweeping of the room violet said;

"There is little doubt that my our tablet and writing material have been stolen by that person whom Minnie has tened in that room and if that is true the offender must be punished.He's either a thieving foriegner or may be a spy."

"I don't believe a foriegner would do such a dreadful thing to us."cried Jennie much distressed."All foriegners were observed have made a world for us. Go and get that person Minnie, and we,ll ha hear what that person has to say about it."

The girlscout hastened away, but presently hastened on the return and said;

"The person who is a boyscout will not come for me.He threatened to scratch my eyes out or shoot if I touched him."

"Where is he?"demanded Jennie.

"In the room where I locked him in."was the reply..

Jennie bravely ran down to the room with her pistol drawn, unlocked the door and found the boy standing by the window. trying to raise it.

"Come here boy."she said and she leveled her pistol.

"I won't "answered the boyscout in a surely voice and attempting to draw his own revolver.

"If you don't come to me right away."continued Jennie"and her eyes flashed fire"I'll put a few bullets in to you.Don't try to draw yourself as I'm a deadshot."

"Why do you want me?"demanded the boy disturbed by the threat and the fiery glare of her eyes, and her angry face....2.2.2.2.2.2.22

"All right Princess"returned the early boyscout coming out."I'm not afraid of you, or your sisters and Penrod--or any one else."

"you may be after we are true with you."Said Jennie sharply.

Retaining her pistols position she made him go before her, relieved him of the weapons he carried, and made him march into the dining room where the others sat in grieved and thoughtful silence...

"Now Tell me boyscout"said Joice, at first gently"Did you steal my writing materials?"

"I refused under any conditions to answer such a foolish question." asserted the strange boyscout, with a snarl.

"Oh yes you will boy."Jennie declared poking him in the rib with her pistol. "you seem familiar to me.I believe I met you with one of the Gerald Starring boys several times when I and my sisters were in your own lines. You are a Glandelinian boyscout I'm sure.The writing tablet, and pens and ink is gone, and you ran out of the room when my girlscout aidedecamp opened the door. So if you are innocent you must tell my sisters and I and my brother and my parents, how you came to be in our room, and what has become of our writing materials.If you sent any secret message to the Glandelinian generals we'lll------"

"Who accuses me."asked the boy, defiantly.

"No one"answered Violet,,,.....".

"Then why dare say I stole the writing materials?"demanded the boy in a most unmanly manner that showed for truth he hated the Vivian Girls despite their prettieness and was a disguised Glandelinian.

"your own actions accuses"declared Daisy.

"How do you say that?"

"The fact that I left my writing materials on my desk in my dressing room, and that you must have stolen in without my Knowning it."admitted Joice. "When next the door was opened you ran out and hid yourself----and the writing materials were gone."

"That is. none of my confounded business."growled the boy.

"Don't be impudent boy"admonished Hettie."You Glandelinian boyscouts have done us girls a lot of harm and butted in our business where we never can be proved to have meddled in your business.If you get impudent with me and my sisters you'll be in for it.We're not taking anything from you boys believe me."

"It is you a who are impudent."said the boy"For accusing me of such a crime of stealing your materials, when you can't prove it except by guessing."

Violet and her sisters , and even her their parents and Penrod were now greatly incensed.While the little girls had been questioning the boy Penrod had issued a notice by telegraph to all commanders not to allow anybody Get out of the camp carrying messages untill the message was seen.Violet summoned the see sergeant of some of her private girlscouts, and when the girlscout appeared she said;

"See to it that this boyscout is confined in the internment encampment untill further notice.If any message is captured that was written by him on any of our writing material he will be tried by law as a spy and confined as a prisoner for the remainder of the war."

So the impudent boy was led away.

"When are we going to hold the councel or meeting about what to do concerning Jennie's sad experience of yesterday afternoon?"asked Penrod with a sigh, for such a day as that had cast a gloom over all of the Company that was not to go in a hurry.

"I will summon the Court to meet in the big square in the center of our part of the camp on the outside at seven this evening."replied Joice. As she was the sufferer, Jennie herself will be the judge.But the question is who is going to be the one accused to pull the meeting through."

"As the scoundrel of a name duplicated me I'll pose as Fredrick Lowden and Jennie can be the accuser."said penrod.

"What will happen if he is proven guilty?"ash asked Violet.

"What will happen if he is proven guilty and decree whether we Then Penrod can readily prove his own identy, and decree whether we should do treacherous things to the enemy or not. "

"what shall happen if Fred Lowden or this companions happened later on to be captured."enquiredEmperor Vivian.

"They must die"answered Empress Vivian decidedly.

"In what way!"enquired Penrod.

"Whatever way my darling daughters decide"was the reply."It will be a mortal sin to prevent the death penalty upon such heartless little Glandelinian brats.I will of course ask Angelinia Attorney Aronbury to dep defend Penrod who'll represent Fred Lowden but I wonder if she'll do it.But we do need a defender as well as a public accuser, but as it happened to her Jennie must be the main accuser, and Jennie Turner can be the Public accuser, because she has been so learned that no one can decieve her.

"who will be the jury!" asked Penrod...

"There ought to be twelve on the jury, six boyscout officers and six girl scout officers."said Angeline"because our girl and boyscout officers understand each other than we understand them.But remember we're not having a trail it's only a meeting to see whether our officials will agree to the plan of counteracting in treachery to the enemy or not.So the jury who will second the motion to the plan, if they will, shall consist of the highest of our boy and girlscout officers.Angeline Richee, shall be the one to act as recorder and write down everything she hears, and all my other boy and girlscout officers and as many privates as can be within hearing, shall be admitted to hear the testimony and the outcome of the trial.It'll go on something as if it was a drama on a vast stage but it'll really be serious.We don't want to summerize anything to counter treachery unless all our followers agree to it."

They now seperated to prepare for the ceremony;for whenever an appeal is made to law.but it must be stated that all the people of the Abbiesannian and faithful sections sections of the Calverinian lands, and her southern sister states and Provinces were beyond all estimating so well behaved and good, that there was not a single lawer amongst them, and it had been never before in Abbiesannia's History that any ruler or queen or any person had sat in judgement upon an offender of the law, or made up a councel to repell the cruelty and wickedness of such an offender. But the action of the cruel Glandelinians made this seem to have to come about.. The crime of murder or attempted murder being the most dreadful crime of all, the penalty there was burning at the stake." Glandelinian soldiers captured in the act of slaughtering slaughtering children also were burned to death, but more slowly, and very cruelly too.When the news spread that the Princesses were going to hold a council over the situation and over what had happened to Jennie, tremendous excitement prevailed throughout the christian armies,, and more surprise still when because they did not have no prisoner, Penrod was going to act as the meanest boy in the world who had so basely betrayed Jennie. Penrod when he returned to the dressing room of the princesses(in that country brothers have to use same room but not at the same time his sisters are in there) was exceedingly thoughtful.He had no doubt that Fred Lowden had played the dirtest trick in the world on Jennie, but he realized that it would have been better if he had the real brat as a prisoner, for it would have increased the fury of the followers more, for the child scouts to the enemy were very ferocious indeed ..Penrod really realized that he representing Fred Lowden would be found guilty causing the decision from the jury, and the condemnation of the three boys and then he himself being their brother, and having witnessed the great terrifying grief of Jennie, and her sisters too, and also his own horror and shock would have to sign the degree if the jury proclaimed it, and therefore to get even with Lowden and his companions he was resolved to play the part, as much as possible, and told Jennie almost sternly, not to leave a single word out of the story of her experience when she was to be the accuser.Sending for Jennie Turner Penrod took her into a corner and whispered;

"You understand I'm going to act as the defendant don't you?"

"yes she"she answered.

"Well that reptile don't deserve no defender.If you will purposely blunder in your defense you'll do it better for me.I must pass the situation if I can.I want to get even and I must.I mustn't and will not see Jennie suffer as she did.My accuser should blunder too so that I'll get it good and hot.Of course I understand if you're my defendant it is your duty to defend and try to save me,that is Fred Lowden, but I hope you will fail because poor Jennie if the most good little Girl I have ever been in my life time and so are my sisters.Though I have never said anything I have observed nevertheless that those three reptiles has long wished the destruction of my sisters to my certain Knowledge, and my opinion is that the,have been unable to resist the temptation.I have the note which had been captured, that code, and that will evidence also against me as Fred Lowden, oh I wish I could mention something else, how I hate that blasted name.Something too must bring back Jennie's normal happiness for she is still unhappy though she doesn't wish to show it.So I intend to prove the culprits culprits guilt by a trick. That be mine will be on myself. He drew from his inside pocket. the torn horse note which Jenn ie had so he wrote to him and continued;

I"This note you must hide in a safe place, and if the jury decides on the evidence, you may then produce this note and claim that I tore it up and threw it on the ground in the Company Street.Jennie my sister understands all I plot for I told her.I warned her too, to tell every thing of her experience, and not leave anything out.This note she sent me which that little devil tore up and threw in the dust stung me into anger more than anything else. such a loving sweet hearted little letter from my darling sister.To see that sure made me not, and I'm not still.go when you defiantly display this note by blunder no one can dispute the word of my accuser.Everybody will now that I am an innocent representing that brat,I won't mention his tarnished name again if I can help it.This deception will prevent me from escaping the verdict, and then I'll be called upon, afterwards to show my true self, and give the degree.If this scheme works everybody will yell for the return of Treachery. Do you understand.This deception really is a sin only on condition that you fail me."

"no body wishes to even without sin to decieve their friends."replied Jennie Turner sweetly,"Still my own heart urges me to do anything for you and your dear sisters, and espsically poor little Jennie, and I can usually trust my heart to do the right thing.so I shall do as I itttly you say, Penrod dear, and will blunder the defense.but I hope I'm not called upon the defense.I hate to defend such a toad."

After some thought, and with a mischievious smile on her pretty face she placed the little loving note inside her coat pocket and went back to her room(the boom) to memorize her speech to the jury...

At seven in the evening the open square near the Vivian Girls headquarters was crowded with boy and girls cout officers, and privates too and many soldiers and their officers and generals too being eager to witness the reat great meeting... Violet, and her sisters not now in uniform, but dressed in their most splendid Royal clothing clothing sat at the head of a very broad table, while Empress vivian sat between them with her jeweled sceptre in her hand, and the beautiful sparkling coronets upon the fair brows of the Vivian Girls and their mother too, while Emperor vivian sat at the other head of the table with his Royal Officers.

At each side of the table stood the twenty eight highest generals of the christian army, and many officials of the Royalty.At their right sat the twelve child scout officers selected to be the jury all gravely prepared to listen to what was said.Penrod sat inthe defenders box dressed as a Glandelinian boyscout, and he gazed at the crowd around him with seeming unconcern. And now at a signal from Joice vivian Angelinia Aronburg arose and told Jennie Vivian to take the stand.

She made the vow as was requested, and then Jack Saunders who acted as the Lawer for the plainaint said;

"Was this the boyscout who so basely decieved you?"

"Yes."

"What is his name.?"

"Fred Lowden, one of the Confederates of Gerald Starring.

"Do you know Gerald Starring?"

"I do.And his confederate Fred Dangar too.My sisters also know them.

"How did this defendant decieve you?"

"He disguised as my brother Penrod, and betrayed me into the enemys lines."

"Tell us the story in your own words."

"Penrod winked at her which meant "don't fail please."

"She told everything,, of the note wh she wrote and sent to Penrod, how she was tricked so treacherously and how she tore the boys face with her finger nails and so forth.Penrod had painted red splotches on his face to make them appear like scratches, and placed green glasses over his eyes so to appear as if half blind..

After she told all she could the girlscout Angelinia Aronburg then arose once more and addressed the jury.Her tone was angry, and she strutted up and down to appear dignified and not to show her feelings.

"Your Royal Highnesses and Fellow Citizens"she began"The boyscout you see a prisoner before you is accused of the base treacherious crime of first ensnaring our fair Princess Jennie by decieving her into believing he was Penrod her brother, and then causing her capture.The plot as this note says was with the purpose to cause Penrod dishonor among his sisters, and banishment from them by the Emperor with the purpose of causing them witho to be without a protector Evans then having been away.The dastard plot was to murder them in bed at night.In either case a grave crime has been comitted which deserves not only a grave punishment but also justifies our own side to be treacherous also."

"Do you mean that my defendant must be put ina grave to behave?"asked Jennie Turner.

"Don't interrupt little Girl."said Angelinia Aronburg, though she fought desperately hard to supress a smile for this question was a part of the proposed blunder."When I get my thoughts arranged in good order,I do not desire them to be upset by foolish questions, or have my thoughts thrown into confusion. "

"If you had thoughts that ammounted to anything,I don't see wh, they should become into confusion."declared Jennie Turner earnestly."My thoughts are always;"

"Is this a convention of thoughts, or of the mea sure of treachery?" demanded Angelinia Aronburg pretending anger, for in a convention or trial the accuser and defendant always do oppose each other, and it wouldn't do not to have a mock opposition or otherwise the meeting wouldn't work right.

"It is a convention over one boyscout"replied Jennie Turner"But your manner is a trial to us all."

"Let the public accuser continue."called Violet from her chair,though she had stuffed a piece of cloth into her mouth to prevent herself from laughing," and I pyar pray you do not interrupt her..... "

"The Glandelinian boyscout criminlan criminal who now sits before the Court of this grand meeting"resumed Angelinia Aronburg"has long desired to see the destruction of our fair Princesses here. and finally because violet captured the important papers from one called Gerald John Starring, he hatched up a dreadful wicked plot to satisfy his depraved anger by treacherously disguising as her brother Penrod.He claimed that he secured his pa picture in a news paper. I can see Jennie's plight in my minds eye;;

"what's that you say?" demanded Jennie Turner.

"I say I can see her in my minds eye-----"

"The mind has no eye."declared Jennie Turner."It's blind."

Jennie was hiding her face in her dress.Tears were rolling down her cheeks she was laughing so hard at the funny words of the opposition, The vivian Girls were otherwise so merry and jolly it never took much to start them laughing., no matter what feeling they had otherwise.

"Your High nesses"cried Angelinia Aronburg, appealing to the Vivian Girls, though she was almost strangling, in her efforts to prevent herself also from laughing,"Have I a minds eye or han have I not?"

"If you have it is invisible"declared Joice.

"Very true"returned Angelinia Aronburg bowing."I say I see the boyscout Glandelinian criminal also in my minds eye. playing a dirty scehemon I mean Scheme on Jennie by disguising as Master Penrod with the purpose to bring disgrace upon him and destruction on his fair sisters.Then I see poor Jennie creeping stealthily away from the enemys lines because the two sentries were asleep, and secreting herself when the enemy soldiers were not seeing her into the forest untill she was rescued by a farmer."

"I thought she told us she fainted in the road in front of the farmers horses put in " Put in Jennie Turner."Are you still seeing with the minds eye."!

"Of course, how else could see it. And I am sure we now the whole thing is true, because since the time of the interview, there was no little girl to be seen in the woods anywhere.she reached the Farmers wagon and fell in front of it, and the Farmer jumped down and brought her to the christian lines on his rig."

"I suppose if the Glandelinians had been gone instead of poor Jennie your minds eye would see the Glandelinian army creeping away from her." sugg ested Jennie Turner.

"Very likely"acknowledged Angelinia Aronburg."And now fellow citizens and members of the jury,I assert so awful a base crime of treachery with the purpose of the desc destruction of the Vivian Girls deserves death, and of our side being righteous in the purpose of giving back treachery for treachery---and in the case of the ferocious glandelinian boyscout criminal before you, the death penalty should be burning by fire.but we can't really condem now because we have't the means."

There was great applause when Angelinia Aronburg sat down.Then Violet addressed Penrod in a stern voice;

"Prisoner what have you to say for yourself!Are you guilty or not guilty.!"

Penrod as was proposed did not answer a word. Then Jennie Turner arose, and said as Penrod winked at her, not to forget the blunders---

"Respected Jury, and dearly Beloved Princesses, I pray you not to judge this feline prisoner, I mean this boy prisoner unfeelingly.I do not believe this innocent kitten, I mean gray uniformed boyscout can be really guilty, and surely it is not justified to accuse a luncheon, I mean an unwonted act of treachery of being a murder, or mean of the doings of a spy. Of course he is accused of eating up, I mean of being treacherous to a lovely little girl whom we all love more than we admire and who is gentle and innocent in her chief virtues except to us, I mean the Glandelinians... Have a glance at the boyscouts intelligent eyes, gaze at her as smiling I mean his smiling face"Here Penrod snarled and showed his teeth."Would such a gentle girl I mean boyscout be guilty of eating a fellow creature, no I mean of being treacherious to a beautiful little man as Jennie Vivian, no I mean as such a beautiful little Princess----"

"Oh cut it short."said Penrod."you've conversed long enough."

"I'm trying to defend you."remonstrated Jennie Turner.

"Then say something sensible."Penrod pretended to retort."Tell them it would be foolish for me to eat the Vivian Girl Princesses because I have sense enough to understand it would raise a row if I did.But don't try to pretend I'm too innocent to betray them I being Fred Lowden."

"Take this into consideration, friends of the jury"said Jennie Turner "and you will readily decide that this boy is wrongly accused, and should be set at liberty.when"

When Jennie Turner sat down no one applauded her for her arguments full of blundrous words had not been at all concincing convincing and none believed none believed that she had proved Fred Lodwnes innocence.In fact had Lowden been there he would not have had even a defender believe me A As for the jury, the members whispered to each other for a few minutes and then they appointed George Zimmermon their spokesman. The boy rose slowly and said "Glandelinian boyscouts made cruel and wicked by their elders have no consciences, so they do treacherywhenever it pleases them. The jury believes Fred Lowden is more than guilty of treachery, but also of them the intended assassination of our fair Princesses, and recomends that when he and his Confederates are really captured, that they should be put to death by fire in punishment of the crime.Even though we really have not one of them rascals here, Jennie's testimony is a fact for I can see it in her very eyes that she told more than the truth truth.So in case we have them prisoners we surely need no further trial."

"What else?"reque requested Catherine.

"The decision whether we should return treachery for treachery rest upon your brother Penrod, and Jennie."

The judgement of the jury was recieved with great applause, and Jennie and some of her sisterswere almost sobbing from the effects of the excitements.

Jennie Turner had as advised showed the note around to the jury, that is the letter that she had written to Penrod.

"Your Highnesses"said Jennie Turner now arising."Here is the letter which was sent to Penrod by Jennie."I for one now move that we really repay the enemy as he has done to us.You my dear Princesses have suffered enough at their hands."And she held up the little loving note that all might see the piece of paper clearly.

Angelinia Aronburg was full of emotion and exclaimed;

"I give the motion."

And all the crowd cheered and clapped their hands, rejoicing that two of the chief girlscout leaders agreed to the plan.As Jennie Turner still held the note in plain view, Car Catherine Vivian said;

"Let my brother now remove his disguise for he no longer need need to act as the prisoner, but is our good brother.Then let him give the degree.If he does we have nothing to say."

"Justice "declared Jennie Turner, with a sigh"I as a dangerous thing to l meddle with.And if Jennie had not scratched that culprits face poor Penrod would surely have been denounced."

"But I wouldn't have done that even then, because of the conversation I overheard in our tent when I returned"said Jennie.God and Justice had prevailed in the end for me, and I have lost my terrible shock and thank and love God more than ever for it."

"But justice prevailed at last."said Catherine"For here is the right thing as We discovered it, and God is so Good to us for he did not allow poor Jennie to suffer too long, and caused her to get free and discover that Penrod had never ai done such an awful cruel thing".

"I for one "said Penrod refuse to give up untill I have laid those Sh three Glandelinian boyscouts low."

"But Violet alone can identify Starring."said Jolce."If we could have produced any photographs of them, then you could recognize the wicked boys."

"If it was really necessary"said Jennie severely I would try my best to do some tricks that would surprise that treacherious boy Lowden good. I have recognizedthat boy on several occasions but never believed he could have made himself disguised as if he was Penrod.He always wears an Emerald Collar but he didn't have it on the day he decieved me."

"D So he does."exclaimed Violet, while her sisters nodded their approval." No one else could be able to duplicate Penrod.but where did the photographer get the picutres of Penrod to put in the newspapers. We do not allow our pictures in the newspapers and so that photographer disobeyed the law.I'll guarentee he's a foriegner too."

"Of course he must be."declared Penrod"and I must say it was very wicked of Fred Lowden to duplicate me with such a murderous purpose in view and I have prayed hard that the gemini will sooner or later locate the three of them.But now that this meeting is over, and before we give our decision whether it'll be justified for us to return treachery for treachery, I will tell you that I am well acquainted with those three boys and also I'll tell you all present how I made their acquain tance."

At this every one one in the open square suddenly became quiet, and Penrod continued in a calm mocking voice;;;;;

"I will confess, and my sisters have learned of it already and it had been proven of it too them too that I am the well heard of apparent Glandelinian boyscout chieftian Ade-deledefob."

Everybody present was surprised at this for they wonder wondered where all the information had come so frequently from the enemys lines, so mysteriously.Then he shocked violet and her sisters by saying"I'm also the pretended traitor Fred Perkins. I can prove it by a certain letter that Manley would give anythint to capture that Fred Perkins dead or alive.Therefore I'm Schfield Penrod, Adeledefob, and Fred Perkins in one. This is the letter and I captured it from a messenger.Even violet and my sisters can prove it as they can recognize Manleys handwriting; I'll read the letter as follows, and then let my sisters first and parents too and then the rest of you see it.This is it,

November 1th, 1913.

To His Excellency General John Manley----

Your Gracious Excellency(here Penrod grinned at these words) I am writing you this very important letter to warn you of a discovery I have made, through my own Secret Service men and agents and spies and military detectives.I thought it mighty strange but nevertheless it is absolutely true.Sometime ago a boyscout was seen within the christian lines, who evidently to his view got into a serious trouble with the Vivian Girl Princess Princesses, and was discharged from the scout army and apparently deserted and went over to our own side to get a commission and serve as a scout chief in our own army.Now it was found out that this swamp purposely got the Vivian Girl Princesses sore at him just to get the chance to have every one of us believe he had literally turned their enemy.But he goes from one army to the other under the name of Fred something maybe Herpengesse, or Perkins, discovers, important plans, betrays child slave camps to the christian scouts, and while apparently set servinig in the Glandelinian army as a Glandelinian boyscout sents secret messengers to carry away our plans, or sends them himself by wireless over to the Christian generals.

He has been absolutely successful though I cannot understand it and he cannot be detected..How he gets in on our side in so slick a manner without discovery is in this way according to our agents,

He through the order of the christian general he is serving for as already stated pretended to go back on his own cause by purposing to pick a quarrel with the Vivian Girl Princesses, got's himself discharged even in apparent disgrace if possible, pretends to be a deserter and comes over to our side to fight for our cause.In a most clever manner one of our agents managed to get a girlscout leader called Jennie Turner to allow him to read over all the names of the boyscouts in the christian armies he came from, and discovers there's no such name of a boy called Fred Perkens.

"We therefore advise you, your Gracious Excellency that he must be captured at all hazards.He is much more dangerous than the Vivian Girls, or even Penrod, or that still stranger boyscout Adeledefob who cannot also be discovered and is more dangerous even than the whole She bang of the boyscout leaders and privates.Therefore for the Love of Neptune don't let no strange boyscouts in your lines, and if there are any detain them if possible for regid investigation.He fooled the Vivian Girls and others recently in the same pretenses of going back on them for a scolding which he purposely brought upon himself, deatatted deserted and through that scheme was the cause, directly or indirectly of the wreck and destruction of General Clancys Glandelinian army at the battle of Lemon. It was also because of him the armies met such disasterous reverses at the Santa Fe positions at Vivian Hickey. Every one on the Christian side, believes he is a deserter, especially the Generals who never heard of him, and would also give anything for his capture.But no boyscout deserted the christian lines for a real fact, nor deserted those brats the Princesses, and there's no real Fred Perkins. as a boy.He also assumes the name of Ned Perkins. and apparently deserted under that name, and ruined our army at Aurandeca llio and Marcocellio Handa ll and other places.If he is really suspected as a deserter on the christian side, then this gives us Glandelinian Generals an advantage for he would find no protection on the christian side.so with both sides his enemies his capture and destruction ought to be certain before the whole christian side finds out the true facts, and frustrates our plan.Here's his description and a third name he assumed when it was discovered he was the most dangerous christian spy of all, and treacherous too;

He assumed three names, Fred Perkins, Ned Perkens, and now is known as Ned Parker who ina third time got himself bawled out by the Princesses and apparently made a third desertion;

"About nine years of age, a little taller than that brat Princess Joice gold shining short hair, violet blue eyes, peral complexion like Violets face, unsually good teeth, and a strange sni sinister expression about his mouth, and a sneer on his face continually when he converses about our own side. Height of a ten year old boy. When dressed properly girlish in features.Dressed as himself has a sort of bulldog face.Hair really not short but bobbed Jackie Cogan fashion.Try and apprehend him as he is Emperor Vivian's accomplise and no one is as dangerous to our cause. If bobbed hair is discovered to be a disguise as he really wears very short hair and the bobbed hair is black.

Your's truly & my Dear Son.

General Johnston Jacken Manley.
At Big Girl Knool.
Army of Glandelinian.
G.B.COC."""".

He handed the letter which was a long one to Violet and her sisters and they declared after reading it themselves that it was general Johnstons Manleys perfect handwriting without the slightest doubts.

"h Through assuming as these boys"went on Penrod I had often been with those three boys, that Lowden devil, Dagar and Starring, and can say they're worse than the devil, but in many ways cannot be trifled with. They're dangerous in the extreme.But I,m determined to get them the next time I spy under another assumed name and Gingicore has offered to give me all the assistance I can get.But when I can do it I do not be able to tell, because since what they feared concerning Lwd Lowdens treacherous treacherous scehems against Jenie they have disappeated and no one not even the dectectives and spies can discover where they are.To get Lowden now of course is out of the question.He is too well guarded.But I'll bide my time and when I meet them I'll capture them and fix them good and hot by the stake."

All were astonished beyond comprehension at this confession, even Violet and her sisters, who couldn't understand how Penrod had been able to pull such,strange schemes through that way.

Because of this Violet and her sisters literally threw themselves together around Penrod, and two of them vowed him to huge them to his hearts content (Jennie and Joice) while they told him how delighted and happy they were to realize he was innocent and only no such boy, and that the desertion was only a fake and fooled the enemy so cleverly.

"But why didn't you tell us at first?"Jennie said almost with loving reproach.

"Itwould have spoiled my plans.replied Penrod yawning.

"Well"Penrod demanded of the ones to judge the situation"shall we pay the enemy back treachery for treachery."

"Aye, Aye"was the answer from every body in a loud yell.

"Second the motion a great number cried, and it was taken up in a storm of yells.

The motion was carried. And now the meeting being over, the soldiers and child scouts scattered to their own parts, well content with the evenings amusement. After breakfast the next morning Empress Vivian announced that she had ordered a Grand holiday tobe observed throughout the stillll inactive christian armies in honor of the safe return of Violet through Penrod...Alll the soldiers and every one of the child scouts, and even all refugees had learned how Violet had been so easily able to return to her loved loved ones, and all were anxious to see their brave brother for he had always always been a rare favorite.S first there was to be a grand procession through the vast Company Streets, after which Penrod was requested to perform some of his drill" wizardies in the great Room of the royal headquarters.In the afternoon there was or were to be games and races.

The procession indeed itself was very imposing. First came the Imperial Cornet and Brass band of Abbieannia dressed in emerald green velvet uniforms,, with silkhose of pea green satin and buttons of immense cut pearls.

They played the National Air called "The Abbieann ian Spangled Banner March" and behind them were all the Royal and National Standard bearers with the Royal, and the National and Provincial flags which made a very pretty sight indeed.If it was not stated before the National Flag was striped and the upper left hand color had a color of blue ina sort of oblong shape with a Cross in the center.The stripes were red and yellow. The Royal flag was divided into four corners or quarters, one being colored Prussian blue, another Scarlet, a Third purple lavender, and a fourth yellow.

.In the center as a Great white Star with a picture of the Blessed Lord Jesus Himself,, and all around the Four Quarters were sewn spangles. that glittered beautifully in the sunshine. The colors represented the Four Immense Provinces of Abbieannia, the Stripes of the national flag represented the states, and the White Star star represented the goodness holiness and purity of the national country in almost equality of the holiness of the blessed Virgin Herself,..

Just behind the Royal Standard bearers,, came Empress Vivian, and the Royal family themselves, consisting of the beautiful Princesses and Penrod, in their royal carriage which was of gold encrusted with emeralds and diamonds set in exquisite designs..The char carriage was drawn by the by very horses that violet and her sisters and Penrod usually ride on and the horses were decorated with immense red yellow,and blue bows and rosettes... Violet and her sisters and their mother wore splendid raiment and their Royal Coronets and were around their waists beautiful belts.They did not assume the naughty proud air seen among other Princesses and Empresses but greeted everybody they passed as if they were just as low themselves and threw to many of the child scouts beautiful be boquets of flowers...

Following the carriage came general jack Evans,,,,, mounted on his splendid horse, and the crowds cheered him as loudly as they did their lovely rulers.

Behind him rode some of his highest generals.These were really the retainers of the Vivian Girl Princesses, who had much respect and love for their service.There then passed by an army of girlscouts all dressed in their best and brightest uniforms and carrying all the weapons they had.There followed another band after this, which was called the Royal Court Band, because all the members always resided in the headquarters chosen by Violet,and her sisters... They wore white uniforms with real gold buttons,,, and played,"What is Abbieannia without the Vivian Girl heroines" very loudly and sweetly. Then came the boyscout column.These boyscouts belonging to the Lagorians all wore long bobbed hair, and yelled their battle cries every other step they took to the great satisfaction of everybody, who were glad to have this evidence,, thatbtheir lungs were in good condition. The brilliantly uniformed columns of the Vivianite Burrough girl and boyscouts marched next, before their own bands, at the head of the Royal Army of Abbieannian highest general officers, which consisted of twenty eight officers, from the highest general, down to the captian generals..The Standard chils scouts followed, while their officers stood up in the stirrups of their horses and bowed their heads to the right,and the left, in answer to the cheers of the crowds of soldiers who crowed thick about them...

Taken altogether the procession was a grand success when and when every one in the parade had returned to their respective places, the officers of the army, and all the child scout troops crowded into the great entertainment hall... to see Penrod perform his military and "Indian Tricks....

The first thing Penrod did was to produce a small sharp blade from inside his waist coat,, and seemed to pull it apart making two.../2/2/2/ This act he repeated on till he had twenty small blades in his possession turned into one strange shaped sword.This sight was a novelty anywhere, so every one was amazed and delighted at the appearance of the strange knife trick.

When h he had made all the knives disappear aga in,, violet del declared declared she and her sisters were sorry they were g one into one small blade, so Penrod pretended to remove one of the blades out of the hair of the little Princ ess Jennie---While rea lly she slyly removed it f rom his inside inside waist, and Jennie smiled joyiously as she recieved the beautiful little weapon. Penrod then f ollowed the blade drill or trick with several other wonderful knife feats, that greatly delighted his audience.They applauded all his ac tions, and at the end of the performance, he desired seven men to try and disarm him of a blade.They advanced against him with fake knives and rushed h im together a s he had proposed, but he had them all disarmed in a hurry. No on e had anticipated this sort of drill, not even violet and her sisters, even though in trying to learn them this drill he had disarmed them every time.He then had the knife fight with vans and disarmed him readily enough. Then Penrod said;

"I believe you all now there are no one among you who are so expert at flashing knives and going at their enemies at the V ivian Girl Princesses. If they have no objections I can show an experiment of a knife drill which Indians learned me which can surprise you all.They can come at me must come at me with real bare knives and I can prove I can disarm them speedily without injuring one of them with my sharp blade, and that neither can I harm them."

V iolet andv her sisters gr eatly feared there might be a slip in the drill, and hesitated to do it but as every one in the audience was expectant, and as Penrod appeared very confident, and as they understood his ways well, they therefore offeredvto God a heart felt prayer for pro tecti protection for both sides sides, and in a flash drew their long h sharp blades and made for him a s if he was an enemy.Two minutes passed, and Penrod was picking up their knives for them, while he still retained his own, and no one on either side was scratched.

"Had you been enemies coming at me to get the chance to destroy my sisters,"grinned Penrod to violet and her sisters, you'd been l ying dead th ere as quick. go therefore my dear sisters never have any fear when you are with me."

"After what you did even in s uch da ngerous c ircumstanc es we surely don't need to fear an thing."said violet."I wish we could do as well."

"I'll teach you and your sisters if you'll try to learn."he answered.

All the soldiers and the audience was surprised out of their wits by this trick. Believing it was surely safe because Penrod was so quic , the little girls wished to try it again.go the same performance was once more on, but th is time to the surprise of all, though he dis armed them he only disarmed six, and jennie managed by some dint of motion to disarm him."

This certainly pleased Penrod more than anything else, but in the third f ight, he was disappointed for this time he aga in disarmed them all.

"But keep on a s you did that time"he smiled to Jennie, as he recovered her knife and you'll be as expert as I.Then you can hold out with your blade against a dozen even though they got sabres."

No one could understand how Penrod could do that, and neither side even so much as give a scratch and yet use real sharp blades. Penrod then showed his other tricks that he had performed before violet and Daisy and Evans before, and especially his unusual shooting with pistol and rifle.. Then af ter the people or soldiers had been dismiss ed, the generals and other officers joined the empe mpress and the Vivian Royal children at an elaborate luncheon in the headquarters, wh re even all the boy and girlscout officials were sumptuously fed.Then in the afternoon they all went to a great field outside the cityttgates interior portion of the camps where the games were to be held, There was a beaut ful canopy for the empress and h er children and her father and guest to sit under, and watch the soldiers, run races, jump and wrestle, and play the Fall Game F ootball . You may be sure everybody did their best with such a distinguish company watching them, and finally one of the big boyscouts offered to wrestle with Penrod who had been wrestling with many others and who seemed to b the champion.In appearance he was twice as as old as Penrod but although Penrod was hardl, tall enough to come to that boyscout shoulder the prince was so strong and clever that he laid the boyscout six times on his back with great ease,,, The boy scout was greatly astonished at his easy defeat but laughed, when the Vivian G irls j oined the rest in laughin laughing at him.Then he proposed a boxing match with Penrod to which Penrod readily agreed. But the first time that Penrod managed to give him a sharp box on the ears the big boyscout sat down upon the ground, greatly astonished .This made Penrod laugh.Then General Evans proposed a race between the boy and girlscouts on horse about fifteen in number of both sides..So the thirty were seated on their ma nificent horses and waited for the signal.

"When I fire the signla signal go."Penrod called to them"You must dig out and race untill you reach those big tents t you see over yonder.Then circle around them and return again.The f irst one that passes the place where my Princely sisters sits shall be the winner. Are you ready?"

"Yes."

"Penrod f ired the pistol into the air, and at the shot the two columns leaped forward and the race was begun .The horses of the two squadrons pounded away at a great rate, and both columns seemed to be swifter than the wind.The legs of th e horses seemed to move so fast that their movemen t could s ar scarcely be seen.The strange part of it was the horses of the boy and girlscouts reached the tents about the same time and returned to the ending spot at the same time so that it was a tigho or tie.Nevertheless s they were lustily cheered by every body.

Then Violet removed the c oronet from her own head and placed it upon the head of the superior girlscout.

"My f riend,I and my sisters reward you for the swif tness of all of you , and therefore you boy and girlscouts are champion horse back riders. No wonder Glandelinian cavarly cannot resist you,you."

There was more applause a fter this, and then violet and her sisters had their own saddles placed on their magnificent horses and they themselves at the head of their own royal column and other rode in return to their own headquarters at the head of the grand procession.

"You little g irls ought to be able to learn s ome of my best knife tricks."said Penrod, as he slowly rode alongside Violet"For it would be a great help to you in case you were in trouble and I was not around.."

"We will try our best."said jennie confident she was at least a little better at the blade than her sisters, and therefore could protect them."

"It's lucky we have you a s our guardian and Evans too, though"said voice and Penrod thought of the ferocity of the Glandelinians, and agreed with them Several days of festivity and merry making followed, for so many old friends tha t came to see the Princesses and Penrod did not of ten meet and there wa s much to be told and conversed over between them, and many amusements to b e n joyed in this delightful company...

The boysc out w ho recently b efore th is had been captured though he could not b e proven as a spy was however not much surprised to find him self in disgrac e, but nevertheless he wa s in spite of the fact that he could not b e convicted or condemn ed as a spy. He was not a Glandelinian either, but of Foriegn birth,and that fact, and of being caught unlawfully in the V ivian Girls dressing room stealing something made it that much worse for him if even he was not a spy for he was branded as a thief..everyone suspected he had tried to rob the Princesses, and that only his discovery and capture had prevented him f rom d oing so, teh therefore no one preferred to associate with him.He was continued also under confinement in what wa s to be called his own room untill he could be claimed for by the sol diers, and he and his parents would be immediately deported. V iolet,and her sisters a lso were anxious to f in d out what had been the res ult recently of thier startling discovery at Abbiesnn but they had to first see to the safty of Big G irl Knool before they could do anything furth f urther.Oh how they hated Saten for they knew he was at the b ottom of a ll this.

After the meeting was ov er V iolet requested of her mother to allow her and her sisters to glance over her own private military map map and the Empress readily consented. She brought the beautiful children in her own room and sa id"Here is the map"

It was made by emperor Vivian acc ording to his own idea of the peril Big G irl Knool and Jennie Tory was in, a nd she and her sisters f ound with the aid of her tracing pencil that most of the Glandelinian army was c oncentrating at the city of B ig Girl Knool, a nd they observed also that the majority of the christian army was nearest Jennie very and little G irl Knoo l.

"Really"sa id Jennie anxiously a w orried look on her angelic face"our armies should move as soon f or Big GirlKnool.If that is captured Angelinia Athia, our tempora ry capitol is in grave danger.... "

Penrod also wa nted to see that c ity sa fe from so cruel an enemy, and sight of the situation e there made h im long to see the enemy get

"This is a fine and most beautiful country, and everybody loves us and we love them"he told his sisters."But the fact is we don't seem to fit in it with two great wicked Glandelinian armies betwen us and Big Girl School and my boy and girlscouts and yours too sisters have been begging me through their officers to start the advance against Jennie Tory ever since we came here..So if you little girls who are so clever with your plans can find a good way to fix it, the whole country will be much obliged to you."

"Jennie can do it easily."replied Violet."She is more clever than any of us, ain't that so Jennie."?

"Maybe and maybe not"said Jennie."But to morrow morning if possible if papa thinks it is right to do so our army goes ahead to morrow.."

That evening was so delightful that Penrod and Violet,and her sisters would never forget it as long as they live s...They were alll together,, in the pretty pretty room of Violet,and her sisters,,, and privately Penrod did some new tricks which they had never seen before, and Evans told stories, and then being unusally good signers Violet and her sisters sang a number of songs which everybody joined in,, and everybody laughed and had a good time and the way Jennie appeared and the way she was so merry it was evident the effects of her shocks of a few days or so ago had entirely passed away. Had poor Penrod been really guilty of that treachery there would have been one less Vivian Girl Princess to day as the shock would have killed her. Then they had in their midst the dangerous Irish man McOCann who answered to the enemy officers so insolently when he had been a prisoner, and he danced the Irish Jig to amuse the company, after which he related some of his adventures with the Glandelinians.Then Empress Vivian served delicious refreshments to those who still thought they could do a little attenting, eating, and when the bed time of Violet,and her sisters arived, the company seperated after exchanging many friendly and loving sentiments.

As they were assembled for the parting before the Princely children retired man ynof the officials and courtiers remained to scene in on the impressive ceremonies.Penrod held Violet and her sisters in his arms for quite a long time in a loving embrace and fondly kissed them good night. Then he waited for a time before he would repair to the same room untill they were in bed.Of course they undressed or dressed in their dressing room not in the bed room..."

"You must to us again sometime"said Penrod to Walter Starring and Fred Nance,and they promished hey would if they found it possible to do so. But my armies need me to lead them."they added,"so we can't be so very long away from them when the enemy is so menancing . After Penrod had hugged and kissed Jennie last, and bade her good night, the little girl and her sisters disappeared into their dressing room in a twinkling.

"I8m much obliged for all of your kindness"said the boy as the officers prepared to depart.

"And the whole nation is very grateful for your saving little Princess Violet's life"declared Evans."Every good foriegner believes ours is the loveliest country in the world because of all its unusually good people and therefore hope thatbbis beautiful holy little Princesses will always survive survive and never die as it does happen to children who are angel possessed.Good bye everybody untill to morrow morning. After Penrod retired into the bed room a number of good and strict sentries were placed without and within their room, and their bourdour also .

CHAPTER SEVENTEEN. .".".".".".

A REQUEST TO VIOLET AND HER SISTERS FOR AID.. OTHER STRANGE AND WONDERFUL ADVENTURES B EFORE THE BATTLE OF JENNIE TORY.

Ervic and his companions were in great dee pair.They saw no one could come so far to their help.

"Truly"said Ervic mournfully,"We should not have come out here at such a dreadful time."

Ervic and his three companions who happened to be little girls had been lift floating in a big rowboat on the River Big Norma.The four children were boriginers however and the three girls were Ervics btothat sisters....There were no oars in the boat, and therefore they were at a great loss what to do.They could not propell the boat by their hands, and there was no means of hoisting a sail in the boat for they had no pole or canvase..

They had bee in the boat on the river all day having gone into the boat boat to escape a patrol of glandeliniens who had tried to steal them away from their parents..

"I'm hungry"said Ervic"very hungry in deed.

"I'm feeling cold"said his eldest sister."And also hungry.

"I'm tired and sleepy."said his other sister, and his youngest sister admitted that she was afraid. But it did them no good to complain.Night was coming on and ser strange to them a red moon was rising and cast a strange bloody sheen over the surface of the water.

"Go to sleep"said Ervic to his sisters."I'll remain up and watch, for we may be rescued in some unexpected way."

So his three sisters laid themselves down in the bottom of the boat and were soon fast asleepp.Ervic watched . He rested himself by leaning over the bow of the boat,his face near to the moonlit water and thought dreamingly of the days surprising events, and wondered what would happen if he and his sisters were captured by the fierce glandeliniens. Suddenly he heard a splashing noise in the water, and saw a childs head appear not more than a foot from his eyes.Then another appeared, and still another.The three were two boys and a girl and they gazed earnestly with their bright large eyes into the astonished eyes of Ervic the little Foriegner.

"We are three child scouts."said the little girl her voice low and soft but distinctly heard in the stillness of the night."We have seen the treacherous deed of your enemies, and we were sorry for your misfortune.We followed the boat down here and then away to you.Have you been on the river all this time.?"

"Yes sir"was the reply."I hope you child scouts are well---and comfortable" stammered Ervic, not being able to say anything else.

"We understood some day that the Vivian Girl Princesses, who are as happy as they richly deserve now would sent us to our friends. "declared the boy to the other two. "We have seen the enemy try to capture you"to the boy in the boat' and have waited and watched for this time.Now we ourselves are in trouble and if you will promise to help us in regaining our own camp and will be faithful and true, you can save yourselves and your own people from the dangers that now threaten you as Glandeliniens don't respect Foriegners. But as foriegners are getting to be distrusted in our own country too you'll have to do what I ask to secure the pull for the aid."

"Well"said Ervic"you can depend on my doing the best I can.But I,m not a witch, nor a magician you must understand, and cannot dare fight these fierce glandelinian soldiers.."

"All we demand is that you obey our instructions."returned the little girl with golden hair."We can see that you are honest.Do as we command and all will be well."

"I promise"exclaimed the lad."Tell me what I am therefore to do first."

"You will find at the bottom of your long boat a rope..tie one end of the rope to the bow of your boat and drop the other end to us in the water. Togethe r We will pull your boat to the shore."

Ervic much doubted that the three children, two of them decliate appearing girls could move so heavy a big row boat,,, but nevertheless he did as he was told,,, and the three child scouts all seized their end of the rope in their mouths and by swift strokes headed toward the nearest shore,, which was the very spot in the direction of the main section of the christian line toward which the boat had been drifting. At first the boat did not move at all, although the threeee child scouts pulled with alll their strength. but presently the strain began to tell. Very slowly, the oboat crept toard the christian side of the shore, gaining more speed at every moment. A couple of yards awaw away from the sandy beach, the children went ashore themselves while the boat itself now being under way continued to move untill its prow grated upon the sands... Ervic leaned over the side and then arose and said to the three child scouts.

"what next?"

"I will give you several knives which you may secret about your person"said one of the little girlscouts. The boy recieved the blade.

Then he said"that next?"

"Go about six hundred steps to the east along the edge of the stream, and you will see a path leading through some meadows lined with high tents up hill and down dale. As we led you into a su secure part of the christian lines you won't be stopped by sentries sentries. Follow the path untill you come to amagnificent building, which is painted on the outside a lavander color with white trimmings. When you are admitted by the sentries at the gate by presenting this pass which we give you, we will tell you what to do nes t next as we will follow you. Be careful above all not to allow yourself or us to be shadowed or you may cause us and you descrtuction destruction and all you have done would be in vain. Have your sisters accompany you but they must be still and say not a word."

The eldest of the girlscouts issued these commands, and Ervic promised to be careful and started to obey. He first aroused his sisters and made them get out of the boat. Then they all went three hundred steps to the eat east. Then he searched for the path, and vthe red glare of the moonlight never theless was so bright that he easily discovered it, although it was hidden from view by tall weeds and high grass untill one came full upon it. This path was indeed very narrow and did not seem to be much used but it was quite distinct, and Evic and the others had no diff iculty in following it. they went through a broad beautiful meadow lined with beautif b autiful tents up a hill and down into a small valley, and then up another hill hill and down again. It seemed to Ervic and his friends that he had gone miles and miles. Indeed the moon went low and day was begnin a beginning to dawn when finally he discovered the pretty building painted purple or lav ander and with white trimmings. It was the headquarters of the Vivian Girl Princesses. Ervic at the suggestion of the others showed his pass to the e sentries and made the counter sign and demanded of the girlscout;

"what nes t next?"

"You can do it if you have the pass without fear. you are to lift the latch, open the door and go into the house. Do not be afraid of anything you see see for this is the headquarters of the Vivian Girl Princesses, and their appearance may startle you. Do not fea t fear them no matter how they appear appear for they're angel poss ess ed and however they seem to be threatened with danger nothing can harm them. This building is their headquarters and also of their parents the Emperor and the Empress. These children though they're more good than saints however don't trust or like all foriegners and they're so modest and so unvainly that they cannot be bribed with tem treasure or coaxed through friendship or won by pity unless you prove to be Gods and their own friend. They have however assisted many persons and children in their career, never have they done wrong to any one not even their enemies, who wrong them. All her All their wonderful doings are for the amusement and goodness of all those they are friends of and love. At first if they believe they don't trust you they may or one of them may order you out of their headquarters but then you must go. but if they allow you to remain you can watch them closely and see what sort of children they are for your own pleasure. Then you may ask them to help you ought of your trouble with the Glandeliniane and I am sure they will. This is our favor we give you for the good you did for us yesterday."

"That sounds easy"returned Ervic, who had listened carefully."But of their strange supernatural angelic features."

"But are you sure they won't cause me much embrassment from what is said

"They may cause that"replied the boy scout,"but really do not worry if that happens, for you must overcome that embrassment in time. You may be sure that they won't harm you, so you must not be surprised or over awed at the sight of them. Don't be afraid of their brother either for he is a good lad and only dangerous to the glandelinians..."

Now Ervic was as brave as any ordinary boy, and he understood that the child scouts who told this to he him were truthful and to be relied upon, nevertheless he experienced a strange overawed feeling as he approached the door of the building.

His hand trembled as he raised the latch but he was resolved to ovey obey his instruction if he was to recieve help. He went in as the guard pushed the door open, was directed to the big room and ushered into the apartment where violet and her sisters had gone just before the morning meal. He stood still and glanced around him. The sights that met his gaze were enough to surprise any one who had not been properly warned. On acouch lay a brightly uniformed boyscout apparently "snoozing before breakfast, a da light red coat lying under his head. Two small cats ran about and played and the room for such a situation to be near a soon coming bloody battlefield was beautifully decorated. But the most startling and fascinating sight of all were seven of the most beautiful children he had ever set his eyes upon. Three of them also had been reclining on coaches, but the most be beautiful little girl of all with golden brown hair sat upon an arm chairs arm and was knitting something. The others arose at his entrance except the boy who was asleep. The pretie prettiest little girls eyes were bright, and appeared to him as if something was in them from a Heavenly world. There was a strange odor in the room as of the sweetest perfume. The pretty little girl though appearing quite supernatural to him moved as naturally as any ordinary little girl might and raised her head to look at him, while her sisters sat up."

The little girls were so dazzling in their beauty, and daintiness and so beautiful in every form of ways that the boy stood t rooted to the spot in bewilderment and with some fear..also. They looked seariously at him, especially the prettiest one, and then some of them smiled, because he appeared to be so embrassed and shy.

"Sit down on that bench little boy."said the little girl who was more prettier than the others. She indicated another chair which was empty, just beyond him and so he went over and sat down upon the chair and bade his sisters sit on the bench which the Vivian Girl indicated also.

"Are you a Foriegner?"again said the little girl.

"Yes I am the boy managed to stammper stammer"but the government allowed me and my parents to stay because we are good. Then he told how when he had gone out to see if his parents were coming home when a number of Glandelinians made a rush toard him, and how he and his sisters escaped down the river in a boat, how three child scouts rescued him. Violet, and her sisters remained motionless after they had listened to his story, as if they themselves were awaiting orders. The most beautiful of the little girls knitted on not glancing toard Ervic now.

"what do you want therefore?"the prettiest girl demanded again looking up from her work.

"I plead for help from some one. "said Ervic.

"You may have that indeed"declared the girl as she glanced at her sisters.

"no you now who I and these little girls in my room are."!?"she finallly questioned.

"You must be one of the famous Vivian Princess 's" Ervic answered..

"Knowing so much, you must also now that I and they don't like foriegners unless they can prove that they love god as much as we do. But I believe you are one of those who try to do so for your face tells it to us. your presence here in my private room at first annoyed me. If I was not what I am or my sisters either, would you not fear my anger."

"No."said the boy."When people are good you never get angry."

Jennie laughed very pleasantly at this,

"Did you intend intend to come here to see us because we are so unusually pretty. If you did we could force you to leave our presence. We are not vain."

"No"replied Ervic, just as quietly as Jennie had spoken..... ....

Jennie knitted for a few minutes longer, before resuming the conversation/ "Curiousity and so on, if that is what their method was"she said,"was it to many a mans or a boys mood undoing. "We are not naturally beautiful, as our beauty comes from the angels that possess us. At first I supposed that in some way you have learned that I and my sisters have done wonderful things against the enemy and also went through dangerous experiences of which no one else may have survived. you I know for I seen you witnessed that scene one day when and my sisters were captured by the enemy soldiers who tied stones to our feet, and our hands behind us and threw us into the deep river to drown us. you no doubt wondered to this day how we escaped before you could rescue us, as we apparently were more than ten minutes under water. Juice was almost drowned after she saved us, and we could tell that by her appearance and protruding tongue. Well when we fell in the water she accidentally scraped the rope that tied her hands against a razor edge of some sharp stone and was free. With the same stone she liberated our feet from the stones first, and then herself but she was all in by that time and would have drowned if two of us didn't save her in time. The Glandeliniens who saw us ten minutes after were scared and one died of fright.They thought they saw our spirits.when we often after that s spied we heard the same Glandelinians be ridiculed by their comrades who told them afterwards to try drowning fishes in the water first..o probably we thought that through curiosity you have come here with your sisters.you too may have been told that for my sisters do not injure our friends who we live with or love, and therefore we thought at first you were bold enough to come hoping to see what we appear like..We thought too that we imagined or that you imagined that you may witness some of the rites of the angels which are said to possess us, and that that may awe and amuse us.I hope I have not thought truly?

If so we would demend of you to go."

"Well"remarked Ervic who had been pondering on the strange circum circumstances of their many narrow escapes from the enemy"You are right in some ways but not in others.Had I known how beautiful you really were I would not have dared come in as I feel more embrassed and overawed than I can explain.If it was not for help for my sisters need, I'd have run out of here pot haste as I am even scared and believing you're celestials and not really children.I am told only what you have done and gone through, and that you work for our or your country and her cause only for Her sake and not your own interests, and that your love of God is so good that you cannot bear looking at a crucifix without cry crying ---see the mere mention of it has brought tears to your eyes.I am sorry
I brought up that subject but I see now I was not wrong. All you have done seems to me very unusual, and it would have pleased even me much better if you would have wisely remained safely within the powerful protection of the christian armies and let men spy on the enemy.Few people understand why you do it,and the whole World marvels.I am told that you are the most righteous and saintly children in all Abbieannia, and for every hard blow you suffer, your happiness afterwards comes back in a tenfold rebound.Why don't you for your own sakes give up all this dangerous exploits and let the men spies do it.It would be safer."?

"What right have you to question our actions?"demanded violet herself suddenly sitting up from the couch she was reclining on.

"None at all.I'd only rather see you safe."

"And you say you are not here to be curious?"

"not at all.I can prove that."

"Then you may say you are not here for anything else but to beg some special favors of us?"said Angeline.

"For myself I do not want favors.It is for my parents .They're missing," and tears came to his eyes.

"You are wise in that.But do you understand because many foriegners have double double crossed us after all we did one for them that we never grant them favors, but have deported them."said Joice a little severely(to try him)

"I know that is true.Princess.Many foriegners I have distrusted myself as they're not like Abbieannians. But then you know too Princess that some foriegners who have been born Americans have proven to the Glandelinian soldiers whom they fought against, far better fighters than any of your own country men can claim and have been a great help to you.You remember what that Viccann fellow did and his two companions."

"Yes but they're Americans and only Americans have proved to be of any good to us.Other foriegners even went over to the enemy side."and she said that bitterly indeed."Therefore Foriegners have to have a big pull with us to get any favors granted.What happened to your parents.?"

"They're missing.I and my sisters could not find them, and then we nearly were captured by those dirty Glandelinians.We had no weapons to defend ourselves."

"you are better off that you didn'T.If you had shot any one of them they would have not rested untill they did capture you.I and my sisters might grant favors on one condition.But we would have to see what our brother says to that and as he is asleep we don't want to arouse him.He lets us sleep sometimes over the hour and Heaven help the one who makes too much noise too.Shall we wake him Jenj Jennie dear."

"no"said Jennie."We could decide on this ourselves and get his consent after wards.But my boy"she added turning to Ervic,"If we do you a favor we expect a favor in return.Did you not understand that.That may seem that because we are so nicely treated and get everything our hearts desire that we have been spoiled.But it can be proven that we are not, and our beauty dones doesn't make us vain or conceited either. But what you would want us to do is another dangerous exploit.Evidently your parents were captured by the Glandelinians, and we would have a terrible time to locate them too.You must understand to have us rescue them is a difficult problem.We do not even know them, as we have no record of them.Have you not their photographs.If you have something to identify them by we may try to help you.But you must grant us a favor in return."

785"

"Grant a favor in return Princess"he said looking at her with admiration.
Who could refuse you anything who have done so much for everybody already.I could only refuse you what is impossible, and only that."

"You are wise and good in that"smiled Jennie but blushing at the same time.
"but we do not care much for pr praise.No matter what we are or do we consider others as much equal as we are . But the favor is a serious one.We see you are a nice nice strong boy, and so are your sisters strong and full of spirit.
What would you say if in return for our favor we would wish you to join our child scout troop.?"

"That doesn't worry me"declared Ervic."But that would be impossible?.

"Impossible?How?"demanded Catherine herself

"Well you see, Miss Jennie Turner is the recruiting Matron and everybody must go to her.what she says goes too for it is said she represents you.
Angelinia Aronburg is the same.Too they have no room in their regiments as there are no van vacancies.Therefore I could not do that as it is said the whole thing is backed by you and you won't change what she does."

"there's a way easily out of that difficulty."laughed Jennie and Ervic thought that laugh came from an angel child from heave she appeared so angelic.
"If we request any one ourselves to join, no one could interfere and she or Angelinia Aronburg wouldn't care or interfere either.If you wish us to do the favor, and are not curious to witness some of our brave deeds, and really want our help we would wish to have you and your three sisters be child scouts.We could use millions, and we plan to draft for child scouts if necessity compels us.There's hardly no loss amongst them as they're too dangerous and the enemy avoids engagements with them."

"I have no curiousity at all.If you wish to perform a dangerous exploit go ahead."said Ervic."It may interest me and it may not, but in fact my heart tells me I would rather you would not do it.And besides I'm not begging you to go to my help in person.I would be horrified for God only Understands and sees the dangers you have gone through. If you'd rather stan stay saftly within the protecting christian armies and send somebody else to find my dear parents it's all the same to me.But I don't wish you to go yourselves at all.It's too dangerous."

This may have puzzled violet,and her sisters.Perhaps in all their career these lovely , holy, and brave vivian Princesses had never been visited by any one who like this little boy of ten, really had intended to demand for for nothing, expected nothing, and had no reade reason for coming except to try and have them secure assistance for his parents. This attitude and the honest guileless apparance of the boy practically disarmed the Princesses, who in fact would not refuse any one no matter even if they were not good who were really in serious need of aid.But for the Good of their Countrys cause, they always expected favor in return for one..They began to regard the boy in a very friendly way.She Sne Knitted for some time seemingly in deep thought, and then she arouse a rose to call into the other room to find out when for "Heavens "sake is Breakfast is going to be ready and what is keeping it so long. Had she or her sisters suspected such a long wait, they would not have gotten up so early.It was not even six in the morning yet. There came the answer;

"The Quarter Master Sergeant overslept this morning and the goods didn't untill come untill ten minutes ago.Sorry Princesses but we'll have it shortly."

Then Jennie turned to the four and said"I and my sisters are going to change our uniform for our private clothes.We don't wear our uniforms at the table.
It isn't proper unless we have too.We'll return in a few minutes."

The few minutes passed and they were in the room exactly to the dot dressed up in their best clothes.He gasped in surprise and dismay and would have fled had he the chance. Their beautiy seemed intensified for what they now were and he gasped .

"Do you like me and my sisters better this way?"Jennie inquired, with her bewitching smile..

"You really ought to be in Heaven ."gasped the boy as he felt rooted to his chair."But I don't doubt that you're there at that, and here too."

Jennie laughed saying"That is what may people believe too, that we have one foot in heaven and another in on the earth.But during most of the time we wear our uniforms.but when we are at in our own headquarters it is proper to dress in our own clothing. You'll get used to us soon if you be around long enough.but you shouldn't be scared of us.We're not celestials, and even if we were, surely you then shouldn't be so awed.You ought to be glad you have our company for a while."and to his embrassedment she stopped and kissed him on the forehead.

She then bent over the sleeping boy and shook him gently but with some energy.

In a moment the boy had been aroused, and slowly sat up yawning as he did so.
"Is--is--- it time to---eat"he yawned for he was still sleepy.
"The morning meal is delayed a little"she said.
He sat up and the boy saw that her brother was uniformed as if he was the highest leader of all. His uniform coat was very pretty. He had a sort of sinister expression about his mouth, that showed he was dangerous to trifle with, but good too, as they were, and that he sure was their guardian and protector. He was however still so sleepy that he did not noi notice that his sisters had visitors. Next both Jennie and Joice slowly raised the window curtains, but one slipped from violets hand and went to the top with a loud snap. Ervic offered to recover it but she laughed and said;
"Never mind friend. If it won't stay let it."
"There"cried Jennie"now my room presents a more comfortable appearance.
"We love to get all the sunshine we can. But if we do that favor for you we would have to disguise ourselves. Sometimes we disguise ourselves as a boy or as boys but we cannot hide our beauty and that gives us away. So we generally now go as girls."
"You are clever."said Ervic."I did not hear that you or your sisters ever disguised as boys. All I heard you do was disguise as different sort of girls."
"Oh do you believe so?"she replied."Well do you want us to show you how we disguise ourselves, and see how we change ourselves. ourselves."?
"No"said the boy"I don't understand the disguise business, and if I did I believe no one could imitate your skill. You are the most wonderful Princesses in the world, while I am only a common foriegner.
This confession seemed to please violet, and her sisters, who good as they are nevertheless could not help loving to have their disguise craft appreciated.
"Will you desire to do as the favor now?"Jennie asked."I and my sisters prefer to get all the boy and girlscouts we can get. "
"I prefer to do exactly as you desire."said Ervic.
"And face the dangers that all of us do and accompany us where even the devils would be afraid to go?"
"Yes..... ....."
"Are you not afraid to do it?"demanded violet, herself with a smile..
"I don't know. Was there not anything you were afraid to do and yet did it?"
"Many things. But why should I or my darling sisters give in to our fears? It don't get us anywheres."
"I can see no reason at all."he replied.
"Are you over curious over curious to see what the enemy can do?"Said Catherine.
"No."
Violet, and her sisters looked at him curiously..2.2.2.2.2.
"You want you favors for yourself, you say, and you're too honest and good even though you are a foriegner to be able to steal my secrets or that of my sisters. This isn't a pretty situation you are in I'm sure to lose your parents that way. I nor my own sisters wouldn't desire to lose ours or lose one another. Yet you are willing to grat the favor we demand after all, even before we really intend to do as you wish. Well that shows that you are a good boy, and that your sisters are good also. Have you no other relations?"
"Only three sisters."he answered readily.
"Where did the enemy chase you."?
"Near the Big Norma River."
"What were you and your sisters intending to do before the Glandelinians attacked you?"
"We were on our way home. My father and mother had gone to the home of a friend of ours who has three children. When I went there there was nobody home, the house was damaged and the three children two boys and a girl were murdered with their bodies slashed open."
"That is a customary habit of the enemy which we have to stop at all cost!" said Joice viciously. "You are lucky that you escaped the murderers. We shall do all in our power to rescue your parents only hoping to the mercy of God the rascals have not murdered them already."
The beautiful Princesses came over to the bench and examined his sisters.
"They're pretty and innocent but very young."said violet.
"are they not too young to be girlscouts?"said Hettie.
"No."Objected Ervic.
"I love all children girls and boys too, they're so cute and tttttttting interesting.. and I8ve never shunned the company of little girls or boys all my life nor did my sisters."
"I wish you and your sisters were in heaven."said Ervic to himself but not loud enough to be heard.

1073918

"you would"said Daisy who seemed to have heard what he said."And I suppose you would prefer to be with us there too."
"no in the world did you know I said that?"stammered Ervic for he had not even said"I wish you and your sisters were in heaven as loud as a whisper.
"I heard you"said Daisy laughing. "You said you wish Violet, and her sisters were in Heaven. What part of Heaven would you prefer us to be. Where the best parts are and I suppose the nearer to God we'd be the better you would be pleased. For so many we have had amongst foriegners, you are a very pleasant visitor and therefore your devotion to us shows you deserve our favor"she continued. "Most people who are acquainted with us believe we all ought to be in Heaven together. The cruel glandelinians accuse us of being cross rattle serpents, cuttersnipes, Centepedes and as crabbed and unsociable as the very evil spirits themselves. Yet they're only guessing. Everybody in Abbiennia shower praises upon us more than we deserve, and yet you wish the best of everything on us, and that is that we were in Heaven. Well often between times the way we get along, and especially with our brother, Penrod"and she winked at him "We believe we are at times. Many say that we are possessed by Angels, and they are quite right. That cause enables us to see literally into the characters of persons an and we can tell who are not good and who are by just a glimpse of their very eyes. If you had come here, as an unwelcome presence pleading and begging for favors which you didn't deserve from us, and half afraid of us because we are good, and you were not, I and my sisters and even our brother would have abused you intilll you ran away, but you are quite different from that, and I8m believing your little sisters are still more pure and good yet. You are the sort of boys and girls that we always desire to see, so we like you and am very willing to help you out. We saw in you that you are that is why we wanted that favor of you. But instead of it being a favor you really would be honoring us, and yourself too, for believe me it is awfully hard for foriegn boys to get into our boy or girlscout troop, and you could find that out from Jennie Turner. It takes a big pull to get in, and you have the pull from us. You did not come from curiousity as we feared at first, and therefore we did not demand of you to go away. you deserve the favor of us but we are afraid we cannot accomplish it, unless you have photographs of your parents. We are truly angel possessed all right, we at times have the strange immeasurable happiness of angels, and then too their sorrow and anger when things are bad, but we cannot do any miracles. We cannot be rash either and allow ourselves to be captured unless we can be sure of rescue or an easy change of escaping.. So you'll have to bring us to where you live and show me their pictures. You have them have you not."?
"I have them in my pocket." said the boy who had been wise enough to bring them along.
"Good. you were wise enough to do that and that saves time. But there goes our morning meal bell. Are you and your sisters hungry.?"
"I am but I'm not worthy to eat with you and your sisters."
"Everyone laughed at this.
"You're going to eat with us just the same"said Joice almost severely. "Good people are never unworthy of us, and despite our own commission as princesses we do not believe anybody is any more below us than we are ourselves. Come into our fancy dining room and eat good and hearty. And for God's sake now boy don't blush so. We're nothing but mere girls. Come there goes the bell again."
The boy followed them slowly and bashfully that Penrod with a grin grabbed him by the arm, pushed the boys sisters on ahead with his other hand and pulled the blushing boy into the dining room. Emperor Vivian and the Empress and even Evans was sitting at the table already. The table was spread nicely with beautiful rich linen and bearing dishes of various healthy breakfast foods, the oatmeal cereal steaming hot. There were only plates laid for the Royal party, and Evans, but at violet's request three extra places were laid. Joice was the first to stand at the table, and her sisters went into their own respective places. Jerrie was at violets right hand and Angeline her almost twin sister at Joices right and opposite her.
"Come my good strangers at your places."The Empress herself called cheerfully as she saw the boy and three girls hesitate, and Penrod himself put them there himself saying almost disgustedly;
"Come don't be so shy of us little girls. We won't change you into fishes or something."
Everybody then said the "Grace before meals" and then as they sat down violet stated "I am very glad, and Emperor Vivian decided it was wise for the boy to so easily gain the favor of his little daughters." And smile we're eating you little girls better decide into what disguises you shall put on this time."
"I believe we'll have to do as we are."asserted Joice as she sat down and started eating."We are so pretty that we cannot hide ourselves even if we disguise as boys. In the world amongst beautiful women even or children are more lovely then we are, and though it is a blessing in one way, it hinders our efforts to fool the enemy. It is better to run the chances and go as we are.

We don't intend to enter the foe lines ourselves. We intend to send some of the Gemini who can locate where his parents are held prisoners, and Penrod will get them with his followers even if he has to raid the enemys lines as he did before. I feel he is aching to strike again for poor Jennie like he did before, for what she recieved at the hands of Loydan and so this will give him an opportunity. Isn't that right Penrod dear."

"I believe you can read my mind"laughed Penrod.

"I hope though"said the boy Ervic very nervously"That you little Angel Princesses don't go so near as to be seen by the enemy."

"What, you a stranger worrying about is already!"Jennie demanded smiling at his serious face.

"It is not my business to object to what you do---for your will is your own will. She said helping himself to the food, and eating with good appetite. "And do you not consider it slightly foolish and rather ungirlish for such beautiful children as we are to go and do these dangerous adventures as we do sometimes."?

"Well"replied Ervic after a period of thought"That might be if there was no necessity to it. But to my way of belief it may be probable that even you have to do it whether you wanted to or not, because without your clever efforts the cause of your blessed Country would be on a downfall. It seems to me that God had or must have transformed you seven most lovely and holy of child ren into small adepted angels for that may have pleased Him as well as it could. I'm not wanting to exaggerate an thing, for that probably hasn't done of course,because as you say you can't work miracles. with all the Angel possess ion you have. But here's where I believe you made a error. You told me of your experience when the Glandelinians tied stones to your feet, and your hands behind you with ropes and threw you into the deep muddy water of that river. Yet though I can prove it you were under water yourself more than ten minutes, and yet children could drown to death sooner than that time, you're here and alive to day, and not only that, but you're coming down that road and those Glandelinians seeing you went into such a panic of fright that one of them dropped dead, and the others went as if they had wings and flew away. If that isn't a miracle then I'd wish to find out what you call it."

"That is because we have got so used to such things that we can stay under water water ten minutes without drowning"said Violet."But the stone that cut Joices rope saved us."

"I can't consent to that idea."said the boy disputingly."Your sisters Joice could not have been able to do so had not the angels directed her hand into the par path of that sharp rock, for then you would have been drowned. No princess Joice I'm sure I'm not wrong, that was a miracle is there is any."

The boy had put the case with unusally remarkable cleverness. He realized that the Vivian Girls were really something out of the ordinary, that if he had been a sinful boy and his parents too the vivian girls would not grant the favor at the cost of their own safety, and yet he didnt want them to chance the dangers, and wished them to send some one else but he couldn't turn them off from it. He believed absolutely the angels protected them i[illegible] Ervic them otherwise they couldn't go through successfully, with all the things they do/ There was such a saying"In no way can you slay an angel possessed child no matter what you do."

While the meal was in progress and Jennie Jennie was the slowest at her oatmeal for she never cared to eat fast she herself said;

"I wish there many more foriegners like you are my boy friend. Penrod my brother surely needs them. You never told me your name. But I'll introduce my loving ones first. This is my mother and Dad, and these are my sisters." And she introduced each one by name. Now my boy what is your name.?"

Ervic O Conner."

"Oconnon."?

"No Princess Oconnor."

"It's a hard name to pronounce."She said."Couldn't you pronounce it in our own language.?

"I do not now how"said the boy."But you may call me Ervic. It's as good."

"Your name sounds Irish."said Jennie while her sisters nodded."Surely those sort of foriegners and Americans appeared to be of any good. What Nation did you or your parents come from."?

"The United States."

"The United States!"

"Sure"said the boy promptly."That's wrong. You appear startled."

"No wonder you're worthy boy then."said Jennie."Most people are bad there too of course"she admitted but"but when there are good ones they are good. My brother learned all sorts of great things there. I wish you could also show me and my sisters some fancy American Tricks."

This Irish lad did not reply.. just then. He thought it unwise to boast about himself too much... For a few minutes they sat silent. In a bird cage in the dining room was a bird larger than a parrot, and of the form of a Toucan, but Ervic or his sisters had never seen one of that sort before. Somewhere apparently, from another room but adjoining was singing unusual songs and playing music. The songs were entertaining, and Ervic enjoyed listening to them. Nor Ervic had slyly kept his eyes on Violet and her sisters and marked them well and had concluded that they were too pretty and good to perform themselves into a dangerous mission in his behalf. He thought if he managed to get their parents to send some one else he would go with them, find his own way into the enemys lines, slyly enter the place where his parents were held prisoners and released them and help them escape. Indeed he had firmly resolved to carry out this plan, when Jennie who did most of the conversing suddenly put down her glass of milk which she was drinking and said;

"Do you think we'd go anywhere where we surely see there is grave danger. You still wish we'd send some one else and not go ourselves. We can see that in your yes. If we don't do it ourselves and get the Gemini to help you'll never see your parents again. We ought to have gone right away instead of dallying too but too much haste will cause the enemy to be suspicious. It would take us only a few minutes to reach the enemy territory. If you are so afraid of us running into unnecessary danger then will you wish to go with us or will you remain with with our Father and Mother."

"I'm going with you"said he"and so are my sisters."

"Take care, take care what you do."said Daisy. "Don't be a daredevil for reckless action can get us all into a blunder."

"I won't be a dare devil so don't worry."

"We are not going into the enemys lines ourselves"said Violet "so you do not need to worry and besides don't think for a moment that we're going alone by ourselves. Penrod my brother will accompany us with a big cavarly squadron and a big division of child scouts with us. That will cause Glandelinian scout patrols to leave us alone. We could not succeed in our own missions we accomplished by doing anything rash, for the Glandelinians are very dangerous and are not to be trifled with. Though they're usually afraid of angel possessed children, and will run from them, they do not seem to fear us, but want more than anything to do the same to us they have done to other children in massacres, and when we had been prisoners they had tried to. The best way for us to be successful is to allow us to send the Gemini into the enemys lines with your photograph in their possession, for when they tell the location in case they couldn't bring them out we'll allow our dear Brother to play with the enemys camp again as he did when poor sister was so broken up over that wicked deception. We ourselves can be able to perform all the arts of spying we have learned and well understand but we don't need to do no spying here. You my boy friend are acting wisely and in the most effective manner, and we appreciate your kindness very much in your desire that we don't do anything that is too dangerous.. We did not see at first you were so intelligent, or that you could be so generous and loving to us who are even strangers to you, and you to us. Continue as you have begun, and you'll be a great boyscout too. Your sisters so far have never spoken a word. Can they not talk!"she asked..

"They can but they're too shy."he replied."but they cannot talk in Abbieannian as I can."

"I and my sisters can speak English."said Violet."We learned it in school"

"If you will allow us to speak to them and ask them whether they will be willing to be girlscouts, everything will be all right."declared Jennie. "why not let me ask them. Then they could be with you always."

"Well""said Ervic ,as if hesitating "Then ask my sisters. If they consent--why then I'll be glad. But they're a little afraid of Glandelinians,...."

Jennie stepped graciously over to where the threese little girls were sitting, sitting. They appeared shy indeed in the presence of such a beautiful little Princess, and it was her radiant appearance and her holiness that made them so shy,.....

"Can you not speak Abbieannian little girls!"

"They shook their heads ."No they answered..

"Your brother who can wants us to rescue your dear father and mother and we will"said Jennie."He wants you to be little girlscouts for us but he says you are a little afraid of the Glandelinians..."never he has agreed to be a boyscout for us, and hopes you will be girlscouts too."

"We would love to be girlscouts"said the eldest one a little timidly.

"How old are you?"

"I'm nine , my sister here Joan is eight and Margeret is also eight."

"You're a little too young to be girlscouts I'm afraid "said jennie teasingly.

"no, no."exclaimed the old st eldest. "If you will let us be girls scouts we will always be good to you and your sisters."

"but isn't you too young."

"No,no"she exclaimed again in.

"You could hav e them be stationary scouts they're that young."said Ervic.

"I am only trying them to see what they are y"said Jennie with a smile for Ervic had protested in Abbiennian. But never mind they'll be Vivianites. They are a little young but I'll pass them. What we do no one disputes. They're better off as little girlscouts for the enemy then n n't harm them or try to interfere with them in any way for no one can tell you better than we can how afraid of child scouts the enemy is. On the cont ary seldome does the child scouts ever suffer any losses. And that only did happen to some of us once by a random shell."

"Why was any of your sisters killed"asked Ervic in shocked surprise.

"No, no"said Jennie. "Only some boyscouts."

Then she turned to the three girls again.

"Will 'you agree to do everything a girlscout does, and go wherever your leader commands you to do so?"asked Jennie in English and she spoke it far better than most people who learn it in school to Ervics surprise. He had expected her to say the words in the funny way some Latan people do just like the words,"Heem" and so forth.

"We promise that"cried the three girls.

"They had consented."said Jennie laughing happily at her success,"and you have promised me to abide by their decision. So friend Ervic you have three little sisters to be your companions. But to learn some of the scout duties you must accompany us on this mission for your parents."

"Accompany you and your sisters"said the boy horrified. "Surely you don't mean---"

"We are going to do it."said jennie decidedly but laughing in his face.

"You people are worried over us more than is necessary. Do you believe we're going into the enemys lines and not change our clothes. We're going as we are without uniform b ut we'll send the gemini into the enemys lines to locate their whereabouts. Then Penrod our brother will assault that sector and rescue them."

"Won't they get hurt if a fight goes on."

"No."

Ervic seated him self on the chair again, a deep joy in his heart that over the fact that violet, and her sisters were not really going into the enemy lines then themselves. As Penrods command the waiter went out and brought another pitcher of sarip.

"I sent you for milk"laughed Penrod. "Wake up man I see you're still half asleep. We don't drink that."

The man smiled as he went out, and that mistake so tickled violet and her sisters so that they laughed good and hearty. At other times they're so jolly and happy that the least funny thing can make them laugh good and hard.

The waiter however did not keep them waiting long for he brought the milk, and seeing they were laughing yet he laughed good and loud himself.

While they were silent for a while and continuing on the morning meal Ervic having overcome his shying shyness studied the Vivian Girl Princesses carefully out of the corner of his eyes. All of them except jennie had beautiful golden hair, and blue eyes, and were exceedingly fair of skin, but jennie though he she s had golden hair too, it sort of changed color toward her shoulders turning to a streaky but beautiful golden brown but her complexion matched that of her sisters. She and her almost twin sister were a little thinner but beautifully formed. But whatever their hair had in common it was of the finest texture, and the hair contrasted exquisitively with their Rosy Cheeks and ruby red lips. Daisy Hettie and Catherine seemed almost the same size, and were younger, violet and Joice seemed the same size of a nine year old, but evidently were older, and jennie and Angeline though smaller were about equal height and form. He however could not continuing sizing them up very long for their beauty overcome him and he felt more afraid again as if he was really entertaining angels unawares..

Jennie however was very crafty and shrewd little Girl. She had noticed all the time that he was sizing her and her sisters up, but that he had glanced at the first two prettiest of all, and that was she and Angeline.

"Since you have studied us so very good"she finally laughed"I hope you can match us up right for you have examined us with critical approval. which of us do you believe is the prettiest."

At this her sisters laughed merrily and he surely flushed crimson to realize oh he was caught in the act. And surely how did she know when she had flushed redder as they laughed, and would have left the table to run out but Penrod was sitting beside him and was so close he had no chance to.

"See the poor boy blush"said violet with a pretty pout a pretended one"don't tease him Jennie dear."

"It's not"said Jennie in a pretense of reproach"but he has been sizing us up from the corner of his eyes, and I thought maybe he could judge who is the most beautiful of us all."

"You may be"he finally stammered, but "but you me the seven of you are more interesting than anybody I have ever seen. I can hardly believe you are really little girls. I've heard of persons in this country who thought they had even adopted little children, and found they adopted angels unawares. I'm afraid sometimes that is what you are and won't let on. Besides you have gone through so much that you surely cannot be human beings but celestial children in disguise."

"You surely have a odd opinion of us"said Joice with her sweetest smile.

"We're not angels though, for we are flesh and blood. If you don't believe it Jennie can let you hold her in your arms a minute and you'll find out. I feel as if we were angels sometimes, and sometimes we have unusual spells of happiness of which we cannot account for. But that doesn't prove we are angels. Jennie you go over to him and prove it that you're only a little girl."

"I'm afraid he'd run out"said Jennie. "See how he is blushing now. He's crimson and afraid of us.."

"Tell"said the boy "do you really want the truth of which of you is the prettiest?"

"Tell"said Jennie"still laughing merrily"we are not vain or proud, but I believe my own sisters can tell you that themselves."

"That's true"said Joice. "Your beauty, and Angelines too quite outshine our own...you're the loveliest one, and Angeline is almost equal as she's nearly a twin. Strangely you two were born the same day and the same hour. But it seems your beauty does is not your good luck."

"That is right"said Jennie. "The enemy hate us too the most."

"Well they'll leave every one of you alone here after"said Penrod with a black scowl a scowl that even made Ervic wince."

"With you around they'll have to"laughed Jennie. "I believe you Penrod is one of the angels that possess us in disguise."

Everybody laughed merrily at that."

Daisy rose to fetch something from a cupboard. she was not quite so tall as the rest of them but her form was more beautiful and rounded and more handsomely clothed with a wonderful jeweled girdle, and a necklace of shining pearls with a cross attached..

"Do you Princesses really claim that these is your natural forms?"still wondered Ervic.

"Yes indeed"Daisy herself replied smiling at him. "This is the only form I'm really entitled to wear. As Joice said if you don't believe it let Jennie be in your arms a minute"

"I am not worthy of that" said the boy blushing redder than ever. "But I see now why you are named the "Darlings of the Nation."

"The Darlings of the what?"repeated Joice in surprise for really though that was what they were called, they had never heard that before to their faces.

"The Darlings of the nation."

"Some one must have thought something unusual "then laughed Violet. "We never heard that before. But I suppose it's on account of our doings."she exclaimed smiling. "But we do not care much for titles as we believe everybody is and should be equal. We were all created equal and free too. But we would rather have those titles than have what those rascally Glundelinian Soldiers, as of ten calls us."

"You seven are very beautiful"asserted the young lad"but that is best in you is your purity, holiness, and the lack of anything out of the ordinary. Everybody in this country are so good it astonished me and flabbergasted me. I thought at first nobody could sin. But of course you seven are the best of them all now I'm a pinhead....."

The smiles that he saw interchanged between the seven Vivian girls filled the poor boy with embrassment, so he fell silent, and attended to finishing his breakfast leaving the others to converse by themselves. It is three sisters in English frankly told violet, who they really were, how their parents became Abbiennian citizens, and how they had planned to get some child scouts to help them get into the headquarters so they could plead for assistance. They admitted that they had feared, had they being foriegners pleaded for their help that she or her sisters would have refused them.

"In fact you are quite wrong about that."returned returned Violet "I and my sisters make it a rule to resist everybody but if they are real unworthy [illegible] could not [illegible] about it ourselves. [illegible] all for you. However now that you have proven yourselves very worthy of our own personal help, I [illegible] my sisters do not regret our action, and we will do whatever is in our power to save your parents whom we hope the enemy had not murdered before you came to us for assistance. But you must promise promise me and my sisters not to do anything anything rash while you are with us and the troops and do not tell a ny one afterwards what [illegible] and my sisters have done for you and your brother. Now as our morning meal is finished we must get r ady to start start as we must not delay too long."

Angelinia Aronburg the girlsc out chi ftian a nd relative of the Princesses sat in the grand court of the headquarters of y iolet, and her sisye sisters surrounded surrounded by all her girl and boyscout officials and a hundred of the most beautiful girlscouts in all the regiments of the c hild scouts. If not mention ed before this building was or is made of wood, but the c ourt itself (A new name for immense garden) was built of rare marbles exquisitely polished howing that the one who had owned it had been a rich man inde d. Fountains though it was early ovember tinkled musically here and there, the vast colonnade, open to the s outh, a llowed the girlscouts, a s they raised their heads from their embroideries to gaze upon a vista of warm at war torn fields where groves of shattered shell a torn trees once bearing fruits still stood. At times on e of the little girls feeling gayer than usual would start up a song, the others j oining in the chorus, or one would rise and dance g racefully sw ying to the music of a harp played by a companion. And then Ange linia Aronburg smiled, glad to see her girlscout friends mixing play ith duties. Presen tly among the fields a number of objects were seen moving a threading the broad path that led to the gates of the headquarters. quarters. Some of the little girls gazed upon thes e objects with awe and admiration, Angelinia too for it meant the coming of her cousins--the only ones outside of their parents in all the land that Angelinia Aronburg bowed to.

Then up the path trotted el ht horses, and as the steeds were brought to a halt at the gates, there leaped from the animals seven beautiful little boy girls, nd tw boys, Violet, and her sisters, their brother Pe e Penrod and Ervie, his sisters at the advice of the Princesses had been left in the other more plainer headquarters. All the Princesses were dressed in simple white dresses that rich little girls usually wear, and as they ran up the marble steps of their main headquarters, they laughed and chatted as gayly as if they were not the most important je persons in the most beautiful and holy country in this history. The girl and boy scout leaders, and the hundred beautiful c hild scouts had risen and stood at the salute to greet the Royal Vivian Girls, while Ange linia Aronburg came forward with outstretched hands or arms to greet her guests.

"We have just come on an important mission."said Joice. "I and my sisters and Penrod had been wondering how to pass the day, when a little boy (pointing to Ervie) a nd his th e three sisters came to us asking for assistance, so we mounted our horses and rode here. We're going to try and recover this boys parents, and we want your whole Regiment to accompany us."

"And we on my so foot"added Jennie "That our hair is all blown all fuzzy and our hats wouldn't stay on our heads. Usually it is ten minutes journey from our second class headquarte rs to here, but I suppose we were two ma minutes on the way."

"You are most welcome to a ll the regiments you can use"I'm sure"said Angelinia Aronburg, happily, and led them through the c ourt to her ma the magnificent reception hall. Violet and Joice accepted the arm of their friend, but some of her other sisters lagged behind, kissing some of the boy and girlscouts they knew best, conversing with others, a nd showing them all that they were their friends. When at last they rejoined Angelinia Aronburg and her sisters their sist rs in the reception hall, they found them in earnest conversation about the condition s of the country about Big Girl wood, how the trip toward the enemys lines could be accomplished without being discovered a nd so on. This interested violet, and her sisters of c ourse, but it didnit interest the rest so much just now, but soon Jennie herself ran over to a big table on which was lying open their own great big Record book. This manuscript is one of the greatest treasures the violet, and her sisters possesses, and violet, and her sisters prize it more highly than any other of their possessions. That is the reason it was always firmly attached to any big table they may happen to use in their headquarters wherever they may be by means of heavy chains, and whenever they leave the room either one of them locks the great boy together with five padlocks, and carries the key softly hidden in her bosom. I do not suppose there is no useful thing thing in my place to compare with this record book, on the pages of which are printed a record of everything that is suspected to happen [illegible] part [illegible] of the war [illegible] exactly the moment it may happ [illegible] one will refer to the record book and all, although at least they do not [illegible] the details in so long, th a description as one could [illegible] of them lots of things happen, a nd so the records have to be brief or even their great book could not hold them all. Angelinian Aronburg herself loved to [illegible] the records several times a day, and any of the girlscout officers whenever they visited her loved to glance in the book and see what was written there. For Jennie not much was recorded about northern Calverinia just then, which des pite the war so far was peaceful and uneventful, but to day Jennie found something which interested her.

"This is strange and even f unny"she exclaimed. "Did you realise sisters of her all that the j ourney we may accomplish for that boy is going to be some hid dangerous, because the enemy have out so many scout patrols!"

"Yes"replied Violet, coming to her side "I av have found on General Evans map that the Glandelinian patrols overrun the country to out out hristian scouts, parties marching to prevent a down b lows against the G landelinian armies and to watch out for spies. and that these Glandelinian scout patrols consist of j ust really can ot learn. No one I have questioned has ever seen them or heard of the ma The most of the land-linian sc out patrols are way up at the upp r end [illegible] of the Jennie Tory T ritory, with the impassable Glandelinian position on one side of the Yellow Belc pond, and the hills and f orests on the other. That l s part of the Jennie Tory T erritory which is in ngerous to travel over."

"I mean s one does kn ows about it either unless it's the Glandelinians themselves"declared Jennie. "But the writing on this Record Book says "The Glandelinian scout patrols usually dress in the uniforms of Christian scouts and soldiers, and therefore they can deceive any one who attempts to go through, and enforce christian sc out patrols."

"It isnt all that so written in the record book"asked Violet.

"Every word"said Jennie, and violet, and her other sisters examined the record and seemed very puzzled and perplexed.

"I ll me guess"said Joice to Angelinia Aronburg "who are the Glandelinian scout patrols called the Demon Fireheads!"

"I know as much about them as you do."confessed Angelinia Aronburg. "Until now I have never heard of them, no never have I ever heard of the others I have never heard of them, no never have I ever heard of the others mentioned. And you I have mentioned themselves as christian scout patrols mentioned. And you I have already themselves as christian scout patrols. heard that in the far away sections of the country near Jennie Tory were hidden many Glandelinian pickets whose numbers are unknown to me. However if you no desire I can l earn through some of the leaders of my own scout [illegible] something of the Glandelinian sc out patrols."

"I wish you would"urged Joice seriously. "You see how e rude" this poor boy is very anxious to find his mother and father, and I know it is no fun to lose them or and they're in dan er danger. I have a horror always ben I believe our own parents are in danger. Therefore I cannot allow the Glandelinians to [illegible] his parents a nd l disown if I can possibl, help it, no matter what the risk. He is worthy of our consideration."

"Very well Princesses"said Angelinia Aronburg. "I ill try to get some information to guide you. Please excuse me for a time, while I go and see from some of my scout patrol lead ers. I ill be gone for some time."

"May I go with you"urged one of the [illegible] especially.

"No darling"was the reply. "I must go and col e oneself them alone."

So Angelinia Aronburg went out and violet and her sisters waited patiently for her to come back again. In about twenty minutes she returned, and her face was grave and thoughtful.

"Dearest Princesses"she said to violet and her sisters "The G landelinian scout patrols, hold half of them are Gangerillan G ard ee and they to deceive our own life, and to try and trap our own patrols use our own uniforms as suspected. For that reason---bec ause these Glandelinians don l no much in Great al treachery and have much secrecy about them---I can learn little about the s them. The position of the enemy who have their encampment of scout patrol office s are on an isle in a Great lake."

"Why I didnit hea r anything about there being a body of water in this section of the c ountry."exclaimed violet. "Our map here only s hows the river near w hich we are roaming through this part of the country, but shows no body of water of any sort."

"That is because the engraver who made this map probably neve r visited this p rt of the country"explained Angelinia Aronburg. "The b ig body of water surely is there---and in it, is a small Island---and on that island the enemy officers who have intend ed to use it for their temporary residence have constructed a comp. and it's dangerous to attempt."

"What are they ll of"implored Joice herself."

"I don't know exactly. I could not tell me that."confessed the girlscout chief tian "for my s couts could not tell me that. Glandelinian scout patrols prevent any one from learning the [illegible] watchful Glandelinian sc out patrols prevent any one from learning the [illegible] on this [illegible] am."

"The Christian main patrol scouts of child soldiers must have found out if they're going to learn anything for our own welfare."suggested Jennie.

"Perhaps so"Angelinia Aronburg replied,"But it is said they can get little information concerning the whole Glandelinian army either.General Broofs Glandelinian army are stretched across the fields north of Jennie Tory just just south of that island and the body of water.They are said to be in position on hills that have steep sides and a broad hollow top in the form of a basin, and in this basin the Glandelinians are so situated as to form a dangerous trap for any troops carrying the positions on the summit.They also are all Omarians and terrible fighters, and no one has ever been able to penetrate their lines for any spying duties.I have learned that the Glandelinian armies h number nearly sixty million men, while our own side is only fifty."

"What numbers of the scout patrols patrols that go roaming about, and why do they go in so many parties?"was Catherines Catherines question.

"I cannot tell you that either dear Princess."

"But see here."cried Jennie indignantly"It's against the rules of warfare for any one to duplicate our own scouts no matter what the reason why,so if these Glandelinians disguise as our own christian scouts, they are doing treacherous things, and do not deserve quarter."

Angelinia Aronburg smiled upon her little friend and cousin.

"You must have forgotten your experience with treacherous Bowden prebtty pretty soon I see."she said. "Glandelinians do not recognize the laws of civilized warfare or they wouldn't even massacre children the way they do. And if we cannot learn anything of the se fierce Glandelinians it is likely that they are dreadfully dangerous to trifle with."

"ut something ought to be learned about them Angelinia, and we ought to learn if we must save this boys parents from these dirty Glandelinians.Who also going to risk it with them and how are we going to do it too when between our own scouts, and the enemy we cannot tell which is wich which."

"That "returned Angelinia Aronburg"is what I am now considering.And you little Princesses not learned of this little boys dan parents being in danger or captured, you would have never worried or intended to go upon such a dangerous expedition.Of course we could use all our scouts, but then if we storm the patrols we would accidentally be fighing fighting our own too and we do not want to do any blunders. So if you had paid no attention to the dangers of otherm you would not have needed to worry. Any how why do you want to do it yourselves.The Gemini and all our soldier and private military detectives could do all that for us."

"But that would not be right."declared Angeline."I and my sisters are the Princesses and my parents am the rulers of all the Christian territories and rightly ov of Glandelinia too, which includes every other province as well as Angelinia Agathia city, and being the Princesses of this great country it is our duty if our father goes to command armies, to be with him in our own duties and help him overcome such a wicked rebellion. I see myself you're a girlscout leader, and fight the enemy, and you're just as important as we are and should not be in the army either but safe at home. So we have to save this boys parents. So while the christian and the enemy patrol scouts may both wear the same uniforms and so forth is no reason why I or my sisters should not be doing our duty.We do not intend to enter the enemys lines as we have no desire to do so.But we plan to learn where his parents are captured or held prisoners, and then make an attack upon that part of the enemys lines and rescue them."

"That's a fact sisters"commented Penrod."We have got to go forth often and show those dirty Glandelinians that we are not afraid of them.But in this situation how are we going to do it."

"That is what is puzzling me also dear Princesses"said Angelinia Aronburg."It is exceedingly dangerous for you to go into such a perilous territory even with all your scouts and a column of soldier cavarly, where the treacherous scouts could instantly bring down upon you and us an overwhelming force of Glandelinian cavarly."

"I or m sisters are not afraid."said Joice with a smile.

"It isn't a question of being afraid sisters." argued Penrod."Of course we understand I see the symptons of you, you and your sisters joice are really a angel possessed, and though you won't never die, you can nevertheless be slain or injured, and suffer badly too unless the legions of angels that possess you protect you miraculously.But dear sisters in spite of all this you have all been in frightful trouble before, and find out that the enemy are too dangerous a almost for even angels to trifle with, the enemy have often really put it over on you and frustrated you in your intentions, defeated you too, and therefore it isn't seemingly right for you beautiful little angels and the best children of all the world to put yourselves in such danger so often and suffer all this.It surely isn't right."

"But remember what our Por Poor blessed Lord, and His Mother suffered" protested Jennie.

"I can't argue on that"said Penrod regretfully."You win."

"Perhaps I and my sisters shall be in no danger at all with you my brother brother and the powerful cavarly protection, and the angels too."returned Jennie with a little laugh."You mustn't imagine dang er so much Penrod dear for one should only imagine nice things, and we do not know but we may be able by our shrewdness to avoid either scout patrols.Perhaps God will allow that we'll really meet only our own, and they're good and would listen to reason."

"Penrod though is right Princess"asserted Angelinia Aronburg."It is true that if we know nothing in whos who in the scouting patrols because of their uniforms being the same it is a very dangerous move we will try to accomplish. And And besides these Glandelinians under the personal command of General Manley and Federal,and their Confederates will not submit to any interference under any conditions whatever and therefore to attempt anything would be almost sucidal. And besides over that affair that happened to you Dearest Princess Jeni Jennie The Glandelinian leaders suspect that every attempt will be made to capture those three boys and therefore they are sure to resent our moving against any portionof their camp than ever before. Glandelinians won't recieve you kindly and graciously as is your due like our own people do. And Jennie dear they hate you worse than any of your sisters and you know it."

"If you would move the whole army against Manley"added Angeline Richee "it wouldn't be so bad, but surely no one would start up a real general battle because two persons are captured, and then maybe we wouldn't win either., Manley is awful hard to beat too."

"We have an enormous good army."said Joice.

"yes , but these generals we have in command are dreadfully afraid of the Manleys and never would attempt anything without the leadership of your Father or Uncle who can lead armies properly and is not afraid of any foe. I'm sure these generals would rather run than fight Manley or Black Brooke. And any one general outside of your father or Uncle or Evans even if they were unusually brave couldn't do much against such a powerful army as Manley has. And you understand too we're impatiently waiting for the arival of Francis John Vivianana and wondering what is delaying him.He's a good fighter."

"What then my friends would you suggest?"inquired Violet....

"I'd advise you and your dearest sisters to stay out of this dangerous zone and send a number of clever Gemini spies and see if you can by that means locate this poor lads mother and father."Proposed Angelinia Aronburg. "If they can locate them then they may be able to secure them.It is somewhat against the laws for us child scouts, and you Princesses to risk ourselves too much.The very Aurthorities would believe we're reckless to even sucide and therefore they would claim we are responsible for our own dangers and fatalities if it happ end.Therefore why not send Gingigore or Dangar to the enemy lines and let either one discover where this little boys parents are."

Violet,and her sisters shook their heads , to indicate that the advice was not to their satisfaction."

"If they too cannot get into the enemys lines what then?"Violet asked."I and my sisters should be obliged to carry out the mission ourselves and that too would be a difficult difficult and dangerous thing to do.I am sure it would be better for me and my sisters to go through it as we at first planned. We understand and know signals between our own scout patrols which the enemy doesn't know and therefore we may not be so easily followed by the Glandelinian scout patrols..Then if the Gemini finding where the prisoners are they can return and point out that portion of the camp to our brother and he could resort to other means to secure their free dom freedom."

"It's a most ticklish thing, anyhow you loo at it. "sighed Jennie herself."I'm sorry now that we noticed this in the first place.Why my dear boy did your parents remain in dangerous territory in the first place.See the mess they've got us in, and we can't go back on our promise under no conditions."

"But can't you realize Jennie dear,that we must do our duty, not that we are aware of but this poor boys trouble!"asked Joice."We are fully determined to go at once to the nearest portion of the Glandelinian camps and try to recover his parents.What if our Father or mother were prisoners.Wouldn't we do it too even if it cost us our own lives. The only question to decide is whether it is better after all for all of us to go in disguise as Glandelinian boy and girls:ou girlscouts or whether I and my sisters should go alone with Penrod disguised as a enemy scout and covering us with his liquid fire gun, or to assemble the army of cavarly and child scouts and loyal supporters to accompany us."

"If you Princesses go I want to go too."declared Angeline Richee."Whatever happens is going to be funny or fun dangerous as it may be--cause all excitement is going to be fun---and I wouldn't miss it for the world.he children should show Our Dear Blessed Lords enemies where they get off at."

Nei Neither Violet or her sisters or Angelinia Aronburg paid any attention to this statement for they were gravely considering the serious aspect of this proposed adventure. Violet and her sisters hated worst than anything to undertake this as they remembered with horror their many past experiences with the dreadful foe and did not like to chance any more.

"There are plenty of good leaders and friends who desire more than anything to go with you"said Angelinia Aronburg"But none of them will afford your and your dear sisters any protection in case you were in grave danger.you and your sisters and Penrod are the most powerful little Princesses in all Abbiannia and most beloved and respected, although both I and Penrod and Groveton have more varied arts of child scout military consitions at our command.however you and your sisters have one art that no other in all the world can equal---the art of winning hearts and making all good Abbiannian people love to bow to your gracious presence, or hold you long in their loving affectionate embrace.Your beauty is not natural but supernatural, and you and your sisters are as brave as you are good.for that reason I believe you could accomplish more good alone among your own people than with a large number of subjects in your train. But you must remember that as terribly as the Glandelinians hare, revile and dest detest God and His Blessed Mother, they hate you andyour sisters far worse.Therefore for Heavens name remember how dangerous it is for you to try anything as you propose."

"I believe that also.agreed Angeline,and her sisters nodded."but I'm sure I and my sisters shall be quite able to take good care of ourselves you understand, but might not be able to protect others so well unless we follow our own way of the plan.Then too we can have masses, and rosaries offered for our safty.I do not look for danger or disaster however.I shall speak with my sisters to the Gemini and see what they decide.Their advice ought to be good."

"aren't you going to take me?"pleaded Angeline Richee."You'll need some companion Princesses."Violet and her sisters smiled upon their little girl scout friend.

"I see no reason why you should not accompany me"was Violet's reply"But I intended to as all boy and girlscouts of our various regiments are to accompany me.If we could all disguise ourselves the Glandelinian scout patrols would not suspect us of being on an errand or errand of any other sort but of their very own and we could easily fool them.But in order to prevent prevented disaster coming upon us we must be careful. Let us return immediately to our second class headquarters and prepare at once to start on our journey. We ought to be able to accomplish something before to night."

Angelinia Aronburg was not quite satisfied with this plan but as Violet and her sisters could not finfigure out any better way to meet the problem and as they would not give in to anything else, and as they were dignified and had the say she had to be satisfied. She knew too that Violet and her sisters with all their gentleness and sweet disposition, and who are so east to easy to mbe made to laugh were nevertheless accustomed to abide by any decision they had bmade and that it was impossible to be turned from their purpose and also they would not be interfered with. Moreover she was frightfully worried for she could see immens immense danger to violet and hers isters in the attempt at the mission, for the Gland elinians were wise to their doings and would always be on the lookout for them..Of course violet and her sisters from the symptons noticed in them were angel possessed and had the ways moods and so forth of the very angels.but then they were not real angels, neither were they fairies, they were only little girls like any other little girl. The girl and boy scouts were somewhat safer as they themselves were so fierce.But violet and her sisters might encounter dangers that tothe boy and girlscouts would be as nothing,"and which to the poor Princesses would be very serious.The very fact that Violet and her sisters had survived the dangers of the past may have been because the angels who possessed them prevented them from being killed, but they had not escaped the discomforts of their misadventures nor had they been spared suffering or any great bodily pain.If too they were angel possessed they could not grow big either, and would always remain remain the beautiful little girls they were untill they went to heaven alive and then probably be the most beatuiful beautiful children there.But Violet and her sisters though they were angel possessed were mortals nevertheless, and might possibly be destroyed, or captured and hidden where none of their rlg relatives or friends could ever find them.Though they would not die, they could be killed and could for instance recieve the same horror of all other massacred children had recieved, and could be for instance be sliced into pieces and their bodies gutted like the glandelinians do and would desire very much to do, and too they could be again thrown into the river and probably the Glandelinians would see to it that they really were drowned this time, or they could be buried deep in the ground, or thrown into dangerous quagmires that swallow everything up or destroyed or gotten out of the way in man many ways by the evil Glandelinians were they not properly protected by the angels who possess them.These facts Angelinia Aronburg was considering while she paced with stately thread the hall of the building. "Oh Dear blessed Lord, and their angels protect them in their dangerous enterprize, and Dearest blessed Mother place your protecting Mantle of blue over them" Angelinia Aronburg prayed to her self.

Finally the good girlscout chief tian paused and drew a ring from her finger, handing it to Penrod.

"E Wear this ring constantly untill your return with your sisters"she said to her best boy friend."This will be a remembrance to my plead to take good care of your darling sisters on this dangerous mission.I cannot accompany any of you now, but if serious danger threatens you or your sisters send some swift courier and with my own dangerous troop I will come to your rescue.but do not chance sending any courier unless you are actually in danger of destruction or surrounded by the enemy.While you remain close by the side of your darling sisters I believe you your self from so much I have heard will be able to protect them from many evils from the enemy."

"Thank you dearest Gertrude Angeline"responded Penrod gratefully, as he placed the ring on his finger."I'm going to wear my smaller cartridge belt and carry mt machine gun rifle beside as my pistols so I guess they'll be safe from anything those gray coated snakes will try to do to them."

Violet and her sisters had some arrangements to make before they could leave their headquarters even for such a journey for the little boys parents so she they bade goodbye to Angelinia Aronburg remounted their horses, with Penrod and Ervic and they soon started on the return journey, and so swiftly did their horses gallop that nobody were able to say a word or do anything but hold to tight to their reins all the way back to their second class class headquarters.

In personal command of all the boy scout troop under Penrod was Timothy Groveton, who often made a fool out of the enemy, he was a most unusual, remarkable and intelligent boyscout who had even forced a glandelinian army and its most haughty general to surrender and who is much loved and respected by the nation.One thing he had a one in fooling a glandelinian patrol was to stuff an old suit of clothes with sta straw and put stuffed boots on the feet and used a pair of stuffed cotton gloves for hands.The head of the strange scarecrow was a stuffed bag of some sort fastened to the body, with eyes nose and mouth made so natural as to appear real.then a hat had been put on the head the thing was a good imitation of a man.He then placed the scarecrow hanging from the branch of a tree, and as Timothy Groveton can throw his voice as to make it appear somebody else was talking. he had lain in hiding un till a glandelinian patrol came into sight, and then made the Scarecrow seem to yell"For Heavens sake let me down.I've been hanging this way by the neck for two days and am dead.Please let me down." when he told of the joke,and how those glandelinians had fled in the utmost panic those who heard it laughed untill the tears ran down their cheeks. Violet and her sisters considered Timothy Groveton one of their best friends and most loyal subjects and a great scout leader, so as soon as they left Angelinia Aronburg and met him they asked him to take Penrods place as leader of all the scouts, and cover them on the proposed expedition and the boyscout leader at once consented. without asking any questions/.

Violet, and her sisters had warned Angeline Richee, to retain their strange journey a secret from the rest, and to say nothing to anyoneabout the strange disguises of the glandelinian patrols,,, untill their return, and Angeline Richee promised to obey. She longed however to tell some of her best girlfriends of the thrilling adventure they were going to chance on, but nevertheless refrained from saying a word on the subject.Indeed only Angelinia Aronburg could tell where they were going,, untill after they had gone, and yet even Angelinia Aronburg could not tell what the errand might be. Violet, and her sisters rode their swiftest but not their own private beautiful horses , although they were not sure there was any horse road all the way to the lake of that strange glandelinian camp.The territory around Jennie Tory is a petty big place and quited forested, surrounded on all sides by a deadly Glande linian army which it was just then impossible for any size of a attacking division to penetrate, and the territory where the big body of water was, according to the map(flap) was th in the fartest northwest section of Jennie Tory bording on the north section of the vast Gln Glandelinian army which was personally commanded by General John Manley him self.

As the city of Jennie Tory was situat exactly in the center of the wicked Glandelinian army and it would be impossible impossible for Violet and her sisters or any one to enter such a territory. They were going on a more dangerous dangerous journey and adventure then they even comprehended. Around the city of Jennie Tory the country is thickly settled in every direction by the various sections of the enormous Glandelinian army but the farther away you are from the city fortunately the fewer the fierce glandlinians were or are, untill these parts nearest the encircling christian armies have smaller populations population s of Glandelinians but nevertheless is patroled by countless enemy soldiers in disguise.. Also those faraway sections are little known by the christian scouts and by violet, and her sisters, except in the southwhere General Vivianannas army is, and where violet and her sisters has often wandered on trips of explomation. The least known of all was the Gilliykin territory which harbors the fierce glandelinian patrols also and burning forested valleys, and hot water streams produced by the flames, and therefore violet and her sisters were now bound for the most dangerous territoryies of the enemy.

First they must go to general Dargar, and to do so they had to go across an open strip of land which though in christian te itory and a part of o part of the christian lines was nevertheless patroled by foe scouts in disguise.

"I'm really so sorry"said Joice to Jennie as they slowly rode away with Penrod, the boy and his sisters"Not to be acquainted with this section of land than I am now. It is our duty to be acquainted with every hidden and strange sections of country in Calverinia, but we are continually so busy in our own dutiite duties against the enemy, forming military laws, doing acts of mercy to the wounded soldiers, and re ugees, and planning and seeing to the comforts of those who are within our armies for shelter from so savage a foe that we don't often find time to go on long journeys.//////////"

"Well"replied Jennie"We will probably find out a lot on this trip and we'll have a chance to learn about the glandelinian and christian scout patrols and by our signals find out which is wh which. Time to us doesn't seem to be much difference in our land, and if we are really angel possessed then we don't grow up or get old, or become sick or die, though of course we can be made sick or be killed as we would if we were not angel possessed so if we explore one place at a time we'll by and by find out every section of Calverinia. What ever suffering and fright we may go through will be for the Glory of God and for our own good too, and for the cause of our country. It would have been wis er though if even if they had to fight for a cause they thought right and fought decently then the glandelinians would have got a little smpathy. But we got to do something sisters for the whole world looks to us, and in is in terror of Glandelinia."

Jennie herself wore around her waist a big cartridge belt and Penrod was in the lead to protect her and her sisters from harm, carrying on his saddle within easy reach a bag which had small insignificent appearing balls with han dles attatched which were as small as only a baseball. but violet and her sisters understood when he brought these along. As small as they were on e of them in exploding would wipe out thirty glandelinian cavarly horses and all.

The ring which Angelinia Aronburg had given him was on his finger. Joice herself had merely slipped something that appeared to be a small silver wand into the bosom of her gown which however was something mysterious to those who never saw it. It really was an Ammonia gun of a peculiar shape. At close quarters it comes in handy..this wand gun was a better weapon for offense or defense than two revolvers and by its use she could accomplish many things. They had left their second class headquarters just at sunrise, and their horses traveled very swiftly over the roads toward the north,,(don't snort) but in a half hour they had to slow down the pace of their animals because the christian tents had become few and far between and often there were no paths at all in the direction they wished to follow. At such times they crossed fields already devastated by the glandelinians, avoiding groups of trees for fear Glandelinians may be hiding behind to spring forth upon them, and fording the streams and rivulets when ever they came to them. But finally they reached a slope of ground closely covered with scu scrubby bush and high trees grew here and there, a region which in this locality horses couldpass only with the utmost difficulty.

"It will be even difficult even for you and the rest of us to get through without tearing our dresses"said joice." So we must leave out horses here untill we return from general Dargar,"

"That is all right"Penrod said"We ought to be tried riding anyhow."

"Do you suppose Penrod dear we are anywhere near the christian lines where where Dargar resides."said Hettie.

"I cannot tell dear sister but I am sure we have been going in the right direction, so we are sure to meet it on time. Have we got the countersign and passess."

"Yes Penrod dear"said Violet.

The scrubby brush was almost in the form of an immense grove of small trees for it reached higher than the heads of the children, neither of whom were very tall. They were obliged to thread their way in and out, untill violet and her sisters were afraid of either getting lost or losing each other, and then when they did get out of the grove they were halted by a curious curious thing that barred their further progress.. It was a huge line of soldiers on horse, all wearing the uniform of Abyssinyilians. The coats of the soldiers however instead of being red as is usual with these sort of christian soldiers were of a brilliant purple color and woven into numerous artistic patterns on the edges and sleeves but their trousers were apparently golden yellow with blue stripes. and their hats were of the same color. They were were armed with carbines, long lances and two pistols and dreadfully long sabres.

"They don't appear to be dangerous though"said Jennie. "I wonder what they are? christians or glandelinians in disguise."?

"If they are glandelinians how are we going to force our way through."said Catherine.

They counted the number of men who were stationary and observed there were fifty of them.

"I am afraid they're Glandelinians in disguise and a big patrol"declared Jennie. "They don't act like Abyssinyilians."

"We must go back I think, and try to get around this peculiar column." violet, decided.

So they turned to the right, and following a small path and observing the line of horsemen found that it seemed to spread in a regular circular line, and were moving slowly forward now.On and on they went untill joice said that they were being surrounded.

"In that case they're either Glandelinians, or may be a christian scout patrol believing we are Glandelinian girlscouts in disguise. If they're enemies, or not we have gone right into the trap."exclaimed Daisy.

"True"agreed Angelina "Either an enemy column has tried to impro imprison or capture us or we're mistaken by our own side for foes in disguise."

"And if it is so, they did it too."said violet. "I wonder whether they're chi christians or not."

"They're quite a column I'm sure."returned Catherine"But I'm believing it might be possible they're Abyssinyilians in stead of enemies. If so we can convince them of their mistake by our passes."

"But surely they could recognize you as the Princesses"put in Ervic.

"That doesn't help us any"said Hettie" Glandelinian child scouts have often tried to duplicate us and therefore unless we have proof they won't believe us."

"Surrender there" cried a voice behind them..turning suddenly,, around they beheld an officer on horse not ten paces away, and regarding them with his crafty eyes, and leveling two pistols at them. Then there appeared from the ne arest bushes a dozen more soldiers but dismounted, which saluted the officer, and then one said;

"We have them surrounded sir, and these children are our prisoners."

Though they appeared absolutely to be christian soldiers all right, violet and her sisters did not like the looks of these soldiers at all. They had no features of christian soldiers for being so good they loo what they are "

"They appear wicked"Said Ervic to Joice. "What shall we do."?

Joice herself gazed upon the soldiers with a serious face.

"What is your object of trying to make us prisoners?"she inquired.

"That is our own business"answered the officer. "We are not trying to you are our prisoners. You are spies and we want you badly. You were leaving the Christian lines and we saw you headed for the Glandelinian camp. so you are spies."

"I am Princess Joice Vivian, and these are my sisters."said the girl with dignity. "So you're making a mistake."

"Mistake me eye."was the reply in a surly tone. "It's good too you confessed who you are as it is a much better capture. We're glandelinians not christian dogs, and Manley will give a great reward for your capture dead or alive. Well I'm going to claim that reward. come with us, and we'll hang you to the trees and let the vultures eat you as you hang in the wind."

"We won't"said Angeline indignantly. "We won't have anything to do with you. You'll never capture us alive if we refuse to do so."

"We'll see about that" returned the Glandelinian officer in a severe tone, and the next instant two mounted men with sabres drawn made right at violet and her sisters to slash at them. but Penrod secretly had the nearest of the Glandelinians covered and he suddenly let go his two pistols before any one even knew what was going to happen.. some others made a rush for him and they also went down. The captian himself had turned swiftly with his lance at the ready and he made a thrust at Joice but she shot him dead while the others of the fierce Glandelinians recoiled in panic.

"You'd better let us go." Angeline advised the others of the nearest Glandelinians "for you see you can't hurt us. Any one of us can fire more sudden than you can bring a weapon to bear on us."

"So I see" returned one of the other Glandelinians who was a lieutenant. "Your methods are greater than ours. But I'll not help you to escape our ring, and we'll find means to capture you yet. You cannot get through our line of seige, so if you won't surrender you'll have to stay here and starve, and go without water too."

With that the Glandelinian officer uttered a peculiar whistle, and all the Glandelinians on foot disappeared.

"There is more danger with these fierce Glandelinians than I even dreamed of" remarked the beautiful little Jennie, with a sigh of regret. "It seems that the glande linians do treacherously disguise themselves as men of our own side, for even these Glandelinians have us trapped sure."

"Never mind that no2 now" Said Violet "Let us see what we can do to get out of this traip."

They now examined the line of besieging disguised Glandelinian soldiers with great care, and were amazed and apprehensive at the strength of their numbers. Even a good strong christian cavarly would need all their weight to go against it, and the enemy would probably successfully resist all their efforts. To throw grenades at them here would only to get grenades thrown at them too as the horsemen also carried grenades, and big ones too.

"We surely must find some means to get through those horsemen." said Joice finally. "Let us look about and see the lay of land."

So they squirmed and wandered amongst the bushes, and finally Penrod thought of a fine plan. It was another of his learned Indian tricks which he had planned to show his sisters at the first opportunity, but now that trick would sure come in handy. But everybody would have to do the same, and too it was easy only it required a little patience in so doing. Indians had always or nearly always been successful in such schemes and any one knows it is the bush or tree trick. They had finally came to a shallow pool formed by a small bubbling ~~spring~~ spring. Jennie being very thirsty had stooped to get a drink, and as she used her canteen cup and offered some also to her sisters and Penrod he had an idea that his plan could easily save them.

"Come close together my little angels, and you four others." he called to them "I want to tell to you about a plan I have in mind."

Violet and her sisters crowded about him, and the four others came as close as possible.

"What is it Penrod dear?" said Violet, and her sisters appeared very interested.

"I have a plan how to fool those Glandelinians" he said. "Over there one section of the besieging line is somewhat spread apart and broken. We can do a sort of peculiar trick, which I learned from the Indians which will enable us to sudde nly take the nearest of them by surprise, capture their horses and fight our way through the enemys line." He said.

"You can do what?" Demand ed Violet and her sisters together.

"Listen carefully" said Penrod. "Not I alone, but every one of you will have to do it."

"But how can we." protested Jennie smiling into his face. "We would have to learn learn and that t would delay time."

"No, now said Penrod. "It's simple only it will take patience in accomplishing it. It is a tree or bush trick. I'll explain in as few words as possible so you'll understand. You little girls usually do show such unusual record breaking patience in everything you do that I believe it'll be a success. I'll explain. It's this way the Indians do it in trying to surprise an enemy so they can rush him before they are on their guard. Each of us uses a good size bush or tree, each holding one in our hands, but to be sure we are ~~thttttttt~~ throughoutly covered covered by the leaves. As we hold the tree or bush before us we creep slowly forward so slowly that the enemy couldn't detect any motion, and believe it is only a bush or small tree. Then when we are near enough we can rush those closest to us, shoot them off dat hotheir horses and then get away. You can do that can't you."

"I don't see why we couldn't." replied Jennie. "You sure are a good boy for us and a Blessing from God" she added. "How soon shall we start."

"As soon as we can cut off a bush for each one of us."

"But what do you do if the enemy surprises us?" demanded Joice.

"I didn't forget my grenade bag" smiled Penrod, and he patted it knowingly. "One of those would tear a good avenue in that line of horsemen.

"How long will it take?" asked Hettie.

"Depends on distance and over that way (pointing) it is not so far." said Penrod. "We can all breathe fervent prayers as we proceed. For of course if they have the drop on us we would be goners."

"I wish we had the magic belt that Little Dorothy has in the Oz Stories" said Ervic."

"If such a belt were true" declared Daisy "It wouldn't help us herelt only worke magic in Oz." and she laughed.

"You and your sisters are brave little girls indeed" said Ervic.

"How come."?

"Laugh ing when you and your sisters are in danger."

"We are used to it." laughed Daizy "We were often in bad conditions and with Penrods help we'll fool the enemy this time too. We'll soon be showing the enemy that they'll be afraid of us too."

"Here's the bushes" said Penrod coming back, for he had went to cut bushes of the required size. "Remember though we only must move inch by inch. It's slow wor but if we use patience enough we'll escape." He handed each of them a good size bush heavily covered with the late fall colored leaves. They saw when they held it before them it covered them absolutely out of sight, but yet they could see before them every way and yet could'nt be seen by the enemy.

"Do you believe we can do it easily enough" asked Penrod.

"Yes" said Joice "It's simpler than we thought. If you are ready we can go ahead."

The angels that possess ed the Vivian girls must surely have intended their escape with a very fervent and strong desire, for the trick was accomplished slowly but so cleverly that the Glandelinians on horseback didn't even see the busi bushes appear in unwonted places. They paid no attention to any bush or tree whatever but had even many of them dismounted from their horses which made the attack Penrod planned more easier still." Violet and her sisters and the other children including Penrod were so delighted at the success of this trick that they thanked God with all the fervor they could assume. They had however moved so slowly that any one else with them might have cried out impatiently "dear me this will never do" and may have exposed himself or herself before it was time for the assault. At just this moment the Glandelinians nearest saw the moving of the bushes, but too late. The twelve suddenly rushed from the bushes. clubbed the Glandelinians over their heads with the pistol butts, and in less than a minutes time were on the horses and ride riding off. They were just in time to escape through the suddenly broken line, for three score more of the Glandelinians suddenly formed platoon line and hurled a shower of lances at the fugitives. Had not the brave children rushed through the opening in the line the Glandelinians would have closed the gap and their escape would have been frustrated. However th the Glandelinians were wild over the trick that had been played on them and they immediately deployed about thirty of them to give immediate chase while fourty were to try and cut them off. The thirty Glandelinian soldiers were so swift on hose horse that the fugitives were almost overtaken but with a scowl of hate on his face Penrod let fly one of his grenades. There was a deafening earsplitting crash, that shocked the muscles of every one of the fugitives and even they were covered by a dense pungeant cloud. Mingled with the frightful detonation were dreadful cries of agony from the Glandelinians, and wild neighs of mortally wounded horses. The Glandelinians who were to follow from another direction were thrown into confusion by this event. Penrod and his followers now urged the captured horses as fast as they could. One of the Glandelinians out of the fourty who were pretty close but afraid to follow because of the grenades, Penrod would throw threw forth a rope with a lasso on one end. It caught Jennie by the nec and she was pulled from her horse badly strangled but Penrod wheeled in a flash in almost two simultaneously shots from his pistol shot that soldier from his horse, and severed the rope. Jennie was somewhat stunned from the way the rope pulled her down from the horse, and at first she feared her neck was broken for she had recieved an awful wrench. But outside of a seconds good strangling she was not hurt, and loosening the noose from her throat she ran to where Penrod was and he lifted her to his horse in front and then urged it on. The Glandelinians again threw a number of ropes after them, and two more of the Vivian girls were caught in the same way. Penrod didn't shoot the ropes apart this time however but in a rage flung two grenades, to the mark. The two explosions sounded like one there was a terrific eruption, and fragments of horses and debris were flung far and wide. When the smoke cleared and the two girls were back on their horses, all those fourty Glandelinians were wiped out. Because the rest of the Glandelinians being horrified at this, would not dare follow them they easily managed to escape and clambor to the top of the hill, with the Glandelinians firing a perfect fussilade but not a bullet touched them. Penrod expected them to follow up the hill but the Glandelinians wisely didn't dare to. Believe me they were scared of Penrod.

After they had lost some of their excitement from their adventure, and halted the sweating horses they gazed down into the valley beyond and were surprised and horrified to find it filled with a deene dense cloud of smoke seme pierced ever and anone by flume.

They were in a predicament indeed. The enemy in their rear, and a forest fire in their front.It wasn't advancing their way but it cut off their retreat in that direction.If they were to go another way the enemy may secretly follow surprise them and get revenge for what Penrod had done to them, Nothing in the valley was visible except those rolling waves of smoke and nothing could be seen anywhere else not even on the other side."

"Gosh I imagine I feel that noose around my neck yet"said Jennie."It made it sore."

"Well"said penrod"Those glandelinians who did that won't borther us any more."

"what are we going to do Penrod dear."said Catherine who also had been strangled strangled by the lasso and who was still rubbing her throat.

"Well"he grinned"I hope you don,t expect we're going to ride down into that conflagration, and probably allow ourselves to burn up."

"Of course not"she smiled."That would be sucide."Fortunately up here there is no trees so that it could spread this way."

"I'm sure I don't now what to do but we cannot stay here too long"declared Penrod doubtfully."If we wish to get on and beat it before those rascals behind behind us regain courage and follow I believe we must venture to go east."

"But the smoke is coming across there, and we can't see where we are going, or what we're stepping on"protested Hettie."There may be dreadful things mixed up in that smoke fog, and as it'll also suffocate you I'm scared just to think of riding into it."

Even the others seemed to hesitate hesitate.They saw too the glandelinians had regained courage and were coming up the hill, their horses at a slow gallop. and they were going to fling grenades too this time for the objects could be seen in the hands of many.Penrod was silent and thoughtful for a little while as he first watched watched the slowly advanbing advancing glandelinians first, and then gazed at the heavy rolling pungeant clouds, that were so gray and forbidding.Finally Penrod said;;

"I believe we'll go to the north, and let the scoundrels try to follow us.I saw a column of something beyond there which gives me hope.They therefore urged their horses on and went northward for about ten minutes.Suddenly from a distance there op popped a head of something that appeared to be a girlscout then a boy.Then it disappeared. through the slimmervmist in that locality.

"I believe they're a boy and girlscout patrol, and if thry are some of my troo troop patrol then I can attract them for even no number of glandelinian cavarly could drive them away.Therefore they must be Burroughs and should answer my call which you never heard my dear little Angel Princesses and which they known."

He placed his two hands before his mouth, forming a hollow with them,, and uttered a clearn thrilling bird like cry.

It floated far out over the smoke cloud waves and presently was answered by a similar sound, as if afar off echoe.

The glandelinians however had come closer and their chief leader who was a colonel cursed and swore and yelled at Penrod,

"give up those little Vivian Girls brats as they're to go to hell"

This was the worst ever said against such holy and innocent little things in their career and they turned red with horror.Penrod had whitened at these words but he turned and as they yelled for him to surrender the Princesses he answered"Certainly I will with Pleasure.Here they come."and he hurled seven grenades tward them as fast as he could draw and throw them. They exploded one after another in a deafening rattling roar pretty close to the glandelinians, and though they were not close close enough to do much damage the throwing of great clouds of dirt gravel and debris and the sudden eruptions drove their horses into a panic, and there was the wildest confusion that could be imagined.The reason nobody was hurt is because the Glandelinians were not close enough. ven a strong armed man couldn't have thrown that far. But it started the glandelinians into as much abject terror as if they had been hit, and it cleared that side of the hill of them in a hurry.Violet and h and her sisters had never in their life time seen such a panic or retreat. The brave children indeed were much impressed. Even the four other children were scared at the sight and glanced at penrod in horror.They never thought he was that dangerous to the enemy.The Glandelinians were started or starting to come on again, and penrod ordered every one to dismount from their horses, and go to strong rock shelters for it was evident the glandelinians would throw grenades themselves. They did when they came close enough and threw a perfect shower of them, but they went too far to the rear and exploded harmlessly.one finally fell in front of Penrod but didn't exploded in time and he without flinching picked it up and threw it back again to the glandelinians. That grenade mowed down sixteen men and horses and drove the others others again into panic.

Fearing the boy with his grenades and seeing that they couldn't reach the defenders with their own, and as everyone of the Princesses themselves began to open a severe fire with rifles and pistols, the Glandelinians again retreat ed and no effort of their officers could get them to go on again.The glandelinians were absolutely afraid, for they never expected children clothed in civilian clothes to fight so fiercely for their defense. To Ervic, and his three sisters this was a surprise(they alone didn,t fight) indeed. These poor little good foreigners had seen many strange things since coming to this fair and holy country, but here was a new experience. They had never seen children like the vivian Girl Princesses, or the boy and girl scouts scouts who would fight the Glandelinians, and usually were more dangerous than twice that many christian soldiers. At ordinary times too violet and her sisters and Penrod too were just the same as any ordinary little girl or boy one might chance to meet---simple, merry, lob lovable as angels could be---yet with a certain reserve that lent them strange angelic dignity in their most joylous and other moods.There were times often however when seated on their own chairs at their special council tables and commanding their generals, and other military followers, and every one elee present or when their own military and other powers were called into use, when even Angelinia Aronburg and all others about the eight royal children stood about them in awe of their lovely little Princesses and realized their superiority..Penrod waited now to see if his call was to be answered. Presently out of the fog to the north, hastened by the sound of the explosions and rapid firing apparently rose upward horses and small childish riders with sabre or lance at the ready.They were the burrough boy and girlscout troopers all right, and there was a great number of them.So strange did the smoke fog at first act upon them on their approach that the girlscouts themselves seemed to be clothed in fleecy trailing garments of murky colors that could be scarcely distinguished from the mist.

Their hair seemed at first mist color too, only their gleaming arms and sweet childish pallid faces proved they were living intelligent creatures and fierce fighters answering the call of those not in trouble and not the phantoms they appeared to be.As if they were little sea nymphs they at first seemed to move forward on the bosom of the dense clouds, and their eyes were turned questioningly upon the eight children defending themselves against the glandelinians who however were on the retreat. Then they emerged from the mist in a dashing wave, and at the sight of that sudden formidable array the whole glandelinian column yelled in panic and retreated in general not daring to meet with these dangerous child soldiers.

They would have persued but their leader raised his hand in the order to" "Halt" and they obeyed. The leader then rode up to the others who had risen to their feet and discovered it was Penrod and Violet and her sisters.

The boy was Jack saunders and he started back in horror and surprise.

"How in the world did you come to be here.Only a few hours ago we saw you safely within the christian lines"the boyscout protested.

"We wished to reach General Dangars part of the Christian army on business of great importance"declared Penrod."We didn't expect to meet these Glandelinians within our own very territory."

"You're sure to meet them anywhere these days and the devils wearing christian uniforms"said Jack bitterly."If you wish we,ll persue them and give them no quarter."

"They don't deserve any that's sure"said violet severely,"For they trapped us and nearly had us prisoners by their treachery.But they're too far now and it would be waisiting time.Would you mind escorting us safely to the generals camp."?"

"which part of the camp you wish."said the boyscout leader admiringly.

"We believe it is near that opposite hill side.We cannot venture in the direction of the forest fire, though that way would be the nearest."

"I'd do anything for you and your sisters"said Jack. Hello well if it isn't Penrod too."he added in surprise.

"Sometimes I don't believe he's Penrod at all"laughed Jennie."You know we could have angels with us disguised as boyscouts."

"For your safty I wish I was one"said Penrod bitterly.

The boy and girlscouts advanced to cover them, and the twelve regained their horses and remounted. With out hesitation they allowed themselves to be escorted back into the direction from which the child scouts had come,...The whole column rode forward so swiftly that the Princesses, Penrod and the four others were astonished to find themselves within the outskirts of the christian lines before they realized they had fairly started.

"I'm very much obliged to you."said violet and her sisters and the rest,,, and the scouts only answered "That they would be glad to even accompany them on the return to the main christian lines just for the calling. Then as violet and her followers rode on the scouts smiled and waved their hands in goodbye and then they turned a company street and soon disappeared from view....2.2.2.

"Well"said Jennie with a laugh"that was an escape from the enemy than I thought."It's worth while sometimes to have a good protector with you. But I wouldn't like to be roped by my neck off the horse again like I was.It wasn't the choc ing I got that was so bad, it f was the shock of the fall from the horse."

"They can just try that trick once more"said Penrod with a blac look." And I'll try to capture some of them and burn them at the stake."

They now halted their horses temporary for before them spread a delig ful and beautiful encampment that spread for many miles in three directions.The remains of fragrant wild flowers were still scattering or scattered throughout the slowly discoloring grass, and in the distance could be seen a number of stately trees.but there was no signs of life in the camp.here in the world were all the soldiers.The farther side of the surburbs of the vast encampment was bordered by by a row of high pine trees and just some distance behind the trees rose a queerly queerly shaped hill that towered above the plain as if it were a mountain. Its summit Its summit was crowded by wicked looking rows of cannon and the sides of the hill was or were straight up and down it was oblong in shape, and the cannon crowned summit seemed flat and level but had a beautiful array of pinttttaattt pine trees.

"Oh ho"cried Peornd as he gazed through his glasses"I'll bet that is the mountain where general Dargar and his Gemini leaders have their headquarters."

"f it is." oplied Joice"Then he'll help us do something for this lads mother and father..He'll help us to reach the lafe of the enemy for I believe they're held captives there..I'm wondering what is beyond the line of pint trees trees.Can our horses stand a good swift gallop that far."?

"Of course in time"was the prompt answer."I'm sorry we had to leave out o our own swift horses behind us, for they would come in handy just now; but with general Dargars queer position in sight a s light ride across these pretty fields and meadows won't tire our horses a bit."

It however was a longer tramp than they had expected, and it was about ten in the morning before they could reach the flat mountain.So Violet propose they go into the tents for a while and rest their horses, and Violet's sisters and Penrod were quite ready to approve.They did not care to admit they were tired of riding so long to each other but they told themselves that their legs and tighs"Had prickers in them""meaning they had begun to ache from sitting so long in the saddle.

Usually when Violet and her sisters started on a journey of this sort, they carried with them provisions and food and other things that on such an adventu adventure any person or soldier might require, but to go away with Penrod was an entirely different thing, as experience had already throught them.Penrod knew how to secure anything he wanted. Whatever Joice carried that appeared as if it were a silver wand nobody could tell but nevertheless it seemed to be tipped at one end with a strange form of s om ething yet during their troubl trouble with the enemy she had not used it.The re fore Penrod having halted with his sisters had a soldier orderly lead the horses away, and entered a big hands ome tent.The canvas was not striped in thexe these christian camps as they are in the enemys lines but whatever tent it was there fluttered from the center pole the Royal banner of Abbieannia.

"Come you four children"said Joice taking Ervic's hand"I and my sisters and my dearest brother are hungry, and I m sure you must be also, so let us go in and have our fear.Then we'll ride in an army carriage the rest of the way."

On entering the tent,,, they found a table set for 5h thirteen with snowy lit litt linen bright silver and sparkling glass ware, a vast of roses in the center, and many dishes of delicious food, some steaming hot,, wait ing to satisfy their hunger. Also on either side of the tent were be were beds with satin sheets, warm blankets and pillows filled with swansdown. There were chairs too and tall lamps that lighted the interior of the tent with a soft rosy glow. Violet and her sisters and Ervics three sisters were ushered to chairs first, and after the Grace before the Meals and the Lords Prayer being said they ate their unsually early dun dinner with unusual enjoyment while Penrod himself thought of the wonders of their being "Angel possessed" and wondered what it would be. If Violet and her sisters were really angel possessed, and if they really new the secret laws of nature li e Angel possessed possessed children do, then no wonder that they are so protected from the enemy and had gone through so many dangerous adventures and survived. nd Penrod, wished there wasn't any glandelinia, and in his kindly heart wished that all men women and children in Abbieannia, and all good people in the world could be possessed by angels for then he imagined they all would be happier. Then he also wished more ardently that if Violet and her sisters are angel possessed that they would have remained safely at home and never had gone through these dreaful adventures, even if the angels do preserve them.....2.2.2.2.a

But Joice or Jennie rather Gazing lovingly into her good brothers face and reading those thoughts(for the angels had given to her and her sisters the gift of reading ones mind) gave a laugh, and surprised her sisters by and the rest by saying;

"No, no my dear brother you are thinking too good us of us, and that wouldn't do at all.Of course it is true indeed, we don't derser deserve all or not one tiny bit of misfortunes that we went through, and it shouldn't be but neither did our Poor Dear blessed Lord, deserve his Horrors, and yet He could have avoided them as easily as probably we could, and yet didn't for the Salvation of the o World.We have had bad times but we always feel e better and happier after our experience.Instead of happiness to us your beloved plan if we followed it would bring disaster upon our nation.We don't care to do this we'll confess it, and we have often been almost scared to death in some of our frightful adventures, but we have often escaped even without help, but if we didn't do someth ing brave to set the example many of our generals would be afraid to do anything for the enemy really is very dangerous.If we didn't do anythin g else but stay home while our Dear Father and Uncle are out often on those awful bloody battlefields there would be little for us to wish for. And then we wouldn't be acting like our anchestors. And too Penrod "she added with a giggle"The world is astounded at what we do, remember that.What would you do if we stopped doing our duties and the world would believe we finally got scared of the enemy and quit for that reason only.? Ha Penrod dear I can see by your face you wouldnt like that. What would be o become of our armies if we didn't attempt daring and eager striving to obtain the difficult to frustrate the enemy, for nothing then would be difficult, and the pleasure of earning something longed for and only to be secured by hard work and careful thought would be utterly lost.Then too Penrod you must remember what we do causes it to be far safer for us than if we remained at home. Should the enemy capture Angelinia Agathia, and we be there what then would really happen to us. The angels who possess us may have to use fore forceful and frightful means to save us.If we had no adventures to go through we could not have any hope of seeing the enemy be the loser.Then too if we were fraidy cats, and hid ourselves somewhere where it would be safe, we would deserve no interest in life and in our fellow creatures and the whole world would shun us as pretty as we are, because character is better than any beauty you understand.Bravery love of the good, shunning of the evil, that is above everything that causes life o to be worth our while---to do good deeds to every one to defend your country through any peril you might have e to go through--and to help those less fortunate then yourself."

Penrod thought to himself "ow I hate Glandelinia, bu"but before Jennie could say anything more he asked;

"Well I don't see how you can be happy Jenhie nor your sisters either when you and they have to go through all this horror over and over again.I'll bet you and your dear sisters are not happy now."

"Yes dear, just now we are happy because our defense of the cause no matter what we go through can cause happiness and a feeling os safty for the whole world.Had I or my sisters not gone and done this for our blessed Cause and For God and His Blessed Mother,I and my sisters would be miserable. Also you must realized the situation and try to understand that some day will come when instead of being persecuted by the glandelinians we'll be making fools out of them all, and get the last laugh,"

"But also you must realize that while you and your sisters are so beloved through out Abbieannia, you have enemies that are more powerful than any high leader or royal member of Abbieannia, that even your dear father or Uncle are not as powerful as the da general dangerous Manleys, who have have studied many military arts that no one in our armies now anything about, and they know more about our own country than we do ourselves as well learned in geography as we are. Even that dangerous general laner Mylar Myletze can do some things the very Manleys cannot accomplish military arts unknown to any body. That is the reason why no general of our side can stand up against him.This is to explain that none of us are all powerful by any means.Our military tatics is merely military tactics, and not such great wizardy wizardy as the enemy generals can accomplish. To the world who even hates and fears glandelinia it seems very wonderful.not all glandelinian generals can accomplish very good military schemens, but they say that generaly john Clancy can do military arts that fills even the Glandelinian generals with astonishment.I believe that is what causes the glandelinian generals to be so dangerous-the fact that their military arts are so great, and yet so divided.We ought to try to find out how they learn these things as as wicked as these Glandelinian generals are they can do things that we can marvel at."

"All the same"said Jennie"I'm mighty glad we don't now too much as we might then make this war too dangerous for our liking..Things can happen for us through the mercy of God that could fool the enemy."

Penrod could not quite understand this, so he said nothing more on the subject until Violet herself said-

"You are a marvel yourself Penrod and you don't realize it."

"How is that.?"

"It is true in our whole christian nation, and it has been proved there has never been any one who could best us at any knife fight. We found that out from our own experience. But you, oh you're wonderful. You can disarm the seven of us in a jiffy no matter how we go at you and you proved it in your shows for us. I guess you'd make us a lot happier if you could some day succeed in teaching us just that one trick."

"But I have often tried to and you seem never to be able to learn"protested Penrod."

"But it's so difficult"said Violet." And your tricks at the rifle and pistol."

"I wonder if he could outdo us in a sabre duel."giggled Jennie"He never tried that yet either on foot or horseback. We whipped Glandelinian swordsmen often thirty to our one.If you can do that Penrod we'll admit we'll never be afraid of any adventure while you are our companion."

"If he can best the seven of us in a sabre drill then he's wonderful."Evans can outdoe a hundred men, but he tried it in drills with us and we always disarmed him"said Joice."

"Do you want me to try it"said Penrod.

"Not with bare sabres I hope"protested Angeline"That would be dangerous and if we win or you win"---"

"An expert can outdoe an adversary with a bare sabre easily without injury" truthfully declared Penrod."Of course if you're not as good as I may even the seven of you you could accidentally injure me seriously.We'll try it with false sabres.They're easy to get.We can exhibit the game while we're resting.We'll try it on foot first and then on horse too. But I really hope to Heavens name my sisters'll win.Then I can see that with a sword you can protect yourselves.Otherwise I'll have to be the main swordsman for you."

The game was announced, and a crowd of soldiers came to see it at once. The first game was splendid.He first fought them one by one, and held out splendidly, though he succeeded in disarming Joice and Jennie. Then they tried it the overwhelming way.They all seven made at him furiously and at first they did have the best of him, but to the surprise of all soon only Jennie alone still maintained her sword and both were having it out in fine style and neither then could disarm the other until they had to stop to gain their breath.

O"On foot"Jennie dear"said Penrod we're both the best.You and your sisters can surely weild the sword.But now remember the horse back fighting is more difficult and I am well experienced. So be careful that I don't accidentally knock one of you off the horse.We don't want any falls that will cause injury to in any one of us."

"We'll be careful"said Joice."Now will we do it single or together."

"Together"said Penrod."We don't want to waist waste any time."

Their horses were brought out, and Penrod stood at a long distance then at the signal mounted his horse.Then when all were ready, they got the signal to rush him.They came swiftly at him their horses raising dust and they met him with a shock that thrilled all the witnesses, but in ten seconds he disarmed them all. Then they tried the lance drill and he with his own also disarmed them."

Horse back fighting of this sort was his skill. He had worsted them with difficulty on foot, on horse it was perfectly easy.

"I'll learn you these drills as often as I can for you're even very good at the start"said Penrod marvelously for they were."The reason you got worsted is there is a trick in it."He laughed"won't the enemy be surprised when the eight of us will show them some swords and lance drills.They'll leave you alone then."

They were again on their way but in a carriage for the big flat mountain which appeared to be clearer in the clear light of the early noon, but ere the twelve children understood there was a long ride before them even yet.They finished their statement on "Penrod you're sure a marvel at the sword. But we'll try our best to learn."

"But I was believing all the time that if you're angel possessed, they would cause you to best me"protested Penrod.

"If you were an enemy I believe they would have no matter how good you are"declared Jennie with a laugh."I hope you don't doubt that we are though"she added with a pretty pout."If you do we'll let you see some symptons when it comes on. Those spells comes sometimes on special days and usually at night and in the early morning. Did you not notice it always storms when something something bad happens to us."

"Yes"said Penrod.

"But"said Joice"Do you really doubt that we are angel possessed.?"

"Doubt it"said Penrod with a smile."How can I'll've seen symptoms of it that you know nothing about if you didn't find it out."

"What is that symptom" demanded Jennie a merry twinkle in her eyes.

"The extreme beauty of you and your sisters, and the safe escaping from every danger is one symptom.Nobody could do what you and your sisters do and live through it."

"You may be right at that"she admitted"But what was the other symptom."?

"I remember that one and only last night"said Penrod."Sometime after you and your sisters went to bed, you had tried for some reason to arouse your sisters, and when you couldn't you called me who was lying half awake in my bed. Your voice sounded very strange to me it at first scared me.I thought that some one from a celestial country was calling me.I hurried in as you remember believing something had happened to you or that some assassin had succeeded in getting into your room and had mortally wounded you.But when I came in and turned the light on, you jumped out of bed sat on it and said-

"Penrod dear I don't know what is the matter with me to night.I feel so queer, so happy that I can sleep to night. You seemed so strange that I at first was a little afraid of you, afraid to touch touch you, but as you then rose and came to me and nestled your head on my breast, and I had you in my arms in a loving embrace you slowly fell asleep with the happiest happiest smile on your face that I never saw on anybody.If that was not strange then what was it."?

"Well then"said she blushing red but smiling at the same time then you saw a symptom.But my dear sisters gets that way once in a while don't you.! "

They nodded.

But why does it only happen in the night time"demanded Penrod.

"It's doesn't"said Violet."I had a slight feeling of that to day but going on this dangerous adventure it wore off."

"If I had suspected that I wouldn't have allowed you and your sisters to go so soon.laughed Penrod."I hope ardently to see it come.It's my greatest joy andq amusement to see you that way."

"Oh Penrod you would"said Violet."How would you like to be that way!"

"For your ben ef it I would rather only see you and your sisters that way."

"Oh you good dear unselfish boy"said Violet who was sitting next to him and who placed her arm around his neck.

"Maybe he is without the symptons we have"giggled Jennie"Or he couldn't be able to do all the things he can do and---" before she could say anything more he had her tight in his arms and hugged her good while she screamed happily and laughed and tried to get free but he held her good. The four others were greatly amused and enjoyed this tremendously and yet yet in their hearts hoped for one of the symptoms that Penrod had spoken off to come on her now." "Can't the angels that possess you give you and your sisters power enough to prevent being captured by the cruel Glandelinian soldiers,, or enable for you an easy escape every time you spy on them!"inquired Arvic at last.

"I suppose they could, but I'm believing that they leave it up to us to do things and do it right.You must understand my boy that I or my sisters don't really intend and never did throw ourselves into an adventure that would really insure our destruction unless the angels personally intervened."confessed Violet. "We don't want to impose on them.We don't believe deserve miraculous intervention."

"Perhaps perhaps you're right in one way"said Arvic.

"Now !"said Violet pretending to be slightly offended at his words and pouting. "For one reason.If I disputed you you would win by saying that our blessed Lord suffered unjustly for thirty three years and didn't deserve it either. Well that is true, and all that is done against him even all these years from that time on he doesn't deserve either.But couldn't the angels preserve you through the most dangerous perils if necessary."

"They could do anything if God wills it."said Joice"But even with their help as far as it is allowed them we could conjure up all sorts of modes of travel and adventure and yet get out of it safely. Don't forget what I told you some time ago maybe yesterday that no one except god is powerful enough to do everything, and we wouldn't change anything that is so perilous that would cause our destruction.We don't believe in sucide.Nobody do so here.If we do that then it is a sin.."

"Well I suppose I ought to understand that, having read so much of what you and your sisters do."replied Arvic."

"But we can't do anything miraculous at all"declared Jennie,"nor can my sisters sisters so often times we ourselves can't figure out exactly how or they have often escaped out of dangers which seemed an impossibility.to do.We can't even figure out how our dear brother can do all he does.I'd hate to be a Glandelinian boyscout and have him try and capture me.He's easily be successful.Some day I might disguise myself as a Glandelinian boyscout and fool him and see what he will do."

"You did fool me once."said Penrod."Don't you remember the day "Aseldefob" arrested you within the Glandelinian camps for interfering with me when you didn't then know who I was or who he was, and brought you a prisoner all the way to the christian lines before your real personalty was discovered. by those who recognized you.That was your worse and most trying experience, for you were facing a firing squad when your identification was discovered.Don't you remember that."

"Oh yes I do"said Jennie regretfully."But on I prayed hard,.

"But why didn't you tell him who you was when he arrested you!"demanded Violet pleadingly.

"It was of no use.He wouldn't even let me say a word not one word.He commanded me most harsely to shut up before I even spoke, saying that he wouldn't listen to dirty Glandelinian child dogs under any condition and would have slammed me in the face if I had not dodged him. It was from that time on I suspected "Aseldefob "as a christian boy spy, but didn't realize then who he really was."

"I'm sure thankful to God more than anything that I didn't hit you then." said Penrod gratefully."I've never struck a little girl in my life.But you were disguised as a boy, and I couldn't recognize you to save my life."

"Well"laughed Jennie I "I suppose I ought to now that, having nown you so long"but I can't figure out though now that bad boy Fredric Lowden managed to fool me and disguise you as you.That was my biggest shock of all. I couldn't have stood it if it really had been you."

"It if really ever is me doing it I,m insane then"said Penrod."But he won't try it again.I'll give anything to put those three rascals out of the show good and for all.But you and your sisters at least have one great magical art shown through the angels that possess you-- you and your sisters, know the trick of winning all hearts, even without the attraction of your unusual prettiness."

"o I don't believe we do."said Angeline earnestly."If we really can do it Penrod dear I am sure I don't understand how we do it."

"Don't understand how you do it.You sacrifice yourselves for your country, and for everybody in general, are so unaturally good, so loving to everything that is good, Love God and His Blessed Mother more than anything , and even beat the best saints in your acts of charity and loveliness and other arts of saintliness, are as brave as angels, act as angels, have the various moods of angels, and surprise the world by your goodness and you don't understand how you win all hearts.If that is so then I give up."

It was only about two hours of even slow riding and they reached the foot of the flat but beautiful mountain, and they found the sides so steep that they were like the walls of a house..

"Even a monkey couldn't climb that"remarked Jennie gazing upward....

"But there is some way for the Gemini to get down and up again."declared Joice,"otherwise they couldn't get down to see us when we send for them or our messengers to reach them."

"That's so sis,"said Penrod."Let's travel around a ways, perhaps we'll find a long ladder or something."

They urged the horses of the carriage quite a distance, for it was a big mountain with beautifully colored stones and covered even at the stepp steep parts with some sort of beautiful green moss and as they circled around it, and came to the side that faced the beautiful but high pine trees they suddenly discovered an entrance was cut out of the big stony wall.This entrance was arched overhead and not very deep because it merely led to a short flight of stone steps.But a wall surrounded it too and there was apparently no entrance wey into the stone wall.

"Oh we've found a way tothe top at last."announced Catherine"But dear me we can't find an entrance through the wall.Angar and his Gemini sure have some way of having things strictly secret.But let's find a way.There sure is I believe."

They dismounted from the carriage,, and turned and started to find follow.Suddenly Jennie stubbed her toes foot on something and in losing her balance collided her head with Penrods who was in front .

"Dear me Heavenly days"exclaimed Jennie rubbing both her forehead and nose, for Penrods head was very hard."This isn't as easy as it appears if things are in the way to trop somebody up.What did I trip on Joice dear."

"It was a wire stretched across the path but so low nobody could see it in the dry grasse,"she answered..

Violet, Penrod, and her other sisters, and even the four others were feeling their way around, and gazing down at their feet as they progressed forward. "Yes dear sisters we'll have to watch out for traps."she replied."The Gemini had to have a way from their mountain top recess from this plain below, but to prevent Glandelinian spies from rushing up the stairs to get inand spy on them, they have built at a small distance from the entrance a wall of solid stone, the stones being held in place by cement, and then they formed traps close to the wall to ensnare Landelinians who would be snopping snooping around it.They are better than having guards."

"I wonder why they did that!" mused Hettie.

"I wonder too."declared Penrod."A wall would prevent the enemy from getting in anyhow whether traps are set or not if it is strong guarded by sentries, so there wasn't any use of placing traps.Seems to me it would have been better to have a line of sentries.Then nobody could approach the entrance without being forced to show a pass, or give the countersign.No anybody can even see the entrance above the wall even though the wall is higher than we can climb.And probably anybody that sees the entrance would try to even scale the wall by ladders.."

None of the others made no reply at once.But Jennie's face was grave and thoughtful.

"I think I know the reason forbthe placing of the traps."she said after a while."The Gemini use these strange stairs from coming down and going up. If there was a solid stone wall guarded by entries to prevent the enemy from reaching them, they themselves would be imprisoned by the wall if they didn,t form some secret entrance through the wall somewhere.So they had to leave some place to get around the wall, and if traps were not set here and there along the wall all Glandelinians would find the place to go around it, and then the wall would be useless.So the Gemini cannily placed the traps so. believing that any one who saw the entrance, would go straight tward it as we intended to do, try and climb the wall, get caught in some trap and not find only it impossible to go any further but get caught also by the soldiers..As we can see the wall is really th twenty feet high and very thick and can't be broken through not even by cannon shot so those who find it in their way or get trapped are captured before they realize what happened. We may have to summon some guards to show us the way for if we get caught in dangerous trap we'll be injured or something."

"Yes we must get a guard"said Violet."They alone ought to now where there is a way to get in."

As they were starting on a soldier in Calverinian gray approached them armed to the teeth.

"In trouble little angels"he demanded with a friendly smile.

"o but we wish to see general Hendro Dangar and cannot find a way without getting into traps"said Hettie and Daisy togetner.

"I'll guide you."said the man."I saw your predicament and therefore came to assist you.I'm one of the guards..come"

They followed him and when they had gone nearly a quarter of a mile away from the entrance,the wall began to curve in tward the side of the mountain and suddenly ended leaving just enough space between the wall and the mountain for an ordinary pers on to pass through.The guide however said;

"I'll have to lead you through and give a sort of signal or you will be fired on if you are heard as no one could pass through here without a sentry.You do not know the signal and any one who cannot give the signal will surely get shot."

The girls first went in single file following the guard, and the two boys followed. They could see they were now behind the barrier and could go to the entrance.They met no further obstructions.

"Most thin people Penrod dear would not have figured out in getting help as you did."remarked Daisy."If I or my sisters would have been alone the wall surely would have stumped us."

Reaching the entrance they began to mount the stone steps.They were surprised the stairsway the stairsowent for they went up twenty steps, and then down ten stairs, following a passage cut from the stone.The stairs were just wide enough for them to go in single file.At the bottom of the ten steps the passage turned abruptly to the right, and they ascended thirty more steps, only to find at the top of the flight, six steps leading straight down again.Again the passage trueno turned abruptly, this time to the left, and ten more steps led upward, and these steps were very low.The passage was very dark too for they were in the heart of the mountain, and all daylight had been shut out by the turns of the passage.. However Penrod drew his electric flashlight from his pocket and turning it on it lighted the place well enough for them to see their way plainly...

Thirty eight steps up, ten steps down, in and a turn this way, or that. Then sometimes the passage went along ways without more steps.Then steps again.That was the program, and violet,and her sisters figured that they were only gaining a few steps upward each trip that they had made.....

"Those Gemini Detectives and Secret Service men must be funny people."Ervic said to Penrod"They don't seem to do anything in a straight forward manner. In constructing this passage they therefore force everyone to mount three times as far asis necessary. And of course this trip is just as tiresome to the the gemini as it is to the glandelinians who would try to climb up here."

"That is true"answered Hettie who was nearest and overheard him"Yet it is a clever arrangement to prevent their being surprised by Glandelinian spies and intruders."

"Every time we reach the top of a flight"put in Penrod I believe the pressure of our feet or something else on the stone or elsewhere causes a bell to ring on top of this hill, to warn the Gemini above of our coming."

"How do you know that"said every one astonished.

"You have forgotten that I have what is called "The Gift of Pussyfoot" ears laughed Penrod."I've heard the bell every minute since we started.I suppose you others could not hear it, but my ears are so peculiar that as violet remembers I can hear a cat trotting or walking slowly at a great distance away.That is why no one could creep upon us unawares."

"That is true"admitted violet graciously."It was your ears that saved us in that hotel for you heard the men and shot them before I could finish your first name.Do you hear anything on top of the mountain besides the bell?"she inquired.

"Yes, the members of the Gemini are being notified and the camp up there is being aroused and everybody are calling to one another in alarm and many footsteps are approaching the place where we will reach the flat top of the mountain."

This made Violet and her sisters feel somewhat anxious.The Gemini or their followers were the most dangerous people on the face of the earth if they suspected glandelinians were coming up the steps to put something over on them.Dargars face was horrible to see if he was in a rage. And he was a terrible looking man too. He was somewhat handsome in a way but to see him in in the night.He looked like a fierce spectre.

"I hope they don&t mistake us for enemies and open fire at us down the steps."Jennie remarked"but nevertheless we always have seen they're pretty clever clever, and they understood some sort of schemes too.To all our enemies Penrod dear they're extremely dangerous and horrible in a way, but they are a great help to us, and love us almost to worshipping.Perhaps we'd better give them our signals which they understand too."

Finally the upstairs and downstairs passage seemed coming to an end for daylight appeared upand of the seven little girls and the others, and Penrod replaced his flashlight into his pocket. The last twenty five steps brought them to the surface, where they found themselves surrounded by a throng of men which to Ervic and his sisters were very queer and fantastic, so that for a moment the four were speechless, and stared into the faces that confronted them.They were of course ordinary men as seen elsewhere but they were were all six foot men, powerful and strong, broad shouldered, and were tall wide black hats and robes that made them appear very dignified. The foremost had dangerous pistols in their hands, but at the sight of the children they replaced these in their holsters. Their hats were flat on top like the high silk hatters but the hats were broader and taller, and had a strange yellow band on the top and a design of a moon in the middle front.The customs of the Gemini members were of long black robes, and some had even on their over their faces black hoods with only eye holes. Aside from their creepy fantastic garve garv garbe these men were not really bad looking.Their eyes were perhaps their best features being large and bright bright and of varied colors.There were sinister expression about their mouths, and their faces were as those of villains though of course they were not. There was also a large force of soldiers in the hill top and even an encampment. When they saw that the new comers were a very handsome boy garbed in Princely uniform, and with him seven little girls of amazing loveliness, and four other children, the fierce men grunted with satisfaction, put away their weapins and sabres, and drew back, permitting them to see what the mountain top appeared to be. It was shaped almost as that of a volcanic crater, but much more immense so that the tents, and barracks and other military buildings--all made of rocks--could not be seen over the edge by anyone standing in the plain below.But now a big man tall and dignified in appearance stood before the children and in a respectful voice full of friendliness friendliness said;

"What are you children doing here.By goshen you seven little girls are affecting me for never in my life have I seen any so pretty.I hope most ardently that you are not glandelinian children sent here to spy upon us?"

"I am Princess Violet Vivian, and these are my sisters, and here's my brother Schfield Penrod"answered violet."My Father and mother are ruler of all the land of Abbiennia."

"Well I've heard of the Vivian Girl Princesses, but never believed we could ever be so worthy as for them to come to visit us."returned the man. "but as I've heard they're the most beautiful and good children in the world, as and as by your appearance, and the strangeness of your faces I believe you are angel possessed, you may be what you claim."

"They are my sisters the Vivian Girl Princesses--and these are four other christian childre children, the boy who came to us seeking for help in a bad trouble" exclaimed Penrod."so Violet and her sisters have come here to get some assistance."

The man laughed heartily, and all the others who stood around too laughed too and some placed their hands lovingly on the heads of the little Vivian Girls.

"Some one in the crowd called out-

"who wouldn't help the little Darlings of the Nation in anything they need, eh friends."

"ure who wouldn't." they all answered in positive tones.

"They'd better go to our Supreme Person and he'll give them help"some one cried."The poor dears have done a lot for country and us, and it's heaven to us they came to visit us."

"Who is your supreme Person."Asked violet.

"I believe I'll let him tell you that himself"answered the man who had first spoken. He had never refused any one yet.You are sure welcome here, and when you state your trouble he'll do what he can to help you out.Come along with me.He'll be glad to see you, as glad to see you, as the enemy is as glad to to get rid of you."

He started down a path and the children foll followed him without protest but with evident joy, as they wanted to see the most important person of the Gemini, for though they had heard of the Powerful Rodney Graves who is the Supreme Person they had never seen him. The houses they passed seemed beautiful and pleasant enough and each had a yard of quite a size in which were still seen trances of flowers grass, and vegetables, and here and there in many spots stood beautiful trees and bushes of various sort.halls of formidable stone seperated the buildings and all the paths were paved with smooth slabs of stone. This seemed their only building material and they utilized it cleverly for every purpose.In two places were tall beautifully colores colored signal stations, and in the center stood the tallest flag pole they had ever seen from which flattered the National and Royal Abbiennian Flags. Directly in the center of the great crater stood a larger building which the guide informed the children was the headquarters of the supreme Person of the Gemini.He led them through a large magnificent entrance hall into a big reception room where they sat upon magnificent chairs and awaited the coming of the Supreme Person.He was sent for, and pretty soon he entered from another room a very tall, and strong man, dressed much as the others of the Gemini but of a little more magnificence of the long robe.He had his hood over his face when he entered but at sight of the children he removed that.He was a very dingi dignified appearing man, and he had a sly and cunning expression of his face, and he had a fighting face too. He was not exactly han dsome looking, nor was he homely. But his features showed that to the enemy i he was a fox, extremely dangerous, treacherous. and something that would give you the shivers if you didn't know him. He however had the broadest smile on his face as violet and her sisters arose to recieve him.

"Sit down my little angels"he said."It is I who should bow to yo eyou."

"Are you the Supreme Person of all the Gemini?"Inquired Joice somewhat awed at the presence of this dignified and powerful man.

"Yesthat's me indeed"he said rubbing his powerful hands slowly together. "My word is law and I never fail in my efforts.I'm the Supreme head of all the Followers.I suppose you were wishing to see my assistant Hendro Dargar.Well I'm sorry little girls but he's not here just now, but if you wish for something I'll do all in my power for you,"

"I am Princess Violet, and I and my sisters have come from the christian lines to----------"

"Stop a minute" interrupted the Supreme Person, and turned to the man who had brought the little holy children there....s.s.s."You may go George"he commanded."You may return to your duty and guard the stairway.I will look after these beautiful little girls and the others."

The man bowed and departed, and Jolie nodded wonderingly;

"Is he a leader of the Gemini too?"

"Of course little angels"was the answer."We have a lot of leaders for they're all leaders here or something.This is our headquarters.They're all good helpers for me and help me to play the dirt on the enemy.But I'm the Supreme Person of them all for I've founded this great organization.This is a great organization you understand, and no one has ever come to us for help in vain."

"Are you the famous Rodney Graves?" asked Jennie.

"I am called the "Great Supreme Person, and everybody causes me to appear more dignified than I really am.I sent that man away because the moment you mentioned your name, I knew who you and your sister six sisters and your brother are, though the four others are strangeers.I suppose outside of Dargar I'm the only supreme Person that ever heard of you, but that's because I've so often seen your pictures.If I had not heard you mention your name I would have recognized you anyhow."

Violet and her sisters and the rest were staring hard at the Supreme Person.

"I cannot see how you ever learned of us at all for this is the first time we ever met."Jolie said"because in most of our adventures as often look like different little girls or as boys."

"I don't blame you for wondering at that."he said."Once all of us gemini had never heard of you or your sisters, because you say this is the first time you ever met me.But often you may have seen me and never knew it. But some time ago don't you remember when the Glandelinians were going to hang you seven little girls to a scaffold with stones tied to your feet, a big party of the well known"Hooded Terror" suddenly rode down upon your would be murderers and led by a strangely garbed tall man on horse, and rescueing you children, burned the Glandelinians they captured at the stake.Well that was I and a part of my band. You were grateful beyond words for my rescueing you little angels and gave me this as a remembrance of your love and reward to me.See "he continued"here is the token of remembrance which you gave me."

He took from a pocket a bright large shining medal having a pretty gold chain on it with a locket attatched. And inside the locket was or were small photographs of violet and her sisters.

"And have you many officers of the Gemini up here?"asked Ervic impressed by the appearance of the man.

"yes, but they are not all the same in position.But I don't deserve this honor of you dear Princesses coming to see me. And it don't appear as if you need help either.Did you come just on a visit."

"Well it was a visit in one way"said violet."We ourselves am not in any trouble trouble, because as you may understand we can take care of ourselves. "

"Then what brought you here.?"

"This here little boy and his three young sisters have lost their parents and they say the Glandelinians have carried them off.I and my sisters planned to have Dargar and Gingigore to go over into the enemys lines with the purpose of discovering their whereabouts, and I and my sisters would move up as close as possible with a great cavarly squad ron and raid that part of the enemys camp camp to rescue their parents. We can depend on our brother Penrod because you I believe remember that big raid he accomplished because of Jennie's plight that sad afternoon.I'm not sure of course whether a raid of that sort could be accomplished again so soon because there is no doubt the enemy may now have have every portion of their encampmen ts well guarded.However in that raid our army had secured more provision s than can be placed in our encampments and those big fires are still burning..so our army and our child scout reg imen ts are contented with more than they could have hoped for, and therefore the enemy are terrified and believe that Penrod and Angelinia Aronburg are the only two who can accomplish anything they set out to do.Well we believe so too and he could lead the assault to recover the parents of these unfortunate children.Of course unless they're really good, our nation doesn't care much about so many foriegn people and as so many won't join our armies they're all being speedily deported, but these forgi foriegners are good people, end too you understand our Father had made a law and had us sign the agreement to it that if any Glandelinians bothered inoffending foriegners or stole them away as prisoners, when they were not fighting on either side, it was just as much a crime as murdering children as they did in massacres and therefore all Glandelinians captured in so doing, would forfeit their lives at the stake.."

"Pshaw"My sisters "said Penrod always wishes to put all the praise on me even for just little things I accomplished"said Penrod."It is true without telling an untrue story that raid was nothing.Sometime ago when they were prisoners of the enemy at Evangeline St Claire territory or somewhere near there, I and my followers made a rais that covered sixteen miles of territory.They said Evans was dead and that I had better therefore give up.

territory.It was in that raid that my sisters were delivered from the enemy for Evans had joined that raid.I captured 100,000,000,000 dollars worth of property from the enemy and destroyed as much more.Emperor Vivian has that record yet, but he didn't know it was me who made the raid, for made a law that if any one told about my raid even to my friends they would forfeit their freedom to me.So no one told anything about it.I was known then as Mad Parker.If I have to say so because I cannot deny it then I must be clever so clever that to the enemy I'm the most dangerous person of all if I do say it myself, and can strike a blow whether their camps are guarded or not..but then poor violet and her sisters.They never give themselves credit for what they do and can do themselves.They are the most remarkable little girls in the world, and the angels who have possessed them have I'm sure transformed them like themselves.Otherwise the enemy could have done them a lot of serious harm.""Bless

"good gracious"cried violet laughing"You try to make more of us than we really are.Next you'll be saying we're not little girls but angels in disguise."

"but what happened that made you go on such a raid two or three days ago when you captured so much."asked Rodney Graves.I haeard of the raid and saw much of the effects effects and heard it was on account of Jennie. but how come the enemy stole her horse and rig.Was she captured too?"

"She was"said Penrod."Through treachery.A Glandelinian boyscout disguised himself as me and treacherously captured her and brought her into the enemys lines. The boys belonging to Starring and his gang f did it, and so I have declared war on all enemy child scouts too.Before we never bothered our heads about them as at first they never did it to us.In tevenge for making my poor sister Jennie such misery I intend to ruin all those Glandelinian scouts no matter what they are, and destroy Starring and his Confederates."

Penrod was very angry ain in now, his young eyes flashed, and his face took on a "licked"and fierce expression. But Jennie said to Penrod very sweetly and in a loving voice;

"I thought Penrod dear that you had forgotten all about that day."I don't feel nothing at all now about it, and can almost laugh over it, for anyway I,m conforted to know it wasn't really you."

"But I can't get over it "said Penrod."You and your sisters suffered too much that day.It was the worst blow you ever had and it is just that I should repay the enemy and a sin if don't.ITll it will be a long time I suppose but some day will come when I'll meet them, and I'll relieve you of that one danger..They'll then never bother you or your sisters again."

"I'm sorry to hear about all this"said Rodney Grave.Will you my dear Princesses tell me more about your troubles with those Glandelinian boyscouts and others?Then perhaps I can help you escape them here after."

"We couldn't have time to do that now"said violet"but papa has a number o of copies of lists of what we did suffer and we'll let you see them if you come to our headquarters some time.But as we are the ones who suffered for the honor and glory of God we should be able to bear it.He suffered too and more immensely, and though of course we don't really deserve it, he was far less deserving of all his His horrors. We love Him more than anything and wished we could have spared Him all that by our own troubles."

She and her sisters were only beautiful little girls but there was a dignity in her pose and speech, and a loving sound which impressed the Great gemini leader....

"Since we now you are really the beautiful Abbieannian Princesses"The Supreme Person said,"you are one of that band of Holy enchesters who under our famous queen Jane Mary Lurline ruled Abbieann ia over two hundred years ago.I have heard that Queen Lurline was one of the most beautiful and powerful women in the world at that time, and almost like the blessed Virgin in holiness and harity. Her children who were boys were beautifully possessed by angels and went to heaven alive.Her eldest son who lived to be a great man started into existance our many famous Vivian rulers and therefore Your Grand Parents whose name also were vivian, but that your Grandmothers name also was Lurline left a beautiful family to rule Abbieannia, and that you are and your parents the ones.Since you are such good and lovely children, and understood you would go through too much terrible experiences, why did you poor dear little girls not come to me at Angelinia Agathia city when the war first began, and have me tender you our aid in full and remained within the powerful fortifications of Glinda city for mutual protection."

"Well"said violet,"Our Father and even Mother went out to lead the armies and therefore we saw it was our duty to go too."

"Well I only learned the fact lately too"said Rodney Graves looking at the floor instead of at violets eyes, for she had shown tears, and he couldn't stand that."Anyhow you little girls have made the world proud of you."

"Why did you wish us not to go on such unusual and dangerous adventures "said Jennie."It is our duty to, and surely we wouldn't attempt anything that was so dangerous as to be fatal."?

"It is for this reason"explained the Supreme Person glad to continue the subject."We Abbieannians love you, and your parents but especially you little girls as you're angelic and good. Well if even one of you died or was killed by the enemy it would be a dreadful blow to the whole nation, and the world in general. Angel possessed children of course do not die, they go to heaven at the properbtime alive, but that does not mean you cannot get ill. Or injured or killed unless miraculously the angels preserve you. Your doings too Princesses have made the Glandelinian generals, and even the Glandelinian government angry, for they declared that you and your sisters are even responsible for the war."

"We responsible for the war"she gasped, and looked at her sisters.

"Yes.you and your sisters sometimes before the War started, interfered with the chils slave trade and they blame the wa war on that."

" What a lie"said jennie indignantly."We didn't cause the ar through that. We can tell you the cause. Governer Gann ons Wife of Abbieannia brought on board a excursion st steamer a crowd of children for a excursion picnic and she was on board herself with her darling daughter an so and son.The ship was well out on the water, when a glandelinian submarine flying the the flag of the Angelinia Proniv Province torpedoed the boat n n and all perished in the waves escept the Captian who managed to hold unto a spar and was rescued.Through him our government learned the details. The queen herself survived and was also rescued, but she's in an insane asylum having lost her reason through her loss and the shock. Her eldest son also died from the shock, and her eldest daug yt daughter is also a mad woman. Then because our father protested because of the tragedy, Glandelinia rose up in rebellion, and we have the terrific conflict.There's the whole thing in a nut shell. Papa went to see Gannon the day of the tragedy, and was deeply moved. For the insult to Papaps protest, and demand for restitution the enemy Government got itself into trouble with other nations, and backed by these your mama herself sent glandelinia an ultimatuim and war Broke out. And Glandelinia said we made the war.The very idea.We'll pay her for that lie. just as well we'll pay Bsldon for the lie against us when he gets captured. He said we set his property on fire to liberate the child slaves and we did not.We were trapped in the fire and had a hard time to escape."

"That was very mean and cruel of the glandelinians, you must admit"said Violet Violet, and just imagine if we didn't do our duties for our country the enemy would probably give even the whole world the ha.Ha.Now my own Mother and even Father and our Uncle have become fools in the eyes of the enemy, when to us the Abbieannian nation they are the most wonderful people in the whole world, and because the whole nation loves us more than any thing ever heard of the very Glandelinian government wants to cause our destruction.So as our own spies have learned the rulers of glandelinia, and those awful Manley generals, ons of whom had once been our friend, and that was John Manley has vowed they would destroy every one of us little girls and our parents too, unless unless the world itself acknowledges glandelinia as a first class nation. The Glandelinian generals have defied us.I really believe though it is true sir that I and my sisters sure have to be careful in what we do at that. General Evans can tell you of a narrow escape we ourselves had on several occasionas and Penrod too.I went one day alone to go swimming in the stream Penrod coming to cover me.H As I was dressing after my swim he shot a man behind me who was in the act of running a long dagger through my head. Jennie herself had the same experience when a man while she was even nude had grabbed her and tried to drive a dagger in to her heart but as witnesses said who were running to her rescue he was suddenly stricken by a stroke of some kind in that arm that held the dagger, and died a frightful death. And yet that was nothing.We used to near Aurandicallo secure water for drinking purposes from a small spring not far off, and somebody dumped a whole tank of deadly poison into the water with the purpose to destroy us should we go and drink the water. But our instinct told us the water was posioned and we believed our angels saved us for we finally found it was.It was a very treacherious thing to do to us I'll admit, but Penrod my dear brother here had hid on the shore of the body of water and had captured the persons who threw the poison into the water.The rest of the peasant poison was spilled by him onto the ground and the big can demolished.Often I and my sisters were captured unawares by the glandelinians and the glandelinians not content with their cruel treatment of us, even sometimes seperated us for a long time.but that even then doesn't cause us to be afraid of the enemy whether they can hurt us or not.The more they do to us the ore more sorry they. Anyhow terrible as it is sometimes it's thrilling and we often all like it."

"Then"said Rodney Graves thoughtfully"Those Glandelinian generals must be very well learned, and unusally dangerous."

"Yes"said joice"But they do not understand as much military methods as general Evans, or our uncle does.The Manleys are not as powerful as our Uncle, or as Concentinian Aronburg, or Evans, nor half as powerful as our father, though he believes he is, but some day those Manleys will find out how they stand when we fight the real great battle where we'll destroy his wicked Satanic army for good and all."

"The Three or Four Manleys cannot be as great even as Izner Myletze of course" observed Penrod, and to his surprise Violet and her sisters gave him a slight reproachful look as if yo to say "you don't now them then."

"You are slightly mistaken"said Rodney Graves to his further surprises. "Myletze of course is a more humane man though, but the Manleys are more dangerous foes. Myletze wins his battles so often because he hasn't the proper generals to contend against him. I'm sure if he had your Fathers army to meet, or your Uncles, and some of the others he couldn't progress any further but would meet defeat.."

"It seems a sad story though"was Ervic's comment"and all the trouble arose because the glandelinians go and enslave so many children that even doesn't belong to them.and they even persecute you dear good Princesses just because you are good."

"As for that" said Penrod again angry"I made a law recently that anybody even the soldiers of the infantry or cavarly, besides all child scouts can do to glandelinians anything they want to whom they find my sisters captured by or ill treated by when prisoners.So if the Glandelinians want to defy me let them go ahead"!

"The Glandelinians themselves make laws that also govern their child slaves and claim they are empowered to make laws that all persons a rescueing child slaves will die like child slaves, and that such a law must be obeyed by all glandelinians to capture and massacre all people who rescue children"asserted Bettie gloomily. "

"Pooh"cried Penrod scornfully."Those Glandelinians can form all the crazy military laws they wish and won't expect me to be afraid, I assure you.If I learn you are prisoners in the enemys lines, no matter how often I'll rescue you if I have to burn down the whole camp to do so. I know the extentbof the powers of these Glandelinian generals from my experiences as Fieldfob, Red Parker, and so forth my dear sisters, and I know in a way we are more powerful than all the Glandelinian and christian generals combined.Because of my own ability sisters though you are angel possessed I am more powerful than any of you, and to prove it I shall keep you and any body else who are my friends and whom I love from any molestation from the glandelinians and if I am outwitted, or repulsed my vengeance will be terrible.To prove it again when the Gemini finds out where this little boys parents are captured I'm going to make another raid and attack that will surprise the world to hear of. Then if you believe I'm fibbing you may sent me home to be a mummas boy in a cradle.Those glandelinian generals at heart are the biggest cowards on the face of the earth.They're scared of cats and mice, you and your sisters have seen that yourselves, shame on them."

Violet and her sisters were amazed by this effrontery and defiance of the dangerous Glandelinian generals, whom all of the enemy had always obeyed you without question through fear.But Violet still unruffled and dignified said looking intently at Penrod------

"Surely Penrod dear you did not mean that.You are angry at the glandelinians because of that so often happened to us, and maybe speak without reflection. But you understand it is our duty to suffer these things and it causes the armies to fight harder therefore in our behalf.We get a lot of good out of even our saddest experiences, and after all when it comes to the point we often believed we enjoyed them and would giggle about it afterwards.We came here and went with the armies from other places from our dearly beloved City of Angelinia Mathis to prevent the enemy from sinning no an holy a war, and to inspire the army with our presence. Of course I do not no more than you dear Penrod approve of that the enemy has done to us, nor do we approve of what the enemy has done to millions of helpless children either.No one has the right to work against our wishes without our consent and therefore we fight to uphold our wishes so the Glandelinians have made themselves the most cruel people on the face of the earth-----and the whole world looks to us to bring our own land in the good condition it should be."

"If you and your dear sisters want a coming of quick peace"said Penrod Penrod"why not try to capture or ambush those highest of the Glandelinian generals and put them out of the way. Also send persons who could destroy the

...eral ...nd novice Glandelinian Government.Then the war would be over to our satisfaction and we could all go home and enjoy ourselves as we should."

"No"said Joice"we could not do that if we wanted to, for it would be too dangerous just as it might be.You that time Penrod dear suggested something I confess truthfully we wouldn't have the courage to attempt as the danger for us would be exceedingly great.It would be great to do it, as it might have the effect and if God Wills mwe may see a easy chance to do it some day and without without danger either.but not now.I and my sisters will only continue on as we do now.but we cannot attempt such things as you suggest now, and if you new the danger of it you wouldn't even allow us to do it if you had to tie us in straight jackets in our beds to keep us out of that danger."

"The enemy had done you little Princesses a whole lot of evil."said the Supreme Person and Penrods advice of putting those dirty scoundrels out of the way, would be a marvel if you could do it.but you are right.It's extremely too dangerous now, the Glandelinians could even prevent you from doing it.Besides Heaven knows that we don't want such dear beautiful little girls, the most beautiful and happy children in the world to attempt such a thing at this time when apparently just now the glandelinians seem to be at the height of success. Now remember that happened to Jennie Penrod just a few days ago as you said. That is a danger ign somewhere where the poor little girls will have to be on the watch.Therefore for your good, and for the good of the foriegn children if you wish to help I'll locate Dargar, and Gingigore and with them and a number of others I'll go into the foe lines in disguise and find them them.but to identify them I must have the photographs.Have you any Sonny."

"Yes sir."and Ervic produced the photographs.

"Good"said the Supreme Person with a fierce grin."I'll have them saved in a short time."

"but sir"said Violet with a worried look in her face"Be careful.The enemy may also capture you."

"Not if I can prevent it.but if they do or threaten me I can sent a telegraph by wireless so you'll recognize that part of the camp, and surely we,ll be rescued rescued in the storm that will come upon the enemy.But first to get more help you must go to Jennie Turner who just now on the small lake near here is testing a submarine recently captured from the enemy.She can help you too.I will have some of my guards escort you there safely so you won't have trouble with foe patrols."He gave a signal and four men entered the room and saluted him.He gave the necessary orders, and soon the children were outside in their carriage again and started in that direction followed by a strong escort.They noo no sooner had started across the plain and were some distance from the mountain when coming across an opposite section was an armor body of glandelinian cavarly.They now however wore their customary uniforms and carried the Gargoylian Standards which sho was showed what Glandelinians they were.At sight of the troopers and the children they urged their horses forward with a yell and drew sabres.

Penrod was menacing right away however and seeing he was going to hurl an object the glandelinians hesitated suddenly to advance.but their commander was a dare devil sort of a man, and as wicked as he was he didn't fear death no more than a child fears a piece of good apple pie and he raved at his men for being repulsed and then whistled for four of his officers who on approaching said;

"We must capture those little girls dressed in white at any cost and no matter how many christian cavarly protect them.When you capture those children tie them to trees pull off their clothes and burn them alive."

"The four officers said"We will try it your Excellency but it'll be a difficult job.They're the Vivian Girls and they can fight like hell."

